INNÆUS, CHARLES, or CARL VON LINNÉ, of the greatest systematic botanists and na- lists the world has ever seen, was born in elen in 1707. He died in 1778. Sweden is y proud of having given birth to Linnæus. father was a poor clergyman in a rural dis- , who could scarce afford to give his son an cation for a profession, and was at one time ly apprenticing him to a shoemaker; and yet ce this son in after years, by dint of his own us and talents, rising to the rank of a noble- , and exercising, even while alive, a most ex- dinary and universal influence over the whole ce of natural history. During the earlier years is life he endured many privations and much erty; but his extensive acquirements procured numerous friends, and in 1741, at the age of y-four, he succeeded in being appointed to the essorship of medicine at the university of Up- where he had studied in his youth; Rosen professor of botany, a chair which Linnæus ld have preferred, but by an amicable arrange- t the former lectured on medical subjects, e the latter taught natural history. Previous is appointment to this chair Linnæus had tra- d through Lapland, where he had been sent the Academy of Sciences for the purpose of ex- ing the natural history of that arctic region; had visited and examined the great mines of eden, where he acquired a good knowledge of neralogy; he had explored the natural history Dalecarlia, for which purpose he had been sent the governor of that province; he had visited enmark, Germany, Holland, and England, and ad thus laid up a vast store of knowledge in all the three kingdoms of nature. The extent of this owledge may be judged of from his 'Systema Naturæ,' a work which has now been before the world for more than a century; and which, not- withstanding that our acquaintance with the objects of nature has increased a hundred-fold since his time, is almost indispensable to every na- ralist even at the present day His acquire- ments in natural history were universal; still it is in botany that he has obtained most success and his greatest glory. His arrangement of plants by the sexual system, or by the number, disposition, &c., of the stamina and pistils, maintained the pre-eminence over all rival systems till very lately, and even now, though superseded in a great mea- sure by the natural method of Jussieu, retains a most useful place in the study of botany. The binomial nomenclature which he introduced into botany and zoology, or the use of trivial or specific names appended to the generic, to distinguish the different species of animals and plants, is one of the most important helps to the advancement of the study of natural history that has ever been discovered, and which alone would have immor- talized the name of Linnæus.—In 1747 Linnæus was appointed physician to the king; in 1753 he was created a knight of the Polar Star; and in 1757 he was raised to the rank of nobility. [W.B.]

LINT, PETER VAN, a Flemish historical and portrait painter, 1609-1668. His brother, HEN- DRICK, a painter and engraver, end of the cent.

LINTHOCST, J., a Dutch painter, 1755-1815.

LINUS, a supposed bishop of Rome, 1st cent.

LINWOOD, MISS, famous for her exhibition of needle-work pictures in Leicester Square, was born in Birmingham, 1755, and died 1845. Her copies of pictures from the old masters possessed extra- ordinary merit, and for one of them, which she be- queathed to the queen, she is said to have refused an offer of three thousand guineas. The collection met the usual fate of such things after her death, and was dispersed by auction.

LIONEL, lord of Ferraro and Modena, 1441-50.

LIOTARD, JOHN STEPHEN, a famous enamel painter, who was called 'the Turk' on account of adopting the Turkish costume, born at Geneva 1702, died about 1776. His brother, JOHN MICHAEL, distinguished in Paris as an engraver, died after 1760.

LIOTARD, PETER, a Fr. botanist, 1729-1796.

LIPENIUS, M., a German divine, 1630-1692.

LIPPERT, P. S., a German artist, 1703-1785.

LIPPI, FRANCESCO FILIPPO, a painter of Flo- rence, born about 1412, died 1469. His son, PHILIPPINO, also distin. as a painter, 1460-1505.

LIPPI, LORENZO, a famous painter of altar pieces, known also as a burlesque poet, 1606-1664.

LIPPO, a Florentine painter, assassinated 1347.

LIPSIUS, J. G., a Ger. numismatist, died 1820.

LIPSIUS, JUSTUS, a celebrated philologist, critic, and antiquary, and prof. at Leyden and Lou- vain, born at Isch, near Brussels, 1547, died 1606.

LIRELLI, S., an Italian astronomer, 1751-1811.

LIRIS, LEO DU, an astronomer, 17th century.

LIRON, J., a learned ecclesiastic, 1665-1748.

LIS, or LYS, JOHN VANDER, a Dutch painter, 1570-1629; another of the same name, 1600-1657.

LISCOV, CHR. L., a German poet, died 1760.

LISLE, CLAUDE DE, a French geographer, historian, and genealogist, 1644-1720. His son, LOUIS, a physician and wr. on astronomy, d. 1741.

LISLE, SIR G., a royalist officer, famous for his defence of Colchester, shot by the republicans 1648.

LISLE, J. TROINS DE, a Provençal adventurer and alchymist, b. abt. 1662, d. in the Bastile 1712.

LISLE, W., an English antiquary, died 1637.

LISLE. See DELISLE, DELISLE-DE SALES.

LIST, FREDERIC, a political economist and member of the parliament of Wurtemberg, founder of the Zollverein or customs union, 1789-1846.

LISTER, M., an English naturalist, died 1712.

LISTER, T. H., a miscellaneous writer, 1801-42.

LISTON, JOHN, was born in Norris Street, Haymarket, in 1776, and was educated at Dr. Barrow's, Soho school. In 1795 he became himself second master at the Grammar, or Library school, Castle Street, Leicester Square, under Archdeacon Tennyson, and was all his life long a great reader. From this school he was, however, expelled for acting plays with the big boys, and went into an office as a clerk. The first time he performed in London, was at the Haymarket, on a benefit night, as Rawbold, in 'The Iron Chest.' After this, obtaining £40 from a friend for the purpose, he resolved to adopt the stage as a profession, and spent the money in the purchase of theatrical properties. He then acted at Taunton, Exeter, and Newcastle-upon-Tyne. His first comic part was Diggory in 'She Stoops to Conquer,' and he raised the character at once into importance. On the 10th June, 1806, Mr. Liston appeared again at the Haymarket, as a debutant, in Sheepface, in 'The Village Lawyer.' Miss Tyrer (afterwards his wife) made her first appearance there also on the same night, as Agnes in 'The Mountaineers.' His next character was Zekiel Homespun. But it was not until the following October, and at Covent Garden theatre, that he secured extraordinary attention, by the part of Jacob Gawkey, in 'The Chapter of Accidents.' The reputation thus acquired he quite established by his Lord Grizle in 'Tom Thumb,' in which he had to sing 'the dancing song' three times. His elegant and symmetrical form was exhibited in this feat, and undoubtedly contributed to his remarkable success. His wife also produced a similar sensation in Queen Dolabella.—Notwithstanding his success in these comic and burlesque parts, Mr. Liston thought himself a tragic actor, and 17th May, 1809, attempted Octavian. His Dominie Sampson, indeed, and Adam Brock evinced touches of genuine pathos. In 1823, Mr. Liston had an engagement at Drury Lane of £50 a-week, which he commenced with Tony Lumpkin. His Mawworm next year was applauded by George IV. himself, who encored the celebrated sermon; and the public nightly afterwards imitated the royal example. In 1825, he appeared in his famous character of Paul Pry; this was the climax of Mr. Liston's popularity. The furor for the play was immense. Mr. Liston was henceforth to be seen moulded in all conceivable materials—plaster, clay, china, butter; he gave signs to public houses, names to coaches, and portraits to pocket-handkerchiefs. In 1831, Mr. Liston joined Madame Vestris at the Olympic, where he enjoyed an income of £60 a-week, and appeared as Dominique, in a new piece, by Mr. Charles Dance, called 'Talk of the Devil.' At this theatre, Mr. Liston continued until 1837. The last night he performed was at the Lyceum, for the benefit of Mr. James Vining—but he never took a formal farewell of the stage. His death took place on the 22d March, 1846, from apoplexy. The attributes of Mr. Liston's acting were nature, thought, and study; his conduct in private life was exemplary, and he was remarkable for attenti
gious duties.

LISTON, R., a famous surgeon,

LITHGOW, W., a Scotch trave

LITHOV, GUST., a Swedish po

LITTA, POMPEO, Count, an antiquarian, died 1852.

LITTLE, W., an English histori

LITTLEBURY, J., an English d

LITTLETON, ADAM, a divine England, celebrated for his skill languages, au. of a Latin dictionar

LITTLETON, EDW., a divine a

LITTLETON, or LYTTLETO famous authority in matters of la in the reign of Edward IV., and aut
on 'Tenures,' which is the text-Commentaries, died 1481. Judg three sons—WILLIAM, ancestor of tleton of Worcestershire; RICHAR
the reigns of Henry VII. and He THOMAS, knighted by Henry VII.
of Lambert Simnel. A JOHN L
scended from William, was a partis Essex in the reign of Elizabeth, an 1600. EDWARD LITTLETON,
Thomas, was lord-keeper in the rei
and created baron of Mounslow flourished in 1589-1645. Anothe
Thomas, was a SIR THOMAS LITT
of the H. of Commons in the reign

LITTRE, ALEXIS, a Fr. anaton

LITTROW, J. J., a Ger. astron

LIVERPOOL, CHARLES JENK
a member of parliament and states pied various offices from 1761 to at the age of eighty-one, 1808. H
BANKS JENKINSON, earl of Liver was the famous statesman who h ship from 1812 till 1827. Died 18

LIVIA-DRUSILLA, a Roman
Claudian family, who was first ma Claudius Nero, and forcibly take Augustus, who divorced his own marry her. Having no children he adopted her sons by her first whom, Tiberius, became his su died in the eighty-sixth year of he

LIVIA-LIVILLA, granddaugh
ceding by her other son, Drusus G ried her cousin, Drusus, son of Til ing poisoned her husband in conce
died in a dungeon 35.

LIVINEIUS, J., a Flemish div

LIVINGSTON, EDWARD, an
and statesman, au. of a new crimin

LIVINGSTON, JOHN, ministe church at Rotterdam, auth. of 'Le

LIVINGSTON, ROBT., a distin
can statesman and diplomatist.
the committee who drew up the independence; in 1780 was secre
affairs; and after filling the office
the state of New York was appoi France in the time of Buonaparte;

LIVINGSTON, WILLIAM, an and statesman, 1723-90. His son
a dist. judge of the state of New Y

LIVIUS ANDRONICUS. Se

LIVY. Titus Livius Patavinus, the only illustrious Roman historian of the Augustan age, is born at Patavium (now Padua), a town of the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom in Italy, B.C. 59, the consulship of Cæsar and Bibulus. The name, Patavinus, seems to fix the place of his birth; but, according to some authorities, he was born at a village six miles to the south of Patavium. The records of his life, like those of many others of the literary men of antiquity, are meagre and unsatisfactory — the materials necessary to form a connected narrative having been supplied by the imaginations of some of his biographers. After passing the early portion of his life, perhaps in his native town, he appears to have gone to Rome during the reign of Augustus, where his literary talents soon obtained for him the favour and patronage of the emperor. As an admirer of the ancient institutions of his country, Livy attached himself in opinion to the party of Pompey, and considered him as the greatest of Roman statesmen and heroes; but Augustus, entertaining a sincere regard for the historian, did not allow his friendship and patronage to be affected by political opinions, though they seemed to call in question the right by which he ruled the destinies of Rome. Having spent the greater part of his life in the metropolis, he returned in old age to the town of his birth, and there died A.D. 18, in the seventy-seventh year of his age. He left a son, and also a daughter, who married L. Magius, a teacher of rhetoric, a man of moderate talents, who owed his subsequent success principally to his connection with the historian. The preceding short statement contains all the authentic facts which have descended to us in connection with the personal history of Livy. Many other particulars are related by writers who profess to record the life of the Roman historian; but these are either altogether illusory, or rest upon evidence which will not bear examination. Thus he is said to have commenced his career as a rhetorician, and to have written a work on that science; to have been twice married, and to have left two sons and several daughters; to have been in the habit, like Virgil, Horace, and other wits of the day, of spending much of his time at Naples; and to have first attracted the notice of Augustus by presenting to him some dialogues on philosophy. He is also said to have been the tutor of Claudius, afterwards emperor, and to have recommended to his pupil, in early life, to attempt historical composition. Livy has erected for himself an enduring monument in his History of Rome. This great work, which he modestly designated Annales (Annals), contained the history of the Roman state from the earliest period till the death of Drusus B.C. 9, and originally consisted of 142 books. Only 35 of these have descended to us; of the others, with the exception of two, we possess Epitomes, or short summaries, but the books themselves have been entirely lost. The existing books were brought to light at various times; some of them towards the middle of the sixteenth century, and a fragment of the ninety-first book appeared for the first time in 1772. The hope so long entertained by the learned, that the lost books would yet be recovered seems now to have yielded to despair. From internal evidence there appears to be reason for believing that the history was divided by the author into decades, or portions each containing ten books. The first decade, which embraces the history till B.C. 294, is entire; the second is lost; the third, fourth, and the first five books of the fifth, containing the history from B.C. 219 to B.C. 167, also remain to us. Of the other books nothing has been preserved except some inconsiderable fragments. It is impossible to ascertain the time during which the historian was occupied with his great work. Niebuhr fixes the commencement of it in B.C. 9, when he was fifty years old, and believes that he had not fully accomplished his design at the close of his life. In forming an estimate of Livy as an historian, it is necessary to bear in mind the object which he seems to have proposed to himself. As a Roman and a patriot, his grand purpose was to celebrate the glories of his native country, and the disinterested patriotism which raised it to universal supremacy. He adopted the early history as he found it, exhibiting the legends in attractive language, without inquiring into their authenticity. He makes no pretensions to the character of a critical historian, and thus, in some degree, escapes from the charge which may fairly be alleged against him, of not consulting the public records. 'His style may be pronounced almost faultless; and a great proof of its excellence is, that the charms with which it is invested are so little salient, and so equally diffused, that no one feature can be selected for special eulogy, but the whole unite to produce a form of singular beauty and grace. The narrative flows on in a calm, but strong current, clear and sparkling, but deep and unbroken; the diction displays richness without heaviness, and simplicity without tameness. Nor is his art as a painter less wonderful. There is a distinctness in the outline and a warmth of colouring in all his delineations, whether of living men in action, or of things inanimate, which never fail to call up the whole scene, with all its adjuncts, before our eyes.' [G.F.]

[Livy—From an Antique Bust.]

LLORENTE, Don Juan Antonio, a Spanish historian and chancellor of Toledo, 1756-1823.

LLOYD, Charles, bishop of Oxford, and for some time a teacher of Sir Robert Peel, 1784-1829.

LLOYD, David, a Welch biographer and historian, reader to the Charter-house in London, and author of a 'Life of General Monk,' 'Memoirs of Persons who Suffered for Loyalty,' &c., 1625-91.

LLOYD, EDWARD, a Welch antiq., 1660-1709.

LLOYD, HENRY, a Welch officer in the service of the king of Prussia and the empress of Russia, author of works on tactics, and of a 'History of the Seven Years' War,' 1729-1783.

LLOYD, NICH., a learned writer, 1634-1680.

LLOYD, ROBERT, an English poet, 1733-1764.

LLOYD, WILLIAM, a dignitary of the Church of England, distinguished for his writings relating to history and divinity, and his share in the political transactions of his time, born in Berkshire 1627, chaplain to Charles II. 1666, bishop of St. Asaph 1680, bishop of Lichfield 1692, bishop of Lichfield 1699, died 1717. Bishop Lloyd was one of the prelates who joined Sancroft in protesting against the toleration act of James II.

LLYWELYN, the name of three Welch princes —the first reigned over South Wales, and fell while defending his country from the Scotch invader, Aulaff, 998-1021; the second, king of North Wales, married to the daughter of John, king of England, died, after reigning forty-six years, in 1240; the third and last sovereign of Wales, fell in battle against Edward I., after a reign of twenty-eight years, 1282.

LLYWELYN, the name of two Welch bards, the earlier of whom lived between 1130 and 1180, the later, a native of Glamorganshire, died 1616.

LLYWELYN, TH., a Welch divine, died 1796.

LOBAU, GEORGE MOUTON, Count De, a general of the French empire, distinguished for his gallantry and his adherence to Napoleon, who called him 'the best colonel that ever commanded a French regiment,' was born 1770, and, being wounded at Waterloo, was sent prisoner to England, where he remained till 1818. Having returned to France, he took part in the revolution of 1830, and was the successor of Lafayette as commander of the national guard. He was made a peer and marshal of France 1831. Died 1839.

LOBB, THEOPHILUS, a medical wr., 1678-1763.

LOBEIRA, VASCO, a Portuguese writer, author of the romance of 'Amadis de Gaul,' died 1403.

LOBEL, M. DE, a Flem. botanist, 1538-1616.

LOBINEAU, G. A., a learned wr., 1666-1727.

LOBKOWIZ, G. C., Prince Von, an Austrian general, 1702-1758. His son, JOSEPH, a famous military officer and ambassador, 1725-1802.

LOBO, GERARD, a Span. poet, d. about 1668.

LOBO, JEROME, a Portug. mission., 1593-1678.

LOBSTEIN, J. F., a Ger. anatom., 1736-1784.

LOCATELLI, L., an Ital. chemist, died 1637.

LOCCENIUS, J., a Swedish hist., 1599-1677.

LOCHNER, J. J., a Ger. numismat., 1600-1669.

LOCHNER, M. F., a Ger. naturalist, 1662-1720.

LOCK, MAT., an Eng. composer, abt. 1635-77.

LOCKART, ALEX., a Scot. lawyer, 1675-1732.

LOCKE, JOHN, born at Wrington, near Bristol, on 29th August, 1632; died at Oates, in Essex, on 28th October, 1704. A name than which there is none higher in English philosophical literature, the name of a Man, surpassed by no one, in that worth which constitutes the dignity of an independent English gentleman.—It is not our intention to offer in this place an analysis of the celebrated 'Essay Concerning the Human Understanding;' suffice it to touch rapidly on those main points which constitute it a landmark—on the circumstances in which it arose, and the peculiarities that gave it historic significance.

[Birth-place of John Locke.]

Falling, like KANT after him, on a period of one-sidedness or dogmatism—when statements accurate in the main, had, through their imperfection as representatives of the whole truth, been twisted into assertions of error—Locke found the freedom of the Human Understanding attacked by the CARTESIANS, with the weapon named by them 'Innate Ideas.' Inquiry he found—fearless and rational—stopped at both its termini: truths clearly within its reach were repudiated because (a pretended conflict with so-called Innate Ideas; and regions apparently beyond the sphere of our faculties, were on the same authority sketched out and described, with the pedantry of a mechanical Surveyor. To determine the length of our line, was therefore Locke's first resolve; nor can it be asserted that his preliminary war with Innate Ideas, is—in the sense in which he looked at the subject—wholly unsuccessful. Rightly interpreted, his theory is this—no authoritative belief can be found in the Mind, which has not an origin in Experience; and the most extensive or nearly universal Beliefs existing, are shaped and coloured by the varying experience of the men and nations entertaining them. The thesis, so stated, cannot be impugned; neither the value of its assertion at the epoch of Locke: but our philosopher fails in establishing the proposition which he supposed to be his thesis, viz., that there are no Beliefs in the mind of man, which, — although suggested by, and in their forms, dependent on Experience, — cannot yet be explained unless we attribute to the Thinking Faculty, a proper and independent Modifying Force. DES CARTES himself did not think as Locke imagined he thought: and, to that illustrious Man the first three chapters of the Essay have therefore no true reference. Following out his partial, because controversial first view, Locke proceeds to unfold in what manner every recognized or defensible notion, belonging to the Human Understanding may grow up in it. An imperfect first view—we have said—for while looking at the error, he misses the truth of the Cartesians: he never, even proposed to establish by a preliminary and rigorous analysis, what those char-

JOHN LOCKE

teristics of our various classes of Ideas are, which every just philosophy must give an count. Missing therefore, not unnaturally, ne of their main characteristics; confounding cessity and infinity, with the simple attributes f generality, and immensity,—he proceeds to de uce all the forms and results of the Understand ng from our pure Sensations, and the operation on these of what he terms Reflection. Closely scrutinized, Locke's Reflection amounts to nothing more than the exercise of Memory, Comparison, and the processes known as Association. The exercise of the Mind as a voluntary Agency indeed seems to remain; but as Leibnitz soon pointed out, and as subsequent History showed, the descent from this Scheme was easy, towards the undisguised Sensationalism of Condillac and the French School of the close of last century. To charge John Locke—as sound and practical a thinker as ever lived—with the extravagances of these hypothetic schemes, were the worst injustice; nevertheless, there is no precaution against the largest excesses of sensational philosophy, in his mode of presenting the genesis of human thought; and it cannot be gainsayed, that the 'Essay' in several important directions, has been the parent among ourselves of as much mischief as could well find place amidst the realities of the English mind. Utterly antagonistic to absolutism in thought or life, —not less repellant of the doctrines of Sir Robert Filmer, than of all theocratic dogmatism, this remarkable work seemed, however, to harmonize with our notions of rational liberty; and it became the favourite text-book of our best men during the difficult periods when Locke wrote. Himself practically imbued with the sense of personality and independence in all things, our Philosopher stood by constitutional Liberty, suffered with it, and shared its triumphs. Menaced by the Court party—as corrupt a court as the sun ever shone on, then reigned in England—he withdrew to Holland, and for a time found shelter. During this voluntary exile, his name was erased from the roll of the students of Christ Church Oxford, in consequence of a Royal Mandate; and the spirit of persecution went so far as to demand the rendition of our philosopher from the States-General. Better times, however, were dawning on England. After the Revolution in 1688, Locke returned in the fleet that brought home our future queen, the Princess of Orange; and henceforward his career was prosperous. His residence in Holland, however, was not without avail to him. Associating largely with dissentient protestants, he acquired a clearer notion of that cardinal principle, on the recognition of which alone, Protestantism can live; which he showed this in his Letters, on Toleration, as well as in the just freedom of his Essays.—It is seldom that a personal History so delights one, as that of John Locke. Rarely can no one discern a stain on the nature of the career of the great Englishman, but his moral career, is everywhere in strictest accordance with the principles he laboured to establish. Ever attached to the cause of Toleration, civil or religious, he scrupled not to suffer for either, nor would opposition to any faction ever drive him from consideration and justice,—disincline him to do his opponents aright, or to conceal the excesses of the party, whose fortunes he mainly espoused. He accepted Human Liberty as a basis of his philosophy; and practically stood by that. Few writers, before or since, in England, have had a finer sense of the respect owing to the determinations of the personal Conscience.—The student is specially recommended to the admirable life of John Locke by Lord KING. [J.P.N.]

LOCKMAN, J., a miscellaneous wr., 1698-1771.

LOCKYER, N., a nonconf. divine, 1612-1684.

LOCRE-DE-BOISSY, J. W., a German of French descent, distinguished as a writer on commercial law, 1758-1840.

LODGE, EDMUND, clarencieux-king-at-arms, well known for his 'Portraits of Illustrious Personages of Great Britain,' besides which he wrote 'Illustrations of British History,' and other works of great learning and research, 1756-1839.

LODGE, THOMAS, an English poet, died 1625.

LODGE, WILLIAM, an engraver 1649-1689.

LOEFLING, P., a Swed. botanist, 1729-1756.

LOESEL, J., a German botanist, 1607-1656.

LOFTE, CAPEL, well known as a miscellaneous writer and contributor to magazine literature, was a gentleman of property, who was educated for the law, and became one of the magistrates of Suffolk, born in London 1751, died 1824.

LOFTUS, DUDLEY, an Orient. scholar, 1618-95.

LOGAN, JOHN, a pleasing versifier and poet, was born in the county of Edinburgh in 1748. When a very young man he edited the poems of the deceased Michael Bruce, and involved himself in controversy by printing in the volume pieces which he claimed, probably with justice, as his own. In 1770 he became minister of the parish of South Leith; and his two volumes of Sermons, published after his death, show him to have possessed a singularly fine flow of animated eloquence. He was also one of the most active and valuable of the contributors to the collection of metrical 'Translations and Paraphrases,' used in the public worship of the Church of Scotland. He delivered Lectures on History, a synopsis of which he published, and aspired unsuccessfully to a professorship. A volume of poems, appearing in 1781, was extremely popular; literary avocations engrossed his attention more and more; and he soon came decidedly into collision with the opinion of the public in Scotland as to the proprieties of the clerical profession, by publishing and bringing on the stage his tragedy of 'Runymede.' His spirits sank, and his habits became irregular. He retired from his pastoral charge, spent about two years in London as a reviewer and pamphleteer, and died there in the end of 1788. [W.S.]

LOGAU, FREDERICK, Baron De, a German poet, whose epigrams and other pieces have been edited by Lessing, 1604-1655.

LOGGAN, DAVID, an engr. of Dantzic, d. 1700.

LOHAIA, IB., an Arabian sovant, 8th century.

LOIR, NICHOLAS P., a Fr. painter, 1624-1670.

LOISEAU, J. F., a Fr. republican, died 1822.

LOISEAU, J. S., a Fr. jurisconsult, 1536-1617.

LOISEL, A., a French jurisconsult, died 1822.

LOKMAN, an ancient Arabian philosopher and fabulist, surnamed Alhakim, or the Wise. He is supposed to have been contemporary with King David, and even to have lived under his patronage and died in Jerusalem, but his history is involved in great obscurity. The fables which bear his name were first published in 1636, and his name is given to a chapter in the Koran.

LOLI, LAURENT, an Ital. painter, 1612-1691.

LOLLARD, or LOLLHARD, WALTER, burnt for supposed heresy at Cologne in 1322. There is little reason to suppose that he was the namefather of the sect of the Lollards, or Lollhards. The probability is, that the term is an old German one, of the same root as our word lull, in the phrase, lull to sleep; and that it was given to those sects in whose religion psalm-singing in a low tone formed a distinguished part. It was thus applied by popish ecclesiastics to a great variety of religious parties on the continent as a term of reproach, and in England, was appropriated to the followers of Wycliffe. [J.E.]

LOLLI, or LOLLY, ANTONIO, a celebrated violinist, was born at Bergama in 1723. From 1762 to 1773 he was concert-master to the duke of Wurtemburg. He afterwards went to Russia, where he became a great favourite with Catherine II. He died, after a lingering illness, at Naples in 1802. [J.M.]

LOLLIANUS, a Roman emperor, killed 267.

LOLLIUS, MARIUS, a Roman consul, 21 B.C.

LOM, JOSSE VAN, a Dut. physician, 1500-1562.

LOMAZZO, J. P., an Ital. painter, abt. 1538-92.

LOMBARD, C. L., a Fr. surgeon, 1741-1811.

LOMBARD, J. G., a Prus. statesm., 1767-1812.

LOMBARD, J. L., a wr. on tactics, 1723-1794.

LOMBARD, L., a Flemish painter, 1482-1565.

LOMBARD, PETER, best known as the author of a book of 'Sentences' collected from the fathers of the church, whose contradictions he endeavoured to reconcile, was a native of Novara, in Lombardy, and died soon after his election to the archbishopric of Paris, 1160. His work acquired a high degree of celebrity in the middle ages, and gave rise to many glosses and expositions by theologians of all classes, which are now out of date. He was also author of some Scripture commentaries.

LOMBARDI, A., an Ital. sculptor, 1487-1536.

LOMBARDO, J., an Ital. sculptor, b. abt. 1510.

LOMBARDO, PIETRO, a Venetian architect and sculptor, who flourished with his sons, ANTHONY and TULLIO, in the 15th century. The nephew and pupil of the latter, SANTO LOMBARDO, distinguished as an architect, 1504-1560.

LOMBART, P., a French engraver, 1612-1682.

LOMBERT, P., a Fr. translator, died abt. 1710

LOMEIER, J., a Dutch philologist, 1636-1699.

LOMEIR, J., a Dutch prot. divine, 1636-1699.

LOMENIE, ANTHONY DE, secretary of state, and ambassador of Henry IV. to London, died 1638. His son, HENRY AUGUSTUS LOMENIE, Count De Brienne, minister of state, and author of 'Memoirs,' died 1666. The son of the latter, LOUIS HENRY, Count De Brienne, secretary of state under Louis XIV., died insane, 1635-1698.

LOMENIE - DE - BRIENNE, ATHANASIUS LOUIS MARIE, brother of the cel. finance minister, sec. at war in 1787, perished on the scaffold 1794.

LOMENIE-DE-BRIENNE, STEPHEN CHAS. DE, finance minister of Louis XVI., was born at Paris, 1727, and being educated for the church, was first known as an enemy of the protestants. In 1763 he became archbishop of Toulo[illegible] would seem, from the first, to have aspire[illegible] part of a Mazarin, or a Richelieu in the stat[illegible] out possessing either the ability or the unscr[illegible] daring necessary to it. In 1797, after fig[illegible] a commission for the reform of the cler[illegible] coquetting with the philosophy of D'Al[illegible] and the encyclopædists, he became a mer[illegible] the assembly of notables; and having hea[illegible] party by whom the administration of Calo[illegible] overthrown, he succeeded that unfortunate [illegible] ister, adopted his plans, and proved hims[illegible] as incapable of executing them. He suc[illegible] however, in quietly dismissing the notabl[illegible] then attempted a bold stroke by banish[illegible] parliament of Paris to Troyes, but within [illegible] after was compelled to recall it, and agr[illegible] compromise. In the spring of 1788, he is[illegible] famous edict for altering the constitution[illegible] parliament, and establishing the 'grand ba[illegible] and the 'plenary court,' to do the work[illegible] that body had refused, namely, the registr[illegible] the king's edicts; and in the execution [illegible] measure was reduced to the necessity of dis[illegible] the parliament with the aid of militar[illegible] For about two months he tried to bring his[illegible] machinery of government into working ord[illegible] parliaments of the provinces everywhere r[illegible] their hydra heads to carry on the battle beg[illegible] Paris. About this time he was promoted t[illegible] rich archbishopric of Sens, and received a [illegible] dinal's hat from Rome, which he returned[illegible] 1791, and gained thereby a little fresh popula[illegible] At the end of his two months' despair, July, 1[illegible] he was compelled to announce the convocation[illegible] the estates-general for the month of May follo[illegible] ing. On the 24th of August he retired from [illegible] ministry, and was succeeded by Necker, havi[illegible] by this time raked together the elements of th[illegible] wildest conflagration the world ever saw. He w[illegible] arrested in February, 1794, and died of apoplex[illegible] the same night. [E.R.]

LOMONOSSOFF, M. WASSILIEWITCH, a famous poet and historian, regarded as the father of Russian literature, 1711-1764.

LONDONDERRY. See CASTLEREAGH.

LONG, EDWARD, a West Indian judge, known as a political wr. and hist. of Jamaica, 1734-1813

LONG, J., an English traveller, last century.

LONG, ROGER, a divine of the Church of Eng[illegible] land, eminent as a mathem. and astr., 1669-177[illegible]

LONG, ST. JOHN, a native of Limerick, who be[illegible] came known in London about the year 1826 as [illegible] medical practitioner, and acquired great celebrit[illegible] by his specific for consumption and for othe[illegible] diseases generally considered incurable by the fa[illegible] culty. Not being educated for the profession, h[illegible] was twice put on his trial for the death of hi[illegible] patients, and on one of these occasions no less tha[illegible] sixty-three persons of the higher classes appeare[illegible] in his favour. He accumulated a large fortune[illegible] and died at the early age of thirty-six, 1834[illegible] Three years previously he published 'Discoveries[illegible] in the Art of Healing.'

LONG, THOMAS, one of the nonjuring divines[illegible] author of several learned works connected with th[illegible] cause to which he belonged, 1621-1700.

LONGBEARD, W., a famous demagogue of the[illegible] reign of Richard I., cruelly executed 1196.

E, Hilary Bernard De, a ical critic, and poet, 1659-1721.
ASSIUS, a Greek philosopher and born about A.D. 210, put to death nyra in 273 A.D. Longinus seems olific writer, but no work of his cept the Treatise on the Sublime. f this remarkable treatise has it there is not much doubt that ot to be deprived of the merit hed to his name: it is a treatise among the most eminent critics ginus was the friend and teacher obia: he fell with her fortunes; go down through all history as a imperial conqueror. One of the best editions of his celebrated Egger, Paris, 1837. The other ed to the Greek philosopher, are [J.P.N.]
LAV., exarch of Italy, 568-584.
r LANGLAND, John, a learned to Henry VIII., 1473-1547.
or LANGELAND, Robert, a fe, regarded as the oldest poet in age, author of 'The Visions of a satire upon the Roman clergy, n's Crede,' written in 1369.
THOMAS NORTON, many years nown publishing firm of Messrs. . 1770, d. of an accident 1842.
I, N., a Sicilian Jesuit and mis- Letters from China,' 1565-1655.
ANUS, Christian, a Danish ant of Tycho Brahe, and profes- s at Copenhagen, 1562-1647.
. Louis Dufour, Abbe De, a the greatest scholar of hisage, au. the Chaldeans and Egyptians,' ographical Description of France,' e Arsacides,' &c., 1652-1733.
, James, a French Jesuit, and llican church, 1680-1735.
.E, the name of a noble French ipal of whom are— Francis of the celebrated Dunois, died f the same name, at whose in- the county of Longueville was edom by Louis XII., died 1512. is, a combatant at the battle of rignano, died 1516. Claude, e of Pavia 1525. Leonard, at e dukes of Longueville were al- f princes of the blood royal by 1571. Henry, who commanded ers, and in 1589 won the battle 95. His son, of the same name, s the XIII., and was afterwards Condé and Conti, as partizans of 1663. The wife of the latter, E, sister of the great Condé, dis- part in the wars of the Fronde, is retirement. The last of the sons of Henry and Anne, the ied in a convent, 1694; and the was killed at the Rhine, 1672.
r, romance writer, 4th or 5th c.
John, a learned German editor, son, Adam, a physician and naturalist, 1528-1586. His grandson, John Adam, a physician and man of letters, born 1557.
LOON, Theod. Van, a Flem. painter, 17th c.
LOOS, Cornelius, a D. theologian, died 1595.
LOOS, O. H. De, a wr. on alchymy, 1725-85.
LOOS, P., one of the encyclopædists, died 1819.
LOOSJES, Adrian, a Dutch novelist, last c.
LOPE-DE-RUEDA, a Sp. dramatist, d. 1564.
LOPE DE VEGA, whose full name was Lope Felix de Vega Carpio, was born at Madrid in 1562, and died there in 1635. Lope, a man of adventurous disposition, led a very active life till he had attained middle age. After having been secretary to the duke of Alva, he was obliged to conceal himself for a time in consequence of a duel; he served as a soldier, and narrowly escaped shipwreck in the Armada. On the death of his second wife, he took holy orders; but this step, though it removed him from business, did not slacken his literary activity. He was one of the most prolific of all authors, composing with a rapidity which, while it implied extraordinary talents, made it impossible that his works should possess high merit, either in design or in execution. Besides writing epics and many other kinds of poems, he produced a number of dramas, so great as to be almost incredible. He himself states it at upwards of fifteen hundred; and more than five hundred plays attributed to him are actually in print. They embrace all the varieties of kind which are to be found among the works of his successor Calderon; and they abound both in snatches of wit and poetical fancy, and in ingenuity of dramatic invention. Though Lope was not the founder of the Spanish Drama, he was the first who made its romantic irregularities attractive through force and originality of genius. While Cervantes, who was fifteen years his senior, was neglected and starving, the writings of Lope procured for him overflowing wealth, and a popularity such as hardly ever was gained by any other living poet. [W.S.] LOPES, F., a Portuguese historian, 14th cent.
LOPEZ, Alonzo, a Spanish critic, 16th cent.
LOPEZ, Edward, a Spanish navigator, 1578.
LOPEZ, Narciso, a general in the Spanish army, commander of the late expedition to Cuba, was born in Venezuela 1799, and was first known in the troubles of 1814, as a liberal. He afterwards enlisted in the royalist army, and at the close of the civil war had attained the rank of colonel, being then only twenty-three years of age. Some years subsequently he was in various official employs at Cuba, and in 1849 commenced his revolutionary attempts in the United States. He was garotted at Havannah, 1st September, 1851.
LORCH, Melchior, a Ger. paint., 1527-1586.
LOREDANO, Leonardo, doge of Venice during the trying period of the league of Cambray, founder of the famous Council of Ten, reigned 1503-1521. P. Loredano, reigned doge 1567-1570. F. Loredano, 1752-1762.
LOREDANO, J. F., a Venetian poet, called 'the Elder,' died 1590. 'The Younger,' of the same name, flourished 1606-1661.
LORENZ, J. M., a Fr. jurisconsult, 1723-1801.
LORENZI, B., an Italian poet, 1732-1822.
LORENZI, J. B., an Ital. sculptor, 1528-1594.
LORENZINI, A., an Ital. painter, 1665-1740.
LORENZINI, L., an Ital. mathema., 1652-1721.

LORENZINI, or LAURENTINI, FRANCESCO MARIA, an Italian priest and Jesuit, 1680-1743.

LORET, J., a French poet, died 1665.

LORGNA, A. M., an Ital. geometr., died 1796.

LORIA, or LAURIA, ROGER DE, a famous admiral, born at Loria in Naples in the middle of the 13th century, died 1305.

LORIOT, A. J., a Fr. mechanician, 1716-1782.

LORME, P. DE, a French architect, died 1577.

LORRAIN, CLAUDE, the painter. See CLAUDE.

LORRAIN, ROBT. LE, a Fr. sculp., 1666-1743.

LORRAINE, CH., cardinal of. See GUISE.

LORRAINE, C. DE, an ecclesiast. wr., d. 1631.

LORRAINE, THE CHEVALIER DE, a descendant of the Guises, dist. as a courtier and favourite of the duc D'Orleans, br. of Louis XIV., d. 1702.

LORRAINE, FRANCIS DE. See GUISE.

LORRIS, W. DE, a French poet, 12th century.

LORRY, PAUL CHARLES, a French jurisconsult and canonist, 1719-1766. His brother, ANNE CHARLES, a physician and learned wr., 1726-1783.

LORT, MICHAEL, an Eng. divine, 1725-1790.

LOSANA, M., an Italian naturalist, 1758-1833.

LOT, the son of Haran, and nephew of the patriarch Abraham, with whom he travelled to Egypt, and afterwards settled in Canaan; supposed date about 1900 B.C.

LOTEN, JOHN, a Swiss painter, died 1681.

LOTHAIRE. The sovereigns of this name are two emperors—LOTHAIRE I., son of Louis le Débonnaire, and third successor of Charlemagne, born about 795, associated with his father 817, crowned king of Lombardy 820, emperor 840, abdicated, and died soon afterwards, 855. LOTHAIRE II., born 1075, elected emperor on the demise of Henry V., 1127, convoked the famous diet of Magdeburg 1135, died 1137. Two kings of France—LOTHAIRE I., same as the emperor of that name, vanquished by his brothers, Louis and Charles, at the battle of Fontenai, and forced to abandon his pretensions by the treaty of Verdun, 843. LOTHAIRE II., born 941, succeeded 954, died 986. A king of Lorraine, second son of the emperor Lothaire I., who raised him to that dignity 855, died 869. A king of Italy, son of Hugues of Provençe, poisoned by Berenger 950. A king of Kent, brother and suc. of Egbert, 673, kd. in battle 685.

LOTI, CARLO, a painter of Munich, 1632-1698.

LOTICH, PETER, a distinguished apostle of Lutheranism, in the county of Hanau, died 1567. His nephew, of the same name, known in Latin as Lotichius, surnamed Secundus, one of the greatest Latin poets of Germany, 1528-1560. CHRISTIAN, brother of the latter, an elegant scholar and poet, died 1568. JOHN PETER, grandson of Christian, a critic, historian, and Latin poet, died 1669.

LOUDON, JOHN CLAUDIUS, a native of Lanarkshire, educated as a landscape gardener, was born 1783, and died 1843. He is author of many valuable and popular works on gardening, agriculture, and architecture, the principal of which are—'Observations on Laying out Public Squares,' 'On Plantations,' 'On Country Residences,' 'On the Formation of Gardens,' and 'Hothouses,' 'Encyclopædias of Gardening and Agriculture,' 'The Gardener's Magazine,' and 'The Magazine of Natural History,' both of which were the first periodicals devoted exclusively to these subjects, 'Encyclopædia of Plants,' 'Hortus Britannicus,' 'Arboretum Britannicum,' &c. Mr. L... first cousin to Dr. Claudius Buchanan.

LOUET, G., a French jurisconsult, d...

LOUIS. The German sovereigns of ... are—LOUIS LE DÉBONNAIRE I., emp... West and king of France, son of Charle... his second wife, Hildegarde, born 778, ... of Aquitaine by his father 781, and succ... as king and emperor 814, died 840. L... YOUNG) II., son of Lothaire I., born ... king of Italy 844, associated with his fa... empire 849, emperor 855, died 875. L... BLIND) III., grandson of Louis II., ... succeeded his father in the kingdom of ... crowned emperor at Rome the year after ... ing Berenger 900, deposed and blinded ... ger 903, died 923. LOUIS (THE IN... born 893, king of Germany 899, succe... father, Arnulf, as emperor 908, died 91... V., son of Louis, duke of Bavaria, and ... daughter of the emperor Rodolph I., ... chosen emperor by a part of the electors, ... others adhered to Frederick, son of A... peror and duke of Austria, 1314; defeat... ter, who then renounced his pretensio... died 1347.—Besides these in the line ... emperors, history mentions LOUIS THE G... a third son of Louis le Débonnaire, wh... against his father 817, beat Lothaire at ... 841, and had a considerable kingdom b... Rhine secured to him by the treaty ... 843; d. 876. His son and successor was L... SAXON, killed in battle with the Norma...

LOUIS. The kings of France of this ... —LOUIS I., same as the emperor L... LOUIS II., born 846, named king of ... by his father, Charles the Bald, 867, king ... 877, died 879. LOUIS III., eldest son ... cessor of the preceding, died 882. L... born 920, reigned 936-954. LOUIS V... of the Carlovingian kings, born 967, suc... father, Lothaire, 986, and was poisoned, ... at the instigation of Hugh Capet, by ... Blanche, 987. LOUIS VI., son of Phi... Bertha, born 1078, associated in the g... with his father 1100, king 1108, died 11... VII., son of the preceding, born 1120, ... his father 1137, engaged in a crusade ... vorced his wife, Eleanor of Guienne, wh... terwards married Henry II. of England, ... ried Constance of Castile 1154, engage... with England 1167-1176, died 1180. Lo... son of Philip Augustus and Elizabeth of ... born 1187, succeeded his father 1223, ... LOUIS IX., eldest son of the preceding an... of Castile, famous in French history by ... of Saint Louis, born 1215, succeeded ... under the regency of Blanche 1226, em... the Holy Land at the head of an army ... men 1248, returned to France after the ... his mother 1254, undertook a second cr... died of the pestilence while besieging T... LOUIS X., son of Philip the Fair and Je... varre, born 1289, king of Navarre 130... France 1314, died 1316. LOUIS XI., son ... VII. and Marie of Anjou, born 1423, ... Margaret of Scotland 1436, became lead... volt against his father 1440-1442 and 1... ceeded to the throne 1461, died 148...

Charles, duke of Orleans, and Mary
orn 1462, succeeded to the throne
d the Milanese in alliance with the 99, divided Naples with Ferdinand of oined the league of Cambray against 1509, died 1515. This prince was 73 to Jeanne, daughter of Louis XI., adiated, on his accession, in order to f Brittany, the widow of his prede-s VIII. The latter dying in 1514, n the year following, some three
e his death, the Princess Mary, sis-VIII. Louis XIII., son of Henry e de Medici, born 1601, succeeded his
he regency of the queen-mother 1610, ge, and convoked the estates-general
ne before the French revolution, 1614;
ne of Austria 1615, took the famous his counsel 1624. For the events his reign see Richelieu. Louis
t article. Louis XV., son of Louis ndy, and of Marie Adelaide of Savoy, ceeded his great-grandfather, Louis
the regency of the duke of Orleans,
d to Maria Leczinski, daughter of ominal king of Poland, 1725, war
y in the interest of the latter 1733,
d at Dettingen in the war occasioned ery to Maria Theresa 1743, peace of lle 1748, war with England concern-es 1755-1763, died 1774.—See Law, uis XVI., see article below. Louis
f Louis XVI. and Marie Antoinette, pposed to have died in the Temple
Louis XVIII., brother of Louis 755, married to Louisa of Savoy 1771, oblentz when the king was arrested 1791, assumed the title of king of Navarre 1795, restored on the fall of 4, retired to Ghent during the hun-nd replaced on the throne after the erloo 1815, died 1824.

V., the most magnificent of the Bourd one of those great spirits by whom moved, and the polity of states comed, was the son of Louis XIII. and tria, and was born after his mother
her sterility for twenty-three years, er, 1638. He succeeded to the throne gency of the queen-mother, guided by zarin, 1643, but did not commence government till the death of the latter,
r after the treaty of the Pyrenees and with Maria Theresa, which had been the articles. The events of this long to call it, are briefly related under the UIS; in this place, therefore, we shall es to a summary of the succeeding he external political events of his ced with the exaction of a proper re-government from the court of Rome,
The next event was a brief war with terminated by the peace of Breda, 6 his father-in-law, Philip IV., being laimed Flanders and Franche-Comté
having won them in two campaigns,
the former was secured to him by the
, 1668. Soon afterwards, a quarrel
, and the terror inspired by his successes, provoked a general alliance against him, headed by the prince of Orange, and Louis himself took the field, with the great Condé and Turenne under his orders, 1672. The war continued till 1678, when it was terminated by the treaty of Nimeguen, which, with its almost immediate results, secured great advantages to the French crown. In 1687 Louis was compelled to defend himself against a still more formidable league, occasioned by his revocation of the edict of Nantes, and a long catalogue of wars was concluded by the peace of Ryswick, 1697. During this period he supported the Stuarts, and was obliged by the treaty just mentioned, to acknowledge the prince of Orange as king of Great Britain, under the title of William III. In 1701 the succession of his grandson to the Spanish crown was disputed by the rest of Europe, and a long succession of wars, in which the military genius of Marlborough developed itself, was terminated by the peace of Utrecht, 1713. Louis, though aged and reduced to stand at bay, still retaining vigour enough to save France from the dismemberment threatened by the allies, and to leave to his successor his most valuable conquests.—II. The internal administration of his government in this long period had been marked by the highest magnificence, and conducted to the most splendid results. The favourite motto of Louis, 'L'Etat, c'est Moi,' was quite as much the expression of a principle as of personal pride, and it meant the extension and consolidation of the state from its own centre, in place of the distraction of government occasioned by the feudal system. He carried this principle into effect immediately after the death of Mazarin, by dispensing with any future prime minister; and the issue of it (besides its results in his political wars) was to humble the noblesse, and raise the talent of the middle classes to places of trust—as in the person of Colbert. His great fault—political as well as moral—was the revocation of the edict of Nantes, 1685, by which Henry IV. had secured the liberties of his protestant subjects. It was the fruits of his religious bigotry excited by prelates who divided the nation between the obscure disputes of the Jansenists and Molinists, and who persuaded Louis that his glory was interested in the preservation of the ancient religion—the more easily that Jansenism opened the door and prepared the way, as became evident even then, for the philosophy of the Revolution.—III. The domestic history of Louis, for the greater part of his life, is far more open to censure than any part of his public conduct. His succession of mistresses, De La Vallière, Montespan, Fontange, and some less known perhaps, exhibits him in the character of a sensualist, and we can only say that he was not an unrepentant one, for, at least, the last twenty years of his life. To Madame de Maintenon, aided by the occasional eloquence of Bossuet, belongs the credit of reforming him in this particular, and the most sceptical of historians have not been able to show that Madame owed her influence to any sacrifice of honour, or that she was not really married to him in 1684, about a year after the death of his queen, Maria Theresa. Apart from all this, Louis XIV. was distinguished by high qualities of heart and mind, and his self-command and moderation in all that pertains to his sovereign character, cannot be doubted. He most completely realized the idea of a monarchy at a period when the habits of thought, and the manners of a people, naturally fickle, and tired of his long reign, were taking a new direction; and if he loved warlike enterprise too much, as indeed he deplored on his death-bed, he also loved France, and did all in his power to develop the resources of commerce, industry, literature, and art, and to discover the efficient instruments of a wise administration. Died 1715. [E.R.]

LOUIS XVI., king of France, was the second son of the prince dauphin, son of Louis XV., and of Maria Josepha of Saxony, daughter of Frederick Augustus, king of Poland. He was born at Versailles, and named Duc de Berri 1754, became dauphin by the death of his father 1765, and was married to Marie Antoinette of Austria 1770. Amiable, irresolute, and timid, he succeeded to the stained and tottering throne of his grandfather when twenty years of age, 1774, and was crowned at Rheims, amidst the enthusiastic applause of his people, June 11, 1775. Apparently, no sovereign ever ascended the throne under happier auspices, but really no European throne ever stood on the verge of a more terrible abyss; the incapacity and corruption of the governing body being already confronted with the philosophic pride and wild vigour of the governed—just awakening to a sense of the 'rights of man.' He commenced his reign happily by promoting many useful reforms, and calling the most upright men to his ministry—among others, Turgot and Malesherbes, but it was soon evident that the resources of the state were utterly disproportionate to its expenditure, and discoveries were continually made which brought the court and the government into contempt. As usual in such cases, one palliative succeeded another, while the root of the evil remained untouched; and when the distresses of the people were expressed in open disaffection, the ancient machinery of government was found insufficient, either as a means of effectuating the will of the people, or of controlling their blind impulses by the imposition of a more enlightened authority. The issue of this was the convocation of the 'notables,' who met twice, under the ministries of Calonne and Lomenie Brienne, 1787 and 1788, and of the 'estates-general,' which assembled at the beginning of May, 1789. This body declared for a 'constitution' as the first necessity of France, and took a solemn and united oath not to separate until they had made it. The real conflict between the people and the court was commenced by this act; the disposition to insurrection acquired a form of legality, and the passions of those who might be capable of leading the populace were fairly unloosed. Mirabeau, Lafayette, Danton, Camille Desmoulins, Robespierre, and Marat, are among the names of such, and may be consulted in this volume. As a first step, the 'third estate,' or plebeians in the 'estates-general,' refused to acknowledge the clergy and the noblesse as separate bodies, and many of these joining them, they assumed the name of a 'national assembly.' Against this body the guards refused to act, and the people, soon enrolled in clubs and in a national militia, surprised the government by storming the Bastile, July 14, and committing some deplorable excesses. The national assembly, presuming on its actual power under these circumstances to make the constitution, self 'the constituent assembly,' and pro the 'rights of man' as a basis. To the e of these occurrences was added the n effects of a famine in the succeeding autu the worst forms of clubbism commenced Marats, Carriers, Henriots, and Tinv into note. In June, 1790, the king att fly, and was arrested at Varennes,—t meeting to petition for his deposition persed by musketry on his return. On t September following he accepted the co and on the 1st of October the first bienn ment, or legislative assembly, met for th tion of business. The power of 'veto' ha granted to the king, by this new compo unhappy enough to use it against every measure proposed by the parliament. In of another year his deposition was again tumultuous processions took place, the pa was invaded, and the king compelled to red bonnet, or cap of liberty. As time the republicans became thoroughly organ in August, 1792, the Marsellaise were in Paris, the Tuileries besieged, the Sw massacred, and the royal family imprison Temple. The party of Danton now occ foreground of events, and prepared to a 'national convention,' and resist the t invasion of the emigrants and the Germa the duke of Brunswick. The first act of which met towards the end of Septembe pronounce on the fate of Louis XVI., declared guilty of a conspiracy against th safety of the state, by 693 votes out of 72 be worthy of death by a majority of 43 288. Danton uttered what the national tion felt under these circumstances: 'the kings threaten us; we hurl at their feet of battle, the head of a king.' For no cri own, Louis was guillotined, in pursuan judgment, January 21, 1793, displaying t moment the same singular equanimity o not to say insensibility, that had marked career. In private character he was a m virtue—a good husband, and a good as a king, deficient in every neces-except that of well-meaning. [E.R.] HILIPPE, late king of the French,

(The Temple Prison.)

t son of the duke of Orleans, brother
., and of Marie, daughter of the duke
. He was born at Paris 1773, and ommander of a troop of dragoons un-n, in which capacity he distinguished lmy and Jemappes. After the exe-ather, (see ORLEANS), Louis Philippe itzerland, and commenced those ro-rings through Europe and America,
the public mind has been rendered 1800 he settled at Twickenham, near 1807 he visited Naples, and two
s married to Amelia, second daugh-
g, after which he settled at Palermo.
coration of the Bourbons to 1830, he France, and in that eventful year
the throne as constitutional king, influence of Lafayette, who declared
'the best of republics.' Often his beneath him, but he preserved his singular astuteness, till 1848, when the rty suddenly recovered the victory of d been defrauded eighteen years before,
hilippe became an exile in England.
are so recent, and the causes of them
ally known that we think it unneces-into details. Perhaps the history of ng will read nobler in the light of ant for the present we can only regard ictim of his own cleverness and his
n. He descended to the grave with than his very misfortunes demanded, f August, 1850. [E.R.]

[Tomb of Louis Philippe.]

on of Ferdinand, duke of Parma, born
d the crown of Etruria from Buonaparte for his duchy in 1801, died 1803.
of Spain, reigned eight months, 1724.
ing of Hungary, called 'the Great,'
ucceeded 1342, elected king of Poland 382. The second of the name, born ded his father Ladislas, as king of Hungary and Bohemia 1516, drowned himself, after being defeated by the Turks, 1526.

LOUIS, duke of Savoy, reigned 1451-1465.

LOUIS, duke of Anjou, the first of the name, son of John II., king of France, born 1339, maintained a struggle with Charles of Durazzo for the throne of Naples 1380-1382, died 1384. The second of the name, son and successor of the preceding, born 1377, was crowned king of Naples by Clement VII. 1390, and died, after a long struggle with Ladislas, without conquering his kingdom, 1417. The third of the name, son and successor of the preceding, born 1403, died 1434, after a fruitless struggle for the kingdom of Naples with Alphonso, king of Arragon.

LOUIS OF ARRAGON, succeeded his father, Peter II., as king of Sicily, 1342; died 1355.

LOUIS OF TARENTUM, second husband of his cousin, Joan of Naples, was married to that princess in 1347, driven from the kingdom by Louis I. of Hungary, they were recalled by the Neapolitans in 1352, died 1362.

LOUISA, AUGUSTA WILHELMINA AMELIA, queen of Prussia, born 1776, queen 1793, d. 1810.

LOUISA OF LORRAINE, queen of France, born 1554, married to Henry III. 1575, died 1601.

LOUISA MARIE OF FRANCE, the last of the daughters of Louis XV., 1737-1787.

LOUISA OF SAVOY, duchesse d'Angouleme, daughter of Philip, duke of Savoy, born 1476, married to Louis d'Orleans, count of Angouleme, by whom she became mother of Francis I., 1488. Being appointed regent during the expedition of her son to the Milanese, and during his captivity, 1515 and subsequent years, she governed the kingdom with great wisdom, and was respected by all the princes of Europe; died 1532.

LOUISA-ULRICA, queen of Sweden, sister of Frederick II., king of Prussia, born 1720, married to the prince Gustavus Adolphus 1744, became queen mother 1751, died 1782.

LOUREIRO, J. DE, a Portu. botanist, d. 1796.

LOUTH-ALY-KHAN, seventh regent of Persia, and the last of the Zand dynasty, born 1768, defeated and put to death by Aga-Mohammed 1794.

LOUTHERBOURG, PH. J. DE, a painter of Strasburg, distinguished for his battles and hunting pieces, 1740-1812.

LOUVEL, LOUIS PETER, a saddler by trade, who conceived such an intense hatred for the Bourbons that it became a monomania, and caused him to assassinate the duc de Berri, February 13, 1820. This event led to political consequences of great moment; but Louvel declared to the last that he had no accomplices. He was executed the same year, at the age of 37.

LOUVET, PETER, the name of two French historians, the first of whom flourished 1569-1646; the second 1617-1680.

LOUVET-DE-COUVRAY, JEAN BAPTISTE, a Fr. novelist, and mem. of the conven., 1760-97.

LOUVIERS, CH. JAMES DE, a famous defender of the liberties of the Gallican church, councillor of state to Charles V., king of France, 1376.

LOUVILLE, C. A. D'ALLONVILLE, Marquis De, a French diplomatist, time of Philip V., 1668-1751. His brother, JAMES EUGENE, Chevalier de Louville, author of a number of curious treatises on physical and astronomical subjects, 1671-1732.

LOUVOIS. See TELLIER.

LOUYS, E., an ecclesiastical writer, died 1682.

LOVAT, SIMON FRASER, Lord, a Scotch nobleman, and partizan of Charles Stuart, b. 1657, and educated in France among the Jesuits. He entered the English army and obtained a captaincy. He joined the stronger party at the period of the rebellion, but concurred secretly in the enterprizes of 1745. He was found guilty and executed, 1747.

LOVE, CHRISTOPHER, a presbyterian minister, and member of the Assembly of Divines, beheaded for conspiring against the republic, 1618-1651.

LOVE, JAMES, son of Mr. Dance, the architect of the Mansion House, known as an actor, d. 1774.

LOVEIRA, VASCO, a Portug. writer, d. 1325.

LOVELACE, RICHARD, a poet and dramatic writer, son of Sir William Lovelace of Norwich, where he was born 1618. He was distinguished by his fidelity to Charles I., in whose interest he expended his whole fortune, and died in poverty, 1658. His poems were published in 2 vols. 8vo, under the title of 'Lucasta.' His plays are 'The Scholar,' a comedy, and 'The Soldier,' a tragedy.

LOVIBOND, EDWARD, an English poet, author of 'The Tears of Old May Day,' and an admirable portraiture of Johnson and Garrick in 'The Mulberry Tree,' died on his estate at Hampton 1775.

LOW, G., a Scotch div. and naturalist, 1746-95.

LOWE, LIEUT.-GENERAL SIR HUDSON, K.C.B., guardian of Napoleon at St. Helena, was the son of an officer in the British army, and was born in Galway while his father's regiment was quartered there, 1769. He was brought up to the military profession, and performed his first important services in Corsica at the period of the French revolution, after which, in 1800-1801, he went to Egypt, and fought at the battle of Alexandria. In 1803 he was despatched on a secret mission to Portugal, and subsequently served against the French in Naples, and, when Murat became king, in several important islands of the Mediterranean; the principal of these operations being his defence of Capri, which, however, he was compelled to evacuate. In 1813 he was sent to northern Germany, and, joining the allied Russian and Prussian armies, served under Blucher during the whole of the campaign, and was with him in every action till the surrender of Paris, when he was despatched to England with the news of Napoleon's abdication, and was knighted by the regent. On the return of Napoleon from Elba, Sir Hudson Lowe was attached to the duke of Wellington's army as quarter-master-general, but left it early in June to take the command of the troops at Genoa, destined to act against Marseilles and Toulon. It was during his occupation of the last mentioned place, on the 1st of August, 1815, that he received orders to return home to take charge of the captive emperor; an office which an angel from heaven, as Montholon confessed, could not have fulfilled to the satisfaction of the French. It is a little curious, however, that the complaints of that sensitive people met with a ready sympathy in England, and some of our foremost writers, as Sir Walter Scott, Sir Archibald Alison, and Lord Campbell have echoed their sentiments. On the other hand, the editor of the recently published papers of Sir Hudson Lowe, professes to have established, from a judicial review of the mass of documents confided to him, that no blame attach either to the British governm home, or to the governor of St. Helena, as the treatment of Napoleon. At least, we h case stated for the first time as it appear eye of an impartial lawyer, and the actu terials to decide upon. 'We are much mi however, if the legal tribunal can be admit final one in such a cause. Sir Hudson Lo at an advanced age, 1844.

LOWE, PETER, a Scotch surgeon, died

LOWENDAHL, ULRIC FREDERIC WALL Marshal De, a native of Hamburgh, de from a natural son of Frederick III., king mark, and distinguished as a commande service of Austria, France, Poland, and He acquired immense repute by his share battle of Fontenoy, and the sieges of towns, flourished 1700-1755.

LOWER, RICHARD, an eminent physic anatomist, author of a tractate on the he the motion and heat of the blood, in wh transfusion of the living fluid from the ve one animal to those of another is treated o about 1631, died 1691. His relative, SI LIAM LOWER, was a courtier and dramatis reign of Charles I., and died 1662.

LOWICZ, JEANNE, Princess De, wife grand duke Constantine of Russia, died 18

LOWITZ, GEORGE MAURICE, a Germa nomer, born 1722, murdered by the bands atchef, at the capture of Dmetriefsk, 177 son, TOBIAS, a chemist and naturalist, 175

LOWRY, WILSON, an engraver, 1762-1

LOWTH, ROBERT, D.D., a celebrated in the Church of England, was born at 27th November, 1710. From Winchester he went to Oxford, and having distin himself by his literary attainments, was, i chosen professor of poetry in that universi 1744 he was appointed rector of Ovin Hampshire. Resigning that situation, he several years on the continent, and on his was appointed archdeacon of Winchest rector of East Woodhay. He was well kn a scholar; but it was not till the appear his lectures 'On the Sacred Poetry of the He in 1753, that he became known as one of biblical critics of his age. That work h him a high reputation both at home and and it still maintains a distinguished place a works on the literature of the Scriptures ferments flowed rapidly upon him, for he successively bishop of Limerick; and leavi land he was made prebend of Durham; bi St. David's in 1766; and bishop of Lo 1777. While he discharged with ex diligence the duties of that important see, tinued with the greatest ardour to prose biblical studies, and as the fruit of his un industry, 'Isaiah, a New Translation, with liminary Dissertation and Notes,' contrib extend his fame. The beauty and eleg this translation have been long and un admitted. Bishop Lowth was the author of minor works, the chief of which are, 'T of William of Wykeham,' and 'The Short duction to English Grammar.' He died at palace in 1787, at the age of seventy-six.

an English divine, au. of 'Strict Burnet's Works,' &c., d. 1720.
IAM, father of Bishop Lowth, preceding notice, and himself a hor of numerous practical and born in London 1661, d. 1732.
Dominican missionary, d. 1715.
t LE, Sieur De La Brosse, a reat learning, author of a curies, and one of still greater sin-Edom, or the Idumæan Colonies
,' 1550-1634.
, a Polish hist., abt. 1750-1800.
ATIUS, or DON INIGO LOPEZ founder of the order of Jesuits,
n of Don Bertram, and was born le of Loyola, in the district of
ay. He was attached in his o the court of Ferdinand and ed up in all the vices and frio his position. When still a ered the army, and during his na in 1521 against the French, unded, and a long and tedious
e result. The invalid, however,
th the Spanish legends of the works of a kindred character.
ed, and in a fit of mystical deed the world, made a formal f the Virgin at Montserrat, and March, 1522, laid his arms on d himself her knight. Arrayed grim he then went to Manresa,
f to deeds of benevolence, which
own. His next resolution was oly Land, and after ten months'
ss, he travelled to Barcelona, a ere, and resolute ascetic, sailed received the blessing of Pope
t length reached Jerusalem in After staying but a brief period
enice and Genoa to Barcelona, earnest to study Latin at the irty. At the end of two years, removed to Alcala in order to ter of philosophy. His retreat as hastened by the danger he posing and attempting to remedy rders in a convent of nuns. His ght and address made him sus-nd the inquisition charged him
arned, threatened, imprisoned,
ed him. The indomitable stu-
e crushed, but repaired at once re he met with a similar treat-those inquisitors dream of the bered in the strange and selfeaving Spain, which could not ives, or divine his character, he ebruary, 1528, where he studied es of the university with un-begged for his daily sustenance, tartled his friends by religious eral young men admired his unrew around him, and of the two d with him, one was the famous terwards known as the apostle hearts were on fire for the conld, and they took solemn vows
of chastity, poverty, and entire consecration to the church, in the subterranean chapel of the Abbey of Montmartre. At length, these companions, ten in number, agreed to leave Paris and meet in Venice in January, 1537. As they resolved to go to Jerusalem, they went to Rome to receive the papal blessing and came back to Venice in order to embark. But a war with the Turks frustrated their intentions, and their enthusiasm was in the meantime expended in various forms of effort. Rome naturally became their head-quarters, and Loyola conceived the idea of founding an order to be devoted to the very work in which he and his fellows were so ardently engaged. The nature and plans of the new institution were sketched, and submitted to the pontiff Paul III., who, under certain limitations, confirmed it on 27th September, 1540; but three years afterwards those limitations were withdrawn. Loyola was president of the order, and remained in Rome in order to direct and stimulate its movements. Thus sprung up the order of the Jesuits—the mightiest by far of the kindred institutions of the Church of Rome, and which has more than once shaken the nations of Europe. The order increased with great rapidity; it had a romantic origin and a definite aim. Loyola founded at Rome an asylum for converted Jews, and a penitentiary for reclaimed females. Julius III. in 1550 confirmed the order, and Loyola remained its general till his death on 31st July, 1556. At his death the society consisted of more than 1,000 persons possessing 100 religious houses, and divided for the prosecution of its labours into twelve provinces, reaching from Spain to India and Brazil. Loyola was beatified by Paul V. in 1609, and canonized by Gregory XV. in 1622. His famous 'Spiritual Exercises' were published at Rome in 1548. Many even in his own church deny that he had enough of learning to write this book, or even enough of ingenuity to construct the rules of the order of Jesus, affirming that he was in both respects the instrument of minds more refined and subtile than his own. His was a self-sacrificing fanaticism. His life was a spiritual knighthood—undaunted in the cause which he had espoused. His labours were soon appreciated by the church, and the society of Jesus became a mighty engine before which popes themselves have trembled. Its secrecy has defied investigation, and its unscrupulous means are only surpassed by the devoted spirit of its combined phalanx of agents and associates. Luther and Loyola represent progress and check, march and counter-march, action and reaction in the same epoch of the ecclesiastical world. [J.E.]

LOYSEAU, C., a Fr. jurisconsult. 1566-1627.

LOYSEAU, J. S., a Fr. jurisconsult, d. 1822.

LOYSON, C., a French publicist, 1791-1820.

LUBBERT, SIBRAND, a learned Dutch divine, and deputy to the synod of Dort, 1556-1620.

LUBERSAE, ABBE DE, a French antiquarian, 1730-1804. His nephew, J. B. JOSEPH, bishop of Chartres, and dep. to the est.-general, 1740-1822.

LUBIENECKI, THEODORE, a Polish artist, 1653-1720. His brother, CHRISTOPHER, a painter, born 1659.

LUBIENIETZKI, STANISLAUS, in Latin, Lubieneccius, a famous Socinian of Poland, and historian of the reformation in that country, 1623-75.

LUBIN, Aug., a Fr. geographer, 1624-1695.
LUBIN, Eilhard, a Ger. philolog., 1565-1621.
LUCA, G. B. De, a Neapol. cardinal, d. 1683.
LUCA, Ignatius De, an Aust. geogr., 1746-98.
LUCAE, S. C., a Ger. physician, 1787-1821.

[Lucan—From an Ancient Medal.]

LUCAN, the commonly received name of Marcus Annæus Lucanus, was born at Cordova (then Corduba) in Spain, 38, son of a Roman knight, who was youngest brother of the famous Seneca. It was his misfortune to find a rival poet in the emperor Nero, and to receive the prize in a public competition with the sovereign, who then forbade him to recite his verses in public. This circumstance, perhaps, added to the general hatred of his crimes, induced Lucan to join a conspiracy formed against him, and the plot being discovered, he is believed to have accused his own mother, in the hope of pardon. If so, Lucan could only have repented of his weakness, when, notwithstanding, he was condemned to die. He chose to have his veins opened and then bled to death, in the twenty-seventh year of his age, 65. The only portion of his compositions that has descended to the present age, is his 'Pharsalia,' an unfinished description of the civil war between Cæsar and Pompey. It has been translated into English by May and Rowe, and is much esteemed for the spirit of freedom and morality which it breathes, in numbers of genuine poetry.

LUCAS, Charles, an Irish physician, and member of parliament, distinguished in the opposition to government, 1713-1771.
LUCAS, Francis, a Flem. divine, died 1619.
LUCAS, J. A. H., a Fr. naturalist, 1780-1825.
LUCAS, J. J. S., a Fr. commander, 1764-1829.
LUCAS, Margaret, duchess of Newcastle, a poetical and miscellaneous writer, abt. 1625-1673.
LUCAS, Paul, a French traveller and antiquarian, auth. of many descriptive works, 1664-1737.
LUCAS, Peter, a French sculptor, 1691-1752. His two sons—Francis, a sculptor, flourished 1736-1813; Jean Paul, a painter, died 1808.
LUCAS, Van Leyden. See Jacobs.
LUCCA, B. La, an Ital. historian, 1236-1327.
LUCCHESINI, Giovanni Lorenzo, a Jesuit, and ecclesiastical writer in Lucca, about 1638-1710.
LUCCHESINI, Giovanni Vincenzo, a learned wr., sec. of briefs under Clement XII., 1660-1744.
LUCCHESINI, Girolamo, Marquis De, a native of Lucca, disting. as a man of letters, and Prussian minister under Frederick
His brother, Cæsar, a philologist.
LUCENA, J. De, a Portug. Je LUCHI, M. A., an Italian car logist, 1744-1802. His uncle, Bo theologian, 1700-1785. His bro learned ecclesiastic and antiquary, LUCIAN, the most brilliant a writer of the second century; bo
in Assyria, on the banks of the lived between A.D. 120 and 200 Hadrian, and the Antonines.
extremely varied: he had followe
sions; and mingled with all clas various nations. In his youth a him soon a lawyer—the profession
tion—practising at the bar in Sy Next a teacher of rhetoric, settled
he collected a large school, and siderable fortune. Withdrawing f life, he sprung up into the Lucian of incessantly, but at the same tim ling; he visited Macedonia, Capp
gonia, and Bithynia, resting fo terval only in Athens; and he administering a lucrative office to the emperor Commodus. A would have endowed a mind, e quickness, with much practical mankind, and given an insight condition of society: so that exquisite command of Greek, a tionable taste, he could in nowis rise into one of the best and m writers of the time. Neverthele bestowed on him be nothing mor excellences like these, we shall il
character and influence of one o midable pens ever wielded in Anti ness of wit, not very unequal to A self, whose talents for popular burlesque he also inherited—Lu
besides with that boldness, that sincerity which is insight, belong greatest minds; and he brought th
rare advantages to the execution
which none is more arduous, and o
the waging of an unrelenting war and colour of charlatanerie in his ti
among the details of life, he hol and scorn, although mainly to rid lent follies and vices of society in —the parasite, the waylayer of leg ing but vacant bell, the vender of it seems, and multitudes like the early days, appeared. But Luci and displays greatest courage, in the widest spread—the most g iniquity. The ancient religions w ing; and ancient wisdom had shrun sham and formality. The vulgar into the spiritual sense of the m took the stories of the gods in way, believing them without evi historical, descrying nothing of beauty, but dogmatizing well!
superstition a large proportion of t addressed; and truly they helped to our author wrote yet more earnestl

ower, when his turn with the philoso-ome. It is grievous to think of it,
ly so it was, that wisdom and morals
ofessed by men who knew no wisdom,
od nothing of morals: the dialectic
nthed Plato had passed into sheerest
d the virtues of the Stoics were to much per head. Could a Society en for its wise men, endure long rth? If pen could have shamed it, been Lucian's. But no such salva-store: emptiness having once seized phy, as pharisaism on a religion—
er hope nor help for it under the sun!
ian's best dialogue, in scourge of the is 'The Angler.'—A function of this ed and unflinchingly carried out, ness indeed; but, sad for the cotem-ation of the Scorner of Samosata!
λλε, προσπαίζε λλε,—no quarter to him arter was never given! But at this ity of a long interval of time, and in ours, we may descry the sense, believe tism, and even doubt the 'infidelity'
The vices he warred with, are none of
we can afford to be temperate, and o be impartial. The experience of uries having discredited superstition, shed insincerity—men may now enjoy admire the polish, for surely they fended by the satire of the Dialogues
[J.P.N.]

, St., a presbyter of Antioch, who suf-dom under Diocletian in 312.
t, the schismatic bp. of Cagliari, the ardinia, and a saint of Rome, d. 370.
S, a Roman satirist, 149-103 B.C.
A. F., an Italian designer, 17th cent.
a Greek writer of the second century.
the first of the name, pope and saint s elected 252, and the next year suf-rdom. The second, succeeded 1144,
y a blow from a stone in a popular
The third outlived several popular com-reigned 1181-1185.
J., historian of Dalmatia, died 1684.
R, N., a marshal of France, 1722-94.
IA, one of the noblest names in Ro-
, was the wife of Collatinus, a near Tarquin the Proud, king of Rome.
related by Livy, is to the effect that uinius, the king's eldest son, was ina passion for her, moved by her ex-
; and becoming a guest at her house
bsence of Collatinus, succeeded in dis-er person. Entering her chamber in ith a drawn sword, and finding himself pulsed, he threatened to slay her, and ody of a slave in her bed, to make it he had killed them both in the act of he dread of being thought so infamous retia to yield, but with a resolve that f her husband and her own innocence renged. She summoned her father sband from the camp, who came ac-
by their kinsmen, Valerius Publicola
, and having recounted the events of e suddenly stabbed herself to the heart
aled dagger. The bloody poniard was snatched from the wound by Brutus, and the witnesses of this sad tragedy swore by the 'once pure blood' of Lucretia, not to rest till they had expelled the Tarquins from Rome. This event, which occurred B.C. 509, was the signal of Roman freedom, the kingly government being abolished, and a republic established by the conspirators, of whom Junius Brutus became chief. Poets and artists have vied with each other in celebrating the heroism of Lucretia, and her name, like that of Penelope, has furnished the most significant expression for all that is noble and chaste in the female character. [E.R.]

[Lucretius—From an Antique Gem.]

LUCRETIUS, the commonly received name of TITUS LUCRETIUS CARUS, an eminent philosopher and poet, born at Rome about 96 B.C., and said to have died by his own hand in the forty-fourth year of his age, about 52. He is admitted to be one of the greatest of Roman poets for descriptive beauty and elevated sentiment, while his philosophy is subject to the errors inevitable to the state of science at that time. His poem, which is entitled 'De Rerum Natura,' embodies accurately the Epicurean doctrine on the nature of things, and was first published in 1486. It has been translated into English by Creech and Mason Good.

LUCULLUS, LUCIUS LICINIUS, a naval and military commander of Rome, born about B.C. 115, and distinguished in the war with Mithridates from the time of Sylla to B.C. 66, when he was supplanted by Pompey. He lived about twenty years longer, in an elegant retirement on the coast of Campania, and his costly habits have rendered his name a bye-word for all that is luxurious and extravagantly refined in taste. He was at the same time a great master of literature, and his house was enriched with a valuable library and works of art, which were opened to the curious and the learned, among whom was his friend Cicero.

LUDEKE, C. W., a Prussian savant, 1737-1805.

LUDEWIG, J P. DE, a Ger. jurist, 1668-1743.

LUDICAN, a king of Mercia, 823-825.

LUDIUS, a Roman painter, age of Augustus.

LUDLOW, EDMUND, one of the principal chiefs of the republican party in England during the civil war, born about 1620, distinguished at the battle of Edgehill 1642, successor of Ireton in the government of Ireland 1650, died in exile 1693. Ludlow is the author of curious and valuable 'Memoirs,' published 1698.

LUDOLPH, Job, a German Orientalist, distinguished for his researches in Ethiopian history and the Ethiopic dialects, 1624-1704. His two nephews—Henry William, distinguished as a Greek and Russian scholar, 1655-1710; and Job, as a mathematician, 1649-1711. The son of the latter, Jerome Ludolph, a physician, 1677-1728.

LUDOLPH, an ascetic writer, about 1300-1370.

LUDOVICUS, or LUDWIG, Godfrey, a philologist and literary savant of Prussia, 1670-1724.

LUDOVICUS, C. Gunther, a professor of Leipzig, author of a 'Plan for a History of the Philosophy of Wolf,' and 'of Leibnitz,' 1707-1778.

LUDWIG, C. F., a phys. of Leipzig, 1757-1823.

LUDWIG, C. T., a Germ. botanist, 1709-1773.

LUGO, John De, a Spanish cardinal and theologian, 1583-1660. His brother, Francis, a Jesuit and theologian, 1580-1652.

LUINI, Bernardin, an Ital. painter, 16th ct.

LUKE, the evangelist, said to have been a Jewish proselyte, converted by the preaching of Paul, and a physician by profession, was a native of Antioch, and probably wrote his gospel, as well as the Acts of the Apostles, while a prisoner in Rome A.D. 63. He was a companion of Paul in many of his journeys, and is understood to have been acquainted with the family of Mary, and even to have seen the Saviour in his youth. He died at the age of eighty-four, and was never married.

LULLI, Anthony, a Fr. grammarian, d. 1582.

LULLY, Jean Baptiste, born at Florence in 1634, showed such a remarkable taste for music that a cordelier, from no other consideration than the hope of his some time becoming eminent in the hope of his some time becoming eminent in art, undertook to teach him the guitar. While under the care of his kind guitar master he attracted the attention of the Chevalier Guise, a French gentleman, who took him at ten years of age to Paris, to be page to the Mdle. de Montpensier, niece of Louis XIV. While in this menial capacity he used to spend his leisure time in practising upon an old violin, and his taste in music having reached the ear of the princess, she immediately procured a master to teach him the violin, and in the course of a few months he was elevated to the rank of a court musician, and afterwards admitted into the king's band, which was styled the 'Les Petits Violons,' of which corps he soon afterwards became the head. From this time Lully's fame as a performer and composer was fully established and recognized. At this time one who could read music at sight was esteemed as a great musician, and not one-half of those then living in France were so far accomplished as to be able to play an accompaniment on the harpsichord or theorbo to the exercises of the scholars. Lully in this respect contributed greatly to the progress of musical science, and in his compositions introduced many of the improvements which have since become inseparable from compositions of the slightest kind. In the year 1686 the king having recovered from a serious indisposition which threatened his life, Lully was required to compose a Te Deum. Accordingly he wrote one, which was as remarkable for its excellence as it was for an unhappy accident which befel the composer during its performance, which he conducted. In the midst of one of the move[illegible] of this work, Lully struck his foot with the [illegible] with which he was beating time. This [illegible] considerable inflammation, and the injury [illegible] untractable that his physician advised him t[illegible] his little toe cut off; and, after a delay of [illegible] days his foot; and at length the whole limb [illegible] this juncture an empiric offered to effect [illegible] without amputation. Two thousand pistole[illegible] to be his guerdon if he succeeded; but, as [illegible] have been expected, Lully became one more [illegible] to the popular faith in quackery. He d[illegible] 1687, and was interred in the church of the [illegible] lent Augustines, at Paris, where an elegant [illegible] solemn was erected to his memory. Lully's [illegible] now chiefly rests on his overtures, a spec[illegible] composition of which he is said to have be[illegible] inventor. He wrote several operas, motet[illegible] other compositions for the church, besides a [illegible] ber of symphonies in three parts for violin[illegible] had two sons, Louis and Jean, also mus[illegible] They in conjunction composed the music [illegible] opera named 'Zephire et Flore,' which wa[illegible] formed at the Academie Royale in 1688.

LULLY, Raymond, a great theurgis[illegible] philosopher of the middle ages, was of Catal[illegible] descent, and was born at Palma, the capi[illegible] Majorca, 1235. He commenced life as a co[illegible] and man of pleasure, but was converted [illegible] about thirty years of age to the religio[illegible] chiefly by the exhortations of a married [illegible] whom he had professed the most ardent [illegible] For about ten years, 1265-1275, he lived [illegible] less in a solitary place, and became the [illegible] remarkable ecstacies and visions—the e[illegible] that his prayers for wisdom to convert th[illegible] were answered, he says, by a singular ill[illegible] of his mind, in which the principles [illegible] became manifest to him. In this ligh[illegible] aid of his investigations in Arabian [illegible] he conceived a new system of dialectic[illegible] be consulted in his 'Ars Generalis [illegible] published 1480; the 'Ars Brevis,' pu[illegible] and the 'Arbor Scientiae,' 1482. [illegible] these (of which the second is an abr[illegible] proposes a universal art, or science [illegible] the principles of which all others [illegible] be comprehended, and by the aid [illegible] maintained they could all be dem[illegible] 'Arbor Scientiae,' or tree of kno[illegible] a demonstration of the love of Go[illegible] bour, traced from its root to its [illegible] possible to enumerate all his [illegible] general object is to demonstr[illegible] lible method, all the primary tr[illegible] cluding the existence and life [illegible] embrace in their scope, the ph[illegible] sical sciences; and, as a necess[illegible] doctrines of the alchymists, [illegible] Lully as one of their greates[illegible] tical means to attain the e[illegible] large in their scope as his sy[illegible] embodied them in three pro[illegible] upon the pope and Philip [illegible] journeys to effect his purpo[illegible] all the existing military o[illegible] into one body. 2. That [illegible] the philosopher Averrh[illegible] suppressed. 3. That n[illegible]

all parts of the world, to instruct in strange guages and in the new dialectic, such as uld enter into vows for the conversion of infi-s. It must be admitted that this was a magni-nt political design, and there is nothing in his-y to compare with it, except the achievements Loyola. Raymond Lully, disappointed, after most indefatigable efforts to procure the adop- of his system, embarked for Turin, to com-ce his apostleship single-handed, and there, it elieved, he found the death of a martyr, 1315. works acquired great celebrity, and were often nted in the 16th century. The best of his ggists is the French priest Ant. Perroquet. dé ridicules his pretensions, and calls him an rant friar, but without exhibiting any appre-ion of what he really teaches. [E.R.]

JMAGNE, Marie De, religious founder of rder of 'Filles de la Providence,' 1599-1657.
JMISDEN, A., a Scotch antiquar., 1720-1801.
JMSDEN, M., a Scotch Oriental., 1777-1835.
JNARDI, V., an Italian æronaut, 1759-1799.
JND, L., a Swedish jurisconsult, 1638-1715.
JNEAU DE BOISJERMAIN, Peter Jos. cis, a miscellaneous writer, author of a mentary on Racine,' a 'Course of History eography,' &c., 1732-1801.
JNIG, J. C., a German compiler, 1662-1740.
JPSET, Th., an English scholar and transla-c. to Richard Pace, when ambas., 1498-1532.
JPTON, D., an Eng. biographer, 17th cent.
JPTON, W., an English divine, d. abt. 1726.
JPUS, or WOLFIUS, Christian, a monk of Augustin, known as a canonist and theolo-1612-1681.
JPUS, Servatus, a Fr. theologian, 9th cent.
JRBE, G. De, a French antiquarian, d. 1613.
JSHINGTON, W., an Eng. statesman, d. 1813.
JSIGNAN, G. De, a Fr. crusader, died 1194.
JSSAN, Margaret De, a French novelist nsiderable genius, author of a great number torical romances, 1682-1758.

JTHER, the great German reformer, was at Eisleben, 10th November, 1483. As he born on St. Martin's Eve, and baptized the day, he received his Christian name of Mar-His father, who was a poor miner, left Eisle-for Mansfeld, when the infant Martin was cely six months old. Here the hardy labourer prospered, as to have at length two blast-fur-es of his own, and to be thus enabled by a be-nant Providence, to give his son a good edu-tion. After getting such tuition as the place of rental residence could afford, Martin was sent at e age of fourteen to school at Magdeburg, where is poverty forced him, with other boys, to tra-erse the neighbouring villages and to sing hymns s a means of procuring a supply of victuals. Re-moving next year to Isenach, he was pressed by similar difficulties, and compelled to a similar means of relief, till a benevolent family took him under their roof. His father was anxious that his son should study law, and Martin entered the uni-versity of Erfurt in 1501. The fashionable schol-astic philosophy occupied him here for a series of years, and 'the whole university admired his genius.' During the second year of his studies at Erfurt, being a laborious reader, and in the habit of ransacking the college library and devouring its volumes, he found a copy of the Latin Bible, a book he had never seen before, and which on his reading it, stirred up strange and rapturous sensations within him. Not long afterwards his severe studies produced an alarming illness, which brought him face to face with death, and created serious and permanent religious impressions, which were so deepened by the death of a very intimate friend and fellow-student by a stroke of lightning, that he at once resolved to become a monk, and leaving all his property behind him, but a Virgil and Plautus, and giving his astonished friends a hearty farewell banquet, he entered the monastery of the hermits of St. Augustine. Here the ambitious scholar soon felt the crushing despotism of those monkish brothers, for he was forced to do the most menial and disgusting offices, and the master of arts was made a servant of all work—sweeper, porter, and beggar, for the lazy drones who buzzed in the convent. Still, he did not neglect his studies, and he strove earnestly all the while to obtain that spiritual peace and sanctity which he had imagined must be easily found in a religious establishment. Alas! he watched, fasted, prayed, read, and did penance on himself in vain. His melancholy could not be relieved by such ghostly mechanism. His was not a mind to be cheated into quiet by monastic routine, or degraded and hushed by morbid asceticism. But the conversations of Staupitz, his vicar-general, at length led the young Augustinian to feel the freedom and peace of the gospel, and he was ordained to the priesthood, and celebrated his first mass, in his twenty-fourth year. By the influence of Staupitz, Luther was in 1508 called by Frederick, elector of Saxony, to be a professor of philosophy in the university of Wittemberg. Here in a short time he taught also biblical theology, and obtained more internal serenity, and a deeper view of the Divine plan of redemption. He began to preach too with that vigour, impetuosity, and eloquence which soon attracted immense crowds. About 1510 he was sent to Rome on ecclesiastical business, and his mind received a terrible shock by what he witnessed of the idleness, profanity, and sensuality of the Romish clergy and laity, and the grief and indignation he experienced during this visit to the city of the pope, caused the veil to fall from his eyes. On returning from the Italian metropolis, he was, in 1512, made doctor of divinity, and he continued to preach boldly, attacking the scholastic philosophy, and basing his arguments more and more on the Holy Scriptures. The court of Rome, to supply its luxuries, and aid in building St. Peter's, had commissioned indulgences to be sold in Germany. The traffic was carried on with the utmost effrontery, and under a regular tariff, and Tetzel was a fit instrument for the nefarious commerce in the souls of men. Some of the people of Wittemberg, who had confessed to Luther, refused to abandon their sins, and pleaded the indulgences which they had bought. The spirit of Luther was fired—the spark was laid to the train which ended in so mighty an explosion. He preached and remonstrated, and on the 31st October, 1517, nailed to the door of the castle church his ninety-five theses, and sent a copy of them to the archbishop of Magdeburg. The consequent discussions with Tetzel at Wittemberg, and his debates upon the same subject at Heidelberg, only increased and deepened the agitation, and added to Luther's popularity. By and bye he was summoned to appear and answer at Augsburg before the papal legate, Cardinal Cajetan. At the several interviews he stood firm and resolved, and the friar Martin returned in triumph to his cell and his lecture-room. The excitement was now so prodigious that the courteous Elector wished him to leave the city —the idea of a capital penalty for him was loudly talked of, and the unquailing Luther at last appealed from the pope to a general council. But Militz, another legate, was appointed, and at a meeting which took place at Altenburg in 1519, Luther was so far cajoled as to write an humble and apologetic letter to Leo. The letter was unheeded —the reformer became more and more alive to the errors of the church—the disputation with Eckius still forced him onwards, and, being too honest to conceal his convictions, he took advantage of the press, and his works found a wondrous and immediate circulation. Rome became seriously alarmed, and Leo at length issued a bull of excommunication, which Luther publicly and contemptuously burnt before an immense assembly at Wittemberg. The German mind was thoroughly roused, and prepared to throw off the yoke of Rome. Luther's separation from Rome was now complete. Leo urged the new emperor, Charles V., to apprehend and punish the turbulent and daring heretic, but by the influence of the elector of Saxony, the reformer's cause was tried at Worms. On his way to Worms, Spalatin, apprehensive for his safety, despatched a messenger to forewarn and dissuade him from continuing his journey, but the magnanimous champion replied, 'Go tell your master, that though there were as many devils in Worms as tiles upon the house-tops, I will enter it.' On the 16th of April he reached this city, attired in his friar's cowl; multitudes met him, and he entered it attended by 2,000 persons. Before his 204 august judges, the emperor and his nobility, his courage did not fail, for clearly and fully did he vindicate his past procedure, and he steadily appealed to the authority of Scripture. The result was, that Charles issued a rescript 'against the evil fiend in human form,' 'the fool,' and 'the blasphemer,' and put him under the ban of the empire. Luther had already left the town, pursuing the road that took him to Mora, that he might see his aged grandmother. He resumed his journey the next day, but as he passed through the depths of the Thuringian forest he was roughly seized by five horsemen, and carried to the castle of Wartburg, and a whole year he lay there in solitude, while his friends mourned his absence or death. But his powerful patrons had in this way provided for his safety. This period of forced retirement was not mis-spent, and though he had to wrestle with morbid and nervous sensations, produced by his confinement and sedentary life, he translated the New Testament into German, which was published in 1522. Leaving his Patmos, and returning to Wittemberg, his undaunted energy carried all before it, the reformation was ushered in, and in 1524 Luther abandoned the monastic dress —the last symbol of his connection with Rome. He crushed his fanatical opponents, who did more injury to his cause than his papal adversaries, gallantly entered the lists with Henry V England, and fought stoutly with Erasmus Freedom of the Will. In 1525, he was mar Pomeranus, to Catherine von Bora, who h her convent about two years before, and 'h

[Luther's Chamber at Wittemberg.]

and lovely Ketha' proved a kind and affec wife to him. The labours of Luther were period incessant, for the care of all the ch was upon him, and many of the states o many embraced his doctrines. From 1517 t every year saw him publish a book or books some form of papal error. The anabaptist a sad thorn in his side, and by their wretch cesses brought great scandal upon his works translation of the Bible occupied a large por his time, for it was the mainstay of the re tion; and commentaries on almost all the of the Bible proceeded from his unwearie Councils were in those days reckoned a grat cific for healing ecclesiastical discord, an were not a few in the life of Luther: We 1521, Nuremberg in 1522-23, when the G princes presented a list of 'a hundred griev another at the same place in the followin at which the members resolved to work out as possible the decisions of that of Worm that of Augsburg in 1525, adjourned to Sp 1526, at which a general council was dem Another diet was convoked to meet in Fe 1529, and the imperial and popish party hav mastery, decreed to suppress the reformat force. Against this bloody decree the d solemnly protested, and the reforming ha ceived from this circumstance the appe name of Protestants. Luther and Zwingl quarrelled about the nature of the Lord's S and maintained a worse than idle contes met personally for disputation at Marburg diet of Augsburg met in 1530, the con prepared by Melanchthon was submitted to protestantism, in spite of all obstacles, was established among the German nations. many interruptions and incessant labours, continued at Wittemberg during his rem years. In his sixty-second year his health to give way—the strong man was bowed After an altercation with the lawyers abou destine marriages and certain female fash dress, he indignantly left Wittemberg for E in the month of January, 1546. The river Issel being swollen, he was five days upon the road. On the 17th of February he complained of oppressive pain in his chest. Momentary relief from it was soon obtained; but he was again attacked in the night, and after brief but earnest religious exercises, and thrice repeating the inspired words, 'Into thy hands I commit my spirit—God of truth thou hast redeemed me,' he expired between two and three o'clock in the morning. His disease is supposed to have been angina pectoris, but some say, cancer in the stomach. On the 19th his body was enclosed in a leaden coffin and carried into the church ere it was removed for burial, and on the 22d the hearse arrived at Wittemberg, where the whole city stood around the gates in deepest sorrow and lamentation. Luther was buried in the Schloss-kirche, and many a traveller has read the simple inscription that still stands over his tomb. —No one will deny that Luther was one of the mighty. He had an earnest and honest nature —a stranger alike to cowardice and dissimulation. Whatever he did, he did with his might. That he sometimes spoke roughly and wrote harshly, no one knew better than himself—'I was born,' said he, to 'fight with devils and storms, and hence it is that my writings are so boisterous and stormy.' It required a leonine temperament to do the work of Martin Luther. Yet he was a man of a loving and generous heart—playful and happy with his wife and family or friends. He liked hilarity, and his great mind rejoiced to unbend. Intellect and passion were alike powerful within him, for with all his clearness of reason and conscientious decision, he was often swayed by impulse. In those moments he uttered or wrote those expressions, that have so often the semblance of inconsistent paradoxes. So much was he formed to lead opinion that he could not easily bear contradiction. His labour was incredible, as his remaining works attest. Luther had great natural capabilities for music, and he had sedulously studied its theory. He wrote very many hymns and set them to music. In 1523 he published his first hymn with music in a single sheet; the next year he wrote seventeen with a similar accompaniment, and in other subsequent years his muse was not idle. Forty-two original tunes were composed by himself and his associates. But amidst all his literary labours, his translation of the Scriptures stands pre-eminent. Fully aware of the difficult and responsible task, he craved assistance in every form and from every available quarter. When the Hebrew terms belonging to botany and zoology perplexed him, he consulted the physician Sturciad, and he also obtained useful information from his friend Spalatin, who not only instructed him in natural history, but sent him specimens from the superb collection of gems which belonged to the elector of Saxony. Nay, he even employed butchers to dissect animals in his presence, that he might be able to discriminate and render accurately the various sacrificial terms of the Levitical code. But especially did he summon erudite and skilled professors of theology to his aid. They met from time to time, each having prepared himself for the interview by a thorough elaboration of the literary materials belonging to his department of investigation. At these repeated and prolonged consultations, Luther invariably presided, and he had always spread out before him, his own manuscript, the ink of which was scarcely dry, the Hebrew Bible, and the Latin Vulgate. On his one hand sat Melanchthon, with the Greek Scriptures before him, and on his other was placed Casper Cruciger, with his notes made from the Chaldee Targums. Bugenhagen, usually called Pomeranus, from the country of his birth, was also by their side, ready with his suggestions from the rabbinical writings and the old Greek versions. These scholars did their work with marvellous precision and fidelity, for they sometimes returned fourteen successive days to the reconsideration of a doubtful clause or word.—In short, Martin Luther was one of the few men whom Providence occasionally endows, prepares, and raises up for gigantic enterprise. He lived to see his work of religious emancipation immoveably rooted among the German nations—the work of one man and one age. He sowed the seed in tears, but he saw the harvest gathered with joy. Luther was a man of a compact physical frame, with broad shoulders, a large and massive brow, and a firm set mouth. His works have been often reprinted. The best edition of his correspondence is that of De Wette, Berlin, 1825-28, 5 vols. 8vo. His Table Talk, all of which is not authentic, is one of the foundations of his Memoires by Michelet, Paris, 1837. A good edition of his works was published at Halle, in 24 volumes, 1737-53, and another edition, in 12mo, is in course of publication at Erlangen, 1826-53; 51 volumes have already appeared, and the whole is to occupy 60 volumes. There are many separate lives of the reformer, among which may be enumerated those of Pfizer, Meurer, Jürgen, König, Weydmann, and Wildenhahn. [J.E.]

LUTI, or LUTTI, B., a Ital. artist, 1666-1724.

LUTMA, J., a Dutch engraver, 1609-1685.

LUTTERELL, H., an Irish engraver, b. 1650.

LUXDORF, B. W., a Danish savant, 1716-88.

LUXEMBOURG, FRANCIS HENRY DE MONTMORENCI BOUTEVILLE, Duc De, one of the greatest generals of the age of Louis XIV., was a posthumous son of the count de Bouteville, and a pupil in war of the great Condé. He was constantly opposed to William III., and was successful against him in the battle of Nerwinde 1695, when 20,000 men were left on the field. Born 1628, commander-in-chief in Holland 1672, marshal 1675, died 1695. One of his sons, CHRISTIAN LOUIS, served in the Austrian war of succession, 1675-1746. The nephew of the latter, C. F. FREDERIC, was also a French marshal, 1702-1764. His wife, MADELEINE, widow of the duke de Boufflers, was celebrated at the court of Louis XV., 1707-1787.

LUYKEN, JOHN, a Dutch engraver, 1649-1712. His son and pupil, N. GASPARD, d. before him, 1660.

LUYNES, CHARLES D'ALBERT, Duc De, descended from a noble Florentine family named Alberti, who established themselves in France in 1413, was born at Pont St. Esprit 1578, and was godson of Henry IV. In the reign of Louis XIII. he became prime minister, and at length constable of France; died 1621. His son, LOUIS CHARLES, an ascetic writer, and one of the Port-Royal savants, author of many works published under the name of 'Laval,' flourished 1620-1690.

LUZAN, IGNATIUS, a Spanish poet, 1695-1754.

LUZZATTO, S., a Venetian rabbi, 17th cent.

LYCON, a Greek philosopher, 4th cent. B.C.
LYCOPHRON, a Greek poet, 2d century B.C.

[Lycurgus—From an Ancient Statue.]

LYCURGUS, the great legislator of the Lacedæmonians, was the son of Eunomus, king of Sparta. His history commences with the year 898 B.C., when he might have usurped the throne on the death of his brother, but preferring to guard the kingdom for the unborn child of the latter, he devoted himself to the study of legislation. On his nephew becoming of age, Lycurgus travelled into Crete, Egypt, and Asia, and thus prepared himself to give Sparta the laws which have rendered his name immortal. His object was to regulate the manners as well as the government, and to form a warrior nation, in which no private interest should prevail over the public good. It is said that Lycurgus persuaded the Spartans to swear that they would observe these laws till his return from another journey, and that he then departed, and they never heard of him more. One account states that he starved himself to death, but it is more probable that he retired to private life, and died naturally, as Lucian records, at the age of eighty-five. [E.R.]

LYCURGUS, an Athenian orator and political functionary, about 408-325 B.C.

LYDGATE, JOHN, an old English poet, who flourished soon after the time of Chaucer, and is known to have been living in the middle of the 15th century. His history is very obscure, but he was a monk of Bury St. Edmunds, and was ordained a priest 1397. His principal works are 'The Siege of Troy,' 'Story of Thebes,' and 'The Fall of Princes.'

LYDIAT, THOMAS, an English divine, distinguished as a chronologist and mathem., 1572-1649.

LYDIUS, B. L., a German protestant divine, established at Dort as a refugee in 1603, died 1629. His son, JAMES, a divine and critic, was also a minister at Dort, dates unknown.

LYE, EDWARD, an antiquarian savant, au. of an 'Anglo-Saxon and Gothic Dict.,' &c., 1704-69.

LYELL, CHARLES, father of the well-known geologist, a Scotchman, disting. as a discoverer in botany, and translator of Dante, 1767-1849.

LYFORD, WILLIAM, a wr. of practical divinity, rector of Sherborne, in Dorsetshire, 1598-1653.

LYNAR, ROCH FREDERIC, Count De, a D[illegible] statesman and scholar, author of political [illegible] and travels, 1708-1781. His son, C. GOTT[illegible] disting. as a publicist and ascetic writer, 17[illegible]-[illegible]

LYNCH, J., an Irish polemic, died about [illegible]

LYNDE, SIR HUMPHREY, an English magistrate, known as a writer in favour of protestantism, 1579-1636.

LYNDSAY, SIR DAVID, one of the most famous of the old Scottish poets, was probably born in or soon after the year 1490. He is usually described as 'of the Mount,' which was his paternal estate in Fifeshire. He received instruction at the university of St. Andrews; and, in 1512, when he may have been a little above twenty years old, was placed about the person of the new-born prince, who afterwards became James V. of Scotland. He first appeared, both as a public servant and as an author, in 1528, when the young king threw off his subjection to the Douglases. In the next year he was appointed Lyon-king-at-arms, and he was employed afterwards on embassies and other charges, both before and after the death of his royal patron. He sided with the Reformers, to the extent, at any rate, of desiring and promoting purification of ecclesiastical polity and discipline; but he never figured very prominently in the fierce quarrels of his time, and spent his latest years so quietly that it is not known when he died. He can be traced positively till 1555. His poetical works have nothing of high or fine poetical inspiration; but they abound in practical good sense and sagacity, show great observation of society and manners, and are written with remarkable force of language, and tremendous strength of sarcastic and satirical invective. The most interesting of them is his 'Satire of the Three Estates,' a huge dramatic piece, hovering between the allegoric moralities, and those more modern plays in which individual personages were introduced. His 'Monarchy, a Dialogue between Experience and a Courtier,' is his largest composition, but very heavy; and his 'Squire Meldrum' is an indifferent attempt at poetizing the adventures of a noted contemporary. The most successful of his attempts, besides many passages of his play, are his small pieces of satire on the court, on politicians, and on churchmen; and chief of these are two early productions, 'The Dream,' and the 'Complaint of the Papingo.' [W.S.]

LYNDWODE, or LINDWOOD, WILLIAM, an ecclesiastical lawyer and statesman, in the reign of Henry VI., and bishop of St. David's, d. 1446.

LYNEDOCH, THOMAS GRAHAM, Lord, a native of Perthshire, who greatly distinguished himself as an officer of the British army during the late wars, born 1750, died, governor of Dumbarton castle, 1843.

LYON, GEORGE FRANCIS, a famous African traveller, and advent. in the arctic seas, 1795-1832.

LYON, J., an English physician, 1734-1817.

LYONNET, P., a Ger. naturalist, 1707-1789.

LYONNET, R., a medical writer, 17th century.

LYONS, ISRAEL, son of a Polish Jew, distinguished as an astronomer, mathematician, and botanist, 1739-1775.

LYRA, NICHOLAS DE, in Latin Lyranus, a Scripture commentator of Normandy, died 1340.

LYS, the name of several painters—1. JOHN

ANDER LYS, a Dutch genre painter, born at reda 1600. 2. JOHN LYS, flourished at Olden- rg, 1570-1629. 3. DU LYS, of the family of eau Dare, called Nicoletto by the Italians, died Nancé 1732.

LYSANDER, a Lacedæmonian general, who put end to the Peloponnesian war by his victory er the Athenians 405 B.C. He established the irty tyrants' at Athens, and was killed in a ttle with the Thebans 395.

LYSCHANDER, or LYSCANDER, JOHN, a nish antiquarian, died 1582. His brother, CL. RISTOPHERSON, an historian, 1557-1623.

LYSERUS, POLYCARP, a Lutheran divine of rmany, 1552-1601. JOHN, of the same family, writer on polygamy died 1684.

LYSIAS, a famous orator of Athens, 4th c. B.C.

LYSIAS, a general of Antiochus Epiphanes, ing of Syria, vanquished by Judas Maccabæus.

LYSIMACHUS, one of Alexander's lieutenants, who became master of Thrace on the division of his conquests, and was killed B.C. 282.

LYSIPPUS, a Greek sculptor, lived B.C. 350.

LYSIS, a Pythagorean philosopher, B.C. 388.

LYSISTRATUS, a Greek sculptor, 4th c. B.C.

LYSONS, DANIEL, an English physician and medical writer, died 1800. His son, SAMUEL, a writer on topography and the Roman antiquities of Great Britain, appointed keeper of the records in the Tower, 1763-1819.

LYTE, HENRY, an English botanist, 1529-1607.

LYTTLETON, GEORGE LORD, an author and statesman, was born in January, 1709, at Hagley, in Worcestershire, the seat of his father, to whose estate and baronetcy he was heir. He showed early in life the same qualities which he afterwards displayed,—fluency of diction, and justness of taste. He never rose above an easy mediocrity either in literature or statesmanship, but his popular amiable manners, his thorough chivalrous liberality of sentiment, and his good moral principles, justly made him an object of affectionate admiration among the men of genius of the age, and he thus occupies a more conspicuous position than his talents alone could have achieved. He is ranked among the converts from infidelity, but his religion did not become fanatical, and it may be questioned if it displaced anything beyond a dissatisfied partial scepticism. He was twice married, and the object of his earlier choice, from the deep affection with which he regarded her when alive, and his grief for her death, made the contrast with her successor, from whom Lyttleton found it necessary to separate, a matter of much sad remark among his contemporaries. Though his father was in office, he joined the young 'Patriots' who drove Walpole from power. He held several secondary offices, and preceded Mr. Legge as Chancellor of the Exchequer. He was created a baron in 1757, and died in 1773. His miscellanies, in prose and verse, are now forgotten, and his laborious but feeble history of Henry II., is only known to historical inquirers. [J.H.B.]

LYTTLETON, CHARLES, younger brother of the preceding, born in 1714, became bishop of Carlisle in 1762, and was distinguished for his antiquarian learning; died 1768. THOMAS LYTTLETON, the son of Lord George, and his successor in the peerage, was a young nobleman of dissipated manners, who possessed, however, much of his father's genius. He is the subject of a well-authenticated ghost story, which relates that he was warned of his death three days before it happened, in 1779, when he was in good health, and only thirty-five years of age. See (for other members of this family) LITTLETON.

M

MAAN, JOHN, a doct. of the Sorbonne, 17th c.

MAAS, the name of several Dutch painters—ARNOLD, a pupil of the younger Teniers, 1620-1664. NICHOLAS, famous for his portraits, 1632-1693. DIRK, or THEODORE, or THIERNY, great in battle-pieces and cavalcades, 1656-1715. GODFREY, famous for his altar-pieces, 1660-1722.

MAAS, J. G. E., a Prussian philos., 1766-1823.

MABIL, P. L., an Italian savant, 1752-1836.

MABILLON, JOHN, a learned monk and historian of the Benedictines, celebrated for his knowledge of ecclesiastical antiquities, and his skill as a theologian and controversial writer, born in the diocese of Rheims, 1632, died 1707.

MABLY, GABRIEL BONNOT, Abbé De, a brother of Condillac, eminent as a political and miscellaneous writer of great learning, 1709-1785.

MABOUL, J., a French prelate, died 1723.

MABUSE, JAN DE, one of the most celebrated painters of the old Flemish school of Bruges, is the earliest master of any consideration who practised the art in this country. His family name appears to have been Gossaert, but he signed himself Joannes Malbodius, that is, of Mabuse, his birth-place. Mabuse was born about 1470; he studied in Italy, and about 1499 visited this country, where he was employed by Henry VII.; there is a picture of this king's family, by him, at Hampton Court: he died at Antwerp in 1532.—Mabuse was a painter of extraordinary ability: his best works are generally brilliantly coloured, well drawn, and finished with extreme delicacy; his masterpiece is also in this country—the adoration of the kings, at Castle Howard, originally painted as an altar-piece for the abbey of Grammont, it afterwards fell into the possession of Prince Charles of Lorraine, from whose collection it was brought into England.—(Van Mander, Leven der Schilders, &c.; Walpole, Anecdotes of Painting, &c.) [R.N.W.]

MACABER, an old German poet, author of the 'Dance of Death,' painted by Holbein.

M'ADAM, or MACADAM, JOHN LOUDON, a magistrate and trustee of roads in Ayrshire, famous for introducing the improved system of road-making which bears his name, born 1756, died, after declining the honour of knighthood, which was conferred on his son, SIR JAMES NICHOL MACADAM, 1836. Mr. Macadam was substantially rewarded for this important national service by a grant of £10,000 from the government. Sir James Nichol Macadam died in 1852.

MACARDELL, J., an Eng. engraver, d. 1765.

MACARIUS, the name of two saints, the first or elder, a native of Alexandria, originally a baker,

e politics of the world, yet, as in other s of inquiry, the narrowness of the field
onsidered in estimating the conclusions uirer. It is true, however, that one f his acuteness would add to his Ital-nce a consciousness of the machina-rance and the German empire, along rising Spanish kingdom, to get pos-Italy. The events of his life would y told without a narrative of the very l history of Italy during his active
e had to conduct some extremely crititions for the Florentine republic with ous and rapacious Cæsar Borgia, and t has perhaps been often repeated, that l there have been more ferocity and nsed within the compass of two human an when Borgia and Machiavelli met e cabinet. The political and critical bout Machiavelli have centred round discourse on the prince, intended not ion, but for the private instruction of princes of the Medici family. It has ained that he wrote to caricature the e professes, but this is an unnecessary is easy to see that he meant what he is opinions are not wonderful, consider-ool in which he was taught. He wrote and more extensive works, one on the ks of the first decade of Livy's history
a curious dialogue on the art of war.
the 22d of June, 1527. [J.H.B.]

N, J., an English astronomer, 18th et.

CHARLES, Baron Von, an Austrian ho rose to distinction during the wars of revolution, and was at the head of the Naples opposed to the French in Italy,
e most remarkable incident in his career, rrender with 28,000 Austrian troops to e, for which he was tried by court-Vienna. Born in Franconia 1752; died, d disgraced, 1828.

AY, AND., a dist. mathemat., died 1809.

ENZIE, SIR ALEX., was a native of In-nd at an early period of his life settled in After having been eight years in the
the North-West Fur Company, he was Fort Chipewyan 3d June, 1789, on an expedition towards the north, in which the great river named after him, and e Arctic Ocean in lat. 69°. Some time (1771) this great barrier had been first the mouth of the Coppermine River, by learne, an agent of the Hudson's Bay
. On another expedition, undertaken ober, 1792, Mackenzie was the first to Rocky Mountains and reach the Pacific.
hed an account of his travels, London,
d soon after had the honour of knight-erred upon him. [J.B.]

ENZIE, GEORGE, a physician of Edinthor of a biography of eminent Scotch-lished 1708-1722.

ENZIE, SIR GEORGE, a Scotch lawyer
llaneous writer, whose judicial career in f the covenanters procured him the ap-f 'the blood-thirsty advocate;' born at 36, died 1691. His relative, GEORGE
IE, Viscount Tarbat, and first earl of Cromarty, secretary of state in the reign of Queen Anne, and a writer on prophecy, &c., 1626-1714.

MACKENZIE, HENRY, born in 1745, survived till 1831. Though the writings which made his name popular were of a highly romantic and sentimental cast, his life was one of steady routine. He was the son of a physician in Edinburgh; and there was obtained for him, very early, an appointment as one of the attorneys in the Scottish Court of Exchequer; a respectable, easy, and well-paid place. He held it till 1804, when the interest of his friends, and the value attached to pamphlets he had written in support of the government, gained for him the very lucrative office of comptroller of taxes for Scotland. His earliest novel, which was also his best, was 'The Man of Feeling,' published in 1771. 'The Man of the World' appeared in 1783, and was succeeded by 'Julia de Roubigné.' He edited the periodical called 'The Mirror,' in 1779 and 1780; and 'The Lounger' in 1785 and 1786. He furnished to each of these a large number of papers, among which were some pleasing stories; and he wrote also plays, translations from the German, and critical and other essays. [W.S.]

MACKENZIE, J., a medical writer, died 1761.

MACKENZIE, SIR KENNETH DOUGLAS, a British officer, who was in active service from 1781 to 1815, died 1833.

MACKESON, COLONEL, an East Indian officer and political agent of the British government, distinguished during the last twenty years in all the important transactions connected with our policy and military operations in the Punjaub, including the late war with Affghanistan. Died in the prime of life, 1853.

MACKIE, JOHN, a Scotch physician, 1748-1831.

MACKINNON, DANIEL, lieutenant-colonel of the Coldstream Guards, famous for the occupation and defence of Hougumont at Waterloo; born 1791, died, after writing a history of his corps, 1836.

MACKINNON, HENRY, a general in the peninsular war, uncle to the preceding, born 1773, killed at the storming of Ciudad Rodrigo 1812.

MACKINTOSH, SIR JAMES, was born near Inverness, in 1765. From his father he inherited a small estate, the sale of which brought him several thousand pounds; but in the early part of his life he had to seek for maintenance by professional labour. Medicine was his first pursuit, which he studied in Edinburgh, after having gone through the academical course of arts at Aberdeen. Going to London in 1788, he occupied himself much with literature, wrote for the press, and, in 1791, published the 'Vindiciæ Gallicæ,' a vigorous but over-sanguine reply to the attacks of Burke on the French Revolution. Mackintosh had now turned to legal studies, and delivered with great approbation Lectures on the Law of Nature and Nations. In 1803, he distinguished himself by his defence of Peltier, a French emigrant, charged with a libel on Napoleon. In 1804, after having been knighted, he went to India as Recorder of Bombay. Having entitled himself, by seven years' service, to a retiring allowance of twelve hundred a-year, he returned to England. He sat in the House of Commons from 1813, acting on the Whig side, and making some impressive speeches, especially on reforms in the criminal law; but he was both too philosophical and too indolent to be a great parliamentary orator or debater. His power of conversation was highly celebrated; and he was not less esteemed for his candour and amiability, than for his clearness and comprehensiveness of thinking and the great diversity of his knowledge. His writings, though valuable, scarcely came up to the expectations that were entertained of him. The best of them is his fine 'Dissertation on the Progress of Ethical Philosophy,' contributed to the Encyclopædia Britannica, and since edited separately by Whewell. He wrote likewise a good many articles for the Edinburgh Review, and an able but not animated 'History of England' for Lardner's Cabinet Cyclopædia. His 'History of the Revolution' of 1668, which was to have been his masterpiece, was delayed by his indolence and fastidiousness, and left unfinished at his death in 1832. [W.S.]

MACKLIN, CHARLES, an eminent actor and dramatist, in the opinion of some the first, in order of time, of stage-artists. He was born at Westmeath, in Ireland, 11th May, 1690, and was for some time employed at Trinity College, Dublin, as a badgeman. He came to England in 1711, and attempted the stage, but returned to his old occupation until 1716, when he again became a candidate for histrionic honours, as an actor in the London theatre, Lincolns-Inn-Fields. He continued on the stage until 1789—Shylock being the part in which he was most distinguished, and to which he first gave the tragic reading which has been ever since retained. He was a man of great determination of character, and stood up for the professional rights of his brother actors, frequently to his own detriment. But his vigorous intellect at last gave way, his understanding being impaired before his death, 11th July, 1797. Considering his great age, 107, this, however, was not remarkable. What his mind had been remains proved by his works, yet popular, 'The Man of the World,' and his 'Love à la Mode,' two comedies of great merit. [J.A.H.]

MACKNIGHT, JAMES, a Scottish divine, author of a 'Harmony of the Gospels,' &c., 1721-1800.

MACLAINE, A., an Irish divine, 1722-1804.

MACLAURIN, COLIN, a very eminent Scottish mathematician, born at Kilmodan, Argyllshire, in February, 1698; died at Edinburgh, 14th June, 1746. Distinguished for mathematical talent at a very early age—having, it is said, discovered many of the propositions of his Geometrie Organica, when only sixteen—he gained, after a competition of ten days, the chair of mathematics at Marischal College, Aberdeen, in his nineteenth year; and in 1725, he was appointed to assist and succeed James Gregory in the same chair at Edinburgh. Maclaurin's separate works are these:—1st, Geometrie Organica, a work on the description of Curves by the intersection of moving straight lines:—2d, A Treatise of Fluxions, in 2 vols. 4to, of which it may be safely said, that it is the best ever produced, with the view of expounding logically the principles of Fluxions. It is prolix, although full of interesting matter: its value now is simply historical: — 3d, A Treatise on Algebra; and 4th, The posthumous work—An Account of Sir Isaac Newton's Discoveries,—a model of a popular exposition. Maclaurin wrote many separate memoirs, and he had the honour of dividing the prize of the Academy of S for an essay on the Tides with Daniel Be Euler, and Cavalieri. During the resid this mathematician in Edinburgh, the irru the Highland Clans under Prince Charles occurred. Maclaurin planned and superi the works thrown up for the defence of t and exerted himself in every possible way side of the Government. He was obliged account to take refuge in England for but he returned with Law and Order. H tical ability showed itself also in efforts to several public societies in Edinburgh. T few scientific names that ought, in Scotlan held more in honour. [

MACLAURIN, J., son of the preceding, w cated for the bar, and in 1787 became a jud the title of Lord Dreghorn. He is au. o ments and Decisions in Remarkable Cases;'

MACLEAN, MRS., L. E. L. See LAN

MACLEOD, JOHN, a Scotch physici accompanied Lord Amherst's embassy te author of 'The Voyage of the Alceste,' 17

MACLEOD, SIR J., a Brit. general, 17

MACLIAU, a duke of Brittany, 560-57

MACLOU, or MALO, a Welch saint, cl

MACMICHÆL, W., an Eng. phy., au. of ney from Moscow to Constantinople,' 1784

MACNALLY, L., an Irish dramatist, 175

MACNICOL, REV. DR. DONALD, a minister, and master of Gaelic literature a tiquities, 1735-1802.

MACNISH, ROBERT, a physician of Gl known as a contributor to magazine lite under the appellation of 'the Modern Py rean,' author of 'The Anatomy of Drunke 'The Philosophy of Sleep,' &c., 1802-1837.

MACPHERSON, JAMES, was born in ness-shire in 1738, and received an acad education at Aberdeen. At the age of t while he was a country schoolmaster, he pu an indifferent heroic poem, 'The Highlander afterwards, having gone southward as a tutor, he excited the interest of the poet Blair, and Adam Ferguson, by exhibiting purporting to be translations of old Celtic In 1760 he published a few specimens o entitled 'Fragments of Ancient Poetry, tra from the Gaelic or Erse Language.' After cursion which he made to the Highlands to other metrical relics, there appeared the poems which, ascribed by Macpherson to have raised so much controversy as to their g ness; and which, through their strange genius and defect, have divided the critics as much in regard to their literary meri epic poem of 'Fingal,' with smaller piec published in 1762; the epic of 'Temora,' panied by other poems, in 1763. The tr and poet now turned to business, and official appointments in Florida and the W dies. After this he resumed literary empl chiefly historical, and was, in pamphlets an papers, an active and efficient partizan ministry. His political services procured the lucrative place of agent for the nabob of and he sat in parliament for several years fro He died in 1796, at an estate which he h chased in his native district of Strathspey.

'HERSON, Sir John, an employé of the lia Company, whose judicious manage- affairs in the time of Hyder Ali and the war, saved the presidency of Madras , 1767-1821.

)UARIE, governor of New South Wales, 4.

)UART, J. H., a French physician, and the 'Journal des Savants' after Barthez, 8. His son, L. C. Henry, a physician alogist, 1745-1808.

)UER, Peter Joseph, a French chemist descent, known as a writer on natural y in the 'Journal des Savants,' 1718-84.

'HILIP, an advocate and hist., 1720-70.

)UIN, A. D., a French poet, 1756-1823.

ET, C. F. A., a Fr. engraver, 1750-1783.

IANUS, Marcus Fulvius, an Egyptian proclaimed emperor 260, k. in action 261.

INO D'ALBA, an Ital. paint., 1460-1520.

INUS, M. O., a Roman emp., 217-218.

INUS, Salmoneus, the literary name Salmon, a French poet, 1490-1557. His Charles, also a Latin poet, killed in the of St. Bartholomew, 1572.

OBIUS, Ambrosius Aurelius Theo- Latin grammarian, author of the 'Sa- &c., 5th century.

LINSKI, A., a Polish general, 1739-1804.

N, Martin, an English divine, who be- ghly popular preacher at the Lock Hos- nor of several theological works, and of a olygamy in his book entitled 'Thelyph- 26-1813. His brother, Dr. Spencer bp. of Bristol and Peterborough, d. 1813.

EN, Samuel, an Irish clergyman, whose held in honourable remembrance as the of premiums for encouraging the useful arts, from which the society for the en- ent of arts and sciences in London took Dr. Madden, besides his poems, and a titled 'Themistocles, or the Lover of his published a singular volume of 'Letters raphical Memoirs,' relating to events and f the twentieth century, nearly the whole f which was bought up and destroyed as appeared. This disting. benefactor of his was of French descent; lived 1687-1765.

OX, Isaac, successively bishop of St. nd Worcester, au. of a 'Vindication of the f England in Answer to Neal,' 1697-1759.

ELEINE of France, queen of Navarre, for the defence of her state against the es of Ferdinand, k. of Arragon, 1443-1495.

ELENET, G., a Latin poet, 1587-1661.

ER, J., a German philologist, 1626-1680.

ERNO, C., an Italian architect, 1556-1629.

ERNO, S., an Italian sculptor, 1576-1636.

ISON, James, fourth president of the States, was born in Virginia 1758, and, ducated for the bar, became a member of ginia convention in 1776. In 1784, he op- he bill for a national system of worship; in preparing the constitution, and, in ecame a member of the first congress. His s president dates from the retirement of erson, 1809 to 1817, and is marked by the h Great Britain 1812-1814, at the conclu- which the northern limits of the United States were fixed at Lake Hudson and Lake Superior. Mr. Madison died in 1836. His works have been published in 6 vols. 8vo.

MADOC, or MADOG, a Welch prince, said to have discovered the American continent, and settled a colony there in 1170. A tribe of white Indians, inhabiting the country about the northern branches of the Mississippi, and speaking the Welch language, are supposed to be his descendants. Some account of him will be found in Owen's British Remains, and Powell's History of Wales.

MADOX, Thomas, a famous master of legal antiquities, author of numerous published works, and of a mass of MSS. in the Brit. Museum, last c.

MADRID, J. F. De, an American statesman, born 1789, president of Colombia 1816, died 1830.

MÆCENAS, Caius Cilnius, whose name is imperishably associated with the Augustan literature of Rome, was descended from the ancient kings of Etruria, and flourished in the 1st century B.C. He was the companion of Augustus in nearly all his campaigns, and his most trustworthy counsellor in political matters. For the three years 18—15 B.C., he was invested with the government of Italy, and he was always sent to Rome on any emergency, either with the senate or the people, in case he was absent with Augustus. His great glory, however, was the happy influence that he exercised over the emperor as a patron of learning, and his own munificence and taste in the same direction. Virgil, Horace, and Propertius, are best known to us as the guests of his hospitable mansion on the Esquiline hill, but many others enjoyed his protection and friendship. Some poetical fragments of his remain to this day. Died B.C. 8.

MAES, or MAAS. See Maas.

MÆSTLINAS, Michael, a German astronomer, 1542-1590.

MAFFEI, or MAFFÆUS, the name of several noted Italians:—1. Vegio, a native of Lodi, distinguished as a scholar and poet, 1407-1459. 2. Raphael, a savant of Tuscany, died 1506. 3. Benardin, a learned cardinal and antiquarian, 1513-1553. 4. Giovanni Piero, a learned Jesuit of Bergamo, author of a 'Life of Loyola,' &c., 1535-1603. 5. Francesco, a painter of Vicenza, in the manner of Paolo Veronese, died 1660. 6. James, a painter and musician of Venice, known to be living in 1663. 7. The Marquis Alberto, a field-marshal of Bavaria, distinguished against the Turks before Belgrade, author of 'Memoirs,' 1662-1730. 8. Francesco Scipione, brother and companion-in-arms of the latter, but more distinguished as an antiquarian and dramatic author, 1675-1755. To him a statue has been erected in the principal square of Verona, in testimony of the honour that his genius has conferred upon the city.

MAFFIOLI, J. P., a Swiss jurist, 1752-1833.

MAGALHAENS, Fernando, to whose boldness, sagacity, and skill, we owe the first circumnavigation of the globe, was born in the province of Alemtejo in Portugal about the year 1470. Having entered the Portuguese navy, and served with distinction in the East, he was so dissatisfied at his merits being overlooked, that on his return home he sought employment (1517) in the service of Spain. These two nations were now engrossing maritime discovery, England having scarcely entered the field; and so numerous and active were the navigators of the respective Services, that the claim of priority was often difficult to settle. An amicable arrangement had hence been come to in 1494, whereby all the new lands west of a meridian passing down the Atlantic, 370 leagues west of the Azores, were to belong to Spain, and those to the east of it to Portugal. The length of a degree had not yet been correctly measured, and consequently the dimensions of the earth were imperfectly known. (See COLUMBUS.) It was thus uncertain how far 180°, measured either way from the upper, or Atlantic, semi-meridian, would reach upon the Asiatic lands: in other words, what part of those lands would be intersected by the lower semi-meridian. Now the Moluccas, or Spice islands, had been lately discovered; and great value was set upon them by both nations. Some held that they should belong to Portugal. Magalhaens maintained the opposite view, that they could most easily be reached by sailing west, and should, therefore, be the property of Spain; and he even offered to conduct a fleet thither by a western route, so fully was his mind occupied with the bold conception of passing round to the south of the American continent into the great ocean, laving its western shores, which in common with Columbus, he regarded as the Indian or Eastern Ocean. To the practicability of such a passage many late discoveries were pointing; there was the analogy of Africa, whose southern cape had been doubled by Diaz in 1486; a council of able navigators, assembled under royal authority in 1507, had recommended the south American shores as the most promising field of discovery, and seem even to have pointed to the accessibility of India by that way: and in 1509 two members of this very council, Pinzon and Solis, had acted so vigorously on the recommendation, as to push discovery to the lat. of 40° south on the Brazilian coast; mutual misunderstandings alone having prevented them from gaining perhaps Cape Horn itself. Besides, the stirring intelligence had recently arrived that Nunez De Balboa had discovered the great southern ocean, the existence of which had been so nearly made out by Columbus himself. Already correct charts were numerous; and doubtless, though here authority is wanting, a comparison of the Brazilian coast, rapidly trending to the south-west, with the tapering form of Africa, would suggest a like speedy termination of the land southwards, although the western coast was entirely unknown. But even with these suggestive circumstances thus known to him, the enterprise of Magalhaens must ever be regarded as one of surprising boldness, and second only to the grand conception of the discoverer of the New World.—Magellan, as he is generally called, was put in command of a fleet of five ships, two of 120 tons, two of 90, and one of 60; and the crews in all amounted to 236 men. He sailed 20th September, 1519, from San Lucar de Barrameda in the south of Spain, and reached a safe harbour in lat. 50° on the American coast, to which he gave the name of Port St. Julian, in the following April. This was the beginning of winter, which lasts with great severity till October, and he determined, therefore, to remain inactive during this period. His hands, however, were soon full enough; discomforts produced by the limited supply of pr rigours of the climate, ripened pressed discontent, and a demand ate return home; and at length

open mutiny, headed by the offic ships, and in a great measure in them. The ringleader, Luis de M of the Vittoria, having granted a messenger sent by Magellan, wa stabbed by him, according to which he had received. Resistance and next day another captain wa
a third put ashore upon the inh Magellan pursued his course in the end of the month had entered bears his name. He cleared it on t ber, and flushed with the feeling success, stood boldly out into the panse of the vast Pacific. He ha ships; one had been wrecked bef strait; the other had parted compa
and returned home. On the 16t Magellan reached the Philippine i len in with only two islands, whic not been since visited. He enjoye fair weather, and favouring wind to the ocean the name which it s
king of Zebu, one of the islands, wa
by a promise of assistance against embrace Christianity, and, with a his people, to receive baptism.
soon called upon to fulfil his ra undertake an expedition against a king of the island of Mattan. H men were bravely opposed by th Magellan, after a protracted strug contest. Towards the close of th Spaniards were giving way, he w stone; a second broke his thigh be speedily pierced by many lances.
king immediately forgot his vow death all the Spaniards who were who remained on board were too
to manage three ships; one accordi
and in the other two, the Trinida
they pursued their voyage in sea luccas. At these they safely ar kindly received by the king of Tid
dad remained to repair, and after reach America by crossing the P driven back, and her crew made Portuguese. The other ship, the the command of Sebastian del come out in the Conception as turned home by the Cape of G reached San Lucar 6th Septemb completing the first circumnavigati
The good ship was drawn ashore served as a monument of this m voyage. The day on which Sebast according to his reckoning, the 5th S having been lost in consequence motion of the vessel, that is, the ti in longer days.—There had not, of previous opportunity of noticing stance, and as it does not seem t
to any one that such an effect wo
no little difficulty was felt at the ti satisfactory explanation. It is e reckoned in longer days than those and, therefore, there were fewer in If a ship had arrived the same day, navigated the globe by sailing east- lain would have called it the 7th and the reckonings would have dif- another by two days. [J.B.]

N, C., a Fr. diplomatist, 1741-1820.

N, F. L., a Fr. comman., 1754-1825.

TI, LORENZO, Count, an Italian philosopher, who cultivated poetry Lettres under the name of Lindoro a great experimental philosopher, for his piety and munificence as for ature, 1637-1712.

, the name of three Italian painters: BABTISTA, whom the Italians call from the title under which he ex- as a poet, 1509-1589. 2. ALESS- n, a pupil of Fasolo, 1556-1630. BABTISTA, 'the younger,' son of ., a writer on surgery, 1579-1647.

ILLIAM, a dignitary of the Irish 'Discourses on the Scriptural Doc- tonement and Sacrifice,' 1765-1831.

N. See MAGALHAENS.

., a Danish philologist, died 1783.

EGAN, JAMES, an Irish ecclesias- n 'Ancient and Modern History of 1764.

'. M., an Ital. Orientalist, 1612-86.

. A., an Ital. astrono., 1555-1617.

WILLIAM, was born in 1794, at s father had an academy. He was ough his teens when he completed course at Trinity College, Dublin, rwards received the degree of LL.D. ook his father's place as head of the e continued to conduct for several ng, however, in the meantime, in ng. From November, 1819, he was tributor to Blackwood's Magazine, nvented and usually sustained the Morgan O'Doherty, and wrote some irited and audacious of the papers in it. His prose was masterly in verse he was equally happy in Eng- nd in Latin macaronics. In 1823 a school and threw himself on the on. His union of various scholar- arkable talent for popular writing, tire, speedily procured him employ- much trusted by Murray the book- a while he was joint editor of the spaper. But he had an unlucky ng into misunderstandings with his was, indeed, the most capricious f writers, as well as one of the most d unthrifty of literary men; and r society soon degenerated into la- hness. In 1830, he was the founder, years continued to be the cleverest er's Magazine. But his irregular rapidly increasing, and pecuniary hering about him. He sank to ac- ments with such newspapers as the e beginning of 1842, he was thrown prison for debt. He speedily ob- tained his release by passing through the Insolvent Debtor's Court; but he died of consumption, at Walton-on-the-Thames, in August of the same year. He was then in absolute beggary, from which the munificence of Sir Robert Peel, exercised as soon as he was made aware of the case, came too late to relieve him. He dictated for Blackwood on his death-bed the close of the last of his 'Homeric Hymns,' the most ambitious of his serious efforts in verse. [W.S.]

MAGISTRIS, HYACINTH DE, an Italian Jesuit and missionary, 1605-1668.

MAGISTRIS, SIMON DE, an Italian Jesuit and Orientalist, 1728-1802.

MAGLIABECCHI, ANTONIO, an Italian, originally a poor shop-boy, whose prodigious knowledge of books made him the wonder of his age, and to whom the learned in his time were indebted for much valuable information. His literary remains, however, are of little value. Born at Florence 1633, died 1714.

MAGNAN, D., a French antiquarian, 1731-96.

MAGNANI, C., an Italian painter, about 1580.

MAGNENTIUS, FLAVIUS, a native of Germany, who was born about 303, and from a simple soldier in the Roman army, became emperor 349 or 350, killed by Constans II. 353.

MAGNIERE, L., a French sculptor, 1618-1700.

MAGNOL, P., a French botanist, 1638-1715.

MAGNUS I., king of Sweden, b. 1240, reigned 1279-90. MAGNUS II., b. 1316, reigned 1320-74.

MAGNUS I., succeeded his father as king of Norway 1034, and succeeded Canute II. as king of Denmark 1042, died 1048. MAGNUS II., king of Norway, reigned 1066-1069. MAGNUS III., 1087-1103. MAGNUS IV., 1130-1139. MAGNUS V., reigned a short time only in 1142. MAGNUS VI., 1184. MAGNUS VII., 1262-1280. An English prince, named Magnus, son of Christian III., king of Denmark, was proclaimed king by the Livonians 1570, died 1583.

MAGNUS, duke of Saxony, reigned 1073-1106.

MAGNUS, JOHN, archbishop of Upsala, a famous Swedish historian, and opponent of the reformation, 1488-1544. His brother, OLAVE, also an historian, was named archbishop, but being a catholic, lived at Rome, died 1568.

MAGNUS, JONAS, bishop of Skara, 1583-1651.

MAHMOUD, the first of the name, sultan of the Turks, born 1696, reigned 1730-1750. The second, father of the present sultan, born 1785, was placed on the throne by the janizaries after the murder of his predecessor 1808, sustained a war with Russia, which cost him Bessarabia, and the provinces of Servia, Moldavia, and Wallachia, as settled by the treaty of Bucharest, from 1809 to 1812; the war of Greek independence, which ended in the separation of that country, and the annihilation of the Turkish fleet at the battle of Navarino, 1820-1828; exterminated the janizaries 1826; treaty of Adrianople with the Russians, who were on the point of entering Constantinople, 1829; independence of Egypt under Mehemet Ali, and the new treaty of Unkiar-Skelessi with the Russians, 1832-1833; defeated at Nezib by Ibrahim Pasha, and died the same year, 1839.

MAHMOUDY, sultan of Egypt, 1412-1421.

MAHOMET. Under this name we have to compress within a few lines the history of a man, who, by the mere force of his genius and his convictions, subdued to his religion, his laws, and his sceptre, whole nations; and whose authority, after the lapse of twelve centuries, is acknowledged by nearly two hundred millions of souls. We shall endeavour to perform this task conscientiously, stating only what we really believe to be the significance of the facts, however widely we may differ from writers of acknowledged repute—from a Carlyle, on the one hand, who can see but little difference between Mahommedanism and Christianity; and from Schlegel, on the other, who only discerns in it a 'Dead Theism, which begun and terminated in the most unbounded sensuality.'

—MAHOMET, or MOHAMMED, as the Arabians call him, was a child of the Koreish, the tribe which had been intrusted for five generations with the care of the sacred temple of Mecca, containing the black stone, and which claimed a lineal descent from Ishmael. He was born in 570, or according to other accounts, in the spring of 571, and was only two months old when he lost his father, Abdallah. In the sixth year of his age his mother died, and the care of the orphan devolved on his paternal grandfather, at that time chief priest, and he also dying two years afterwards, on his son and successor Abou Taleb, with whom Mahomet, while a youth, was engaged in several commercial adventures, and made many journeys. These excursions afforded the opportunity for developing his military talents and his superior address; and the esteem procured for him by such qualities was greatly heightened by the sincerity of his words and actions, the regularity of his life, and the precision of his judgment. When twenty-five years of age, he married a rich widow named Khadijah, whose commercial affairs he had previously managed, and during the whole of her lifetime, a period of twenty-five years, he is admitted to have been faithful to her. When about forty years of age, say in the year 610, Mahomet began to announce his apostleship to his own family, having previously passed much of his time in a solitary cave near Mecca, exercising himself in prayers, fastings, and pious meditations. At this period, the Arabs roved over their native deserts in a state of barbarian independence, neither the Assyrians, the Persians, the Macedonians, nor the Romans, having been able to bring them under their yoke; and the only common object which united them was the pursuit of gain in some pillaging excursion, or the annual pilgrimage to their idolized black stone. They were equally destitute of fixed principles and laws, licentious in their manners, and gross in their religious sentiments; they possessed, however, the wild virtues of clansmen, they were generous and imaginative, full of rude moral strength, and overflowing with animal energy. For four years Mahomet limited his communications to his own immediate relatives. In the fifth he invited them to a banquet, announced his determination to assume the office of a prophet and lawgiver by command of God, and demanded which of them would be his first minister. His cousin, Ali, accepted this office with enthusiasm—the people of Mecca began to speak of Mahomet as a new prophet—many reviled him as an impostor, others opposed him for political reasons—and the most part demanded miracles of him in p mission. Mahomet answered them b his 'Koran,' leaf by leaf, as occasion and by the emphatic declaration that was to restore truth and virtue by the reasoned with his objectors, preached grims flocking to Mecca, and as y away, his fame became widely spre proselytes might be numbered in all t Arabia. In the tenth or eleventh year Taleb, Mahomet's uncle and protecto the enmity of the tribe began to ma more openly. In the same year he l Khadijah. In the twelfth year it b to him that he could only defend force of arms, there being at Mecca o of every tribe sworn to take his life. of things ended in a civil commotion, on the 16th of July, 622, Mahomet fled then called Yathreb, a journey for hi the sands and rocks of the desert som All the Mahommedan nations date from this epoch, which is called the 'Hegira,' the prophet's triumphant Medina fairly marking the commence conquests. On arriving in this city, the regal and priestly office which had his family at Mecca, and his proselyt to him from all parts, he was soon in to take the field against the Koreish, greatly inferior numbers. He gain battle on the 14th of March, 624; course of seven years more had becom all Arabia, and was at the head of 30,000 men who idolized him. The of his lightning-like progress and vict brief period must be passed over, it important to state by what attracti united these scattered bands into o We read of the 'Sensual Eudaimonis his creed opens so free a scope, both i and the next,' yet, the fact is, compar previous practices of the Eastern supposed indulgences of Mahomet itself. Frequent prayers, ceremonies tion, alms-giving, the prohibition of wi games of chance, are marks of an aust and though he defined the extent of indulgences, and gave them within c a religious sanction, the existence o is no more chargeable on Mahome Arabian complexion. His religion w ritual, but it was consistent and prac was laid down like a firm highway a quagmire of superstition and gnostici the Christian name was profaned, a rality of nature put to the blush. succeeded, not because his theory possesses anything in common with t Christianity, but because it was well deliver the Eastern nations from the l trosities, both of faith and practice between a corrupt Christianity and the pantheism. It was simply the first those nations into the design of pro the Koran was neither an inspirati Bible, nor an imposition. Its metap exactly suited to its practical busin unknown and unknowable, and his de stern as fate. Such a creed could become ymbol of unity among the Eastern nations, he very reason that it reposed in a depth d the subtlety of their intellects, and as- d no intelligible form till it reached the of their fiery passions. It was 'Islam,' ion, to those whose imaginations had defiled ver they had apprehended. We require space more particular, and will therefore only add, ahomet expired in the arms of his favourite yesha, on the 8th of June, 632. The scat- fragments of the Koran were collected two afterwards by his father-in-law, Abubeker, ceeded to his authority, and took the title ph. [E.R.]

[The Kaaba at Mecca.]

AHOMET I., emperor of the Ottoman Turks, 1375, reigned 1413-1421, in which period he ered Servia and Bosnia. MAHOMET II., 1430, began to reign 1451, subdued Thrace Macedonia, and took Constantinople 1453; sted at the siege of Belgrade 1456, conquered utral Greece 1458, put an end to the empire of ebizond 1461, gained Lesbos 1462, Wallachia d Bosnia 1463, Caramania and Ægropont 1464, feated the Persians who had invaded Cappa- cia 1472, subdued Georgia, Circassia, Moldavia, Albania, and the isles of the Adriatic, 1475, died 481. MAHOMET III., born 1568, reigned during he troubled period of 1595-1603. MAHOMET IV., orn 1642, began to reign 1649, deposed after a disastrous reign 1687, died 1691.

MAHON, P. A. O., a Fr. medical wr., 1752-1801.

MAHNDEL, N., a Fr. antiquarian, 1673-1747.

MAIANO, JULIEN LA, an Italian architect, 77-1447. His brother, BENEDETTO, a sculptor d architect, 1424-1498.

MAIEN, MICHAEL, a Gr. alchymist, 1568-1622.

MAIGNAN, E., a Fr. philosopher, 1601-1676.

MAIKOF, B. I., a Russian poet, 1725-1778.

MAILLA, or MAILLAC, JOSEPH ANNE MARIE MOYRIAC DE, a celebrated French Jesuit and sionary to China, where he resided forty-five rs, and translated the annals of the empire into nch, 1679-1748.

MAILLARD, J., a chief of the royalist party at Paris during the captivity of King John, and the supposed assassin of Marcel in 1356.

MAILLARD, OLIVIER, an eccentric preacher of the reign of Louis XI., famous for his daring reproofs of the vices of the court, 1440-1502.

MAILLARD, S., an Austr. general, 1746-1822.

MAILLARD, STANISLAS, generally called Huissier or Usher Maillard, was a person of considerable notoriety in the French revolution, who commenced life as the lacquey of a nobleman, and was afterwards a soldier. His first appearance was at the storming of the Bastile 1789, when he crossed the moat on a plank to receive the written terms of the besieged in the midst of the combat. His next feat was to head the insurrection of women, whom he conducted by beat of drum to Versailles, and preserved in some kind of order; preventing them, in fact, from committing many excesses, when Lafayette and the authorities were really powerless. He was an active party in the movements of the Champ de Mars when the national petition was signed for the king's deposition. In September, 1792, he acted as president of the fearful tribunal at the Abbaye prison, and, during the reign of terror, was an agent of the Committee of Public Safety. After the fall of Robespierre he is supposed to have changed his name, and the date of his death is unknown. To a ruthless disposition he added singular presence of mind and fertility of resources among the savage bands, whose excesses he at once shared and moderated. He is one of those warning instances with which the revolution abounds, of a certain talent and courage among the lowest classes of the people, which may easily degenerate to ferocity when not directed by education and religion. [E.R.]

MAILLE, MARSHAL. See MAILLY D'HAUCOURT.

MAILLE, DUCHESS OF, a lady attendant on Marie Antoinette, who escaped the guillotine by two singular delays, followed by the fall of Robespierre, 1794.

MAILLET, BENEDICT DE, a Fr. consul, an. of a singular system of speculative philos., 1656-1738.

MAILLY, CHEVALIER DE, a godson of Louis XIV., famous as a writer of scandal, died 1724.

MAILLY, F. DE, archbp. of Rheims, 1658-1721.

MAILLY, J. B., a French historian, 1744-1796.

MAILLY-D'HAUCOURT, JOSEPH AUGUSTINE DE, camp-marshal of France, and one of the four supreme generals appointed by Louis XVI., with the sanction of the French assembly, to preserve order in 1790. His colleagues were Bouillé, Rochambeau, and Luckner. He perished on the scaffold as a royalist at the age of eighty-six, on the 25th March, 1794. Louise Julie de Nesle, countess de Mailly, and her three sisters, who were all mistresses of Louis XV., belonged to the same family. [E.R.]

MAIMBOURG, LOUIS, a French Jesuit, author of a 'History of Arianism,' 'History of the Iconoclasts,' 'History of the Crusades,' and 'History of Calvinism,' &c., 1610-1686.

MAIMON, S., a Jewish philosopher, 1753-1800.

MAIMONIDES, the name by which Rabbi Moses Ben Maimon is generally known, was a Spanish Jew born at Cordova, most probably in 1139. He is regarded by the Jews as the prince of their philosophers and theologians, and his treatise 'Moreh Nebochim,' which illustrates some of the most difficult words and things in the sacred writings, is greatly valued among Christians. When the work was translated it created a violent controversy, and divided the Jews into two parties, between whom the celebrated David Kimchi was appointed arbiter. Maimonides died in Egypt, 1209.

MAINARDI, ANDREW, an Italian painter, whose works date from 1590 to 1613. MAINARDI, LACTANTIUS, a youthful painter known at Rome in the time of Sextus Quintus.

MAINARDI, P. A., an Ital. mission., 1713-1767.

MAINE, L. AUG., Duc Du. See MONTESPAN.

MAINE DE BIRAN, MA. F. P. GOUTHIER, a French philosopher and statesman, whose philosophical works were published in 1841 by M. Cousin, flourished 1766-1824.

MAINO, GIASONE, an Italian jurist, 1435-1519.

MAINS, or MAY, J. H., a Ger. divine, 1653-1719.

MAINTENON, MADAME DE, was the granddaughter of Henry the Fourth's friend Theodore Agrippa D'Aubigné. She was born in 1635, in the prison of Niort in Poitou, where her father, a profligate adventurer, was then confined. Left quite destitute on his death in her tenth year, Mademoiselle D'Aubigné spent her youth in dependence on her rich relatives, one of whom educated her as a Calvinist, while another afterwards persuaded or compelled her to become a Catholic. Her harassing position made her glad to contract a nominal marriage with the famous wit Scarron, a deformed, old, and infirm man. Her beauty, liveliness, and propriety of conduct, gained for her powerful friends among those who frequented her husband's house; and, on being left in poverty on Scarron's death, she was intrusted with the charge of the children born to Louis XIV. by Madame de Montespan. She assumed this office in 1669, and attended her pupils to court as they grew up; and, though the king was at first prejudiced against her as a learned lady, the royal debauchee began by-and-by to be wearied of sensual amours and quarrelling mistresses, and to respect and esteem the prudent and well-informed governess of his children. She played her cards dexterously, and was zealously seconded by the clerical directors of his Majesty. The king married her privately, probably in 1685, when her age was fifty, and his own forty-seven. For the remaining thirty years of his life she was his most confidential adviser, and shared in the obloquy of some of his worst acts, such as the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes. She was a virtuous woman, and a devout and bigotted Catholic, ambitious and resolute, but disinterested and charitable. Her published letters give her a creditable place in French literature. She died in 1719, at the nunnery or school of Saint Cyr, which she herself had founded. [W.S.]

MAINVIELLE, P., a member of the Fr. convention, execut. for his atrocities in October, 1793.

MAIRAN, JOHN JAMES DORTOAS DE, a Fr. physic., an. of works in natural philos., 1678-1771.

MAIRET, J., a French dramatist, 1604-1686.

MAISON, N. J., a French marshal, 1770-1840.

MAISTRE, ANTHONY LE, a French advocate and savant of Port-Royal, author of the lives of several catholic saints, &c., 1608-1658.

MAISTRE, COUNT JOSEPH DE; born at Chambery, 1st April, 1753; died at his se mont, 26th February, 1821. De Mais passed through the overthrow of Europ
his native State the subject of most op tunes, had his mind naturally turned affairs; and, as he was a man of unq energy and superior genius, and gifted a time with unusual powers of written we are not surprised to find him one tinguished literateurs of that strange b
period: he was the main stay, if not t
of a peculiar but influential school.
in purpose, with DE BONALD, D'ECKST
LANCHE, and at first with LA MEN
Maistre may be held the most powerfu and representative of a system, to whi
tory of the Revolution and Empire, as wel in France still more recent, have given thority and colourable support: it is t
that societies and the world must be g absolute and unquestioned power,—foun
case on the theological tenet that ter confessed and principal arm of the Supre
nor. The logical foundations of a s from wanting in partizans, may be seen Soirees de St. Petersbourg, a work dis the best advantage De Maistre's remark and executed, while, at the northern ca
the austerity and dignity of a Stoic, he r
the court of Piedmont—reduced to t poor isle of Sardinia. The Soirees de S
bourg, are volumes, which it is salutar
They carry out without hesitation or even to their utmost consequences, doc partially influence a large number even o flecting minds: 'Sovereignty and cha
he says, 'are the two methods by which G reveals himself to mankind:' he tells u hangman is only a delegate of Provid
that the way to Order, is, force and absol
and simple: it is very painful to add, God he worships, or rather the Idea on has bestowed apotheosis, is a being under less dominion of irritation and vengeanc
no relations to that august Spirit, whos imprinted on the abstract forms of our h telligence, and the Instincts of the human well as bodied forth by that Religion in ment of which we live. It were very m tribute these revolting practical dogm
sonal hardness in De Maistre; neithe origin wholly, in the disgust and ap caused by the excesses and confusion o
had been a deploring witness. Much m in the present case, they sprung from t tience as to the existence of evil, which of a certain order, takes the place of
with evil itself, and inclines them, alik politics and theology, to cherish what a strongest and speediest means—no m impracticable—for its eradication. Wit in the first place to secular politics, no method of authority has the merit of
but the gist of the question is, where is ficent authority? De Maistre unhesit plies—THE POPE!—a solution not l accepted in this country. Neither, in t of History, in which we have seen spring up, and suddenly possess the power, is the example germane; for in by far the majority of instances—nay, in every instance in which their functions were beneficent—with Cæsar, with Cromwell, with Napoleon, these men were powerful not because they wore the diadem, but because they at once led and obeyed: their Genius grasped the tendencies and comprehended the necessities of the Age, and so could give utterance to the WILL of the People. We protest, equally, against all such conclusions, in their bearing on the providence of God. The mystery of the existence of evil we cannot fathom; we venture on no Theodicée: but it is not true that the Almighty Sovereign rules by Terror, or that man's salvation can come otherwise than through the depths of his Love.—Like all persons of one idea, the writers of whom we speak are dogmatists: to which, they owe no slight portion of their influence and apparent force. But though a cause of momentary success, energy of this kind involves no enduring power: the world rests on more than one idea, and as it rolls, makes mock at the pedantries of Dutch gardening. Two volumes of De Maistre's letters, chiefly from St. Petersburg have been published since his death. They are worth more than all his philosophy. They are instinct with acuteness, and offer the opinions of a keen observer, on the men and events of that great period of history: his relations with Napoleon are especially interesting. They reveal too, the private character of De Maistre; and how the rigidity and gloom of the Creed utterly failed to obliterate the soft affections of the Man. [J.P.N.]

MAISTRE, LOUIS ISAAC LE. See SACI.

MAITLAND, SIR FREDERICK LEWIS, rear-admiral, commander of the Bellerophon, sent to watch the French coast, and prevent the escape of Napoleon after the battle of Waterloo, was born 1779, and greatly distinguished himself in the Egyptian expedition under Sir Ralph Abercromby. He received Napoleon on board the Bellerophon, after refusing all conditions, on the 15th of July, 1815. Died, commander-in-chief in the East Indies, on board his flag-ship, the Wellesley, 1839.

MAITLAND. The noble Scotch family of this name boasts of several celebrated persons:—1. SIR RICHARD MAITLAND, a poet, and keeper of the privy seal in the reign of Queen Mary, known as one of the extraordinary lords of Session by the title of Lord Lethington, 1496-1586. 2. SIR WILLIAM MAITLAND, his eldest son, secretary to Queen Mary. 3. JOHN MAITLAND, lord of Thirlstane, second son of Sir Richard, secretary to James VI., and chancellor of Scotland, known also as a writer of Scottish and Latin poetry, born about 1537, died 1595. 4. JOHN, grandson of the latter, duke of Lauderdale, a partizan of Charles II., appointed secretary of state and high commissioner of Scotland after the restoration, 1616-1682. 5. JAMES, earl of Lauderdale, eldest son of James, the seventh earl. See LAUDERDALE.

MAITLAND, W., a Scotch antiqu., 1693-1757.

MAITTAIRE, M., a French savant, 1668-1747.

MAIZEROY, PAUL GIDEON JOLY DE, a gallant Fr. officer, kn. as a wr. on tactics, 1719-1780.

MAIZIERES, PH. DE, a Fr. knight, who became chancellor to Peter I., king of Cyprus, 1312-1405.

MAJO, FRANCESCO, or CICCIO DI, an Italian composer of operas and sacred music, 1740-1773.

MAJOR, or MEIER, G., a German theologian, auth. of commentaries on the evangelists, 1502-74.

MAJOR, ISAAC, a German painter, 1576-1630.

MAJOR, or MAIR, JOHN, a Scottish divine, author of a 'History of Scotland,' &c., 1469-1547.

MAJOR, J. D., a Ger. antiquarian, 1634-1693.

MAJORIAMOS, FLAVIUS JULIUS VALERIUS, a Roman officer, proclaimed emperor at Ravenna 457, compelled to abdicate, and died 461.

MAKAROF, a Russian author, 1775-1804.

MAKKARY, AHMED BEN AL, an Arabian historian of the Mahommedans in Spain, 1585-1631.

MAKO, PAUL, a Hungarian philos., 1723-1793.

MAKOUSI, J., a Polish divine, 1588-1644.

MAKRIZI, an Egyptian historian, 1360-1442.

MALACHI, the last of the prophets, 408 B.C.

MALACHI, ST., archbp. of Armagh, 1094-1148.

MALACHOWSKI, STANISLAUS, a Polish statesman, and fellow patriot of Kosciusko, born 1735, president of the diet 1788-1792, president of the senate after the peace of Tilsit 1807, died 1809. His brother, HYACINTH, a partizan of Russia, disting. in promoting the ruin of Poland 1793.

MALAGRIDA, GABRIEL, an Italian Jesuit and missionary to Brazil, who was accused of conspiring against the king of Portugal, and, finally, condemned by the inquisition as a heretic, and burnt alive in 1761. Malagrida laid claim to visions, and published 'The Life of St. Anne, composed (as the title reads) with the assistance of the Blessed Virgin and her Most Holy Son;' 1689-1761.

MALALA, J., a Greek historian, 6th century.

MALAPERT, C., a learned Jesuit, chiefly dist. by his mathematical writings, 1581-1630.

MALAVAL, F., a French violinist, 1627-1719.

MALAVAL, J., a French surgeon, 1669-1758.

MALCOLM, the first of the name, king of Scotland, succeeded 943, and was killed in an insurrection 958. The second reigned about 1003-1033. The third, called St. Malcolm, son of Duncan who was murdered by Macbeth, recovered his throne 1057, and was killed in battle with the English 1093. The fourth reigned 1153-1165.

MALCOLM, JAMES PELLER, an engraver and antiquarian, born in America, and brought to London in the eighth year of his age, where he died 1815. He is known for his works descriptive of the ancient state of the metropolis, &c.

MALCOLM, SIR JOHN, an East Indian officer and diplomatist, distinguished as the founder of our political relations with the court of Persia, governor of Bombay from 1827 to 1831, author of a 'History of Persia,' 'A Sketch of the Sikhs,' and other works relating to Indian affairs, 1769-1833.

MALDEGHEM, P. DE, a Flem. poet, 1540-1611.

MALDONAT, J., a Spanish Jesuit, 1534-1583.

MALEBRANCHE, NICOLAS, born in Paris, 1638, died 13th October, 1715: author of Meditations, and the Recherche de la Vérité: through the clearness and surpassing beauty of his style, and the originality of his conceptions, deservedly ranking among the foremost literati of France: one of the most famous, and at the same time among the least sound metaphysicians of that country. Starting from that fundamental mistake, which misled a far greater man—SPINOZA, viz.: the error of Des Cartes regarding the idea of Substance, (article LEIBNITZ), he fell into a scheme quite as fantastic as Spinoza's, although wholly idealistic; and likewise altogether fatal to the personality, liberty, and responsibility of Man. Defining Body, by the qualities of extension and mobility, and Spirit, by those of understanding and will; conceiving them equally incapable of independent action,—the Frenchman was forced to the conclusion, that in neither body nor spirit could changes occur unless through immediate operation by the First Cause. No action of Matter on Mind being possible, how can we recognize an External Universe? Only, says Malebranche, because the Ideas of the Divine Mind act upon us; we see everything in God, who is thus our only intelligible world. The idealism of Malebranche approaches nearest to BERKELEY'S: it is wholly opposed to that FICHTE, who makes the EGO the cause and creator of every idea. The writings of this philosopher are interesting, from their acuteness, and the amount of truth incidentally brought out; but unless as illustrative of one phase of the Cartesian error, they are valueless to History; they produced no school, and scarcely had appreciable consequence. [J.P.N.]

MALEC-BEN-ANAS, chief of one of the four orthodox sects of Mussulmans, flourished 713-795.

MALERMI, or MALERBI, NICOLO, an Italian monk, remembered as the first translator of the Bible into Italian, and author of 'Lives of the Saints,' born 1430. Date of his death unknown.

MALESHERBES, CHRETIEN GUILLAUME DE LAMOIGNON, was born at Paris on the 16th December, 1721. He belonged to the class called the noblesse of the robe, his father being chancellor of Paris. He passed through several grades of office, and was in 1750 made president of the Court of Aids. His functions were suspended by the temporary abolition of the parliament in the reign of Louis XV., and were restored with its revival under Louis XVI. He held office along with Turgot, and resigned on his retirement. He belonged to the same school as his colleague—a school between the wild scepticism of the philosophers, and the bigotted, or selfish pertinacity of the priests and nobles. Had it been strong enough, the Turgot and Malesherbes party might have saved France, but it was obliged to give way before the pressure of the established interests, until both parties were swept away by the hurricane of the revolution. Malesherbes wrote in favour of the liberty of the press, and in his own practice in office he was charged with giving it a dangerous license. He is the author of some miscellaneous works, but his name is now solely remembered for the genuine devotion with which he sacrificed himself to protect a king to whose defects he was sufficiently alive. Aided by Tronchet and Desèze he acted as leading counsel for Louis XVI. Acts of loyalty far less decided were in that day the sure road to destruction. He was condemned to death, and guillotined on 22d April, 1794. [J.H.B.]

MALET, CLAUDE FRANCOIS, General De, is the name of a French officer, memorable for one of the most daring and well-managed attempts to overthrow a powerful government recorded in history. He was born in Franche-Comté, 1754; and, in 1812, at the period of Napoleon's absence in Russia, was living at Paris under the surveillance of the police, after a long imprisonment occasioned by his republican principles. On the night of the 22d of October, having prepared t documents, and put on the habit officer, he went to the quarters of ments, accompanied by a single indi as his aide-de-camp, announced that dead, that the senate was assembl provisional government was declared. appearance and firm address impos cers, woke up in the dead of the nig this startling intelligence, and in a two he had a large military force ac ing under his orders to occupy the that he had assigned to them. A moment, the incredulity and firmnes General Hullin, the military comman saved the empire. Unable to reply gations, Malet discharged his pistol in real situation was instantly suspected officers present, who threw themselv and took him prisoner. He was c shot a week afterwards, October 29,

MALET, SIR CHARLES WARRE, diplomatist, provisional governor of Bo and author of an account of the tem published in the 'Asiatic Researches,

MALEZIEU, N. DE, a Fr. teache

MALHERBE, FRANCOIS DE, according to La Harpe, marks an French language, was born at Ca died 1628. He was the protégé o and is admitted to be the father of poetry. His ruling passion was pur and many anecdotes are recorded in his nicety in this respect. His eu written by Boileau:—

> "Enfin Malherbe vint, et le premier > Fit sentir dans les vers une juste c

MALHERBE, J. F. R., a Fr. savan

MALIBRAN, MARIA FELICIA, o highly gifted vocal performers of was the eldest daughter of Manuel nish tenor singer, and was born i She made her debut in 1825 at the don, and the following year went where she married M. Malibran, a F from whom she was divorced by the in 1836, and shortly afterwards mar brated violinist, M. de Beriot. She year, during her engagement at the in Manchester, regretted by all class fine endowments and her generous d

MALINGNE, C., a French historia

MALLET, DAVID, whose proper was Malloch, known as a poet and writer, was born in Perthshire about coming the friend of Pope and Bol brought under the notice of Frede Wales, who kept a rival court at made him his under-secretary. He ally employed as a public writer b ment, and Bolingbroke made him a works in MS., which he publishe was Johnson, we believe, who said tion, that 'the scoundrel, Bolingbro his blunderbuss against the peace like a coward, had left Mallet to pu His ballad of 'William and Marga much admired, but he is now only k ce as one of the fossils of literary history. It be worth mentioning, that Gibbon's father ied one of Mallet's relatives when the his- n was about ten years old; d. 1765. [E.R.]

ALLET, EDMUND, a French divine, and er of the Belles Lettres, translator of Davila's ory of the Civil Wars, and a writer in the clopædia, 1713-1755.

ALLET, F., a Swedish mathematician and nomer, b. of a family of Fr. refugees, 1720-80.

ALLET, J. A., a Swiss astronomer, 1740-90.

ALLET, J. R., a French economist, died 1786.

ALLET, P., a French military engineer, known e author of a new orthography, born 1630.

ALLET, PAUL HENRY, a famous antiquarian r and historian, first professor of history in ative city of Geneva, afterwards professor of Belles Lettres at Copenhagen, &c., author of Northern Antiquities,' translated by Bishop , and several histories of the northern king- 1730-1807. His son, H. MALLET-PRE- a geographer, 1727-1811.

ALLET-DUPAN, J., a native of Geneva, n as a royalist and political writer at the period French revolution, when he was part conduc- f the 'Mercure de France.' On seeking an n in London, he edited an anti-Gallican paper, ed the 'Mercure Britannique,' published in and 1799. He is the author of works also in y and polite literature. He died at the house friend, Lally-Tollendal, at Richmond, in 1800.

ALLEVILLE, CLAUDE DE, a French poet, ember of the Academy, 1597-1647.

ALMESBURY, JAMES HARRIS, earl of, son mes Harris, the author of 'Hermes,' known ervant of the English court from 1767 to the of the century. He is author of 'Diaries Correspondence,' published in 1844. Born lisbury 1746, died 1820.

ALMSBURY, WILLIAM OF, a famous Eng- historian of the 12th century, was born in So- etshire about 1096, and is known to have been g in the year 1143. He held the office of lib- n and precentor in the monastery of Malms- , of which he had become an inmate. His ks are a general history of England from the al of the Saxons to 1126, a church history, tiquities of Glastonbury,' &c., which are all ly esteemed as trustworthy chronicles

MALO, VINCENT, an Ital. painter, 1625-1670.

MALOMBRA, P., a Venet. painter, 1556-1618.

MALONE, EDMUND, the well-known editor of akspeare, was the son of an Irish judge, and s born at Dublin, 1741. He was called to the r in 1767, but possessing an ample fortune gave attention to literature. He was the coadjutor Stevens in an edition of Shakspeare, but hav- quarrelled with him, published an edition of own in 11 vols. 8vo, 1790. Died 1812.

MALOUET, P. V., a Fr. statesman, 1740-1814.

MALOUIN, P. J., a Fr. chemist, 1701-1778.

MALPIGHI, MARCELLO, an eminent anatomist physiologist, more especially distinguished for researches in vegetable physiology, was born r Bologna in 1628. He died in 1694. He died medicine at Bologna, took his degree there, d in 1656 was appointed professor of physic in at university. He afterwards successively filled chairs of medicine at Pisa and Messina, and ultimately was called to Rome by Pope Innocent XII., and was made his physician and chancellor. Malpighi lived at a time when physiological inquiries were prosecuted earnestly and with success; when nature had begun to be studied instead of books; and when the dreams of the schools were giving place to practical inquiries and observations. He had early in life learned the necessity of making experiment the foundation of true philosophy, and was the first to use the microscope in anatomical observations. While prosecuting his anatomical inquiries connected with the animal kingdom, he was led to pay attention to the anatomy and physiology of vegetables. The structure and physiology of plants had hitherto been but little attended to. On these subjects, however, Malpighi has shown himself an original as well as a profound observer; and his excellent work on the Anatomy of Plants proves him to be possessed of merit of the highest kind. Succeeding botanists have not failed to draw largely upon his rich store of facts and observations, for his illustrations of the anatomy and external configuration of plants were found to be no less faithful than original. Plumier has named a genus of plants after him, Malpighia. [W.B.]

MALTE-BRUN, CONRAD, or MALTE-CONRAD BRUN, one of the most distinguished geographers of modern times, and almost equally famous as a writer in favour of free institutions, was born in Jutland 1775, and died in Paris, a political exile from his country, 1826. Besides his important geographical works, and contributions to the 'Biographie Universelle,' he edited the foreign politics of the 'Journal des Debats,' and acquired some reputation as a poet.

MALTHUS, THOMAS ROBERT, was born at the Rookery near Guildford in 1766. He studied at Jesus College, Cambridge, where he took a master's degree in 1797. He took orders soon afterwards, and held a small living in Surrey. He married in 1805, and was soon afterwards appointed professor of history and political economy in the East India College at Haileybury, an office which he held till his death. Few men have lived a more calm and quiet personal life, and few have created a greater storm of conflicting opinion in the world without. It was in the year 1798 that he first published the views with which his name is ever associated, in his 'Essay on the principle of Population, as it affects the future improvement of Society.' He improved and matured the work in subsequent editions, and interwove its special opinions with a general view of political economy. Now that the controversial storm has passed away, his doctrines may be dispassionately appreciated. No one doubts his fundamental principle that the amount of the human race must be in a proportion to the amount of food which can be procured for their support. But instead of drawing from this an injunction to mankind to throw their energies into productiveness, and prepare for an increasing population an increased and sufficient provision, the tone of his argument seemed to tend to the necessity of preventing increase, from the dread that it might outdo the production of food. In truth, though a very sagacious writer in general, he omitted the influence of free trade, which puts all the world at the command of an increasing and producing people. Malthus published several pamphlets, and other works of temporary interest. He died on 29th December, 1834. [J.H.B.]

MALTON, THOMAS, an English artist and writer on geometry and perspective, author of 'A Picturesque Tour through London and Westminster,' &c., 1726-1801.

MALUS, STEPHEN LOUIS, a French physician and natural philosopher, celebrated as the discoverer of the polarization of light, 1775-1812.

MALVASIA, C. C., an Ital. art-writer, 1616-93.

MALVEUDA, T., a Span. Hebraist, 1566-1628.

MALVEZZI, VIRGILIO, marquis of, a Spanish statesman, and comment. on Tacitus, 1599-1654.

MAMBRUN, PETER, a learned French Jesuit, known as a Latin poet and critic, 1600-1661.

MAMMEA, JULIA, empress of Rome, and mother of Alexander Severus, murdered 235.

MAN, C. DE, a Dutch painter, 1621-1706.

MAN, JAMES, a learned schoolmaster of Aberdeen, editor of an edition of the works of George Buchanan, and party to a controversy with Ruddiman, another editor of the poet, died 1761.

MANAHAM, a Galilean adventurer, killed 66.

MANAHEM, a famous disciple of the Essenes, who predicted the reign of Herod the Great.

MANAHEN, or MANAHEM, the sixteenth king of Israel, reigned ten years, 11th century B.C.

MANARD, P., an Italian poet, 1714-1800.

MANARDI, G., an Ital. physician, 1462-1536.

MANASSEH, the eldest son of Joseph, and father of one of the tribes, about 1714 B.C.

MANASSEH, a king of Judah, 968-913 B.C.

MANASSEH, the high priest of the Jews, who went over to his father-in-law, Sanballat, and built the rival temple at mount Gerizim, 6th c. B.C.

MANASSEH-BEN-ISRAEL. See MENASSEH.

MANASSES, a Greek writer of the 12th cent.

MANBY, PETER, an Irish catholic wr., d. 1697.

MANCHESTER, EARL OF. See MONTAGU.

MANCO CAPAC, the founder and legislator of the Peruvian empire, supposed to have flourished in the 12th century. Another inca of Peru, named Manco, succeeded his brother, who was put to death by Pizarro 1533, and after some years of warfare was killed by the Spaniards.

MANDAR, JEAN FRANCOIS, a French priest of the Oratory, author of several pleasing poems in Latin and French, and distinguished for his virtues and talents as a pastor, 1732-1803.

MANDAR, MICHEL PHILLIPE, generally called 'Theophilus,' was nephew to the preceding, and is worthy of honourable mention beyond many of the most noted characters of the French Revolution. He was born in 1759, and acquired great influence among the popular societies, by devoting his powerful oratory to the cause of progress. During the massacres of September, 1792, he was vice-president of the section of the Temple, and did all in his power to prevent the effusion of blood. He went to Danton's house on the evening of the 3d, and, nearly all the leading men being assembled there, including Petion, Robespierre, Manuel, Fabre D'Eglantine, and Camille Desmoulins, he urged upon them the immediate creation of a Dictature, and offered to take the risk of the proposal on himself. Jealousy of one another prevented the adoption of this suggestion, and Mandar reproached Robespierre with his hatred of Brissot. In 1793 he was appointed to the executive power. He surv
public, but refused to accept any pl imperial government. The fame o and his political independence indu
ror Alexander to procure an intervie 1814, and observing Mandar's sho could not avoid expressing his sur replied this republican fire-eater, 'I si petit que l'étincelle.' (There is n than a spark.) He is author of historical, and miscellaneous works poems, evincing great genius and expression. Died 1823.

MANDER, C. VAN, a poet and pain

MANDEVILLE, BERNARD DE,
in Holland, about 1670, was a phy fession, who came to England and notoriety by his work entitled 'The Bees, or Private Vices made Pu
This book created quite a sensation tendency, and was replied to by se writers, among others, by Bishop Hutcheson, and William Law. The works published on either side ra to 1732. Mandeville died 1733.

MANDEVILLE, SIR JOHN DE
St. Albans about the year 1300.
of considerable note, and his educa
the times. He seems to have practi art as a profession, till in 1327 he and entered upon his travels. The extended through thirty-four years, country of the East; but the acco
has given contains so many inaccu
dictions, and childish absurdities, attaches to the whole, and it is held as of no value. His descript like those of Marco Polo, had a pow
on the mind of Columbus.

MANES. See MANICHAEUS.

MANESSE, J., a French naturali

MANETHO, an Egyptian histo
high priest of Heliopolis, in the rei Philadelphus, about 304 B.C. On his work, as cited by Josephus in h Appion, are now extant. These ar Cory, and they consist of an accou sion and expulsion of a body of were called Hycsos, or shepherd k to be Jews, besides several tables of

MANETTI, G., an Italian histori

MANETTI, R., an Italian painte

MANETTI, X., an Italian natur

MANFREDI, B., an Italian paint

MANFREDI, EUSTACHIO, an trician, astronomer, and literary care
His brother, GABRIEL, a mathemat

MANFREDI, or MAINFROY, and Sicily, was a natural son of Frederic II., who usurped the kin
he had been appointed regent in killed, fighting against his rival, 12

MANGEART, T., a Fr. numismat

MANGENOT, L., an ecclesiast.

MANGET, J. J., a medical histor

MANGEY, T., an English divin

MANGIN, C., a French architect

MANGIN, CL., a French politic

MANGOU-KHAN, emperor of the Moguls, succeeded 1250, killed in China 1259.

MANICHAEUS, MANES, or MANI, was a Persian of the third century, and educated in the religion of Zoroaster. Some affirm that he derived the germs of his doctrine from a Saracen merchant named Scythianus. His object was to incorporate Zoroastrian dualism with Christianity. In the fervour of his fanaticism he gave himself out to be the Paraclete promised in the gospel of John, by which he understood, not the Holy Ghost, as many have erroneously imagined, but a teacher commissioned to diffuse and perfect Christianity, and free it from the vile corruptions of the evil genius Ahriman. This dualism, common in the East, was a mystic attempt to account for the origin and perpetuation of moral evil. (See MARCION). Manes appeared as a religious teacher under Sapor I. As a man of multifarious accomplishment he attracted great attention; but the hostility of the magi forced him to a speedy exile. He wandered into distant countries still pursuing his mission, and in the East his contact with Buddhism gave new shape and tinge to his eclectic views. On his return to Persia with a collection of painted Oriental symbols, Hormisdas received him and his theosophic pictures with welcome, but under his successor Varanes, Manes was apprehended, and according to an Oriental form of punishment, flayed alive, while his skin was stuffed and hung up before the gate of the city. His system spread over various portions of the church, and Augustin was for a season fascinated by its speculations. [J.E.]

MANILIUS, CAIUS, a Roman tribune, B.C. 68.

MANILIUS, MARCUS, a Rom. poet, 1st c. B.C.

MANLEY-DE-LA-RIVIERE. The authoress of this name was a daughter of Sir Roger Manley, the reputed author of 'The Turkish Spy,' and was born at Guernsey, of which her father was governor. Besides her dramatic writings and romances, or the libels she penned in that form, she was employed as a political writer by the ministry of the day, and continued the 'Examiner' when it was relinquished by Swift. Died, after a life of intrigue and pleasure, 1724.

MANLIUS. Four illustrious Romans of this name are mentioned:—1. MARCUS MANLIUS CAPITOLINUS, a patrician general, who saved the capitol when surprised by the Gauls about 390 or 392 B.C., and was thrown from the Tarpeian Rock 370 B.C. 2. LUCIUS MANLIUS IMPERIOSUS, named dictator, and compelled to abdicate for his despotism, B.C. 363. 3. TITUS MANLIUS TORQUATUS, son of the preceding, famous for his magnanimity and courage, was appointed military tribune B.C. 362, and dictator 352, and again 348, without passing through the inferior dignity of consul. The latter office, however, he filled in 347, 344, and 340, but finally lost his popularity by the rigour of his administration. 4. A second TITUS MANLIUS TORQUATUS, who was appointed consul B.C. 235 and 224, and, in the latter period, closed the temple of Janus after subjugating Sardinia. He refused a third consulate in 212, but was censor in 209.

MANN, A. T., a Flem. antiquarian, 1740-1810.

MANNERS, JOHN, marquis of Granby, a British officer, who distinguished himself in Germany under Prince Ferdinand of Brunswick, and was afterwards a member of the government, and commander-in-chief of the army, 1721-1770.

MANNERT, C., a Bavar. historian, 1756-1834.

MANNI, D. M., an Ital. antiquar., 1690-1788.

MANNING, O., an Eng. antiquar., 1721-1801.

MANNING, T., a disting. linguist, 1774-1840.

MANNOZZI, G., an Ital. painter, 1590-1636.

MANRIQUE, A., a Span. prelate, 1577-1649.

MANRIQUE, S, a Span. mission., 17th cent.

MANSART, FRANCIS, a celebrated French architect of Italian origin, 1598-1666. His nephew and pupil, JULES HARDOUIN, called MANSART, architect of Versailles, &c., 1645-1708.

MANSFELD, PETER ERNEST, count of, an Austrian statesman and soldier, governor of the Low Countries after the death of the duke of Parma, 1517-1604. His natural son, ERNEST, also count of Mansfeld, and an enemy of the Austrian empire, called the Attila of Christendom, 1585-1626.

MANSFIELD, WILLIAM MURRAY, earl of, was born in Perthshire on the 2d of March, 1705. He was the fourth son of Viscount Stormont, and the vehement jacobitism of his family, some members of it being deeply involved in the rebellion of 1745, not only cast difficulties in the way of his early career, but was often successfully employed in debate by Chatham and his other opponents. He studied at Westminster and Christ's Church, Oxford. He was called to the bar in 1731. He wrote in his youth some poetry justly forgotten, but perhaps common tastes and pursuits may have been the foundation of that intimacy with Pope, which seems to have had a material influence on his prospects. Though no poet, he was essentially a man of genius. He cast entirely away the conventionalities of a Scottish jacobite, and entered the arena of English politics and professional ambition, with a talent and energy which gave him the full advantage of his aristocratic rank and signal personal graces. A new class of business—that of appeals from the Court of Session in Scotland, to the House of Lords, fell largely into his hands; and Pope has noticed him in a line more distinct than poetic, as 'so known, so honoured, in the House of Lords.' He became Solicitor-General in 1743, but it was not until 1754 that he took the next step in promotion as Attorney-General. In 1756, he was made Chief-Justice of the King's Bench. He clung tenaciously to this office, and would not take the risks and responsibilities of the Chancellorship at the demand of public or party spirit. His name has not been popular as a judge, and he has generally been contrasted with Camden as one who inherited the despotic spirit of the Stuart dynasty. The prejudice was confirmed by his courageous conduct in the Wilkes' outrages and furnished a text for the savage attacks of Junius, who spoke of him as a fitting Pretor for Justinian. But, however narrow some of his opinions may have been, others partook of a large liberality, and in the anti-catholic fervour connected with the outbreak known as Lord George Gordon's riots, he showed a humane, generous, and courageous toleration. He was a very great lawyer, not merely in a technical sense, but as one who could direct the practice of the courts towards broad principles of jurisprudence. Many departments in the mercantile law of England and Scotland were created by him, and among others the law of marine insurance was made and systematized by his decisions. He retired from office in 1788, and died in 1793. [J.H.B.]

MANSI, J. D., an Italian savant, 1692-1769.

MANSION, COLARD, a writer and printer, celebrated for introducing the art into Bruges, d. 1484.

MANSTEIN, CHRIS. HERMAN DE, a Russian general, au. of a 'Memoir' on Russia, 1711-1757.

MANT, RICHARD, a famous Irish prelate, was born at Southampton, where his father held a living in the church, 1776, and began his ecclesiastical career as vicar of Coggeshall, in Essex, in 1810. In 1820 he became bishop of Killaloe; in 1823 bishop of Down and Connor; and in 1842 was translated to the see of Dromore. He died in 1848. The works of Dr. Mant consist of a vast number of sermons and tracts, but his celebrity rests on an edition of the Bible, which he prepared in conjunction with Dr. D'Oyley.

MANTEGNA, ANDREA, an eminent painter of Mantua, whose two sons, one of whom was named FRANCESCO, and his father, CARLO, were also artists, and fellow-workers with him, 1430-1505.

MANTICA, F., an Italian cardinal, 1534-1614.

MANTON, T., a nonconformist divine, 1620-77.

MANTOVANO, BATTISTA SPAGNUOLI, an elegant Latin poet, better kn. as Battista, 1448-1516.

MANU, the supposed author of the Mánava Sástra, one of the sacred books of the Hindoos, containing a code of laws, is supposed by Sir William Jones to be the same as Minos in the Grecian mythology. There are fourteen Menus, of whom this one is the seventh. The name belongs to mythology rather than biography.

MANUEL COMMENUS, fourth son of John Commenus, born 1120, succeeded his father as emperor of the East 1143, d. 1180. See COMMENUS.

MANUEL PALÆOLOGUS, born 1349, succeeded his father, John Palæologus, as emperor of the East 1391, died 1425.

MANUEL, F., a Portugese poet, 1734-1819.

MANUEL, JAMES ANTHONY, a famous leader of the opposition in the French chamber after the restoration, was born in Provence 1755, and after serving with distinction in the republican armies raised by the levy en masse, adopted the profession of the bar. He was a member of the chamber convoked by Napoleon during the hundred days, 1815, and with all his eloquence and power resisted the re-establishment of the Bourbons by the allied armies. Returned to the chamber in 1818, his patriotic fervour in the tribune, his high spirit, and his brilliant oratory, marked him out as the champion of French liberty, and kept the party of the ministers in continual terror His first speech in the session of 1823 was on the iniquity of the Spanish war, in which he reminded the crown that when the French territory was invaded under similar circumstances, the country had defended itself by the adoption of new forms and another energy! This allusion to the destruction of royalty in 1793, exploded the mine which had long been prepared for his expulsion from the chamber, and, on refusing to depart, he was led out into the street by the military. His walk home, followed by the whole of his party, was a popular triumph; and though he returned, with the simplicity and dignity of a Cincinnatus, to his own occupations, he was elected again in 1824. Mannel died three years before the triumph of his cause

Charles X., 1827.

MANUEL, LOUIS PETER, born 1

attorney-general to the commune of revolution, and was executed Novem

MANUEL, N., a Swiss fresco pa

tiric and dramatic poet, 1484-1530.

MANUTIUS, or MANUZIO, is th

Italian family famous in the history

for their beautiful editions of learne

the invention of the Italic or Aldine

have been formed in imitation of the

of Petrarch. ALDO PIO MANUZI

flourished at Venice, 1447-1515. PA distinguished like his father both scholar and printer, 1512-1574. ALDO son of Paolo, distinguished like his

and greatly favoured by the pope, Se

who gave him apartments in the born at Venice 1547, and died childle

MANVEL, FRANCIS. See MANU

MANWOOD, SIR ROGER, an En

this name flourished in the reign of E

is said by Fuller to have written a forest laws. He died 1593. Such

first published in 1598 by JOHN MA

is supposed to be the son of Sir Roge

MANYOKI, A. DE, a Hung. paint

MANZI, W., an Italian savant, 17

MANZOLI, P. A., a Latin poet, 1

MANZUOLI, T., an Italian painte

MAPES, WALTER, an English po

MAPLET, JOHN, a learned natura

MAPLETOFT, J., a medical wr.,

MAPLETOFT, R., a learned divi

MAPP, M., a French botanist, 163

MARA, ELIZABETH, a fam. singe

MARA, W. DE, a Latin poet, 147

MARACCI, J., an Italian painter,

MARACCI, L., an Ital. Orientalis

MARAIS, H., a French engraver,

MARAIS, M., a French composer,

MARALDI, J. P., an Italian m astronomer, and natural philosopher

His nephew, GIOVANNI DOMENICO

guished as an astronomer, 1709-1788.

MARAN, P., a French theologian,

MARANA, J. P., an Italian histor

MARANGONI, J., an Ital. antiqua

MARANTA, B., an Italian botani

MARAT, JEAN PAUL, was bor

unknown to history, at a place calle

Neuchatel, Switzerland, 1746. Befo energies were directed to political been ambitious of rising by his travelled a good deal in England, Sc

land, and France, and published seve experimental science and philosophy

these had brought his name into rep

subjected him to the sarcasms of V

took the pains to analyze his philoso

on man—a work in which Marat had to illustrate the principles and laws influence on the body, and those of the soul. The year 1789 found him

tion of veterinary physician to the Co

thoroughly disgusted with his failu

society, and with the 'quacks,' as he

'of the corps scientifique.' He begar

career by the composition of his 'Offrande à la Patrie,' followed by the issue of his journal 'Le Publiciste Parisien,' two months after the promulgation of the 'Rights of Man' by the constituent assembly. The club agitation was just commencing, and Marat joined the cordeliers, formed in October, 1789, the most reputable members of which were Danton, and Camille Desmoulins. His thirst for glory, if it were only in the excess of his hatreds and crimes, provoked him to measures and proposals, which it was physically impossible any of his rivals could surpass in atrocity, and gave to his denunciations a kind of barbaric magnificence. Such was his proposal 'to hang the 800 deputies on 800 trees of the Tuileries—Mirabeau on the first of them,' for which he was denounced by Malouet. From this period to the 10th of August, 1792, he was hunted by his accusers from one wretched abode to another —always contriving to issue his journal, the title of which was presently changed to 'Friend of the People.' On the date just mentioned, the Tuileries was besieged, the royal family imprisoned, and the new 'commune,' or municipality, formed by the republicans; Marat also emerged from his obscurity, and filled the prisons with the 'suspect,' who were disposed of by the massacres of September. On the evening of the 3d the famous circular was issued, calling upon the departments to imitate the example of the Parisians; it was signed by Marat, the chief promoter of these horrors, and his colleagues, ten in all, members of the Comité de Surveillance, afterwards the Committee of Public Safety. The convention being elected, Marat became a deputy, and his appearance in that assembly was the signal for Vergniaud and Boileau to denounce his atrocities, and they read from the tribune his demand for 270,000 heads as a means of appeasing the country. The turbulence of such a sitting may easily be imagined. Marat made no attempt to deny the charge. Such was his opinion, the result of the most rigid computation he could make, and he was willing to shed a few drops of guilty blood to save millions of the innocent! After the execution of the king, the battle of Nerwinden was lost by Dumouriez, 18th March, 1793, and Marat, always gigantic in his conceptions, accused all the generals of the army of treason, and sought to bring them to trial en masse. Meantime his struggle with the Girondins had increased in virulence, and they succeeded at last in summoning their terrible adversary before the revolutionary tribunal. This court was one of the instruments set in action by his own party on the 10th of August: Marat went to his trial attended by vast crowds of the populace, and his acquittal followed as a matter of course—not only so, but the people carried him back to the convention in triumph, elevated on a kind of rude palanquin, and covered with garlands as he proceeded on his way. He now assumed the dictatorship, that he had always advocated, though he still resided in his squalid apartment with the wife of his printer, who had been seduced by him, and who seems really to have loved him. On the 31st of May, 1793, he sounded the alarm bell, and with the aid of his seditious worshippers arrested the Girondin deputies, whose fall was avenged on the 13th of July following, by the hand of Charlotte Corday. (See Brissot, Corday.) The death of Marat was only hastened a few days by his assassination, for he was already consumed by a disgusting malady: and it is melancholy to add, that he was almost adored after his decease; his remains being deposited in the Pantheon with national honours, and an altar erected to his memory in the club of the cordeliers: these fanatics also claimed his heart, and preserved it in a golden urn. Our sketch would be essentially incomplete if we did not add that Marat was perfectly sincere, and, in fact, that he made his convictions his sole religion. He sold his bed to bring out the first numbers of his journal, and lived in poverty at a time when he could have amassed wealth by merely selling his silence. Such a life is far more instructive, even as an example of depravity, when facts like this are properly understood. There is such a thing as consistency, and a kind of devilish virtue, in guilt, which is as rare as heroism in well-doing, and history might be ransacked for a more striking instance of it than the brief political career of Marat. [E.R.]

MARATTI, Carlo, an Ital. painter, 1625-1713.

MARBACH, J. R., a Ger. actress, 1805-1837.

MARBECK, John, organist of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, and the first composer of the cathedral service of the Church of England. He was an. also of a Scripture Concordance, for which he narrowly escaped the stake, time of Henry VIII.

MARCA, the name of two Italian painters, the earliest, J. B. Lombardelli Della Marca, flourished 1532-1587. The later, Lactantius Della Marca, born about 1553.

MARCA, Pet. De, a Fr. historian, 1594-1662.

MARCANTONIO, the most renowned of the Italian engravers, was born about 1480, at Bologna, and was the pupil of the celebrated painter and goldsmith Francia; his family name was Raimondi. Some of Marcantonio's earliest efforts were made at Venice, where he copied Albert Dürer's prints of 'The Life of the Virgin,' and of the 'Passion;' for up to this time no Italian engraver was to be compared with Dürer, whose prints became known in Italy after 1500. From Venice Marcantonio went to Rome, where he attracted the notice of Raphael, who largely employed him in the engraving of his designs: it is to his prints after Raphael that Marcantonio owes his present great reputation. There is a very fine collection of them in the British Museum. After the death of Raphael in 1520, Marcantonio was employed by Guilio Romano, and it was for engraving some lascivious designs by this painter that he was imprisoned by Clement VII. After the sack of Rome in 1527 he returned to Bologna, where he is supposed to have died about 1539, that being the last date on any of his prints; but the dates both of his birth and death are quite uncertain. Marcantonio's prints are distinguished for their delicate outlines and execution, and generally fine drawing; some of the original impressions, before the plates came into the hands of Barlachi and Salamanca, have realized enormous prices,—those with the names of these dealers are also valuable, the later are retouches and inferior. The 'Murder of the Innocents', after Raphael, is perhaps the most celebrated of his plates, more than half of them are anonymous, but many are marked

M. or M.A., and M.A.F., joined as a cipher. Bartsch, in his Peintre Graveur, describes 383 prints by this engraver, but several of them are doubtless by his distinguished pupils, Agostino Veneziano, and Marco da Ravenna. Nagler, in his Künstler Lexicon, describes 395 prints. The original account of Marcantonio, of whom we know so little, is in Vasari's Lives, &c.; nothing biographical concerning this great engraver has been ascertained since Vasari. [R.N.W.]

MARCEAU, FRANCIS SEVERIN DESGRAVIERS, a celebrated republican general, whose military talents were only equalled by his generosity and humanity in the Vendean war; born at Chartres 1769, fell in action with the Austr. 1796.

MARCEL, N., a German painter, 1628-1683.

MARCEL, STEPHEN, the patriotic defender of Paris after the battle of Poitiers 1356, assass. 1358.

MARCEL, ST., a bishop of Paris, died 440.

MARCEL, W., a Fr. chronologist, 1647-1708.

MARCELLINUS, a Greek chronicler, 6th cent.

MARCELLINUS, a pope and saint of Rome, suffered martyrdom time of Diocletian, 296-304.

MARCELLIS, O., a Dutch painter, 1613-1673.

MARCELLO, BENEDETTO, was born of noble parents at Venice in 1686. His father, Agostino Marcello, was a Venetian senator, and his mother, Paolina, was of the honourable family of Capello. Benedetto, having in early life received a thorough classical education, was committed to the care of his elder brother, Alessandro, who was a student of the mathematical sciences, natural philosophy, and music. Under this brother, the young Benedetto applied himself to music and poetry, and soon made such progress that he was placed under Francesco Gasparini, to receive instructions in the principles of musical science. In 1716 the first son of the emperor Charles VI. was born, and at the celebration of the event, which took place at Vienna, a grand serenata, composed by Marcello, was performed with great applause. After this he composed a mass, which was first performed in the church of Santa Maria della Calestia, on the occasion of his brother's daughter taking the veil. He composed many other sacred works for the church of Santa Sophia, and was at the pains of instructing the clergy in the manner in which they were to be performed. In 1724, and the three following years, he wrote music for one, two, and three voices, for a paraphrase of the first seventy-five psalms, which are still remarkable for the scientific knowledge shown in their construction. Marcello was for many years a judge in the Council of Forty, and was for some years chamberlain and treasurer to the city of Brescia, where he died in the year 1739. He was buried with great pomp in the church of the fathers Minor Observants of St. Joseph of Brescia. [J.M.]

MARCELLO, N., a Venetian doge, 1473-1474.

MARCELLUS, the first of the name pope of Rome, 308-310; the second, a few weeks only, 1555.

MARCELLUS, the name of several noble Romans:—1. MARCUS CLAUDIUS MARCELLUS, famous for his victories over Hannibal and the Gauls, slain in battle against the former 208 B.C. 2. MARCUS CLAUDIUS MARCELLUS, of the same family, an opponent of Cæsar in the senate, consul B.C. 51, assassinated 46. 3. MARCUS CLAUDIUS MARCELLUS, called the younger, son of Caius Marcellus and Octavia, the sister of
He was adopted by the latter and ma daughter, Julia, but died aged eighteen

MARCET, ALEX., a physician of turalized in England, and known as mental philosopher, 1770-1822.

MARCH, AUSIAS, a Provençal poet,

MARCH, S., a Spanish painter, died

MARCHAND, L., a Fr. composer, 1

MARCHAND, P., a Fr. bibliopole, 1

MARCHAND, S., a Fr. navigator, 1

MARCIANUS, emperor of the East,

MARCILIUS, T., a German critic, 1

MARCILLA, W. DA, a Fr. painter,

MARCION, was born at Sinope in Po
the middle of the second century. His cording to some reports, not, however thenticated, was a bishop of the chur place. His belief in Oriental and duali encrusted with other and similar sp was deemed by him compatible with Christianity, and he attempted to form geneous theology out of both mater assumed as articles of his creed, the matter—the existence of a benign and
—and of a Demiurgus little less tha might, but dark and malignant, a his appropriate sphere in an attempted over matter, for he created man, was God of the Jewish race, and was to overcome by the Messiah. Jesus, ac Marcion, had not, and could not have manity, for all matter is essentially sinf notions are the crude effects of an ear mind to resolve inscrutable mysteries by t
of figments not only incomprehensible, sistent and baseless. Marcion received ical only the writings of the apostle Pa
he had a gospel which appears to ha interpolated copy of that of Luke. To was joined an austere and vigorous asc which victory over appetite was to secured.

MARCK, J. DE, a Ger. protestant, 1

MARCUZZI, S., an Ital. ecclesiastic,

MARDONIUS, a general in the army and son-in-law of Darius, k. at Platæa

MARE, NICHOLAS DE LA, a Frenc sioner of police, distinguished as a police economy 1639-1723.

MARE, PH. DE LA, a Fr. historian,

MARE, P. B. LA, a Fr. diplomatist,

MARECHAL, B., an eccles. savant,

MARECHAL, G., a Fr. surgeon, 16

MARECHAL, P. S., a Fr. writer, 17

MARELIUS, NILS, a Swed. geogr.,

MARET, HUGH BERNARD. See B.

MARETS, ROLAND DES, a Fr. critic,

MARETS, SAMUEL DES, a learned F
testant, famous for his controversies wi man Catholics, 1591-1663.

MARGARET. The queens and pr
Great Britain of this name are—1. ST. M queen of Scotland, sister of Edgar Ath
ried to Malcolm 1070, died 1093. 2. M
OF YORK, sister of Edward IV., marr
duke of Burgundy. 3. MARGARET o daughter of René, titular king of Sici and Jerusalem, born 1425, married to 1443, died, after a life of extraordinary vicissitude consequent on the wars of York and Lancaster, 1482. 4. MARGARET OF SCOTLAND, daughter of James I., born 1425, died, after an unhappy marriage with Louis XI. of France, 1444. 5. MARGARET TUDOR, eldest daughter of Henry VII. and Elizabeth of York, and sister to Henry VIII., was born at Westminster 1489. This princess was betrothed in her infancy to James IV. of Scotland, then of adult age, and married to him in 1503. In 1506 she gave birth to a son, afterwards James V., and became regent of Scotland after the death of her husband at the battle of Flodden, 1513. In 1514 she married Archibald, earl of Angus, of the family of Douglas. This match surrounded her with strife and trouble for the rest of her days, the first outburst of which was the arrival of the duke of Albany, supported by the French king in 1515, soon after which Margaret took refuge in England. She died in 1541. Her life has been recently published by Miss Strickland.

MARGARET. The saints of this name are the queen of Scotland, and a virgin martyr of Antioch, known as the patroness of Cremona, 3d century.

MARGARET. The queens and princesses of France are—1. MARGARET, daughter of Raymond Berenger, count of Provence, born 1219, married to Louis IX. 1234, died, after acquiring a famous name by the defence of Damietta, 1285. 2. MARGARET OF BURGUNDY, married to Louis X., king of France, 1305, strangled for adultery 1315. 3. MARGARET OF VALOIS, sister of Francis I., born 1492, married in 1509 to the duke of Alençon, and in 1527, two years after the death of her first husband, to the king of Navarre, by whom she had Jeanne D'Albret, mother of Henry IV., died 1530. 4. MARGARET OF FRANCE, daughter of Henry II., born 1552, married to the prince of Bearn, afterwards Henry IV., 1572, divorced for her licentiousness 1599, died 1615. 5. MARGARET OF FRANCE, duchess of Savoy, daughter of Francis I., born 1523, married to Emmanuel Philibert 1559, died 1574.

MARGARET, queen of Norway, Denmark, and Sweden, who is often called 'the Semiramis of the North,' was the daughter of Waldemar III., king of Denmark, and was born at Copenhagen, 1353. In 1363 she was married to Haco, king of Norway, youngest son of Magnus Ericson, in whose person the governments of Sweden, Norway, and Scania, had been invested many years before. The marriage of Haco with Margaret took place under circumstances of great political difficulty, and it occasioned the banishment of twenty-four of the most powerful of the Swedish barons, by whom Magnus and his son were afterwards deposed, and Albert of Mecklenburgh placed on the throne. While the country was suffering from the oppression of this foreign government, Margaret lost, in 1375, her father, Waldemar; in 1380, her husband, Haco; and in 1387 her son, Olave—events which left her queen regnant in Norway, regent in Denmark, and in a situation to receive overtures from the Swedes. With a spirit and ambition natural to her, Margaret at once furnished her adherents with troops, and supplies of war, and the victory of Falkoeping, won by the high marshal of Sweden, Eric Kiellzon, Sept. 21, 1389, threw open the kingdom to her. The union of the three kingdoms was concluded by the treaty of Calmar, where the spiritual and temporal barons assembled for that purpose, on the 20th of July, 1397; Eric of Pomerania, the grand-nephew of Margaret, being elected her successor as the future sovereign of Sweden. She died in the port of Flensburgh, on board a vessel in which she had embarked for Denmark, Oct. 28, 1412. Her memory has been execrated in Sweden, where the union was never popular, in about the same measure that her political virtues have been extolled in Denmark. The words of Geijer, the great Swedish historian, are sufficiently remarkable to be quoted on this point:—'The fate of the throne and the country was decided by the holders of power, from the casual motives of temporary interests, and by such was the famous union of the three northern kingdoms produced—a mere incident, which bears some resemblance to a design; but of a consciousness of what such a union was, or of what it might become, no glimpse is to be perceived, either among its founders or in any other quarter.' [E.R.]

MARGARET OF AUSTRIA, daughter of the emperor Maximilian I., born 1480, married successively to the Infant of Spain 1491-1497, and to Philibert, duke of Savoy, 1501-1506, became ruler of the Netherlands 1506, died 1531.

MARGARET OF CONSTANTINOPLE, daughter of Baldwin IX., became countess of Flanders and Hainault 1221, died 1279.

MARGARET OF PARMA, a natural daughter of Charles V., married successively to Alexander de Medicis and Octavian Farnese. The latter event took place in 1540. From 1559 to 1568 she was ruler of the Low Countries, and was succeeded by Alva. She then retired into Italy, and d. 1586.

MARGARET OF RICHMOND. See BEAUFORT.

MARGARITONE, an Ital. painter, 1212-1289.

MARGERET, a Fr. adventurer, 16th century.

MARGGRAFF, A. S., a Ger. chemist, 1709-82.

MARGGRAFF, G., a Ger. naturalist, 1610-44.

MARGON, W. DE, a French author, died 1760.

MARGUERIE, J. J. DE, a French officer and mathematician, 1742-1779.

MARGUERIT, J., a Spanish historian, cardinal, and chancellor of Arragon, died 1484. His grandson, JOSEPH DE MARGUERIT DE BIVRE, a general in the service of Louis XIII., died 1654.

MARGUERITE, JOSEPH MARIE SOLAR DE LA, a statesman, soldier, and historian, noted for the defence of Turin against the French in 1706.

MARGUNIO, M., an Ital. scholar, 1530-1602.

MARIA, F. DI, an Italian painter, 1623-1690.

MARIA, H., a painter of Bologna, 17th cent.

MARIA, JOHN, an Italian architect, 1458-1534. His br., JAMES, a famous painter, dates unknown.

MARIA. See MARIE, MARY.

MARIA. The queens of Spain of this name are—MARIA DE MOLINA, queen of Castile and Leon, married to Sancho IV. 1282, regent of Castile 1295 and 1312, died 1322. MARIA LOUISA, daughter of the duke of Orleans, brother of Louis XIV., and of Henrietta of England, married to Charles II., king of Spain, 1662-1689. MARIA LOUISA, daughter of Victor Amadeus II., duke of Savoy, and wife of Philip V., 1688-1714. MARIA LOUISA, wife of Charles IV., and mother of Ferdinand VII., 1754-1819.

MARIA, empress of Germany, called MARIE

Roi, first wife of the emperor Sigismund, and daughter of Louis I., king of Hungary, born 1370, began to reign 1382, died 1395.

MARIA CAROLINE, queen of Naples. See CAROLINE.

MARIA FRANCES ELIZABETH, queen of Portugal, born 1734, became mistress of the kingdom at the death of her husband, Peter III., 1786, suffered by mental aberration 1790, died 1816.

MARIA LOUISA, second wife of Napoleon Buonaparte, daughter of Francis I., emperor of Austria, and Maria Theresa of Naples, was born 1791. In 1810 she was married to the emperor; in 1811 she presented him with an heir, who was hailed king of Rome; on his fall, in 1814, she deserted him for the company of her chamberlain, Count Neipperg, and became duchess of Parma and Placentia; died 1847.

MARIA THERESA, born in 1717, was the eldest daughter of Charles VI. of Austria, who died in 1740. The succession of Maria Theresa to the hereditary dominion of the House of Hapsburg had been guaranteed by the principal states of Europe; but, on her father's death, she found herself assailed by the kings of Prussia, France, Spain, and Sardinia, and the electors of Bavaria and Saxony. Each of these princes laid claim to some part of the Austrian territory; and Maria Theresa, at the age of 23, was called on to make head against the armies of all her neighbours, except the Turkish sultan, who alone acted towards her with fairness and good faith. Maria Theresa had been married in 1736, to Francis of Louvain, grand duke of Tuscany, but he was a prince of little intellect or energy; and it was to the spirit of Maria Theresa herself, and the loyalty of her Hungarian subjects, that Austria owned its rescue from destruction. When driven from her capital by her enemies, Maria Theresa repaired to Presburg, and summoned the Hungarian Diet. She appeared in the midst of the martial assembly with her infant son in her arms. She addressed them earnestly and eloquently in Latin, (a language long currently used in Hungary); and when she came to the words, 'The kingdom of Hungary, our persons, our children, our crown, are at stake,—forsaken by all, we seek shelter only in the fidelity, the arms, the hereditary valour of the renowned Hungarian nobility,' the Hungarian nobles and all present, with one unanimous burst of chivalrous loyalty, drew their swords, and shouted, 'Let us die for our King Maria Theresa,' [Moriamur pro rege nostro Maria Theresâ.] This was no transient demonstration of zeal. The whole military force of Hungary was soon in the field: the current of invasion was checked, and by degrees the foes of Maria Theresa made peace with her, and ceased to reckon on their shares in the dismemberment of Austria. She was obliged to cede Silesia to Frederick of Prussia; but with this exception she was left in full possession of her dominions, when the war of the Austrian succession was closed by the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle in 1758.—The loss of Silesia was a deep mortification to Maria Theresa, and the hope of recovering that province made her take an active part in the seven years' war against Frederick of Prussia. That contest, however, closed in 1763, leaving Prussia in possession of Silesia, and with no gain on either side to Maria Theresa or Frederick. Maria Theresa's husband had been elected emp[eror] of Germany in 1745, and on his death in 1765, the son Joseph was chosen to succeed him. But Ma[ria] Theresa retained in her own hands, throughout life, the administration of her vast dominio[ns] which were generally governed by her in a w[ise] and enlightened spirit. Her private character w[as] irreproachable, and the morals and manners of [the] court formed a bright exception to the gross p[ro]fligacy by which the courts of nearly all the ot[her] sovereigns of the age were disgraced. She w[as] sincerely pious, and Botta, the Italian histori[an] passes on her the high eulogy, that 'during a f[ull] years' reign she always showed a love of ju[stice] and truth.'—Her share in the first partition of Poland is the great stain on the character of M[aria] Theresa. But she came unwillingly into this [act] which was urged on her by the sovereigns of Prussia and Russia, and by her son the emp[eror] Joseph. She is said to have left a written record that she consented to this measure out of deference to the opinions of others, and that she foreboded evil consequences to Europe from the act of injustice to one of its states. Maria The[resa] died in 1780. [E.S.]

MARIAMNE, an unfortunate Jewish prin[cess] grand-daughter of Aristobulus, and of Hyrc[anus] the high priest, and wife of Herod the Great. [Her] history is related by Josephus in his Antiqui[ties] commencing at book xv., from which it app[ears] that Herod was excessively fond of her. She was condemned to death, by the machinations of Sal[ome] her husband's sister, on a false charge of adul[tery] B.C. 28. She met her fate with an air of gra[ce] and intrepidity worthy of her noble ancestry, and bitterly lamented by the king after her de[ath]. Another MARIAMNE, wife of Herod, was the d[au]ghter of Simon, the high priest, and mother of H[erod] Philip, who married Herodias.

MARIANA, JUAN, a Span. histor., 1557-[1624].

MARIANI, C., an Italian painter, 1565-1[611].

MARIANUS SCOTUS, born in Scotland [1028], known as the author of a Chronicle fro[m the] beginning of the Christian era to 1083, whi[ch was] continued by Dodechinus to 1200. He was [of the] ecclesiastical profession, and died at Mayence [1086].

MARIBAS CATHINA, the most ancient [hi]storian of Armenia, 2d century B.C.

MARIE. The queens of France of this [name] are—1. MARIE DE BRABANT, married to [Philip] 1274, died 1321. 2. MARIE D'ANGLETE[RRE], daughter of Henry VII., who became the [Queen] wife of Louis XII. 1214, died 1534.—See G[RACE] LADY JANE. 3. MARIE STUART.—See M[ARY] 4. MARIE DE MEDICIS.—See article next [page]. MARIE THERESE, daughter of Philip IV., k[ing of] Spain, married to Louis XIV. 1660, died 1[683]. 6. MARIE LECZINSKA, daughter of Stanislas [I.] of Poland, born 1703, married to Lewis XV. 1[725], died 1768. 7. MARIE ANTOINETTE.—See follow[ing] ing article. 8. MARIE LOUISE, wife of Nap[oleon]. See MARIA LOUISA.

MARIE-ANTOINETTE, the unhappy queen [of] Louis XVI., was the daughter of Francis I., and empress Maria Theresa of Austria, and was b[orn] at Vienna, 1755. Though only fifteen years of [age] when she married the Dauphin, she was accom[plished] plished in the French, Italian, and Latin languag[es] besides her native German; and was also a p[erfect] music and drawing. The goodness of her noble carriage, and the sweet expression ntenance, easily won the hearts of a peo- ion enthusiasm is as natural as the air he. Marie-Antoinette, becoming queen in s applauded to the skies whenever she in public, and often had to stand on the er carriage to show herself to the people. larity was greatly augmented when she e mother of a family, and especially when, she presented the nation with an heir to e. Soon, however, the expensive luxury rt, the exhaustion of the public finances, istresses of the people, had prepared the enes far different from these popular ova- the first shock was given to her popularity saction involving both money and charac- ad become known to the countess de la at the queen's jeweller had offered her a necklace, which she declined on account mous price, no less than 1,800,000 livres. possession of this treasure, the countess she was authorized to negotiate for the d not only concluded the bargain, but cardinal de Rohan a party to it, who was that Marie-Antoinette had given him a meeting in the park of Versailles. The not discovered till the first payment was , and though the countess, in May, 1786, nned to be whipped and branded for her conduct, the queen never recovered the ion of her subjects; add to which, there tain levity in her conduct which continu- ed her to scandal, though no one now that she was guilty of the crimes laid to e. When the Revolution broke out in became an object of the popular suspicion ed, chiefly on account of her Austrian ns; but, in a great degree, also, by reason gh spirit and superior capability of resis- action when compared with her husband, I. It would be inconsistent with our describe the incidents which marked the of this hatred on the one side, and of defiance on the other. Marie-Antoinette isoned in the Temple after the triumph of ace, on the 10th of August, 1792; and there to believe that the willingness of the royal submit themselves to their jailors, was the persuasion that they had secured the of Danton, and that they were really g the means provided for their safety. The n of the populace, excited by Marat and nidons, and the coalition formed against y the neighbouring powers, rendered such mise, if it existed, of no effect. The king uted on the 21st of January, 1793, and the Capet,' as Marie was called in the indict- s tried by the revolutionary tribunal in wing October. She was only thirty-seven age, but her hair had turned white during risonment, and her only articles of dress me damp and ragged in the cell she occupied. sight was injured, and her beauty marred and long suffering. Her trial was only a d mockery, but one of heartless brutality, t is impossible to read without a feeling of disgust and indignation. Her hours of suf- veloped the best traits of her character: and Marie-Antoinette, on her way to the scaffold, commands the respect which might be challenged for her in vain, as the adviser of the feeble king, whose counsels she swayed, often but too fatally, yet always courageously. She was guillotined Oct. 16, 1793. [E.R.]

[The Conciergo—the Prison of Marie Antoinette.]

MARIE DE MEDICIS, queen of France, was the daughter of Francis II., grand duke of Tuscany, and of Joan, archduchess of Austria. She was born at Florence in 1573. In 1600 she was married to Henry IV., and the year following gave birth to a son, who became Louis XIII., and whose deplorable weakness was the principal cause of her misfortunes. The amours of her husband rendered her life a most wretched one, and being of violent temper, she would frequently have struck him, had not the great Sully interposed between them. Her anxieties as a wife, and the absolute temper of Henry, prevented her from taking any part in state affairs during his lifetime, and when, towards 1610, he contemplated taking the field against the house of Austria, and proposed making her regent in his absence, she manifested the greatest repugnance to the subject, always saying that it foreboded some great misfortune. In the year just mentioned, Marie agreed to the regency, on condition of being formally crowned; a ceremony which the king had always deferred; and this being done, the latter was stabbed on the day following, by Ravaillac, when preparing for the queen's entry into Paris (article NAVARRE). The queen regent had lately acted under the advice of Concini, an Italian favourite, whom she presently created a marshal of France, and honoured with the marquisate of d'Ancre; and she also retained among her advisers the duke d'Epernon, who was suspected of being privy to the assassination. Her apathy in regard to the investigation of this deed of blood, has stained her memory with the suspicion of being implicated in it, but there is really no other ground for supporting such a charge, and the hatred of the French would seem to have magnified all her faults. From 1610 to 1614 the court was a focus of intrigue and anarchy, which the queen had too little statesmanship, and too much of passion to rule; and parties were arraying themselves for the struggle which all foresaw in the estates-general. That body assembled in October, of the last mentioned year, and now the afterwards famous Richelieu placed himself at the head of the clergy, and began to feel his way to power. The boy king, this year, was declared of age, and the factious nobles, who surrounded him, filled his ears with rumours of Italian treachery, the issue of which was, that the queen relied entirely on Concini, who raised troops for her defence, and created a natural jealousy of Italian domination in France. Thus strengthened, in 1616, Marie de Medicis imprisoned Condé, the most turbulent and daring of her enemies, in the Bastile, and hurled defiance at the nobles in full assembly. In 1617, Concini was assassinated, and soon afterwards the queen was compelled to retire to Blois, where the wily Richelieu joined her as a pretended friend, and, in 1620, effected an accommodation which enabled her to return to court. The cardinal found the queen a good trump card in the game he was playing for absolute power, and even when she became aware of his treachery, her hot Italian blood was no match for his cool sagacity. Eleven years of struggle ended in the triumph of Richelieu, and, in 1631, the poor queen became, first a prisoner at Compiègne, and then a wanderer in foreign lands. The close of her life is the saddest part of her story. Abandoned by all her family, and her own son on the proudest throne of Europe, the widow of Henry of Navarre died in want of the commonest necessaries. She breathed her last in a poor apartment at Cologne, the furniture of which she had disposed of for the means of supporting life, in 1642. To the faults of her Italian character, she joined the refined taste of her house for arts and letters, and France is indebted to her for the Luxembourg palace. Her excess of passion over judgment, and the anarchy around her make a sad contrast with the wisely regulated and prosperous ambition of great sovereigns. In her best moments Marie de Medicis was only the mistress of a faction. [E.R.]

MARIE, J. F., a French savant, 1738-1801.

MARIESCHI, an Italian painter, 1697-1744.

MARIETTE, Jean, a French designer and engraver, 1654-1742. His son, Peter Jean, an engraver and archæologist, 1694-1774.

MARIGNANO, Gian Giacomo Medichino, Marchese Di, a celc. Ital. commander, 1497-1555.

MARILLAC, C. De, a French diplomatist, 1510-1560. His nephew, Michel, keeper of the seals, and a partizan of Marie de Medicis, 1563-1632. Louis, a marshal of France, brother and fellow-conspirator with the latter, b. 1572, executed 1632.

MARILLIER, Cl. P., a Fr. engraver, 1740-1808.

MARIN, J. C., a French sculptor, 1773-1812.

MARIN, M. A., a French ascetic, 1697-1767.

MARINA, a beautiful and accomplished Mexican, who became the mistress of Cortes, and rendered the Spaniards great service, 16th century.

MARINALI, H., an Ital. sculptor, 1643-1720.

MARINARI, H., an Ital. painter, 1627-1715.

MARINAS, H., a Spanish painter, 1620-1680.

MARINELLI, L., a Venet. poetess, 1571-1653.

MARINEO, L., a Sicilian historian, born 1460.

MARINI, B., an Italian painter, 17th century.

MARINI, F. L. Claude, called Marin, editor of the 'Gazette de France,' 1721-1809.

MARINI, G., an Ital. antiquarian, 1742-1815.

MARINI, J. A., an Italian novelist, die

MARINI, John Baptist, a famous Naples, known as 'the Cavalier Marin,' 156

MARINI, Marc, an Ital. Hebraist, 154

MARINI, P. Ph., an Ital. missionary, 17

MARINO, Saint, a native of Dalmati was originally employed as a stone-mason bridge of Rimini; but, becoming a hermit, were said to be wrought at his tomb; and commodation necessary for the pilgrims sorted there, gave rise to the city and the ture republic of San Marino; 4th century.

MARINONI, J. J., an Italian mathem architect, and astronomer, 1676-1755.

MARINUS, a centurion, procl. emperor,

MARINUS, a Platonic philosopher, 5th c

MARINUS, J., a Flemish engraver, 1627

MARIOTTE, E., a Fr. experl. philos., 16

MARITI, J., an Italian traveller, died 17

MARIUS, Caius, one of the greatest and dictators of the Roman republic, was parents in humble circumstances, probably retinum, about 157 B.C. Having enter army he became known to Scipio Africanu acquired so much repute that he was elect bune B.C. 119 or 120, prætor 116, and gover Spain 115. In 109 he joined Metellus as his lieutenants in the Jugurthine war, an years afterwards supplanted him in the com of the army. He brought the war to a cl 106, when Jugurtha, the king of Numidia treacherously delivered into his hands by hi Bocchus. Marius remained in Africa a year and was then recalled to take the field again Cimbri and Teutones, at that time menacin Roman empire. These barbarians num 300,000 men in arms, and had defeated the Manilius, and the proconsul Cæpio, at a c the Romans of 80,000 soldiers, and 40,000 followers. Marius had been appointed con 107, when the conduct of the Jugurthine wa intrusted to him, and in sight of this new he was not only re-elected, but continued consulate four successive years, though co to law, B.C. 104-100. In 102 he defeate combined forces of the Ambrones and Teu near Aix; and in 101, having joined his with those of Catulus, he obtained an c decisive victory over the Cimbri, in the bourhood of Vercellæ. He was now hailed Third Founder of Rome,' and rewarded w fifth consulate,—followed by a sixth, whic said, was gained by corrupt practices, as tha session of power had become too sweet to be laid down. Perhaps another and more pa reason also influenced him. Marius was the a chief of the plebeians—the natural succes the Gracchi, who had shed their blood tha rights of Roman citizens might be extended rest of Italy. In B.C. 90 this social war brok afresh, provoked by the murder of Drusus, renewed the proposal, and Marius and Syl came the respective chiefs of the plebeian patricians. The latter, flushed with his recent cess against the army of Mithridates, refus yield the command to Marius, but marched his party in the capital, and disputed the street by street. Marius was defeated, and lodged in prison, where a Cimbrian soldier wa

et the sword fall from his hand glance of the captive, who dehe dared to kill Caius Marius!
Minturnæ, where this occurred, nge circumstance, favoured the d he sought refuge in Africa,
.C., he was recalled by Cinna,
to take arms against his old combined forces of Marius,
d Carbo, soon entered Rome,
oscriptions which have con-Marius to infamy now took that was previously recorded Caius Marius now served as nth time, with his new ally,
B.C. 86, on hearing that Sylla
e endeavoured to drown care pposed to have killed himself haracter marks him out as the whom he acted as the armed ar, as that of Sylla places him of the patricians. They were d guilty of blood. [E.R.]
, the younger, son of the preserved in the army of his consul with Carbo, 82 B.C.
Sylla, and caused himself to
is officers.
RD, a Dutch divine, d. 1628.
US AURELIUS, a Gaulonite emwas originally a smith and assinated 267.
a Ger. astronomer, 1570-1624.
T. CARLET DE CHAMBLAIN writer and novelist, 1688-1763.
C. DE, a French physician, and ation, b. 1728, executed 1794.
he four evangelists, and com-ter, said to have founded the a, put to death 68.
ad saint of Rome, 336.
of the Eastern church, 2d cen.
RVASE, a soldier and scholar es I. and Charles I., author of husbandry and horsemanship, ter,' a tragedy, 'The Poem of ugitive works, died 1650.
., a divine and poet, 1645-1720.
EREMIAH, a classical scholar
e vicar of Childwall, in Lancaed, after a life of learned re-

H. JOHN CHURCHILL, afterrlborough, the greatest general
uced before the duke of Wel-
the greatest of modern Europe,
n, in Devonshire, on July 5, vas a gallant cavalier, who had n behalf of Charles I.; by his erited, by collateral descent, the had flowed in the veins of Sir early youth, when at school in ced a decided turn for warlike ten found studying Vegetius on sixteen he received a commis-chiefly owing to the influence
, who was the favourite of the er to Charles II. She trans-genius of the family to her offspring, for her son, by the duke, who entered into the French service, afterwards became duke of Berwick, and by his great abilities, in command of the French armies in the Peninsula, counterbalanced the victories of his uncle, the duke of Marlborough, when in command of the armies of the allies in the wars of the succession. Thus the same English family furnished, at the same time, the deadliest enemy and the acknowledged saviour of the French monarchy.—During his early life in the Guards, young Churchill, who was uncommonly handsome in person, as well as fascinating in manners, was involved in the usual dissipations of the court of Charles II.; and even inspired a passion in the breast of one of the royal mistresses, the countess of Castlemaine, who presented him, as a token of her regard, with £5,000, which formed the commencement of his fortune. Soon after he was sent to the coast of Africa, and made his first essay in arms in warfare with the Moors; and on his return from thence, he was despatched with the English auxiliary force in 1672 to co-operate with the French army in Flanders, in their campaigns against the Dutch. He there distinguished himself so much, that he was publicly thanked by Louis XIV. at the head of his army; and Marshal Turenne, who commanded it, prophesied that 'the handsome Englishman,' as he was termed, 'would one day make a great general.' He made four campaigns under Turenne; and it was there, as he ever after admitted, that he first learned the art of war. Thus, by another of the strange revolutions of fortune in this extraordinary man, it was under a French marshal that he was taught the art which, matured by his genius, all but brought the French monarchy to destruction.—When the war in Flanders was over he returned to London, furnished with the strongest possible recommendation from Louis XIV. and Turenne to the king of England. In consequence of this support, and the increasing suavity and fascination of his manner, he rapidly rose in the Guards, and ere long was promoted to the command of a regiment in them; while there his charms of manner and personal beauty won the heart of Sarah Jennings, one of the maids of honour to the Princess Anne, who afterwards became queen, whom he married in 1678, and who exercised an important influence on his life and fortunes.—Beautiful, high spirited, and ambitious, with great talents as well for conversation as intrigue, she was unhappily, at the same time, arrogant, overbearing, and irascible; so that it was hard to say whether she aided her husband's fortunes in after life most by her influence at court, or marred them by the superciliious demeanour which involved her in continual quarrels, and at length entirely alienated the affections of his sovereign.—Though a courtier, and indebted for his first rise to the favour of the duke of York, who continued his kindness to him when he became king on the demise of Charles II. in 1685, Churchill was a staunch protestant, and saw as clearly as any one the inevitable result of the headlong course which James II. pursued soon after his accession to the throne, in order to re-establish the Romish faith in his dominions. He did his utmost to dissuade him from the insane attempt, but in vain. The result was, that when the nation was driven to desperation, and forced to Invite William prince of Orange over in 1688 to change the sovereign on the throne, Churchill felt himself constrained to espouse the side opposite to that of the reigning sovereign. He did this in a way which forms the only, but is, in truth, an indelible blot on his memory. He did not resign his appointment under the sovereign whom he felt himself constrained to desert, and then appear in arms against him; he retained his commission of the regiment of Guards, and exerted his influence to induce them to pass over to the enemy; he did what Marshal Ney afterwards did to Louis XVIII., and honour can plead no apology for either.—After the dethronement of James II., Churchill, who of course was immediately taken into favour with William III. who succeeded him, was employed in the south of Ireland in command of the royal forces, and there he rendered good service to the cause he espoused, by the reduction of Cork, Bandon, Kinsale, and other strongholds in the south of Ireland. He soon found, however, that it is an easier thing to dispossess a sovereign than render his successor acceptable to the nation. He was disgusted with the preference shown to the Dutch troops, and the insensibility of William to the real national concerns of England. These feelings were too warm to be concealed, and the result was that he fell into a correspondence with some of the Jacobites abroad, which led to his being arrested in 1691 on a charge of high treason, and deprived of his honours and employments. He was soon after liberated, as no evidence was found sufficient to authorise his detention, far less bring him to trial; but he laboured for long under the suspicion of the court, and it was not till 1698 that he was restored to his rank as a privy councillor, and appointed to the important situation of preceptor to the duke of Gloucester, the heir apparent to the monarchy. 'Make him like yourself,' said William III., in conferring on him the appointment, 'and you will leave me nothing further to desire.'—The death of the king of Spain, who, being childless, had bequeathed his immense dominions to the duke of Anjou, grandson of Louis XIV., having involved Europe in a general war, Churchill, who by this time had been created earl of Marlborough, was called to act on a greater theatre, on which he acquired immortal renown. Even before the death of William III., he had been appointed to the important situation of plenipotentiary at the Hague, where the negotiations were carried on; and when the decease of that monarch led to the accession of his early and steady friend, the Princess Anne, to the throne, he was appointed commander-in-chief of the allied armies. War having been declared in May, 1702, he repaired to the camp near Nimeguen, where the allied army, 60,000 strong, was retiring before the superior armies of Louis XIV. The arrival of Marlborough, however, soon altered the state of affairs. Pointing to the dense French battalions, he said, 'These men will soon be our prisoners;' and he was as good as his word. He instantly took the initiative, threw the enemy into retreat, and followed up his successes by the capture of four of their most important strongholds before the campaign was over, in the very teeth of their superior forces. Such was the vigour of his measures, and the skill with which they were taken, that he succeeded in capturing the strong fortresses of Rusomonde, Liege, and [illegible] in a few months; the last of which bei[illegible] on the river Meuse, which is navigab[illegible] gave him the entire command of that[illegible] the inestimable advantage of a water c[illegible] tion into the very heart of Flanders.—[illegible] paign of 1703 was not equally prolif[illegible] events; chiefly from the 'Dutch dep[illegible] were invested with a negative on all [illegible] the English general, absolutely refusing[illegible] sent, now that the danger was removed[illegible] doors, to any measures which seemed [illegible] hazardous. One incident, however, of gr[illegible] with reference to future events did [illegible] The French had with vast labour co[illegible] set of lines, covering the approach to B[illegible] the side of Maestricht, from whence [illegible] threatened by Lord Marlborough. H[illegible] by a sudden nocturnal attack, however[illegible] these celebrated lines, and this brought[illegible] field of Waterloo, in the exact reverse[illegible] that occupied by Napoleon and Welli[illegible] hundred and eleven years afterwards. T[illegible] thrown back on the forest of Soignie[illegible] backs to Brussels and their faces towa[illegible] the allies stood on the ground occupied[illegible] and Napoleon, and threatened the F[illegible] from the wood of Ohain. The fairest [illegible] of finishing the war at a blow was pr[illegible] Marlborough had got between the F[illegible] Paris, and defeat to them was ruin. H[illegible] besought the Dutch deputies to take a[illegible] it, but they would not. Such was his [illegible] this crossing, that next day he said, 'T[illegible] ten years older than I was yesterday.'—[illegible] tions of the English hero were amply [illegible] the following year. Louis XIV. had [illegible] to stand on the defensive in Flanders, [illegible] great effort in Germany with a view to [illegible] Austria, and from it to conclude a sepa[illegible] His efforts were well nigh attended [illegible] success. Supported by Bavaria, with [illegible] were in close alliance, the French arm[illegible] strong, poured down the valley of t[illegible] —Munich was passed, Vienna threa[illegible] cabinet of Vienna menaced with an [illegible] insurrection in rear, was in an agony o[illegible] sion. But the hour of deliverance wa[illegible] Putting himself at the head of 30,000 [illegible] troops, Marlborough, who had previousl[illegible] solid footing on the Rhine by the reduc[illegible] strong and important city of Bonn, cros[illegible] to Germany, stormed the intrenched cam[illegible] lomburg with the loss to the enemy of 1[illegible] and defeated them at BLENHEIM with [illegible] 15,000 prisoners, 80 guns, and 100 [illegible] Marshal Tallard, the French general, [illegible] chief officers were made prisoners. [illegible] recrossed the Rhine, the French were w[illegible] 40,000 men. Germany was delivered, Au[illegible] and France threatened, by a single vic[illegible] annals of Napoleon have no more decisi[illegible] to exhibit; and the result was, that t[illegible] armies, refluent on all sides, were driven[illegible] and reduced to the defence of their terri[illegible] campaign of 1705 was not productive [illegible] morable events, from the Dutch dep[illegible] interposing and preventing all the daring[illegible] projected by the English general. But [illegible]

his triumphant career in 1706. Assailing the French army, 60,000 strong, at RAMILLIES, he totally defeated them, after a hard struggle, with the loss of 15,000 men in killed, wounded, and prisoners. The effect of this great victory was the immediate capture of Brussels and liberation of all Austrian Flanders. Antwerp, Oudenarde, Ghent, Bruges, and many of its chief towns declared for the allies; others, such as Menin, Ath, Dunkirk, and Ostend, were reduced after bloody sieges by force of arms. Before the campaign ended, the whole of Austrian Flanders, bristling with strong fortresses, was recovered; the Dutch had obtained the barrier for which they had so passionately longed; and the French armies, which had so recently threatened Vienna, were everywhere thrown back on their own frontier.—Early in the following year, the allied arms sustained a serious reverse, by the surprise of Ghent and Bruges, which was effected by Prince Vendome, the French general, who was at the head of 100,000 men. But if the treachery of these towns had induced danger, the vigour of Marlborough soon restored affairs. Suddenly wheeling round, when in the course of retreat towards Brussels, he attacked and totally defeated the French at OUDENARDE, with the loss of 9,000 prisoners and 11,000 killed and wounded. Boldly then resuming the offensive, he carried his victorious arms into France, besieged and took Lille, though garrisoned by Marshal Boufflers with 15,000 men of the best troops in France; in the face of Vendome, at the head of 100,000 men, relieved Brussels, which had been threatened in the interim, and concluded his triumphant career by the recovery of Ghent and Bruges, the former garrisoned by 1,800 men. The annals of war can afford no parallel of the skill and resolution of that immortal campaign, which, to the end of the world, will be the subject of study and admiration of military men. The last of Marlborough's great victories was that of MALPLAQUET in 1709, which was by far the most bloody and hard fought, and was only gained after prodigies of valour had been performed on both sides. The last resources of France had been brought forth, and 90,000 brave men, intrenched to the teeth, stood to receive the assault of an equal number of the allies, under Marlborough and his noble rival, Prince Eugene. But nothing could withstand the skill of their attacks, and the heroic courage they had inspired into their troops. The whole French works were at length carried, though at a cost of 20,000 men to the victors, and the important fortress of Mons, commanding the high road to Paris, was the reward of the victory.—This was the last of the great victories of Marlborough; for thenceforward he ceased to be a free agent. The Tory party at home, who were jealous of his fame and envious of his power, never ceased their efforts to effect his downfall; and at length, through the agency of Mrs. Masham, a dependent and niece of the duchess of Marlborough, who supplanted her mistress and benefactor in the royal favour, they effected it. Marlborough's proposed measures were all examined by a hostile cabinet, and the requisite supplies refused to him. Still he worked on with patriotic zeal, and in a noble spirit, against all his difficulties. Again, by an unparalleled exertion of military skill he passed the French lines; besieged and took Bethune, Aisne, and other places of strength on the French frontier, and he was making preparations for the siege of Arras, the last stronghold on the road to Paris, when he was, by domestic faction, interrupted in the career of victory, by being deprived of the command of the army, and even threatened with a parliamentary impeachment for alleged and wholly fabricated malversations when in command. The consequences were soon apparent. The allies deprived of his military arm, and of the aid of the English contingents, were defeated at Denain, and the disgraceful treaty of Utrecht was concluded, which left the crown of Spain in possession of the house of Bourbon, and deprived the nation of the whole fruits of Marlborough's victories. A more deplorable instance of the triumph of faction over patriotism, of envy over generosity, of jealousy over heroism, is not recorded in history.—Before this disgraceful coalition against him took effect, Marlborough had obtained princely rewards from the nation. He was made a duke after the battle of Blenheim, and a sum voted to build the palace of the same name on the demesne of Woodstock, which had been bestowed on him by Queen Anne. After his fall, the usual annual grants from the treasury were stopped by the malignity of the Tory ministry, and the magnificent pile was only finished by £60,000 which had been advanced from the private fortune of the duke. Marlborough remained in privacy, but firm in his principles, till the accession of the Hanoverian family in 1713, when he was made commander-in-chief; and by his admirable measures, contributed much to the almost bloodless suppression of the rebellion in Scotland in 1715. This was his last public service. He was soon after struck with a stroke of palsy, from which he only recovered to drag on a precarious and enfeebled existence, which was terminated in serenity and hope, on 6th August, 1722, in the seventy-second year of his age.—Napoleon had the very highest opinion of Marlborough, whom he always spoke of as one of the first captains of any age or country. His career was indeed astonishing, and may well have excited the admiration of his immortal successor. He never besieged a town he did not take, and he never fought a battle he did not gain. Never superior, generally inferior to his opponents; at the head of a multifarious army of six nations, he communicated an united spirit to the whole mass, and rendered them invincible. Had he not been thwarted at home he would have taken Paris, and terminated, in his next campaign, the rivalry of four centuries. Humane, beneficent, and generous; in private life he dignified his warlike virtues by the graces and charities of peace. Factions assailed him violently during his life, as it in general does all who rise to extraordinary power and influence; but history has revised its verdict, and pronounced him, but for the desertion of James II., as perfect a character as the frailty of humanity will permit. [A.A.]

[Palace of Blenheim.]

MARLIANI, B., an Ital. antiquarian, b. 1650.

MARLORAT, AUGUSTINE, a French protestant divine, executed by order of Montmorency, 1506-62.

MARLOT, D. W., a French savant, 1596-1667.

MARLOWE, CHRISTOPHER, was by far the most distinguished, and may indeed be said to have been the only man of great and original genius, among the English dramatists who immediately preceded Shakspeare. As to the events of his short life, we know hardly anything beyond the fact that it was as irregular and unhappy as that of most play-writers of his time. The date of his birth is not certain; but he was perhaps about thirty years old in 1596, when he was killed at Deptford in a discreditable brawl. Several of the plays which pass under his name were probably not his. But we are at least safe in attributing to him three of the most striking dramas in our language: the energetic and harrowing 'Jew of Malta;' 'Edward II.,' a worthy precursor of Shakspeare's dramatic histories; and the magnificently imaginative and finely thoughtful tragedy of 'Faustus.' Marlowe's versified translations, or rather paraphrases, from Ovid, Lucan, and the pseudo-Musæus, are likewise very beautiful, both in imagery, in diction, and for their rhythmical sweetness. [W.S.]

MARMION, S., an Eng. dramatist, died 1639.

MARMONT, AUGUSTUS FREDERICK LOUIS VIEPE DE, duc de Ragusa, the last survivor of Napoleon's marshals, was born of noble parents 1774, and commenced his military services in the army of the monarchy. He attracted the attention of Napoleon by his excellence as an artillery officer, and greatly distinguished himself at the battle of Marengo. He fought in all the campaigns from 1805 to 1807, and was created marshal of France after the battle of Wagram. He shared the fate of all Napoleon's generals opposed to Wellington in Spain, his crowning defeat being at Salamanca. He surrendered Paris to the allies in 1814, and afterwards became a steady adherent of the Bourbons. After the revolution of 1830 he was struck from the list of the army. Died at Venice 1852.

MARMONTEL, JEAN, was born of poor parents, at Bort, in the Limousin, in 1723. Educated chiefly in Jesuit schools, and at first intending to enter the order, he was able, when no more than eighteen years old, to teach philosophy at Toulouse, with such success as enabled him to contribute to the support of his father and mother. In 1745, having come into correspondence with Voltaire, and abandoned the idea of being a priest, he sought his fortune in Paris. He di himself by poems and plays, which are forgotten; and he enjoyed reputation critic, contributing to the 'Encyclop articles, which he collected under t 'Elements of Literature.' His best w ever, were those easy and graceful sket and manners, which he was pleased to Tales.' The morality of the most serio is equivocal; that of others is positively longer novels, 'Bélisaire' and 'Les Inc a literary point of view, much inferior t stories. Several appointments which sively received, made his circumstances outbreak of the Revolution. He died in bourhood of Evreux on the last day of 17

MARNE, J. B. DE, a Fr. historian,

MARNE, LOUIS ANTHONY DE, a Fr tect, author of 'Histoire Sacrée,' 1678-

MARNIX, PHILIP DE, baron of S gonde, a famous Calvinist and enemy quisition, the defender of Antwerp in 1 Alexander Farnese, au. of 'Controversi a translation of the Psalms into Dutch v Beehive of the Romish Church,' &c., 15

MAROLI, D., an Italian painter, 16

MAROLLES, M. DE, a Fr. translato

MAROT, FRANCIS, a Fr. painter, 16

MAROT, JEAN, secretary and poet Brittany, flourished 1463-1523. CLE son, valet of Francis I., distinguished fo ful poetry, 1495-1544.

MAROT, JEAN, a French architect a sional writer, 1630-1695. His son, I refugee in England, and architect to th Orange, born 1660.

MAROUTHA, a Syrian prelate and MAROZIA, a patrician lady of Ro beauty and intriguing disposition, sid great wealth, gave her immense influ the close of the 9th century. She w successively to Alberic, marquis of Cam was killed 925; to Guy, or Guido, du cany, who died 929; and to Hugh of whom she and her last husband had ma Italy, in 932. She placed four popes on t —Sergius III., one of her lovers, by wh a son, in 904; Anastasius III. in 911; 913; and her son, John XI., then in h first year, in 931. Marozia had a sis dora, and a mother of the same name, o was mistress of the pope John X. Both were partakers in her licentiousness and as they were in her beauty and address. virtual sovereign of Italy, and may be pope or queen as the reader pleases. (POPE.) About 928-9, her soldiers palace of the Lateran, slew the broth X., and took the pope prisoner, who afterwards. After her third marriage, h struck one of her sons, who stormed guard with a party of young Romans, offender from the city, and finally imp mother in a monastery, or perhaps in t St. Angelo, where she ended her days.

MARPURG, F. W., a Ger. musician,

MARQUET, F. M., a Fr. botanist, 1

MARQUETTE, J., a Fr. missionary,

MARQUEZ, S., a Spanish painter, d

MARQUIS, A. L., a Fr. botanist, 1777-1828.

MARRACCI, HIPPOLYTE, a learned Italian bibliographer, author of 'Bibliotheca Mariana,' 1694-1675. His brother, LUIGI, a famous Arabian scholar and editor, 1612-1700.

MARRE, J. DE., a Dut. dramatist, 1696-1763.

MARRIER, M., a Fr. ecclesiastic, 1572-1644.

MARRON, P. H., president of the reformed church of Paris, and a partizan of the Girondins, born at Leyden of French refugees, 1754, d. 1832.

MARRYAT, FREDERICK, the son of a West India merchant, was born in 1792, and died in 1848. Entering the navy in his fourteenth year, he served with distinction during the war, and afterwards in the Burmese campaign; and he became a benefactor to the naval profession by the invention of his well-known Code of Signals. He rose to be a post-captain and C.B. In the latter half of his life he was active as an author and as a magazine editor. His 'Diary in America' was the occasion of much acrimonious discussion. Of his many naval stories, whose dashing liveliness and nervous vigour made them so popular, the earliest was 'Frank Mildmay;' and among the rest it is enough to name 'Peter Simple' and 'Mr. Midshipman Easy.' [W.S.]

MARRYAT, JOSEPH, son of Dr. Thomas Marryat, a merchant and M.P., known as a speaker on West Indian affairs, and on insurance, banking, and similar topics, 1757-1824.

MARS, A. J., a French jurisconsult, 1777-1824.

MARS, MLLE., a Fr. comedian, 1779-1847.

MARSAIS, CÆSAR CHESNEAU DU. See DUMARSAIS.

MARSAND, A., a Venetian savant, 1765-1842.

MARSAY, a French mystic writer, author of a work entitled 'Le Temoignage d'un Enfant de la Croix,' publ. anonymously in 9 vols. 12mo, 18th c.

MARSDEN, WILLIAM, an eminent Oriental scholar, son of a merchant of Dublin, born 1754, appointed in 1795 secretary to the admiralty, died 1836. He is author of a grammar and dictionary of the Malay language; of a description of Eastern coins, under the title of 'Numismata Orientalia;' an essay on the East Insular Languages; a translation of the 'Travels of Marco Polo,' &c. In 1834 he voluntarily relinquished his retiring pension of £1,500 per annum, and, in 1834, presented his oriental coins to the British Museum, and his Malay and Oriental MSS. to King's College.

MARSH, RIGHT REV. HERBERT, D.D., successively bishop of Llandaff and Peterborough, known as the translator of Michaelis, and author of 'Dogmatic Theology,' was born 1758. He finished his education in Germany, and while resident there transmitted some valuable information to the British government, for which he was rewarded with a pension; died 1838.

MARSH, NARCISSUS, successively bishop of Dromore and Ferns, Cashel, Dublin, and Armagh, author of 'Institutiones Logicæ,' 1638-1703.

MARSHAL, A., a Scotch anatomist, 1742-1813.

MARSHAL, W., a nonconformist divine, author of 'The Gospel Mystery of Sanctification,' a work commended by Hervey; died 1690.

MARSHALL, NATHANIEL, a learned minister of the church of England, author of an edition of Justin, &c., last century.

MARSHALL, S., a presbyterian divine, d. 1655.

MARSHALL, THOMAS, a learned divine of the Church of England, known as a Saxon and Oriental scholar, 1621-1685.

MARSHALL, W., an agricult. wr., 1745-1818.

MARSHAM, SIR JOHN, a learned writer on Egyptian history and antiquities, known in the 17th century as a royalist and M.P., 1602-1685.

MARSHMAN, JAS., a baptist missionary, who became a proficient in the Eastern languages, and translated a part of the Scriptures into Chinese. He produced also an English version of the works of Confucius, and a 'Dissertation on the Characters and Sounds of the Chinese Language,' 1799-1837.

MARSTON, JOHN, a dramatic writer and satirist of the age of Elizabeth and James I. The dates are uncertain, but he can be traced to 1633.

MARSY, BALTHASON and GASPARD, brothers, natives of Cambray, both excellent sculptors; the former lived 1624-1674, the latter 1628-1681.

MARSY, C. S. DE, a French author, 1740-1815.

MARSY, F. MA. DE, a Fr. historian, 1714-1763.

MARSYLI, LIUGI FERDINANDO, count of, a learned geographer and naturalist, distinguished in the service of Austria 1658-1730.

MARTEL, F., a writer on surgery in 1601.

MARTEL, S. A., a Fr. architect, 1569-1641.

MARTELLI, LUDOVICO and VICENZO, Italian brothers and poets, the former 1499-1527; the latter died 1556.

MARTELLO, P. J., an Ital. dram., 1665-1727.

MARTELLY, R., a French actor, 1751-1817.

MARTENE, E., a learned ecclesias., 1654-1739.

MARTENS, F., a German traveller, 17th cent.

MARTENS, or MERTENS, THIERRY, surnamed 'the Aldus of the Low Countries,' divides the honour with some others of introducing printing into the Netherlands. He is celebrated for his fine editions of the Greek authors, and was highly esteemed by the learned men of his age; among others, Erasmus, who lodged with him, 1450-1534.

MARTENS, WILLIAM FREDERIC VON, a native of Hamburgh, dist. as a diplomat., 1756-1821.

MARTHA. See SAINTE-MARTHE.

MARTHA, SISTER, a benevolent female of Besançon, whose real name was ANNE BIGET, and whose virtues and humanity place her among the most distinguished women of our epoch, was born in 1748, and was in early life the inmate of a convent. She devoted herself from her youth upwards, to the relief of the poor and afflicted; and though she was nearly seventy years of age, in the campaign of 1814, she made almost incredible efforts to relieve the wounded. Every mark of honour was shown her by the allied sovereigns, and she had previously been presented with a medal by her country, inscribed 'Homage to Virtue.' She died in 1824.

MARTI, EMMANUEL, a Span. poet, 1663-1737.

MARTIALIS, MARCUS VALERIUS, a well-known Latin epigrammatist, generally called MARTIAL, born about 40, at the present Arragon in Spain. His poems, which consist of some 1,500 pieces, are interesting for their allusions to the persons and manners of the times, but abound with indelicacies. In the Delphin edition of 1680, these were omitted from the body of the work, and published all together at the end. Martial went to Rome when about twenty years of age, and obtained the favour of Domitian. Died 104.

MARTIANAY, J., a Fr. ecclesiastic, 1647-1717.
MARTIANO, P., an Ital. physician, 1567-1622.
MARTIGNAC, JEAN BAPTISTE SILVERE ALGAY, Vicomte De, minister of Charles X., author of an essay upon the Spanish revolution and the intervention of 1823, 1776-1832.
MARTIGNAC, STEPHEN ALGAY DE, a French scholar, born at Brives la Gaillarde 1620 or 1628, died 1698, author of 'Memoirs of Gaston,' &c.
MARTILIERE, COUNT DE LA, a dist. French artillery officer, made a peer in 1814, died 1819.
MARTIN, the name of several SAINTS:—1. A bishop of Tours, born in Pannonia, now Hungary, 316, died 397. He is considered the apostle of the Gauls. 2. An archbishop of Braga, in Portugal, an Hungarian by birth, known as an ecclesiastical writer, and a great preacher in Galicia, died 580. 3. MARTIN-DE-VERTON, or MARTINUS VERTAVENSIS, founder and abbot of the monastery of Verton, born of noble parentage at Nantes 527, died 601. 4. The first pope of the name.
MARTIN, the first of the name, pope and saint of Rome, whose memory is also honoured in the Greek church, reigned 649-655. The second, called also Martinus I., in whose time Photius was condemned, 882-884. The third, called by some Martinus II., 942-946. The fourth, in whose time the Sicilian vespers date, who supported Charles of Sicily against Peter of Arragon, and excommunicated Michael Palæologus, 1281-1285. The fifth, who put an end to the schism of the West, presided at the council of Constance, and laid his ban on the partizans of John Huss, 1418-1431.
MARTIN, a king of Sicily, died 1409.
MARTIN, ——, a French botanist, born 1729.
MARTIN, AIME, a French scholar and miscellaneous writer, the pupil and friend of Bernard St. Pierre, whose widow he married. Born at Lyons 1786, died 1847.
MARTIN, ANDREW, a Fr. Cartesian, 1621-95.
MARTIN, BENJAMIN, a famous optician and mathematical writer, who was originally a ploughboy in Surrey, and, contriving to educate himself, gave lectures on experimental philosophy, and carried on the business of an optician and globe maker in London, 1704-1782.
MARTIN, BERNARD, a Fr. classic, 1574-1639.
MARTIN, BERNARD, a Fr. chemist, b. 1629.
MARTIN, C., an East India officer, 1732-1800.
MARTIN, DAVID, a Fr. protestant, 1639-1721.
MARTIN, DAVID, a Scotch artist, died 1797.
MARTIN, DOM CL., a Fr. ecclesiast., 1619-96.
MARTIN, E., a French jurisconsult, 1714-93.
MARTIN, F., a French navigator in 1601.
MARTIN, F., a French governor of Pondicherry, last century.
MARTIN, G., a Fr. bibliographer, 1679-1761.
MARTIN, G., a French theologian, last century.
MARTIN, J., a French savant, 1684-1751.
MARTIN, J., a Fr. medical writer, 17th cent.
MARTIN, J. B., a French painter, 1659-1735.
MARTIN, J. B., a French singer, 1767-1837.
MARTIN, M. J. D., a Fr. author, 1756-1797.
MARTIN, PETER, a Fr. admiral, 1752-1820.
MARTIN, R., a Spanish monk, died 1286.
MARTIN, R., a Fr. mathematician, died 1811.
MARTIN, SARAH, distinguished by her philanthropical efforts for the reform of criminals, and the education of the poor, was born in the neighbourhood of Yarmouth, 1791, and su self by dressmaking. She began h requesting permission to read the S prisoners, and became at last a great prison reformer. She died in 184 volume of poems, written by her, ha published.
MARTIN, THOMAS, an antiquari Thetford, of which place he wrote a h died 1771.
MARTIN, THOMAS, a Roman Ca
tary, one of the six commissioners conduct the process against Cranmer, MARTIN, THOMAS IGNATIUS, a bourer, remarkable for his visions conc XVIII., to whom he communicated ject in 1816. Died suddenly, 1834.
MARTIN, V., an Italian composer,
MARTIN, W., an Eng. naturalist, MARTINE, GEORGE, a Scotch ph of medical and philosophical works, 17
MARTINEZ, G., a Spanish painter
MARTINEZ, H., a Mexican mathe
MARTINEZ, J. L., a Span. painter
MARTINEZ, S., a Spanish painter,
MARTINEZ, T., a Spanish painter,
MARTINEZ, PASQUALIS, the fou theosophical sect of Martinists, and be a Portuguese Jew. He commenced tion in the masonic lodges of Franc died at St. Domingo, 1779. Saint-M confounded with him, was his di
SAINT MARTIN.
MARTINI, F. H. W., a Ger. naturali
MARTINI, G. H., a Sax. numismat MARTINI, GUISEPPE SAN, an adm poser and hautboy player, was born at came to England in 1728, and even at th
the works of Handel, Corelli, and Gem
all the fashion, the compositions of Ma
a remarkable degree of popularity.
pointed director of the chamber music t
prince of Wales, in which situation h
till about the year 1740, when he died.
MARTINI, J. P. E., a Rhen. music.,
MARTINI, M., a Ger. theologian, 1
MARTINI, M., a Chinese missionar
MARTINI, PADRE GIAMBATTISTA musician and composer, was born at 1706. He was much celebrated as a t ing his life. His chief compositions service of the church. His fame, how pally rests on his works on the theor tice of music. He died of dropsy in 1784.
MARTINI, S., an Italian painter, 1
MARTINIERE, ANTHONY AUGU
ZEN DE LA, a French writer and com
tary to the king of Naples, and an. of phical, Histor., and Critical Dictionary,' MARTINOZ, H., a Fr. clockmaker, MARTOS, IVAN PETROVITCH, a fam
sculptor, counsellor of state, and dire Academy at St. Petersburg, 1755-183
MARTYN, HENRY, a celebrated mis
born at Truro, in Cornwall, 18th Febr
His father, though a miner, was a w person—distinguished by his piety and Henry was educated at the grammar s

ve town, and surpassed all his school-fellows lassical acquirements. At the age of fourteen became a candidate for a scholarship in Corpus isti College, Oxford, but failed. Having re- ed to continue a year longer at school, he after- rds became a student in St. John's College, mbridge, to which he was led, chiefly to enjoy society of an intimate and valued friend, whose us character and conversation produced a com- te revolution in the views of Martyn in regard religion. But his conversion, so far from inter- ng with his preparations at the university, ded to increase his ardour in literary pursuits, nding him to regard time as a talent, for the t improvement of which he was accountable. nulated to diligence by this high motive, he be- e an indefatigable student, and his industry was rded by the highest academical honours being ged to him, for he was declared 'Senior Wran- ' in Jan., 1801, before he had completed his tieth year. He now engaged in superintending tudies of some pupils, while, at the same time, as assiduously preparing for the election in h, 1802, when he was chosen Fellow of St. n's, and almost immediately after carried off the est prize for Latin prose composition which the ersity had to bestow. Unseduced, however, by lendour of these academical successes, Mr. Mar- desires strongly ran in a totally different direc- and he resolved on dedicating his life and ener- to the service of God in the missionary cause. He ed a communication with the Church Mission- Society. This part of his plan, however, hav- been abandoned, in consequence of some family , which made his sister dependent on him for port, his friends applied, and at length suc- ed in obtaining for him a chaplaincy in the East a Company's service. Shortly after his arrival alcutta, where he was to wait for his appoint- , he was overtaken by fever, which nearly ated his life; but the long interval of leisure ded him, before he was completely convalescent, ndustriously improved in acquiring a know- of Hindostanee, and making himself acquainted he state and feelings of the English residents ia. After a lapse of five months, he received pointment to Dinapore, and his duty there read prayers to the soldiery at the barracks only service he was allowed to perform—for e was no accommodation for their sitting, a was dispensed with. But not content with ridgement of his work, he extended his by commencing to preach to the natives in acular language of India, and to this, at , novel service, a great crowd—chiefly of repaired. This service he continued, at the superintending five schools which he had t Dinapore, visiting hospitals, and afford- us instruction to all who came to him. n to these public labours, he was privately revising the sheets of the Hindostanee the New Testament which he had exe- ntending the Persian translation which committed to the care of Sabot, and the study of Arabic, in which language meditated another translation. In the 09 he removed to Cawnpore, where he er many disadvantages, being without having to preach in the open air, ex- posed to the violence of the heat. Towards the end of that year, he began his ministrations to the heathen. 'A crowd of mendicants, whom, to pre- vent perpetual interruptions, he had appointed to meet on a stated day for the distribution of alms, frequently assembled before his house in immense numbers, presenting an affecting spectacle of ex- treme wretchedness. To this congregation he deter- mined to preach the Word of Life. The following Sunday he preached again to the beggars, in number about five hundred, and on the last day of the year he again addressed them to the amount of nearly six hundred. Afterwards Martyn, having become proficient in the knowledge and use of the Persic, resolved to extend his missionary labours to Persia. He accordingly established himself at Shiraz, with the immediate view of revising his Persian and Arabic translations of the New Testament with the aid of some learned natives. In that place he remained ten months, improving the time that was not occupied on his version in religious discussions with the Moolahs and Soofis. In crowded assem- blies of those literary Persians, he appeared the single unassisted advocate of the Christian faith, and yet by his zeal, tempered by judgment, he ex- cited great stir and interest in religious inquiries. In that place besides the complete version of his New Testament, he completed, also, a Persian trans- lation of the Psalms, 'a sweet employment,' as he says, 'which caused six weary moons that waxed and waned since its commencement to pass un- noticed.' He had contemplated the presentation of his New Testament translation to the Shah in person, and for this purpose he went to Tabriz, where the king was sojourning in his summer camp. But the British Ambassador being absent, an intro- duction could not be obtained, and for want of that indispensable formality, admission was denied. At Tabriz he was seized with malignant fever, on the abatement of which, it was judged essential for the preservation of his life, that he should immedi- ately remove beyond the enervating influences of an Eastern climate. By hurried movements he endeavoured to reach Constantinople; but at Tocat his sickness assumed an alarming appearance, and in that place, on the 16th October, 1812, this pious, devoted, and learned man fell asleep in Jesus, having earned a reputation which placed him in the foremost ranks of modern mission- aries. [R.J.]

MARTYN, JOHN, F.R.S., professor of botany at Cambridge, author of a 'History of Rare Plants,' 'The Grub Street Journal,' an edition of 'Virgil's Georgics,' &c., 1699-1768.

MARTYN, THOMAS, F.R.S., son of the preced- ing, dist. as a botanical and antiquar. an., 1736-1825.

MARTYR, PETER, one of the early protestant reformers, was born in 1500 at Florence. At first an Augustine monk, and even priest of a convent, he was so shaken in his religious views by studying the writings of Luther and Zwingli, that he aban- doned Romanism, and was obliged for this honest change of opinion to seek personal safety in exile. On the invitation of Edward VI. he came over to England, and occupied a chair of divinity at Ox- ford. In the reign of Mary he quitted England, and took up his abode in Zurich, where he died in 1562. He has written a number of theological treatises, among which his 'Loci Communes,' and some of his Commentaries, are best known at the present day. As a proof of the bigotry of the age it may be added, that the remains of his wife, who had died and been buried at Oxford, were dug up in the reign of Mary, and ignominiously thrust beneath a dunghill. [J.E.]

MARUCELLI, G. S., an Ital. paint., 1586-1646.

MARVELL, ANDREW, a statesman and poet, was born at Hull on the 15th of November, 1620. Little is known of his education and early history, and in after life he was more distinguished by his firmness and honest adherence to constitutional principle, than either by his genius as a poet or his eminence as a statesman. He began his parliamentary career in 1660, as representative of his native town. He was deeply imbued with the spirit of the long parliament, and brought its constitutional principles, and wonderful aptness for the transaction of collective business, into the parliaments of the restoration, in a great measure consisting of men of a totally different stamp. He was the first great practical advocate of the important principle that the constituency should know the conduct of its representative, and that although he need not be a delegate merely to do what they require, yet he must be so far responsible that he is to be removed when he ceases to represent their sentiments. He wrote a series of letters to his constituents, describing the proceedings of parliament, and accounting for his own conduct; and the electors on their part adhered to him with zealous steadiness. There is a well-known anecdote of his declining a bribe from the lord treasurer because he had enough for a frugal dinner. Some of his pamphlets on the affairs of the day are valuable for their clearness and correctness; but his poetry is seldom read. The only office ever held by him was that of secretary of an embassy to the northern powers. He died on the 16th of August, 1678. [J.H.B.]

House of Marvell, Highgate, London.]

MARX, JACOB, a Germ. physician, 1745-1789.

MARY, queen regnant of England, daughter of Henry VIII. and Catherine of Arragon, was born at the commencement of 1516, and succeeded her brother, Edward VI., in 1553. Her adherence to the Church of Rome gave occasion to the proclamation of her cousin, Lady Jane Grey, who was shortly afterwards beheaded, and the party who had elevated her to the throne comp
In 1554, Mary was married to P
Devoting herself to the restoration
Catholic religion, nearly 300 pers
the stake as heretics in the short sp four years. Happily for the nation after the loss of Calais, Novembe was succeeded by her half-sister, E

MARY, companion of William throne of England, was the elde James II. by Ann Hyde, daughter o
cellor Clarendon. She was born 1
William, prince of Orange, in 167
the throne in the interest of the gion after the Revolution of 1688
the thirty-third year of her age, 16

MARY BEATRIX OF ESTE, q
James II., was married to him in 1 birth to a son in 1688, who was ac
James III., by Louis XIV. Died

MARY OF LORRAINE, queen co land, and mother of Mary Stuart, w of Claude, duke of Guise. She Louis II. of Orleans in 1534, and king of Scotland, in 1538. In 15 a widow, and became regent for he ter. Died 1560.

MARY, queen of Scotland, wa
year 1542. The day of her birth, important events of her history, h
of controversy, but it takes no wi
between the 8th and the 12th of D father, James V., who died on the 1 of her birth ere he expired. T gloomy and critical one for royal
but the frail infant survived contes sions, in which one strong enough
them might have been sacrificed.
yet in infancy, it was part of the VIII. to unite the kingdoms by m
his son Edward. He set about t ment of this scheme with a cha haste, which roused the spirits of th
it. The young queen's mother, M strengthened that alliance with th which political events had created the Scottish statesmen settled the England by sending the child to sixth year. Her education was es the French court, and it affords a of some of the moral difficulties
her career, to collect from the sa times the principles which she imbibed. She was early affianced and as he became King Francis then was queen of France and Sc ground of Elizabeth's illegitima party claimed for Mary the soverei
as a descendant of the sister of H
the union of the French and Sco
her person, made the claim fo
death of Francis, however, after re months, broke the main element o pretensions. She was now only land, a country poor and turbu
with bitter regret the brilliant cou 1562, she was received with a r calculated to reconcile her to th sordid and dreary chambers of

were important national affairs in a condition
atify her, for in the previous year protestanhaving been established, her religion had been essed, and its profession rendered a crime.
ad many contests with Knox and 'the lords congregation,' in which earnestness, zeal, ugged determination on the one side, were
y feminine wit and the overawing influence al rank on the other. It was on the 29th of 1565, that she celebrated her unhappy mar-with her worthless connection, Henry, Lord
ey. The next great event in her strange
, was the murder in her presence of her humble
David Rizzio, the musician, her husband
g on the assassins. It was on the 10th of ary, 1567, that Darnley himself was mur-
, and the house in which he lived blown up the deed was accomplished. Many volumes been written, and many are evidently in pre-ion on the question of Mary's accession to the
and it would be useless to attempt its disn within such limits as the present. On the of May, in the same year, occurred Mary's age to Bothwell the chief assassin, a fact, round
the main circumstances adduced by her op-its cluster. On the 17th of June, she was to a retirement, which was virtually an im-ment, in Lochleven Castle. She escaped on y, 1568, and, defeated on the field of Lang-ought refuge in England. She was received risoner by the jealous queen to whose throne
d asserted pretensions, and lived nineteen a captive. If Elizabeth is to be vindicated for arbarness by the recurrence of efforts to as-lary's right to the English throne, yet it is imed that the English queen threw out inents, which tending towards secret assassi-
, admit of no vindication. After a trial the treason law of England, she was beat Fotheringay Castle on the 8th of Feb-1587. [J.H.B.]

[Tomb of Mary in Westminster Abbey.]

MASACCIO, the name by which TOMMASO mm is commonly known, Masaccio being a nick-me, the short for Tommasaccio, slovenly Thomas, was born at San Giovanni in the Valdarno, in 1402. His earliest performances were in the Brancacci chapel, in the church del Carmine, at Florence, where he assisted his master Masolino da Panicale at a very early age, and after Masolino's death, continued the series left incomplete by him. The frescoes of Masaccio in this chapel, which contains also his most celebrated works, were executed apparently at two distinct periods, before 1430 and after 1434, when the Medici returned to Florence, and during this interval Masaccio may have visited Rome. He was admitted into the company of St. Luke in 1423, and the earlier or more conventional works may have been executed about 1425, comprising—'The Expulsion from Paradise,' 'The Tribute Money,' and perhaps 'Peter Baptizing;' the others probably ten years later, supposing they were not all completed before 1430, which is quite possible. These works show the state of painting as compared with that of sculpture, exemplified in the gates by Lorenzo Ghiberti, executed at the same time, 1425 being the mean date of the two gates. Masaccio was not behind Ghiberti, but may have owed much to his example, as also to the example of Donatello and Brunelleschi, with the last of whom he studied perspective.—The association of so many men of remarkable ability is perhaps the chief cause of the great advance evident in all the arts in the early part of the 15th century; their intercourse developed criticism, the soul of art. Vasari gives us a good example: when Donatello exhibited his Crucifixion (now in the church of Santa Croce), Brunelleschi remarked that he had attempted the impersonation of the Son of God, while he had made only a vulgar peasant.—The works of the Brancacci chapel mark the era of the second epoch of Italian painting, and as the whole, or at least the greater portion, of these frescoes were till lately assumed to be the work of Masaccio, his reputation was second only to that of Raphael for developing the progress of art; but modern criticism appears to have rectified a common misunderstanding of the text of Vasari, certainly through Vasari's want of precision.—The chapel was commenced by Masolino da Panicale, continued by Masaccio, and completed by Filippino Lippi, the son of Masaccio's pupil, Fra Filippo Lippi; and it appears that Vasari's original account in the first edition of his Lives was correct, (the statement was left out in the second,) that besides other portions—'Paul Visiting Peter in Prison,' and 'Peter and Paul before the Proconsul,' the two most lauded compositions of the whole chapel, were the work of Filippino, and executed about forty years after the death of Masaccio. The chief argument is founded on the fact of there being several portraits of men in these frescoes which can only have been executed at the later period: still, the authenticity of these very portraits seems to rest solely upon the fact of their being published as such by Vasari, and until their authenticity is thoroughly established, the subject is not indisputably settled.—It is a very difficult and interesting question, very important if true, and we owe its revival to a German and a Dane, Rumohr and Gaye; but the editors of the new Florentine Vasari (1848) have taken up the argument on the same side with great intelligence: still the main point to be decided is the authenticity of the portraits.—

The Brancacci chapel now contains fifteen distinct subjects, eight of which only are attributed by Gaye to Masaccio. The completion of the chapel by Filippino raises another question, the date of Masaccio's death. Vasari and Baldinucci state that he died in 1443, not without suspicion of poison; at the same time it was currently reported, and it is repeated by Vasari and others, that Masaccio died in his 26th year. This, as we know for certain that he was born 1402, would place his death in 1428, before the death of Masolino, whom he succeeded, and it interferes with other statements, though it is well reconcileable with the incomplete state of the frescoes of the chapel at his death, which is generally admitted to have been sudden and early: supposing he died in 1443, as Vasari and Baldinucci state, the incompletion of the chapel is not so well accounted for. Rumohr gives an extract from the cathedral accounts of Florence, which seems to show that Masaccio was living in 1446.—The works of Masaccio are of a high order as regards general technical qualities, well drawn, of a fine general character, and dramatic in composition; and his figures are conspicuous for a simple and grand treatment of drapery, similar in character to those of the now familiar cartoons of Raphael. The difference between these celebrated cartoons and the fresco of Peter and Paul before the Proconsul, by Filippino, is not so much in style, as the great name of Raphael and the intervening forty years would lead one to suppose; but this chapel was notoriously the principal school of Raphael, and nearly every other great painter at the commencement of the sixteenth century. But of course such glory as accrues to Filippino from his restored position is detracted from the reputation of Masaccio. The celebrated figure of Paul in the cartoon of Paul Preaching, is taken from the figure of Paul in the fresco Visiting Peter in Prison, in this chapel, by Filippino, as is now generally assumed; Rosini, however, in his History of Italian Painting, adheres to the old traditions. —(Vasari, Vite, &c., ed Flor. 1846, Seqq; Rumohr, Italienische Forschungen; Gaye, Carteggio Inedito d' Artisti; Rosini, Storia della Pittura Italiana, Pisa, 1848.) [R.N.W.]

MASANIELLO, the commonly received name of TOMASO ANIELLO, a fisherman of Naples, who headed the populace in their revolt against the Spanish viceroy, 1647, when only twenty-five years of age. His career lasted but nine days, in which time he had 150,000 men under his orders, and was elevated to sovereign authority. He was murdered by four assassins, armed with arquebuses, and as the resistance he commenced never ceased till the Spanish yoke was broken, he has since been venerated as the liberator of his country.

MASCAGNI, D., an Ital. painter, 1579-1636.

MASCAGNI, P., an Ital. anatomist, 1752-1815.

MASCARDI, JOSEPH, an Italian jurisconsult, born in the republic of Genoa, died 1630. AUGUSTIN, his nephew, an historian and professor of rhetoric, 1591-1640.

MASCH, A. T., a Ger. theologian, 1724-1807.

MASCLEF, F., a Fr. Orientalist, 1663-1728.

MASCOU, J. J., a Germ. historian, 1689-1762.

MASCRIER, J. B. DE, a Fr. eccles., 1697-1760.

MASDEN, DON J. F., a Sp. histo., 1740-1817.

MASENIUS, or MASEN, JAMES, a German Jesuit, known as a Latin poet, theologi[an], critic, 1606-1681.

MASERES, FRANCIS, Baron, an eminen[t] thematician, grandson of a French refugee, [b] in London, 1731, died 1824.

MASETTI, A., an Italian engineer, 1757-[1]

MASHAM, ABIGAIL, a cousin of Sarah, d[uch] of Marlborough, and fav. of Queen Anne, d. [17]

MASHAM, LADY DAMARIS, daughter [of] Ralph Cudworth, and wife of Sir Francis M[asham] father-in-law of the preceding, remarkable f[or] skill in arithmetic, geography, chronology, hi[story] philosophy, and divinity, author of moral [and] gious discourses, 1658-1708.

MASINISSA, an African prince, died B.C. [148]

MASIUS, or MAES, A., a Belgian Orie[ntalist] and theological writer, 1527-1573.

MASKELYNE, NEVIL, LL.D., born in [Lon]don, 1732; died February, 1811, aged s[eventy]-nine: a very eminent British astronome[r and] mathematician: he filled the important [office] of Astronomer Royal with the highest cre[dit for] forty-six years. To Maskelyne are owing [many] important improvements in practical astron[omy]— especially in its application to Navigation: [his ex]ertions brought into general use the met[hod of] lunar distances. Maskelyne was unfortu[nately] obstructed by cloudy weather, in his attempt [to ob]serve the transit of Venus over the sun's d[isc, on] 6th June, 1761, for which purpose he had [gone to] St. Helena. We owe him, however, the p[ainful] and successful carrying out of the effort to [deter]mine the mean density of the Earth, [by the] observed deflection of the plummet at the [moun]tain mass Schehallion. There have be[en very] few British practical astronomers who are [entitled] to rank with Maskelyne. [J. P.N.]

MASON, CHARLES, assistant astronom[er at] Greenwich Observatory, d. in Pennsylvania [1787.]

MASON, F., a learned divine, about 156[0-1621.]

MASON, JOHN, a nonconformist minist[er, born] at Dunmow, in Essex, 1706, died 1763, [known] as a moralist and miscellaneous writer [by his] works, entitled 'Self Knowledge,' which ha[s been] frequently republished, 'Practical Di[scourses,' 'Essay] 'Christian Morals,' 'Essay on Elocution,' [Treatise] on the Power of Numbers, and the Princ[iples of] Harmony in Poetical Compositions,' 'E[ssay,' &c.] the Power and Harmony of Prosaic Numbe[rs. Memoir] A Life of the author, by his relative, John [Mason] Good, was prefixed to an edition of the 'Self] Knowledge,' published in 1811.

MASON, SIR JOHN, a famous statesman [born] reigns of Henry VIII., Edward VI., Mar[y, and] Elizabeth, died 1566.

MASON, WILLIAM, was born in 1725, a[t Hull,] cated at Cambridge. Entering the church [as his] father's profession, he held several prefer[ments,] and was a canon of York long before his [death,] which occurred in 1797. He is now re[membered] chiefly for having been the editor and biog[rapher] of the poet Gray. In his life-time, however, h[e was] not only esteemed for his accomplishments, [especi]ally in music and painting, but likewise f[ormed] in no small degree as a poet. His 'E[nglish] Garden,' amidst much dulness, contains [some] pleasing bits of scenery; and he shewed [great] courage, not unsupported by power of langu[age] and passion, in the attempt he made to natural[ize] rus in the modern drama. His first

' is inferior to his second, 'Carac-ich his contemporary fame mainly
[W.S.]

D., an Ital. lithotomist, 1698-1779.

DE FER. See SAINT MARS.

, a Venetian medical wr., d. 1563.

ILLO. See MASANIELLO.

, J., a French engraver, 1740-1822.

L., an Italian painter, 1569-1633.

, A., an Italian physician, 1510-98.

B., a French painter, 1687-1767.

. ANDRÉ MASSENA was born of age at Nice in 1758. He entered ny as a common soldier, and rose to oli, prince of Esslingen, and marshal highly distinguished himself in the mpaigns of Napoleon; and in 1799 he r-in-chief in Switzerland. He saved victory of Zurich, which he gained ians and Russians in the autumn of 1800 he defended Genoa with re-nacy and skill against the Austrians, tely starved into capitulation. In commanded in Italy, and defeated Charles at Caldiero. In 1809 he self greatly at the battle of Esslin-
) in Germany, and by his firmness ich imperial army from utter de-1810 Napoleon sent Massena with ce to conquer Portugal, and 'to sh and their Sepoy general into the genius and firmness of Wellington
h for the 'Spoiled child of Victory,' s called in the French armies. The s Vedras were a barrier that the l dared not assail, and he retired in 1811, showing consummate mili-
e conduct of his retreat, and equal treatment of the unhappy country scene of the war. Massena was in oulon at the time of Napoleon's first 1814. He promptly acknowledged but joined Napoleon in the next year rom Elba. He commanded the na-
f Paris during the hundred days.
na died in 1817. [E.S.C.]

J. B., a French prelate, 1743-1818.

W., a Fr. archæologist, 1665-1722.

N, JEAN BAPTISTE, the most celeorator of France, was the son of a nd born in 1663, at Hières, in Proonly nineteen, he entered into the f the Oratory, and immediately atby the elegance of his manner and le of his elocution. The first public eloquence were made at Vienne, med the duties of Theological Tutor,
occasion on which his powers of oragly enlisted, was on the death of s, archbishop of that place. The his funeral oration called forth union, and his fame being widely ex-
s invited to one of the principal is. Although several preachers of already stationed in that capital, mined to reach the summit of fame
a new path by himself, and he ac-design; for his pulpit addresses were in so novel a style, and so irresistibly attractive, so plain and level to every understanding, yet so replete with pathos, and so distinguished for profound and accurate knowledge of human nature, his language was so copious, and his mastery over the passions so consummate, that he was acknowledged, with universal consent, to surpass all his contemporaries. Having frequent opportunities of preaching before the Court, he on one occasion had the finest compliment paid him that a preacher ever received. 'Father,' said the Monarch, 'when I hear other preachers, I go away much pleased with them, but when I hear you, I go away much displeased with myself.' One sermon, described by Voltaire in the Encyclopédie, produced an extraordinary impression. The subject was 'The small number of the elect,' and so overpowering was the picture he drew of the scenes of the last judgment, 'that the hearers involuntarily started from their seats, and such a general murmur of surprise and acclamation arose as disconcerted the preacher himself.' But the effect was in consequence greatly increased, and the excitement of the audience was carried to the highest pitch of intensity. The celebrated actor Barron, having gone to hear him, shortly after his settlement in Paris, waited on him in the vestry, and told him to continue as he had begun; and, at another time, said to a brother actor, who accompanied him, 'my friend, that is the true orator, we are mere players.' Massillon was raised to the see of Clermont, in 1717—a promotion for which he was indebted to the Regent, who, after attending a course of sermons, was impressed with the highest ideas of the preacher's merits. The publication of his famous sermons, entitled, 'Petit-carême,' two years after, procured him an honour of a different kind, the highest literary honour that is known in France, that of being elected a member of the Academy. Massillon now resided wholly and in complete retirement, devoting himself to the duties of his diocese, and being held in high and universal estimation, not only for the splendour of his eloquence and the greatness of his talents, but for his moral and religious worth; he was a lively companion, a faithful friend, a kind and condescending master, and full of benevolence and charity to the poor. His death took place at Clermont, in Sept., 1742, when he had nearly completed his seventy-fifth year. His published discourses occupy 14 volumes. [R.J.]

MASSINGER, PHILIP, was born in 1584, at Salisbury, or perhaps at Wilton, the seat of the earl of Pembroke, in whose household his father held some office. He was sent to Oxford in his eighteenth year, probably with a view to his entering the church. He left the university without taking a degree, and, for reasons which are not known, was thrown on the world penniless and unpatronised: his best editor, Gifford, infers from passages in his works that he had become a Catholic. In 1606 he came to London; and he was always afterwards a play-writer, conferring on our language some of its dramatic masterpieces, but bearing even more than his share in the poverty which was suffered by almost all the dramatists of that brilliant and singular era. The particulars of his history are very obscure. We know, however, that he wrote jointly with others, especially Fletcher, Middleton, and Rowley. A melancholy letter, written about 1618 to Henslowe the theatrical manager, shows him to have been then in great pecuniary distress; he himself, in a dedication, dated 1632, thankfully acknowledges that the bounty of one or two men of rank had kept him alive; and the obscurity of his sad career, at its close, is proved by the register of St. Saviours' in Southwark, which, in 1640, notes the burial of 'Philip Massinger, a stranger.' The famous collection of manuscript plays, which the cook of the herald Warburton used for covering pies, contained twelve attributed to Massinger. Gifford names thirty-seven plays as being his in whole or in part, and prints eighteen of these. Some critics insist on placing Massinger next after Shakspeare; and it is at least indisputable that he is one of the very best of the Old English dramatists. He wants comic humour, but has prodigious vigour, more, indeed, than almost any of his contemporaries, in the conception and delineation of character; his representations of society abound in traits of keen observation, and boldly independent thinking; his situations and incidents are devised with great originality and force; and his serious passages, though often wanting in natural pathos, have a lofty melancholy both of imagery and feeling, and a peculiar grace and melody of expression. He is known to play-goers by 'A New Way to Pay Old Debts;' his 'Maid of Honour' also has been restored to the stage; and Rowe's 'Fair Penitent' is a plagiarism from his 'Fatal Dowry.' Among his other works may be named especially the gloomy tragedy of 'The Unnatural Combat,' and 'The City Madam,' an extraordinarily spirited picture of actual life, idealized into a semi-comic strain of poetry. [W.S.]

MASSINGHERD, Sir Oswald, of Lincolnshire, distinguished as a knight of St. John of Jerusalem, last prior of that order in Ireland, and last Turcopolier of Malta, born 1490; installed prior at the instance of Cardinal Pole in the reign of Queen Mary, 1550.

MASSON, A., a French ecclesiastic, 1620-1700.

MASSON, A., a French painter, 1636-1702.

MASSON, C. F. P., a Fr. author, 1762-1807.

MASSON, Francis, a Fr. sculptor, 1745-1807.

MASSON, Francis, a Scot. botan., 1741-1805.

MASSON, Innocent C., a general of the Carthusian order of monks and learned wr., 1628-1703.

MASSON, Jean, a French protestant, who took refuge in England on the revocation of the edict of Nantes, became tutor in the family of Bishop Burnet, and wrote some theological and critical works, flourished about 1680-1750. His brother, Samuel, part conductor with Jean of a 'Critical Journal,' and pastor of the English church at Dort; dates unknown.

MASSON, Jean Papire, a French historian and geographical writer, author of 'Annals of France,' &c., 1554-1611. His brother, Jean, historian of Jeanne Darc, died 1680.

MASSUET, the name of two learned Benedictines, the earliest of whom, Rene, was author of the 'Annals' of his order, 'Lives of the Saints,' and an edition of 'Irenæus,' 1666-1716. The later, named Peter, became a protestant, and wrote several poor histories, 1699-1734.

MASTERS, R., an antiquarian writer, 1713-98.

MASTERS, Thomas, a scholar and poetical writer, who is said to have assisted L of Cherbury in his life of Henry VIII.,

MASUCCI, A., an Italian painter, 1

MASUCCIO, a famous architect a of Naples, flourished 1230-1305.

MATANI, A., an Ital. mathematicia

MATHER, Richard, a native of who took orders at Oxford, but was su nonconformity in 1633, and afterward
New England. Died there 1669. S eldest son, born in Lancashire 1626, a his father to America 1635, but returni land in 1650, was actively employed a in various parts of the three kingdom 1671. Increase, youngest son of Ri in New England 1635, took his degree Harvard college 1656, and joined his Ireland 1657. He was afterwards k deputy to the English government in t colonial freedom, and takes rank in lit religious essayist and historian, died 1 ton-Mather, D.D., son of the preced
most eminent of the family, was born 1663, died 1728. His works are very but the principal of them are 'An E
History of New England,' 'The Christi pher,' 'Psalterium Americanum,' and ders of the Invisible World,' which is of the trials of witches, with observati operation of spirits in association with

MATHIAS. See Matthias.

MATHIAS, an emper. of Germany,

MATHIAS, C., a German savant, l

MATHIAS-CORVINUS, one of t kings of Hungary, was son of John born in Transylvania 1443, succeeded I 1458, crowned in 1464, after he ha nearly to the walls of Vienna, and co emperor to recognize him, became kir
mia 1469, conquered Austria 1485, die

MATHIAS, Thomas James, a wr department of polite literature and cri
became a fellow of Trinity College, Ca 1776, and died at Naples 1835. Be Pursuits of Literature,' and other pub
English, he is the author of several wo
ian, which he wrote with great facility.

MATHILDA, MATHILDE. See M

MATHON-DE-LA-COUR, James mathematician and experimental 1712-1790. His son, Charles Joseph and miscellan. wr., b. 1738, exec. at L

MATIGNON, James Goyon De, a France, distinguished at the battles Rocheabeille, and Montcontour. He the first to recognize Henry of Navar death of Henry III., and officiated as his coronation, 1525-1597.

MATILDA. The queens and princ name are—1. Saint Matilda, wife o
Fowler, and queen of Germany, di Matilda, countess of Tuscany, born ceeded her father, Boniface III., 10 successively Godfrey Le Bossu, son of Lorraine, and Guelph, son of the duke died 1115. This princess is remarkabl for her devotion to the papacy, which a with vast possessions, and thereby laid tion of long-continued wars between th

the emperors. 3. MATILDA, wife of William the Conqueror, daughter of Baldwin V., count of Flanders, and of Adela, princess of France, married to the duke of Normandy 1054, crowned queen of England 1068, died 1083. She had eleven children, the best known of whom are—Robert, William Rufus, and Henry Beanfort. 4. SAINT MATILDA, daughter of Malcolm king of Scotland, and queen consort of Henry I. of England, to whom she was married in 1100, died 1118. 5. MATILDA, or MAUD, daughter of the latter, born 1100, was married to Henry V., emperor of Germany, 1111, Henry dying in 1125, she was united two years afterwards to Geoffrey Plantagenet, earl of Anjou, and in 1135 succeeded to the throne of England by the death of her father. She was crowned, after vanquishing her rival Stephen, 1141, but afterwards suffered a reverse, and took refuge in France, where she died 1167. After the death of Stephen, her son by Geoffrey Plantagenet, succeeded as Henry II. 6. MATILDA, countess of Angouleme and la Marche, flourished 1179-1233. 7. MATILDA CAROLINE, daughter of Frederick Louis, prince of Wales, granddaughter of the princess Sophia of Zell, and sister of George III., born 1751, married to Christiern VII., and became queen of Denmark in the year of his succession 1766, divorced upon a charge of adultery with Count Struensée, 1772, died, after much suffering, in the twenty-fourth year of her age, 1775.

MATSKO, J. M., a Hungarian astron., 1721-96.

MATSYS, or MESSIS, QUINTIN, a Flemish painter, known as 'the blacksmith of Antwerp,' having been originally a blacksmith or farrier, was born in 1460. He is the subject of an interesting love story which relates that he fell in love with the daughter of an artist, whose hand was only to be obtained by a master of the same profession; died 1529. He had a son, named JOHN, who painted in the same style.

MATTATHIAS. See MACCABÆUS.

MATTEI, L., an Italian poet, 1622-1705.

MATTEIS, P. DE, a pain. of Naples, 1662-1728.

MATTHÆI, C. F., a Pruss. savant, 1744-1811.

MATTHÆUS, A., a Dutch jurisct., 1635-1710.

MATTHESON, J., a Dutch music., 1681-1764.

MATTHEW, the writer of the gospel so called, was a publican or collector of the taxes imposed by the Romans, who became one of the twelve apostles. He wrote his gospel from 30 to 40 years after Christ, some writers say in the Hebrew or Syriac. The probability is, that one was written in Hebrew, A.D. 37 or 38, and another in Greek for the Gentiles 61. Tradition states that he died in Ethiopia. He is sometimes called Levi.

MATTHEW, the first of the name, duke of Lorraine, and a companion-in-arms of Frederick Barbarossa, reigned 1139-1176. The second, dates 1220-1251.

MATTHEW, TOBIAS, successively bishop of Durham, and archbishop of York, distinguished for his learning and virtues, was born in Bristol 1546, died 1628. His son, of the same name, was a courtier, accomplished as an artist and man of letters, and acted the part of a Jesuit spy, 1578-1655.

MATTHEW OF WESTMINSTER, one of the most venerable, and most scrupulously accurate fathers of English history, was a Benedictine monk of the Abbey of Westminster, and lived at an uncertain period in the 14th century. His history modelled on the style of Matthew Paris, extended to 1307, and was continued seventy years later by another hand.

MATHEWS, CHARLES, an English comedian, with powers of mimicry never excelled, was born in 1776. His talents were various, and he had the rare capacity of creating characters out of slender materials given by the writers of his entertainments, which he denominated 'Mathews at Home.' To these monologues the comedian resorted, in the first instance, to occupy the intervals that occurred between his stage-engagements; but they proved so successful as to command ultimately his undivided attention. He died in 1837. [J.A.H.]

MATTHEWS, T., an English admiral, d. 1751.

MATTHIAS, supposed to have been one of the seventy disciples, and the one chosen by lot to fill the place of Judas as an apostle, is said to have preached in Cappadocia, and to have died there. His history is uncertain.

MATTHIAS, the name of several high priests of the Jews, commencement of the Christian era.

MATTHIEU, P., a French histor., 1563-1621.

MATTHISSON, FREDERIC VON, a lyric poet of Saxony, author of the 'Adelaide,' the music to which was composed by Beethoven, 1761-1831.

MATTIOLI, L., an Italian painter, 1662-1741.

MATTIOLI, P. A., an Ital. naturalist, 1500-77.

MATTOCKS, ISABELLA, an actress, 1746-1826.

MATURIN, CHARLES ROBERT, descended from a French family, who fled their country on the revocation of the edict of Nantes, was born in Dublin, 1782. He was educated for the church, in which he became a curate, and wrote some discourses directed against the errors of Rome. He acquired somewhat more celebrity, however, as a novelist and writer for the stage, and is said to have been an eloquent preacher, died 1825.

MATURIN, HENRY, an Irish clergyman, author of several tragedies and novels, 1772-1842.

MATURINO, an Italian painter, died 1527.

MATY, MATTHEW, a Dutch physician, settled in England, known as a miscellaneous writer and librarian to the British Museum, born about 1718, died 1776. His son, PAUL HENRY, one of the librarians of the British Museum, and secretary to the Royal Society, 1745-1787.

MAUBURNE, J., a Flem. ascetic, 1460-1502.

MAUCROIX, F. DE, a Fr. transla., 1619-1708.

MAUDUIT, A. R., a Fr. mathema., 1731-1815.

MAUDUIT, ISRAEL, son of a dissenting minister, known as a political wr., London, 1708-87.

MAUDUIT, M., a Fr. theologian, 1644-1709.

MAUGARD, A., a French author, 1739-1817.

MAULEON, A. DE, a Fr. historian, died 1653.

MAUNDREL, H., a cel. traveller, date 1697.

MAUNOIR, P. J., a French theolog., 1606-83.

MAUPEOU, RENE CHARLES DE, born in Paris 1688, became vice-chancellor in 1763, d. 1775.

MAUPEOU, RENE NICOLAS CHARLES AUGUSTIN DE, son of the preceding, was born 1714, and became chancellor of France 1768. His character was that of a low and corrupt intriguer, and he preserved his influence with Louis XV., by paying the most servile court to the king's mistress, Dubarry. In 1771 he banished the parliament of Paris, and substituted a royal council for it, called in derision 'the Maupeou parliament.' He was exiled to his own estates on the recall of the parliament by Louis XVI., 1774, and died peaceably in 1792. His last act was a gift of 800,000 francs to the nation. [E.R.]

MAUPERCHE, H., a French painter, 1606-86.

MAUPERTIUS, P. L., Moreau De, one of the most celebrated mathematicians and astronomers of France, 1698-1759.

MAUR, St., a French Benedictine of the 6th century, whose name was adopted by a congregation of religious persons in the period between 1618 and 1627. This order soon acquired authority over more than a hundred religious houses, and is famous for the number of learned men it has produced.

MAURAND, Peter, a leader of the Albigenses in the 13th century, born 1199.

MAUREPAS, Jean Frederic Philippeaux, Count De, a French statesman, born 1701, flourished at the court of Louis XIV., from 1715 to 1749, when he was banished by the intrigues of Madame de Pompadour. He was recalled to the ministry by Louis XVI., in 1774, and it was by his advice that the French government aided the Americans in their war of independence; d. 1781.

MAURICE, elector of Saxony, celebrated as the founder of German protestantism, born 1521; killed in battle 1553.

MAURICE, A., a Swiss minister, 17th century.

MAURICE, F. W., a Swiss agricul., 1750-1826.

MAURICE of Nassau, prince of Orange, one of the founders of the Dutch republic, was the son of William I., prince of Orange, and was about eighteen years of age when the latter was assassinated in 1584. It is explained in the article William how the revolt of the Netherlands against Spain was occasioned by the resolve of Philip to domineer over the protestant freedom of the country by the introduction of the inquisition. It is sufficient to add here, that the death of the stadtholder was followed by the re-annexation of the southern provinces to the Spanish crown, while the northern raised Maurice to the stadtholdership, and refused the treacherous peace that was offered to them by the duke of Parma. From his accession to power in 1584 till 1609, Maurice continued the war of independence, the commanders opposed to him being Count Mansfeldt, the duke of Parma, the archduke Albert, or, strictly speaking, Albert's wife, Isabella, ('the only man in her family'), and last of all Spinola. After the capture of Ostend on the one side, and the strong fortress of Sluys on the other, and repeated proofs that, in the persons of Maurice and Spinola, two of the greatest masters of war were opposed to each other, Spain offered to treat with the united provinces on the basis of their independence, and in 1609 a truce of twelve years was agreed upon. In this interval the Dutch republic made immense progress, but all the fruits of liberty were distasteful to Maurice, whose tendencies were to absolute authority, supported by his religious zeal for the strictest form of Calvinism. Accordingly, in the Arminian controversy it suited his purpose to favour Gomarus, and in 1618, the synod of Dort being convened, which determined in favour of 'Predestination,' he arrested the chiefs of the opposite party, and sent Barneveldt statesman, to the block, while Led the rack by stabbing himself, an Grotius was consigned to perpetual The remainder of Maurice's life w Neophyte of blood deserved. Th Barneveldt stirred up popular com venge the death of their aged father him to the scaffold in 1623. In truce with Spain had expired, and S the war with such superior strength pelled Maurice, weakened by inte to act on the defensive. He now mortifications, and died at the Hag was invested by the enemy, in 162 conduct of the war to his brother Frederick, whom he advised with to recall the Arminians.

MAURICE, Thomas, an Orient historian, was descended from a res family, and was born at Hertford, a minister of the Church of Engl tant-librarian at the British Muse died 1824. His principal works history and antiquities of Hindostan.

MAURISIO, G., an Italian chron

MAURUS, H., an Ital. ecclesiast

MAURUS, T., a Roman poet, 1st

MAURY, Jean Siffrein, a Fr political orator and literateur, was family in 1746, and was distinguish quence as a preacher and eulogist be lution. In 1789 he was sent t general as deputy for the clergy of took part with the noblesse and church against Mirabeau. In 179 Rome, and in 1794 was made a card he returned to Paris, and having ten mission to Napoleon, became, fou wards, archbishop of Paris. He safety in Rome on the fall of the em and died there 1817.

MAUSSAC, P. J. De, a Fre and classical critic, 1590-1650.

MAUVILLON, Eleazar, an Its secretary to Frederick Augustus, ki 1712-1779. His son, James, an hi and friend of Mirabeau, 1743-1794.

MAVOR, William Fordyce clergyman of the Church of Engl many works, the subjects of which to the education of youth, 1758-183

MAWE, Joseph, a master of t mineralogy and conchology, author on Diamonds and Precious Stones,' sons on Mineralogy and Geology,' System of Conchology,' &c., b. abt.

MAXENTIUS, Marcus Aure ius, one of six contemporary empe reigned 306-312.

MAXIMIANUS, Galerius shepherd of Dacia, who became e East, 305-311.

MAXIMIANUS, Marcus Aure ius Herculius, a Roman soldier colleague of Diocletian in the em endeavoured to murder his rival C whom he had given his daughter Fa riage, and being frustrated by the latter, strangled himself 310. He was the father and contemporary of Maxentius.

MAXIMILIAN, a saint, martyred 295.

MAXIMILIAN I., emperor of Germany, son of the emperor Frederic III., and of Eleonora of Portugal was born 1459. He first became an independent prince by his marriage with Mary of Burgundy, the daughter of Charles Le Téméraire who was killed 1477. This match involved him in a war with Louis XI., king of France, in which he was successful, though he was defeated at a later period by the Milanese. In 1486 Maximilian was elected king of the Romans, in 1493 emperor. He died in 1516, and was succeeded by his grandson Charles V. MAXIMILIAN II., son of Ferdinand I., was born at Vienna 1527, elected king of the Romans 1562, and succeeded his father as king of Hungary and Bohemia, and emperor of Germany 1564. Died 1576.

MAXIMILIAN, a duke of Milan, 16th cent.

MAXIMILIAN, the name of three sovereign princes of Bavaria. 1. EMMANUEL MAXIMILIAN, duke and elector, known to history from 1685 to his death in 1726. 2. LEOPOLD MAXIMILIAN, duke and elector, succeeded 1746, died 1777. 3. MAXIMILIAN JOSEPH, king of Bavaria, born 1756, crowned 1799, married his daughter to Eugene Beauharnais, son of Josephine, and had his duchy raised to a kingdom 1806, joined the league against France 1813. Died 1825.

MAXIMINUS, CAIUS JULIUS VERUS, a herdsman of Thrace, born of Gothic parents, who became emperor of Rome 235, killed by his troops 238.

MAXIMINUS, CAIUS GALERIUS VALERIUS, an Illyrian peasant, known by the name of DAIA, or DAZA, who was named Cæsar by the influence of his uncle Galerius 305, and proclaimed emperor when five others had already assumed the purple 308, poisoned himself after his defeat by Licinius 313.

MAXIMUS, CLODIUS PUPIENUS, a Roman general, proclaimed emperor by the senate along with Decimus Cælius Balbinus, in opposition to Maximinus, 237, killed along with Balbinus 238.

MAXIMUS, MAGNUS, a Roman soldier, proclaimed emperor in Britain, and afterwards acknowledged in Gaul and all the West 383, k. 388.

MAXIMUS, PETRONIUS, a noble Roman who became emperor under peculiar and tragical circumstances in 455, after he had been three times Prætorian præfect of Italy, and twice consul. In the year mentioned, Valentinian III. having committed an outrage upon the wife of Maximus, was assassinated at his instigation, and the latter appointed his successor by the unanimous voice of the Roman people. In less than three months afterwards he was murdered in the streets for attempting to fly on the appearance of the fleet of Genseric, king of the Vandals. [E.R.]

MAXIMUS, ST., the first of the name, an apostle of Lombard, and bishop of Turin, 5th century. The second, a theological writer, died 662.

MAXIMUS THE CYNIC, a pagan theurgist, confidant of the emperor Julian, 4th century.

MAXIMUS THE GREEK, an ecclesiastical savant, died at Moscow 15th century.

MAXIMUS OF TURIN, a bp. of that see, 5th c.

MAXIMUS OF TYRE, a Phœnician philosopher, who flourished at Athens in the 2d century.

MAXWELL, SIR M., a naval comman., d. 1831.

MAXWELL, ROBERT, Lord, one of the lords of the regency for James V. of Scotland, d. 1546.

MAXWELL, W. H., a lively English novelist, author of 'Wild Sports of the West,' &c., d. 1851.

MAY, LOUIS DU, a French historian, 17th ct.

MAY, THOMAS, a republican poet and historian of the parliament of England, 1594-1650.

MAYENNE, CHARLES OF LORRAINE, duke of, son of Francis, duke of Guise, a famous French commander in the interest of the catholics, 1554-1611. His son, HENRY, chamberlain of France, and governor of Guienne, born 1578, killed at the siege of Montauban, 1621.

MAYER, ANDREW, a Germ. astron., 1716-82.

MAYER, C., a Jesuit and astronomer, 1719-83.

MAYER, J. C. A., a Prussian anat., 1747-1801.

MAYER, J. F., a German theolog., 1650-1712.

MAYER, TOBIAS, a German astron., 1723-62.

MAYET, S., a German writer, 1751-1825.

MAYNARD, F., a French poet, 1582-1646.

MAYNARD, SIR JOHN, a lawyer and member of parliament, one of the managers of the trials of the earl of Strafford and Archbishop Laud, 1602-90.

MAYNE, JASPER, an eminent clergyman, who amused himself as a wit and playwright, d. 1672.

MAYNE, JOHN, a Scotch poet, died 1836.

MAYNO, J. B., a Spanish artist, 1594-1654.

MAYNWARING, ARTHUR, a political and miscellaneous writer, time of William III., 1668-1712.

MAYO, HERBERT, M.D., an English physiologist, died 1852.

MAYOR, THOMAS, a Spanish friar, 17th cent.

MAYOW, JOHN, a physician and physiological writer, author of works on respiration and the muscular motion of animal bodies, 1645-1679.

MAYR, G., a German Hebraist, 1565-1623.

MAYR, J. DE, a German adventurer, 1716-59.

MAYRE, J., a Jesuit and poet, 1628-1694.

MAZARIN, JULIUS, an ecclesiastic and statesman, was born at Piscina, in the Abruzzi, in the year 1602. He was educated for the church, and in 1641 received a cardinal's hat. His name is conspicuous in the history of Europe as prime minister of France in the middle of the seventeenth century. But he merely occupied a place created by the powerful genius of Richelieu, who in crushing the aristocracy, left to whoever should be prime minister of France during the minority of Louis XIV., one of the most important positions in Europe. Mazarin had to support the crown and the cause of Anne of Austria, during the miserable war of the Fronde, and he was at one juncture obliged to flee for personal safety. Had he been even as able a man as his predecessor, it could not have been expected that he should govern as a native Frenchman could, and perhaps nothing better proves how effectively Richelieu had subdued the discordant elements in France, than that an Italian should be able to govern the country. Mazarin died on the 9th of March, 1661. [J.H.B.]

MAZDAK, a Persian communist, who commenced his agitation about 501, and was put to death after making a convert of the king Khobad.

MAZEAS, J. M., a Fr. mathemat., 1716-1801.

MAZELINE, P., a French sculptor, 1632-1708.

MAZEPPA, JOHN, the famous hetman of the Cossacks, whose name has been rendered familiar as one of Byron's heroes, was a native of the palatinate of Podolia, and for some time a page at the court of John Casimir. Being discovered in an intrigue with the wife of a Polish gentleman, the latter bound him on the back of one of the wild horses of the Ukraine, which carried him to the country of the Cossacks, with whom he remained, and in 1687 became their chief commander. He was a favourite of Peter the Great, who gave him the title of prince, but growing tired of the Russian yoke, Mazeppa allied himself with Charles XII. of Sweden, and advised him to fight the disastrous battle of Pultowa. After his defeat he retired to Wallachia, and thence to Bender, where he d. 1709.

MAZET, ANDREW, a Fr. physician, 1793-1821.

MAZO-MARTINEZ, J. B. DEL, paint. to Philip IV. of Spain, and pupil of Velasquez, died 1687.

MAZOIS, F., a French architect, 1783-1827.

MAZURE, F. A. J., a Fr. histor., 1776-1828.

MAZZA, ANDREW, an Ital. savant, 1724-1797.

MAZZA, ANGELO, an Italian poet, 1741-1817.

MAZZHINGI, JOSEPH, Count, an eminent opera composer, descended from a family of Tuscany, but born of an English mother in England, 1765, died at Bath 1844.

MAZZOCCHI, A. S., an It. antiq., 1684-1771.

MAZZUCCHELLI, THE COUNT GIAMMARIA, an Italian librarian, known as a literary biographer and writer on antiquity, 1707-1765.

MAZZUCCHELLI, THE ABBE P., a philologist and antiquarian of Milan, flourished 1762-1829.

MAZZUCCHELLI, THE CHEVALIER PIER FRANCESCO, called Il Morazzone, an Italian painter in the style of Tintoretto, 1571-1626.

MAZZUOLI, FRANCESCO, a celebrated Italian painter, called PARMIZIANO, or the Parmesian, from his native city, 1503-1540. His cousin and scholar, GIROLAMO, died about 1590.

MAZZUOLI, J., a painter of Ferrara, d. 1589.

MEAD, RICHARD, physician to George II., known as a professional writer, 1678-1754.

MEADOWCOURT, RICHARD, a divine and critic, author of Notes on Milton, 1697-1769.

MEARA. See O'MEARA.

MEARES, J., an English navigator in 1788-89.

MECHAIN, PIERRE FRANCIS ANDRE, a dist. French astronomer and mathematician, 1774-1805.

MEDARD, ST., a Fr. prelate, flour. 457-545.

MEDE, JOSEPH, a English divine, 1586-1638.

MEDER, P. J., a Russian mineralog., 1763-1826.

MEDICI. The illustrious Florentine family of this name begins with SALVESTRO, who enjoyed the rank of gonfalonier from 1378 to his banishment in 1381. JOHN, his son and successor, distinguished for his commercial enterprise, and for promoting the interests of the republic, flourished 1860-1428. COSMO, one of the sons of the latter, born in 1389, and known as 'the father of his country,' acquired immense wealth and influence, and laid the foundation of his reputation by the munificent patronage of letters, and the conjunction of consummate statesmanship with his commercial enterprise. Many of the first Tuscan families combined against him, but he overcame all rivalry, and was for thirty-four years the sole arbitrator of the republic, and the adviser of the sovereign houses of Italy; died 1464. PETER I., his son and successor, was born 1414, and became the victim of a revolt in 1469. LORENZO THE MAGNIFICENT, son and successor of Peter, was born 1448, and governed the state in conj[illegible] with his brother Julian, till the latter was sinated by the Pazzi in 1478. Escapin[illegible] this massacre he sustained a war with Fe[illegible] of Naples, with whom he signed a definitive[illegible] in 1480. He then devoted himself to th[illegible] secution of plans for the advancement of l[illegible] and the arts, revived the Academy of Pisa, [illegible] another at Florence, collected a vast tre[illegible] literature, and founded a gallery of art, i[illegible] the taste of Michelangelo was formed u[illegible] patronage. He died universally beloved a[illegible] oured, in the zenith of his renown 1492. [illegible] has been written by ROSCOE. He had th[illegible] John, who became pope, (see LEO X.), and Peter. The latter, PETER II., succeed[illegible] enzo, and was deprived of his estates w[illegible] French invaded Italy in 1494. He finis[illegible] career in the service of France, and was [illegible] 1504, leaving two sons, Lorenzo and Cosm[illegible] LIAN II., brother and successor of Peter, a[illegible] in favour of Lorenzo 1513, and became du[illegible] mours by his marriage with the annt of F[illegible] He died 1516. LORENZO II., eldest son [illegible] II., came to power by the abdication of h[illegible] and governed under the influence of Leo [illegible] invested him with the duchy of Urbino. [illegible] 1519, leaving an only daughter. (See MA[illegible] MEDICIS). After some reverses we find th[illegible] re-established in the sovereignty of Flore[illegible] the influence of Charles V., with the title [illegible] The first was ALEXANDER, proclaimed du[illegible] stabbed by his relative Lorenzino, after [illegible] his cousin Hippolytus 1537. LORENZIN[illegible] derer of Alexander, was assassinated at V[illegible] order of Cosmo I., 1548. (See CATHERI[illegible] MEDICI). COSMO I., called 'The Great,' [illegible] Florence, and grand duke of Tuscany, was [illegible] of John the Invincible, descended from L[illegible] and was born 1519. He was raised to po[illegible] the influence of Charles V., and abdicated [illegible] vour of his son 1564. In 1569 he became [illegible] duke of Tuscany, and died 1574. F[illegible] MARIA, son and successor of Cosmo, flou[illegible] 1541-1587. FERDINAND I., brother and [illegible] sor of the latter, was also cardinal and grand[illegible] of Tuscany, 1551-1609. COSMO II., son and [illegible] cessor of Ferdinand, 1590-1621. FERDINAND [illegible] son and successor of Cosmo II., 1610-[illegible] COSMO III., son and successor of Ferdinand [illegible] 1642-1723. JOHN GASTON, son and succes[illegible] the latter, was the last of the Medici who reig[illegible] over Tuscany, being compelled to abdicate [illegible] make way for Francis II., duke of Lorraine, by [illegible] great powers. He flourished 1671-1737. [illegible] daughter, ANNE, wife of John William, [illegible] Palatine, was the last of the family. She d. 17[illegible]

MEDICI, The CHEVALIER DON LUIGI [illegible] statesman of Naples, was born 1754, and in 17[illegible] became director of the police. From this post h[illegible] made his way to the ministry, and in the time [illegible] Joseph Buonaparte, followed the fortunes of th[illegible] Bourbons. The arrest of Murat, the public [illegible] of Naples, and the struggles with the Carbo[illegible] were among the circumstances in which he [illegible] came a distinguished actor. In 1818 he became [illegible] a fugitive at Rome, but was in power again [illegible] 1824, and assisted in delivering the kingdom fr[illegible] the Austrian occupation. Died 1830.

, a Bavar. botanist, 1736-1808.
a Flemish painter, 1660-1711.
, a Span. ecclesiastic, d. 1556.
a portrait painter, 1659-1711.
, a Spanish friar, 16th cent.
a Span. mathemat., 16th ct.
'. De, a Span. poet, 17th cent.
IIA, Gaspard Alonzo Pe-
duke of, governor of Anda-f Philip IV., noted for his at-elf independent in 1640. For see Guzman.
an Arabian savant, died 1193.
ish painter, 1599-1644.
e and class. scholar, 1745-1817.
EER, John Van De, called painter of sea-pieces, land-1627-1691. Another painter called 'the Younger,' and fal scenes, 1665-1698.
, a Gr. historian, 3d cent. B.C.
F., a Ger. theologian, d. 1778.
Germ. philologist, 1555-1616.
LIAM Alexander De, de-
h family who went into France
lingnished as an elegant mis-21-1766.
, born in 1765 at Cavalla, in ean Turkey which was for-
He entered the Turkish army, against the French. He rose ry rank and political impor-
y; and at length in 1806 he of pacha of Egypt from the He finally broke the power and by treacherously inviting friends, he obtained an oppormercilessly availed himself, to these formidable cavaliers in on by his sons several cam-
the sultan against the Wahaia; and he afterwards sent on, Ibrahim Pacha, to the portant aid to the Turks in dependence. In 1830 he obltan the government of the l he next endeavoured to make yria, which Sultan Mahomed
He sent a large army to that nd he was thereupon declared and the Turkish armies were Mehemet Ali's troops had been European officers, and they every encounter. Peace was owerful viceroy of Egypt and ign in 1833, by the interven-tates of Europe. Hostilities ween them in 1839; and, as n forces were uniformly vic-rkish. The armed interposi-and the capture of Acre and on the Syrian coast by our ance of Admiral Napier, comto come to terms again with obliged to give up Syria; but lic of Egypt was secured to .—Mehemet Ali was free from earnest admirer of European strove to introduce it among his Egyptian subjects. He showed a rare degree of high-mindedness and generosity in 1840, by allowing the English mails and travellers to and from India, to pass unmolested as usual through his dominions, at the very time our fleet were blockading his capital, Alexandria, and were destroying his fortresses and garrisons in Syria. Mehemet Ali died in 1848. [E.S.C.]

MEHEMET-EFFENDI, a Turkish statesman, known as plenipotentiary of the Sublime Porte at the treaty of Passarovitz 1718, and ambassador to France 1720. He was exiled after the deposition of Achmet III., 1730. His son, Said, ambassador to France in 1742, introduced the printing press, which he established at Scutari.

MEHUL, S. H., a Fr. composer, 1763-1817.

MEHUS, L., an Italian philologist, died 1791.

MEIBOM, or MEIBOMIUS, the name of several learned Germans:—1. John Henry, a publicist and annalist, 1555-1625. 2. His son, of the same names, a physician and professional writer, 1590-1655. 3. Henry, son of the latter, a physician and historian, 1638-1700. 4. Mark, a relative of the preceding, an antiquar. and Hebraist, 1630-1711.

MEIER, J., a Prussian philologist, 1661-1732.

MEIGRET, L., a Fr. grammarian, born 1510.

MEINER, J. W., a Bavar. philologist, 1723-89.

MEINERS, C., a Germ. historian, 1747-1810.

MEINTEL, J. G., a Ger. theologian, 1695-1775.

MEISNER, B., a German divine, 1587-1626.

MEISSNER, A. T., a Ger. novelist, 1753-1807.

MELA, Pomponius, a Roman geographer, 1st c.

MELANCHTHON, Philip, was born at Bretheim, in the lower Palatinate, in 1497. His father was an armourer, and his original German name was Schwartzerd, which, in imitation of Reuchlin and other learned men, he Grecized into Melanchthon, or as he used, especially in his latter days, to spell it, Melanthon. Both names denote 'black earth.' After having studied at Pfortzheim for two years, Philip removed to Heidelberg, where he became bachelor of arts; and on being refused a mastership, on account of his youth, he repaired to Tübingen, where he became a lecturer. In 1518 he received the high encomium of Erasmus, and, at the instigation of Luther and Reuchlin, he was the same year invited by Frederick, elector of Saxony, to fill the chair of Greek in the recently founded University of Wittemberg. At this seat of learning he was at once under the mighty spirit and influence of his intrepid colleague Luther. His agency in the great Reformation has been overshadowed by that of Luther, but he was ever active and industrious in his own humble and unostentatious mode. In 1519 he accompanied Luther to Leipzig, in order to dispute with Eckius, and in 1521 he published his famous Loci Communes, a treatise which in his own lifetime went through sixty editions. In 1520 he married the daughter of one of the burgomasters of Wittemberg, and by her had two sons and two daughters. During the progress of the Reformation he visited many cities, and was active in patronising seminaries of learning. Nor was his pen idle in the cause; and though his compositions had not the overwhelming torrent of Luther's rhetoric, yet their quiet, elegant, and self-possessed tone were not the less useful in aiding the emancipation and progress of Germany. He was as earnest as Luther to free theology from scholastic subtleties. There is no doubt that many of the plans carried out by the Reformers were the result of Melanchthon's wise suggestions. His Greek scholarship was also of continued and inestimable advantage to Luther in his work of translating the Bible. His own commentaries also show how his erudition qualified him to be a lucid, accurate, and elegant expositor. In 1530 Melanchthon was appointed to draw up the general Confession which was presented to the emperor at Augsburg, and he also wrote the Apology for it. He was invited to dispute with the Sorbonne in 1535, but refused this invitation, as well as a similar and subsequent one from England. After Luther's death, Melanchthon was often sadly perplexed and harassed. The famous measure of the Interim did not find him disinclined to look upon it with a kindly eye. Men of bolder character rallied him on his irresoluteness, and pointed to his failures at Worms, Ratisbon, and Bonn. His orthodoxy was suspected, and he was blamed for the approximation of his views on the Lord's Supper to those of the Swiss Reformers. These rough and unceremonious assaults often plunged him into grief. Melanchthon died at Wittemberg, 19th April, 1568, aged sixty-three. The amiability, gentleness, and benignant purity of Melanchthon; his zeal, learning, and ingenuity, have placed him next to Luther as an agent in the work of the Reformation. He sometimes fretted at Luther's overbearing vehemence, but he venerated its grounds; and Luther, though he might doubt the propriety of Philip's procedure in some cases, and stigmatize it as mere expediency, was won by his gentle demeanour and unquestioned sincerity. These qualities, like the 'still small voice,' often commended the new doctrine where the whirlwind and thunder had only produced terror and revulsion. Melanchthon wrote on many topics besides theology, such as commentaries on various Greek and Latin classics, and some historical and philosophical treatises. His works were published at Wittemberg in 4 vols. folio, in 1562 and subsequent years, and were reprinted several times. There had been a previous edition printed at Basel in 1541.

[House of Melanchthon.]

has been in course of preparation a for many years under the editorial c neider and Bindseil. The general Reformatorum, and eighteen quarto already appeared.

MELANDERHIELM, Daniel,
metrician and astronomer, 1726-181

MELANTHUS, a Greek painter,

MELBOURNE, William La
the Whig statesman whose name a familiar to the present generation 1779, and commenced his political ment in 1805. The same year h
Lady Caroline Ponsonby, known t
Lady Caroline Lamb, whose tast genial with his own, and who sha
the classical studies in which th proficient. In 1827 he became Ireland, and the next year, succ father's title, entered the House 1830 he joined the administration as home secretary, and in Marc ceeded him as premier. From the same year to the spring of 1835, planted by the duke of Wellington Peel, but at the latter period retur and retained the premiership, with of a brief retirement in 1839, till t public life in 1841. Great differen prevails as to the statesmanship
bourne, but he held office during th period when the Reform Bill was in it required no mean talents, howe
ported by party, to compete with suc
as Sir Robert Peel during subsequer was an accomplished gentleman, an panion, and a finished speaker Die

MELCHTHAL, Arnold of. S
RIED.

MELDOLA, Dr. Raphael, pr
Jewish rabbis in England, celebrate gian and philosopher, died 1828.

MELEAGER, a Gr. epigrammati

MELEAGER, one of the generals who obtained Lydia on the division slain by order of Perdicas, B.C. 323.

MELENDEZ-VALDEZ, Jean
of the most celeb. lyric poets of Spai

MELETIUS, an Egyptian prelate

MELETIUS, a Greek geographer,

MELFORT, Duke De. See De

MELI, Giovanni, a Sicilian poet

MELISSINO, a Russian officer,

MELISSUS, an Eleatic philosoph

MELISSUS, Paul, a German po

MELITO, St., a bishop of Sardis,

MELITUS, a Greek orator and one of the principal accusers of Socr

MELIUS, Spurius, a Rom. knigh

MELLAN, C., a French designer,

MELLO, P. De, a Portug. statesm

MELLON, Harriet, a country was introduced on the London sta Brinsley Sheridan, and became cele marriage in 1814 with Thomas Co wealthy banker, and in 1827 with th Albans. She died in 1837, leaving t immense property to the granddaugh

d youngest daughter of Sir Francis known as Miss Burdett Coutts.

H, WILLIAM, a learned bencher of , chiefly remembered as the author of ork entitled 'The Great Importance
s Life,' 1666-1743. His son, of the classical transl. and poet, 1710-99.

), F., an Italian painter, 15th cent.

SIR JAMES, a Scottish statesman
, attached to the person of Mary
'Memoirs,' pub. in 1683, 1530-1606.

E, ANDREW, was the youngest of Richard Melville of Baldovy, near d was born on the 1st August, 1545.
wo years old he lost his father, who
the battle of Pinkie, but his eldest n affectionate charge of him. Placed grammar school of Montrose, where progress, especially in Latin, he eny's College, St. Andrews, in 1559, in year. Having finished the usual dy, he left the university in 1564, guished reputation, departed to the ended for two years the university of s then appointed a regent in the col-rceon, when he was only twenty-one

Leaving the place after a siege, he witzerland in a state of great fatigue
on, and on arriving at Geneva, ob-ir of humanity in its academy. On Scotland in July, 1574, he was im-sen principal of Glasgow college by Assembly. His zeal, assiduity, and gh position, were of vast profit to the minary. In 1580, he was translated ality of St. Mary's College, St. An-his labours were very abundant in f academic training and discipline.
tion was also, and chiefly, devoted to affairs, and he heartily and vigorously is convictions. On the subject of ment his views were strictly presby-
e establishment of this form of ecministration in Scotland was mainly exertions and influence. Being the General Assembly, which met at in 1582, he proceeded with an act of lefiance of a royal message to desist.
the next meeting of Assembly, he in-ly against the tyrannous measures of l against those who had brought into
e 'bludie gullie' of absolute power.
charge led to a citation before the
for high treason, and though the t proved, he was sentenced to im-Apprehensive that his life was really set out for London, and did not rerth till the faction of Arran had been t length he took his former place in and continued in hearty warfare for f the church. For his share in the nson, the king dismissed him from y, and charged him to confine him-he Water of Tay. The suspension, only brief. On the arrival of James from Denmark, Melville pronounced,
is published, a Latin poem of high
'Stephaniskion.' In 1590 Melville ector of the university. In 1594 he was again moderator of the General Assembly. There was evidently after this time a strong desire on the part of the king to make the kirk a mere tool of political power, or to restore episcopacy. Melville strenuously resisted every such attempt, whether made in an open or clandestine form. A tumult in Edinburgh was taken advantage of, its ministers were severely dealt with, and by and by Melville was prohibited from attending church courts, and soon after confined within the precincts of his college. After King James's accession to the throne of England, Melville was summoned to London, with several of his brethren, and severely catechised and reprimanded by the royal pedant. Melville enraged the king by some verses he happened to write on the furniture of the royal altar, was found guilty of scandalum magnatum, finally imprisoned in the Tower, and deprived of his principality. At length, after four years' confinement, he was liberated, principally at the request of the duke of Bouillon, who wished him to occupy a chair in the university of Sedan. Melville arrived there in 1611, entered on his work with zeal, boldly refuted the Arminianism of one of his colleagues, and in his seventy-fourth year wrote a beautiful Epithalamium on occasion of the marriage of a daughter of the ducal house. Episcopal government had now been restored in Scotland; but the old man was still such an object of terror that he was not recalled from exile. In 1620 his health, which had been seriously impaired during his incarceration in the Tower, failed him, and he died at Sedan in 1622, at the age of seventy-seven. Melville's Latin poems, such as his 'Carmen Mosis,' and those mentioned already in this article, are classical productions of a high order. He was a scholar and divine also of no common attainments. He was active, cheerful, bold, candid and devout, and his impetuosity often arose to sublimity, when he appeared in excited vindication of his church and country. Dr. M'Crie concludes his two interesting volumes of Melville's life with the declaration:—'I know of no individual, after her Reformer, from whom Scotland has received greater benefits, and to whom she owes a deeper debt of gratitude and respect, than Andrew Melville.' [J.E.]

MELVILLE, HENRY DUNDAS, Lord Viscount, son of Robert Dundas, Lord Arniston, was born in 1740, and joined the administration of Mr. Pitt when he obtained the reins of government, after the death of the marquis of Rockingham. Lord Melville followed the fortunes of his leader, in or out of office, as home secretary, secretary of war, and first lord of the admiralty. He was impeached for neglect of duty in the latter capacity at the instance of Mr. Whitbread in 1805, but acquitted of the charges by his peers. He retired from office, however, and died in privacy 1811.

MELVILLE, R., a Scotch officer, 1723-1809.
MEMMI, S., an Italian painter, 1285-1345.
MEMMO, MARC-ANT., a Ven. doge, 1612-15.
MEMMO, TRIBUNO, a Venetian doge, 979-991.
MEMNON, a king of Æthiopia, age of Troy.
MEMNON, a Persian general, died 333 B.C.
MEMNON, a Greek historian, 1st or 2d cent.
MENA, J. DE, a Spanish poet, 1412-1456.
MENA, P. DE, a Spanish sculptor, 1620-1693.
MENA, P. G. DE, a Spanish painter, 1600-74.

MENAGE, GILLES, a French ecclesiastic, celebrated for his learning and bel-esprit, and called by Bayle 'The Varron of the 17th century,' was born at Angers, 1613, and died at Paris 1692. He was the protégé of Cardinal de Retz, and the companion of the finest spirits of his age. He is the author of classical and philosophical works, poems, &c.

MENAGE, MAT., a Fr. ecclesiastic, 1388-1446.

MENANDER, a celebrated Athenian poet, author of a great number of dramatic works, of which only a few fragments remain extant, 342-299 B.C.

MENARD, CL., a French historian, 1580-1652.

MENARD, F., a Fr. canonical WT., 1570-1623.

MENARD, LEON, a Fr. antiquary, 1706-1767.

MENARD, N. H., a Fr. ecclesiastic, 1585-1644.

MENASSEH, BEN ISRAEL, a learned rabbin of Spain, author of 'The Conciliator,' in which many apparent contradictions in the Sacred Scriptures are harmonised, 1604-1659.

MENDELSSOHN, DR. FELIX BARTHOLDY, was born at Hamburg, on the 3d of February, 1809. His father, who was an eminent merchant, is reported to have said that he was nothing more than the son of one great man and father of another. And this was in a great measure true. The grandfather of the musician was Moses Mendelssohn, who passed the greater part of his early life in making copies of the Bible. The poor copyist, by means of his talent, his indomitable perseverance, and his incredible energy, soon became one of the most illustrious philosophers in Germany. His works, which were devoured with eagerness, soon procured him a large fortune, which, bequeathed to his family, insured them all the luxuries of life, but did not corrupt their native goodness. Before young Felix, the subject of this memoir, was six years old, he gave extraordinary indications of a genius for music. He astonished all Berlin by his precocious intellect, his docility, his obedience, and his eagerness for the acquisition of knowledge of all kinds, but more especially of that art in which he afterwards made himself so consummate a master. At eight years old he became a pupil of Berger on the piano, and of Zelter for composition and harmony. Even at this early age, he read at first sight the most difficult works of Handel, Sebastian Bach, Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven. He afterwards studied the piano under Klein, Hummel, and Moschelles. And he subsequently studied counterpoint under Cherubini, who augured the greatest things of his pupil. Before he was nine years old, his performance on the piano-forte was so astonishing that his friends advised him to play in public; and, in consequence, he made his debut at Berlin in 1819, where his success was most triumphant. At ten years of age he knew all the great works of the masters named above; and at twelve he improvised upon a given theme in a style so masterly, that old Goethe, the poet, shed tears and embraced the young artist. In 1824 he first published his compositions, which were four quartetts and a sonata. In 1827, his opera, Die Hochzeit de Camacho, was performed at Berlin, from which period, up to the day of his death, he produced all sorts of compositions with the most wonderful rapidity, and all perfect in their kind, from the 'Songs without Words,' to duets, songs, piano-forte works, and up to the Oratorio. But all this while Mendelssohn did not devote his time exclusively to the study of music. He was with natural philosophy, was an abl and a proficient in almost all mo With English he was intimately a like all well-informed Germans, he v fond of the works of Shakspeare. tion and profound knowledge of were reflected in the supplemental composed for the 'Midsummer Ni which it is not too much to say t respects worthy to be wedded t poetry which inspired it. This wor in London, in 1830, when Mendels the orchestra. It caused an imm In 1833, Mendelssohn was appoint rector at Dusseldorf, which place years, when he resigned and accep director of the Gewanhouse conc At the musical festival at Dusseld of May, 1836, his grand Oratorio first produced, which marked a history of music. In 1835 he w when he, at the Philharmonic So the performance of his Symphon During one of his visits to Britain, to the West Highlands of Scotlan talized his impressions of those wil islands, lochs, and mountains, by 'The Isles of Fingal.' His last an 'Elijah,' was first produced in this been performed at the Birmingha tival, in August, 1846. It was su formed at Exeter Hall, London, in afterwards at Gloucester Musical same year. While in England, he of an invitation to visit the q occasion he received the most of the esteem in which he was h jesty and her royal Consort. It w gestion of the queen, who furni the theme, that Mendelssohn com tish Overture. Soon after this he w land, to repose from the fatigues while there he heard of the death loved sister, which event preyed har and was the beginning of those finally brought him to an early languishing in grief in Switzerlan first act of an opera, 'Lorelei,' wh other posthumous works, has been his demise. During this period he his medical attendants to abstain labour. He had been afflicted wit paralysis, and his physician fear would prove fatal, but he could n was with him a law of his being could not live and be idle, and t doubt that the labour he imposed had a large share in the cause of Moschelles published in the M Thursday, November 12, the follo account of the last moments o which will appropriately close th of the life of one of the greates ginal musicians that ever lived: felt the first approach of the ultimately terminated his life October (1847). It was an attack nature. From that day until the

anced moments of ease and relapses. During this period he felt sufficiently well to take several carriage airings. On the 28th, when in full convalescence, a second attack occurred, but this was of short duration. He promptly recovered his senses, and his strength returned. Notwithstanding this, he felt severe attacks of headache, and could not sleep for three or four days. During the nights of the 2d and 3d of November his sleep returned, and he slept seven hours consecutively. Upon his awaking on the morning of the 3d, he felt quite well, and his family had sanguine hopes of his recovery. He remained thus during the forenoon; but at two o'clock he had a relapse, and a third attack supervened more violent and more prolonged than any of the former ones. He recovered consciousness but slowly, after bleeding, application of leeches, and vigorous friction. He was attended by Dr. Clarus and Dr. Hammer of Leipzig. Messengers had been sent for Dr. Schönbein of Berlin, whose arrival was waited for with intense anxiety, but he did not come. The night passed in alternations of agitation and tranquillity. Mendelssohn recognized all persons present, but spoke little. On the morning of the 4th his state caused the most vivid inquietude. The directors of the 'Gewandhouse' decided on putting off the concert which was to have taken place that evening. At the second hour the sufferer became insensible, and gave no other signs of life than a strong and equal respiration. All the efforts of the medical men to restore sight and hearing were useless. From six till eight o'clock blisters and violent frictions were exhibited, but without success. In the meantime his features changed with frightful rapidity. At half-past eight his respiration became feebler—it was evident that his end was near. At last, at nine o'clock on the 4th, a lengthened sigh announced that Mendelssohn had rendered up his soul to his Maker. Near his bed were his wife, his brother, the two doctors, Mr. Schleinitz, Mr. David, and myself. All Leipzig is in mourning.' On the afternoon of the 7th of November, 1847, his funeral ceremonies were performed with great pomp in the St. Paul's church at Leipzig, preparatory to the removal of his remains to their last resting-place at Berlin. The works of Mendelssohn, which were published previous to his death, were one opera, four overtures, two symphonies, three quartetts, two quintettes, two sonatas, a concerto for the piano-forte, a psalm, 'Non nobis,' an 'Ave Maria' for eight voices, six books of songs without words, two phantasias, three chorales, and numberless varied themes, songs, duets, capriccios, &c., for the piano-forte, and his two imperishable oratorios 'St. Paul' and 'Elijah.' Among his MSS., many of which have been published since his death, were an overture and symphony, several chorales, the 'Walpurgis Night,' cantatas, an operatta, 'The Son and Stranger,' some sacred pieces, and music adapted to 'Antigone,' and the 'Œdipus Colonnus.' Mendelssohn left behind him a wife and five children. His loss was mourned wherever music was studied, and wherever his works were known. And every hour since his death his greatness is becoming more and more appreciated, and his works bid fair to become what they ought to be, the most prized and popular of all the classical gems of the great masters. [J.M.]

MENDELSSOHN, Moses, a Jewish philosopher and moralist, who holds high rank among the literati of Germany, and has been dignified with the title of the Jewish Socrates, 1729-1786.

MENDEZ, Moses, an English poet, died 1758.

MENDEZ-PINTO, Ferdinand, a Portuguese, who sailed for the Indies in 1537, and being taken by the Moors did not return to his country until 1558. The relation of his adventures is as curious and extravagant as that of the Englishman, Mandeville.

MENDOZA, Antonio Hurtado De, a Portuguese poet, statesman, and member of the inquisition, died 1631. Andreo, a member of the same family, distinguished as a general, 1579-1606.

MENDOZA, B. De, a Span. historian, 16th c.

MENDOZA, Diego Hurtado De, a Spanish diplomatist, historian, and man of letters, 1503-75.

MENDOZA, Inigo Lopez De, first Marquis de Santillana, a dist. poet of Castile, 1398-1458.

MENDOZA, J. G., a Spanish divine, auth. of a Hist. of China, where he was ambassador in 1584.

MENDOZA, P. G. De, cardinal of Sp., 1428-95.

MENEDEMAS, an eleatic philos., 4th cen. B.C.

MENELAUS, a geometr. of Alexandria, 1st c.

MENENIUS-AGRIPPA, See Agrippa.

MENGOLI, P., an Ital. geometrician, 1625-86.

MENGOTTI, F., an Italian engineer, last cent.

MENGOZZI, B., an Ital. composer, 1758-1800.

MENGS, Antony Raphael, an eminent Bohemian painter, born at Aussig 1728, became painter to the king 1746, professor 1754, painter to the king of Spain 1761, and principal of the Academy of St. Luke in Florence 1769. Besides works of art, consisting both of easel pictures and frescoes, he is author of valuable treatises on subjects connected with the principles of painting, and the characters of the great masters. He was an intimate friend of Winckelmann. Died 1779.

MENG-TSEU, a Chinese philosopher, 4th c. B.C.

MENINSKI, Fr. Mesgnien, an Oriental scholar, in the service of the Polish and Austrian governments, 1623-1698.

MENIPPUS, a Phœnician cynic, 4th cent. B.C.

MENIUS, F., a learned Swede, died 1659.

MENJOT, Ant., a Fr. physician, 1615-1696.

MENLOES, D., a Swed. nat. philos., 17th cent.

MENNANDER, C. F., a Swed. prelate, last c.

MENNES, or MENNIS, Sir John, a military and naval commander, and member of the government after the restoration, kn. as a poet, 1598-1671.

MENNO, called Simonis, or Simonson, from his parentage, a famous anabaptist, founder of the Mennonites, in the Low Countries, 1496-1561.

MENOCHIUS, or MENOCHIO, James, an Italian jurisconsult, 1531-1607. His son, John Stephen, a learned Jesuit, author of a Scripture Commentary, &c., 1576-1655.

MENODORUS, an Athenian sculptor, 1st cent.

MENOU, James Francis, Baron De, a French general and deputy of the noblesse to the states-general, 1750-1810.

MENSCHIKOFF, Alexander, the son of a Russian peasant, who rose to be a distinguished general and statesman, 1674-1729.

MENTEL, John, the oldest printer of Strasburg, originally a writer and illuminator of MSS., for whom the invention of printing was claimed by his descendant, James Mentel, flourished 1410-1478. The latter, a learned physician, 1597-1671.

MENTZEL, C., a German botanist, 1622-1701.
MENZ, FRED., a Ger. antiquarian, 1680-1749.
MENZEL, FRED. WILLIAM, a traitor to the court of Saxony, where he acted as cabinet secretary, 1726-1796.
MENZINI, B., an Italian poet, 1646-1704.
MENZOCEHI, F., an Ital. painter, 16th cent.
MERANO, F., a Genoese painter, 1620-1657.
MERAT, L. G., a French botanist, 1712-1790.
MERCATI, J. B., an Ital. engraver, 17th cent.
MERCATI, M., an Ital. naturalist, 1541-1593.
MERCATOR, GERARD, a native of Flanders, distinguished as a mathematician and geographer, especially for the method of laying down charts and maps which goes by his name. This plan, useful in navigation, represents the surface of the earth projected on a plane, so that all the meridians and parallels are straight lines, 1512-1594.
MERCATOR, MARIUS, a friend of St. Augustine, known as a controversial writer, 5th century.
MERCATOR, N., a Ger. mathema., died 1687.
MERCIER, BARTHOLOMEW, known in France as the abbé de St. Leger, a miscel. writ., 1734-99.
MERCIER, C., an ascetic writer, died 1680.
MERCIER, C. F. X., a French wr., 1763-1800.
MERCIER, JOHN, a French Hebraist and commentator, died 1572. His son, JOSIAS, a learned critic, died 1626.
MERCIER, L. S., a Fr. politician, 1740-1814.
MERCIER, N., a French grammarian, d. 1657.
MERCIER, OF LA VENDEE, a royalist chief, and camp marshal under the duke d'Artois, 1778-1800.
MERCOEUR, ELIZA, a Fr. poetess, 1809-1835.
MERDDIN, a Welch poet, 6th century.
MERGEY, J. DE, a Fr. commander, 1536-1615.
MERIAN, the name of a family of artists who flourished in Basle, 17th and 18th centuries. MATTHEW, an engraver, 1593-1651. His son, of the same name, also an engraver, 1621-1687. MARIA SIBYLLA, sister of the latter, a painter and naturalist, celebrated for her work on flowers and insects, 1647-1717. This accomplished lady was married to Andrew Graaf, a painter and architect of Nuremberg, by whom she had two daughters, both skilled in drawing, and one of them in the Hebrew language. Another member of the family, JOHN MATTHEW MERIAN, was distinguished as a painter, and died 1716.
MERIAN, J. B., a German philos., 1723-1807.
MERIGHI, R., an Italian poet, 1658-1737.
MERLE, M. DE, a Fr. commander, 1548-1589.
MERLIN, AMBROSE, who has the reputation of an enchanter in the romance of Chivalry, was a British writer, who flourished towards the latter end of the 5th century. He is said to have lived in the court of King Arthur. The work attributed to him is a book of prophecies, which have been illustrated and compared with the English annals by T. Heywood, 1641.
MERLIN, JAMES, a French priest, died 1541.
MERLIN, JOHN JOSEPH, an ingenious foreigner, who long resided in London, and invented several pieces of curious mechanism; among these was an automaton conjuror, the principal object in his exhibition at Clerkenwell, which he entitled 'Merlin's Cave.' Died 1803.
MERLIN, P. A., a Fr. jurisconsult, 1754-1838.
MERLIN-OF-THIONVILLE, A. C., a member of the Fr. assembly and convention, 1762-1833.

MERMET, C., a French poet, 1550-
MERMET, L. F. E., a Fr. author, 1
MERODACH, a king of Babylon, 8t
MEROVEUS, a king of the Franks, MERRET, CHRISTOPHER, a native tershire, known in London as a physici turalist, 1614-1695.
MERRICK, JAMES, a clergyman of of England, chiefly known as a poet, by Bishop Lowth 'one of the best most eminent of scholars,' 1720-1769.
MERRY, ROBERT, a poet and drama
MERSCH, VAN DER, a Flemish of service of France, who became leader riots of Brabant in 1789. He afterw in the interest of the Austrians, and di MERSENNE, or MERSENNUS, French ecclesiastic, celebrated as a mat and philosopher, 1588-1648.
MERULA, G., an Italian savant, 14
MERULA, P., a Dutch historian, 15
MERY, F., a French ecclesiastic, die
MERY, J., a French anatomist, 164
MERY, L., a controversial writer, 17
MERZ, JAMES, a Swiss painter, 178
MERZ, PH. P., a German theologian
MESCHINOT, J., a French poet, 14
MESMER, FREDERICK ANTHONY great promoter of animal magnetism, man physician, born at Mersburg in Su His name belongs to that select class tans,' so called, who have the misfort nounce principles which they do not re stand themselves, but which are yet fo ture, and who get abused beyond measu they point out more than they can eit or support to the satisfaction of sci career of Mesmer is soon related. In attention as a physician was called to t sive movements by which a young l Oesterline was periodically affected, a he published the theory, first suggest case, in a treatise entitled 'De Planetaru A slight verbal inaccuracy in the statem theory may easily make it appear, at firs travagant, but fairly stated it is this:- venly bodies, but especially the sun and upon all the elastic elements; thus, known, they cause and direct the flux of the sea and the atmosphere. The verse, however, is pervaded by an elec subtle than the air, which penetrates to which the nervous systems of all naturally respond as the eye to light, periodical sway of which, the body is affected. Mesmer seems to have cons subtle medium to be one and the sam magnetic element, and consequently to of concentration, transmission, and di cording to the established laws of the m he soon found in practice that he could animal bodies as well as inert matter, ing the same agencies. At this time Hell was professor of astronomy at V Mesmer employed his workmen, and consulted the astronomer himself, to most suitable magnets for his experimen ever their respective shares may have matter, they were shortly at issue befo

fic. Hell claiming the discovery as his own. This led Mesmer to take higher ground, declaring that the magnets were not at all necessary to the effects, but that they resulted from an action that was proper to animal bodies themselves. Disengaged from his adversary by this step in advance, our discoverer memorialised the Academy of Sciences at Paris, the Royal Society of London, and the Academy of Berlin: the two former did not condescend to reply, and the latter in their answer treated him as a visionary. About this time, in 1777, it was alleged that he had performed a cure, almost amounting to the miraculous, upon a Mademoiselle Paradis, who was suffering from gutta serena and convulsive movements of the eyes—the case, however, has been disputed, it being known that the lady was quite blind in 1784; the probability is, that the effects were really produced, but were not permanent. Disregarded by the learned bodies to whom he had addressed himself, and treated as a juggling impostor by his professional brethren, Mesmer removed from Vienna to Paris in 1778, and soon acquired a prodigious popularity by his marvellous cures, and received large sums of money subscribed by his admirers. It must be supposed that his determination was to rise by his discovery, and to establish himself in a position which he might be able to retain as the master of a school devoted to the new art, and to effect this he allowed it to be understood that there was an esoteric doctrine of animal magnetism, with which even his most ardent disciples, Bergasse and Deslon, were not acquainted. In the same spirit, and partly, we must add, to produce a crisis favourable to his own action upon a great number of persons together, Mesmer established the baquet, a kind of magnetic battery, around which his patients assembled, and when the crisis took place, (manifested in a great variety of startling effects), the arch-magician appeared, to moderate and direct the action in each case. The scenes at these reunions drew the attention of the French government to Mesmer's proceedings, and in 1784 a commission of savants was appointed, with instructions to examine the means employed by Mesmer and the results obtained. The members of this commission consisted of four physicians, one of whom was Dr. Guillotin, and five members of the Academy, Franklin, Leroi, Bailly, De Bory, and Lavoisier. The result of their inquiry was announced in a report drawn up by Bailly, and is well known to have been unfavourable not only to the truth of animal magnetism, but to its morality. Though Mesmer and his disciples endeavoured to keep their ground, and succeeded in establishing many societies of magnetizers, and though, soon afterwards, clairvoyance became popular, and was introduced as a new degree in freemasonry, the discoverer found it necessary to quit France, and arriving in England, resided here some time under a feigned name. Mesmer passed the remainder of his life in comparative obscurity, and died in his native place 1815, doubtless much happier in knowing that his doctrine had been accepted by the learned, and had found such advocates as Deleuze and Puysegur, than in coquetting with governments, and aggrandizing his name with a worthless popularity. In regard to his supposed secret, and his refusal of any intelligible explanation of his process, we may repeat here what he himself urges in his 'Mémoire sur la Découverte du Magnétisme Animal,' namely, that no reasoning can clear up the difficulties of such a subject, but only experience. There is also another consideration. Public opinion in the time of Mesmer was influenced widely and deeply by the philosophy of the encyclopedists, and any explanation that involved the recognition of spiritual laws would be received as empirical. At the present day the acknowledged head of curative Mesmerism in this country, prefers total ignorance on the part of his operators, and to treat animal magnetism as a material force only. That it is force operating between substance and substance there can be no question, but then, is matter anything more than one form or condition of substance? If not, how are healings by prayer, and when the operator is far distant from his patient, to be accounted for? The truth is, neither Mesmer himself, nor any of his disciples down to the present hour, have been able to demonstrate the principles of the art, so as to include all its phenomena, because they cease to follow nature, and bow down before those false idols of the mind, against which they have been warned by Bacon, as soon as another condition of being is indicated. The Saviour himself generally healed by the touch, yet always from the spirit of love, and if the former is found successful when the latter is not recognized, and if these touchings can be traced to their connection with material forces, it is only a proof that the material world is clothed over the spiritual, and that magnetism, gravitation, or any other term by which we designate force, is nothing but the manifested law of the Supreme Will, acting through the least things and the greatest, with or without a thankful recognition, in this condition of being, which we choose to call material. Certain we are, that this whole subject is treated most unphilosophically, both by its friends and enemies, and that we must in this, as in all other cases, court and encourage nature to discover herself if we would have her secret.—The system of Mesmer was published in German at Berlin by the famous Nicolai, under the title of 'Mesmerismus, &c.,' 1815. [E.R.]

MESSALA, a Roman general and orator, who commanded a legion under Brutus and Cassius at Philippi, died about the year 11, aged seventy-two.

MESSALINA, Statilia, a Roman lady, who had for her fifth husband the emperor Nero, who had murdered her fourth husband, Atticus Vistimus. After the death of the emperor in the year 68, she devoted herself to literary pursuits.

MESSALINA, Valeria, daughter of Valerius Messalinus Barbatus, was a Roman lady, who became the wife of Claudius, and shared with him the imperial throne. Her licentious conduct is unparalleled in history, for she not only made her husband's palace the scene of her debaucheries, but often quitted it at night, and acted as a common prostitute. When summoned by the enraged emperor, after some fresh extravagance in the year 48, she attempted to kill herself, but wanted courage, and her enemy Narcissus, who dreaded the result of the interview, caused her to be despatched by a soldier.

MESSENIUS, John, a Swedish savant, author of 'Scandia Illustrata,' 1584-1637. His son, ARNOLD, historian of the Swedish nobility, ex. 1648.

MESSIER, CH., a Fr. astronomer, 1730-1817.

MESSIS, QUENTIN, a Flem. painter, 1450-1529.

MESTON, W., a Scottish poet, 1688-1745.

METASTASIO, PIETRO, the son of a pastry-cook named Trapassi, was born at Rome in 1698. When he was no more than ten years old, his talent for extemporaneous versification attracted the notice of the accomplished lawyer, Gravina, who adopted and educated him, and, with a whim savouring of the taste of the Italian academies, made him exchange his family name for its Hellenic synonyme Metastasio. The youth became celebrated as an improvisatore before completing his eighteenth year. Soon afterwards he inherited from his benefactor a considerable fortune; but he spent it in no long time, chiefly through kindly but careless benevolence. He now began to write for the stage, gained in this field great fame but little profit at Naples and Rome, and, in 1729, was appointed Imperial Laureate at Vienna. His duties consisted in writing the Italian text for operas; and this continued to be his occupation for the remainder of his life, except during the closing of the theatre at Vienna on the breaking out of the first war between Austria and Prussia in 1741. He died at Vienna in 1782. The 'libretto' of the operas, usually quite worthless, and treated merely as an adjunct to the music, became, in the hands of Metastasio, genuinely and beautifully poetical. The lyrical turn of his genius fitted him admirably for giving expression in words to the sentiment of the airs interspersed through the recitative of the dialogue; and many of the songs in his operas, with some separate compositions of the sort (such as 'La Partenza'), are exquisite for the delicacy and fanciful charm both of their feeling and of their diction. He gave similar excellences, in a wonderful degree, to the conception and design of his dramas, and to many passages of the dialogue. His works have a monotonous sweetness, an utter want of characterization, and a great deficiency in reality and practical interest. But the best of them, such as 'L'Olimpiade,' breathe a romantic air which is very delightful. [W.S.]

METCALFE, CHARLES THEOPHILUS, Lord, an East Indian officer and diplomatist, who was appointed governor of Jamaica after the emancipation of the negroes, and subsequently governor of Canada, 1785-1846.

METELLI, AGUSTINO, an Ital. artist, 1607-60.

METELLUS, the name of several illustrious Romans:—1. CAIUS CÆCILIUS, the conqueror of Macedonia and proconsul of Spain, known from 148 to 141 B.C. 2. QUINTUS CÆCILIUS, his son, conqueror of Jugurtha in Numidia, exiled B.C. 100 by the influence of Marius and Saturninus. 3. QUINTUS CÆCILIUS, son of the latter, and a partizan of Sylla against Marius, distinguished in the Spanish war, died B.C. 63. 4. QUINTUS CÆCILIUS, son of the last named, distinguished in the war against Cæsar, killed himself after the defeat of Thapsus, B.C. 46.

METELLUS, H., a Latin poet, 1080-1157.

METEREN, E. VAN, a Flem. hist., 1516-1612.

METHODIUS, the name of three personages in ecclesiastical history:—1. SAINT METHODIUS, author of a poem written against Por some theological treatises, only fragmen remain; supposed to have died a marty or 312. He was successively bishop o and Tyre. 2. METHODIUS, surnamed fessor, patriarch of Constantinople in as a partizan of the image-worshipper
3. A METHODIUS, who is remembered his brother, CYRILLUS, as the first p Christianity among the Sclavonians, 9

METIUS, ADRIAN, a Dutch mat son of an engineer, of the same names,
His brother, JAMES, said to have inv
copes, died 1686.

METKERKE, A., a Flem. scholar, 1

METOCHITA, T., a Gr. historian, d

METON, an Athenian astronomer, 5

METTRIE, J. OFFRAY DE LA, a pu
haave, kn. as a physician and philosoph

METZGER, J. D., a Fr. physician,

METZU, GABRIEL, a Dutch painte

MEUNG, J. DE, a French poet, 129

MEUNIER, H. H. J., a Fr. general,

MEUNIER, J. A., a French writer,

MEURISSE, M., a Fr. theologian, d

MEURSIUS, JOHN, a famous D
philologist, and historian, professor o Leyden, 1579-1639. His son, JOHN, a gist, 1613-1653.

MEUSCHEN, J. G., a German theo
philologist, 1680-1743. His son, F
CHRISTIAN, a writer on conchology, bo

MEUTEW, ANTHONY FRANCIS V
Flemish painter, cele. for his battle-piece

MEXÍA, PEDRO, a Span. historian,

MEYER, CONRAD, a Swiss painter,

MEYER, FELIX, a Swiss painter, 1

MEYER, J., a Flemish historian, 14

MEYER, JER., a German painter, 1

MEYER, J. D., a Dutch jurist, 1780

MEYER, PHILIPPE, was born at St
Alsatia, in the year 1737. At an e went to college to study for the protest
but the love of music interfered great theological studies. At twenty years o accident became possessed of an old having made some proficiency upon t
ment, he forthwith devoted himself ex
the study of music. Some time aft studied the science of music under Mü
of the great Bach, and here Meyer's st said to have been formed. He soon aft to Paris, and thence to London, where for several years. Having returned to was induced to compose for the opera, style procured for him the sobriquet of Gluck. Several circumstances tended this to render Meyer unpopular; he London about the year 1784, where he pretensions as a performer, and lived w putation as a composer. He died in 18 two sons musicians and composers, via jun., and Frederick Charles.

MEYER, THEODORE, a painter an of Zurich, 1572-1658. His son, Ro engraver, died 1638. His second son, a painter and engraver, 1618-1689.

MEYNIER, C., a French painter, 17

MEYNIER, H., a French historian,

P. S., a Swiss naturalist, d. 1832.
R. S. R., a lawyer of the ecclesithor of a 'Critical Inquiry into
' on which subject he is consiy, 1783-1848.
JOHN, a Flemish painter, born
CORNELIUS, an engraver, b. 1646.
I. DE, an Austr. pain., 1695-1779.
FRANCIS EUDES DE, one of the f French historians, who flourished Richelieu and Colbert, was born in nced his career as a political writer.
e attached to the army as come lately received a pension from nan of letters, which he lost 'for thought to be the truth,' d. 1683.
., a French actress, 1772-1823.
CLAUDE GASPARD BACHET DE,
t and mathematician, 1581-1638.
ame of two Jewish prophets, the in the 9th cent. B.C.; the latter, k of that name, in the 8th c. B.C.
emperor of the East, successor 1, abdicated on occasion of a mili-
favour of Leo the Armenian, 813, EL II., succeeded Leo the Arme-29. MICHAEL III., succeeded in his age, 842, under the guardian-r, Theodora. In 859 he was per-cle, Bardas, to assume the power mother shortly after died of grief
a 866 he put Bardas to death, and Macedonian, his associate in the d him, 867. MICHAEL IV., was ne by Zoe, after she had poisoned manus Argyrus, 1034; died 1041.
phew of the preceding, occupied months after his death, and was e and Theodora, 1042. MICHAEL heodora 1056, and was dethroned ho elevated Isaac Commenus to nity, 1057. MICHAEL VII., son ucas and Eudoxia, succeeded his
d, being dethroned by Nicephorus 078, retired to a monastery, and of Ephesus. MICHAEL (Palæo-ecame regent for John Lascaris ror in 1261, after deposing and yes of his protegé; died, after a 282. triarch of Constantinople, 1043-57.
ivode of Wallachia, 1595.
ng of the Bulgarians, 1245-1258.
e first of the name, grand duke of 1175. The second, grand duke of the Tartars 1245. The third (or d duke of Russia, succeeded 1304,
the Tartars 1317. The fourth, ix, of the house of Romanof, called OWITCH, born 1598, elected 1613,
was succeeded by his son, Alexis.
ng of Poland, elected 1669, d. 1673.
NGELO DA CARAVAGGIO.
IO.
NGELO DELLA BATTAGLIE, me was M. A. Cerquozzi, a Roman 89.
, J. B., a German poet, 1746-72.
, JOHN DAVID, a famous Orien-

talist and biblical critic, was born at Halle, 1717, where his father, Christian Benedict Michaelis, was professor of divinity and the Oriental languages. He entered the university in 1733, and was admitted master of philosophy, and became assistant lecturer under his father in 1739. In 1746, he was appointed extraordinary professor of philosophy in the university of Göttingen, having previously visited England, and officiated as preacher at the German chapel, St. James's palace. During the remainder of his life he was associated with the principal learned societies of Europe, and was raised, in 1786, to the rank of Aulic Counsellor in Hanover, besides being employed in many affairs of moment requiring the exercise of his statesmanship. His religious opinions were unsettled, but the strictest integrity formed the basis of his conduct. Died 1791.

MICHAELIS, JOHN HENRY, great uncle of the preceding, born 1668, was a teacher of the Oriental languages at the university of Halle, and in 1699 became professor of Greek in the same institution; in 1707 keeper of the university library; and in 1732 senior of the faculty of divinity, and inspector of the theological seminary. Died 1738.

MICHAUD, C. I. F., a Fr. general, 1753-1835.

MICHAUD, J., a French historian, 1767-1839.

MICHAULT, J. B., a Fr. philologist, 1707-70.

MICHAULT, P., a French poet, died 1467.

MICHAUX, ANDRE, a French traveller, and writer on the botany of foreign parts, born at Versailles 1746, died at Madagascar 1802. His son, FRANCIS ANDRE, a writer on the forest trees of North America, &c., 1746-1802.

MICHEL, C. L. S., a Fr. statesman, 1754-1814.

MICHEL, J., a Gascon poet, died about 1700.

MICHELANGELO BUONARROTI, was born at Castel Caprese in the diocese of Arezzo in Tuscany, 6th March, 1475. He was apprenticed for three years to Domenico Ghirlandajo on 1st April, 1488.—His earlier studies were made in the so-called academy of Lorenzo de Medici, a garden containing sculptures near the church of St. Mark, and he was early patronised by that prince, after whose death in 1492, Michelangelo removed to Bologna; he returned to Florence in 1494, and now attained, by a statue of the 'Sleeping Cupid,' a great reputation. This statue was sold as an antique at Rome, which led Michelangelo to try his fortunes there, and he then executed his celebrated Pietà, now in St. Peter's.—He returned to Florence at the commencement of the sixteenth century, and further distinguished himself by his colossal David, now on the Piazza Granduca, and appeared for the first time in the character of a painter; being commissioned by the Gonfaloniere Soderini to paint one end of the Council Hall, the other end being awarded to Leonardo Da Vinci. Though Michelangelo made his cartoon known as the world-celebrated 'Cartoon of Pisa,' he never commenced the painting; the cartoon was exhibited in 1506, and created a great sensation among the artists of Florence; it became, says Benvenuto Cellini, 'The School of the World.'—Michelangelo had visited Rome a second time during its progress by the invitation of Julius II., and at Bologna in 1507 he made the famous colossal statue of that pontiff, which was afterwards converted into a cannon and used against the pope by the Bolognese. In 1508 commences the great career of Michelangelo as a painter; he then visited Rome for the third time, and was commissioned by Julius II. to paint the ceiling of the Sistine chapel; Raphael was ordered at the same time to decorate the Stanze, or dwelling rooms of the Vatican palace. The ceiling was finished on All-Saints' Day, 1st November, 1512, the actual painting of the frescoes having occupied only twenty months, the cartoons occupying the greater portion of the interval. These frescoes represent—the creation of the world, and of man; his fall; and the early history of the world with reference to man's final redemption and salvation: they are the grandest productions of modern art, greatly superior to the 'Last Judgment' executed on the altar wall upwards of twenty years afterwards.—Michelangelo was occupied also during the progress of this ceiling with the monument of Julius, which was, however, finally suspended by the death of the pope in 1513; what was done of the monument was arranged and put up in the church of San Pietro in Montorio; the celebrated statue of Moses was one of the sculptures for the intended mausoleum. Michelangelo was now for twenty years kept from the carrying out of his great design of the history of man in the Sistine chapel. Leo X. occupied him for nine years in selecting marble in the quarries of Pietra Santa for the facade of the church of San Lorenzo at Florence, and he was employed in the Medici chapel of the same church during the pontificate of Adrian VI., and part of that of Clement VII., but finally in the tenth year of this pope, 1533, he was ordered to go on with the frescoes of the Sistine, and he completed the 'Last Judgment' in 1541, in the pontificate of Paul III.—His last works in painting were the frescoes of the Capella Paolina, executed for Paul III., finished in 1549; he is said never to have painted in oil-colours.—This extraordinary man had appeared in a third character when seventy years of age, he was then, 1546, appointed to succeed Antonio da San Gallo as architect of St. Peter's, and he continued architect during five pontificates, carrying the building out to the base of the cupola. (See BRAMANTE.) This great artist was also a poet: he was never married.—Michelangelo died 17th February, 1564, having very nearly completed his eighty-ninth year; his body was carried to Florence and deposited in a vault in the church of Santa Croce.—There is little space in a limited work of this character to enter upon any details of the extraordinary works of Michelangelo, spreading as they do, over four provinces of the fine arts; most opinions concerning him are uniform in their expressions of praise: his name was the last word pronounced by Sir Joshua Reynolds in the Royal Academy, and even his great rival, Raphael, is said to have exclaimed that he thanked God he was born in the days of Michelangelo. His most extraordinary achievement is doubtless the ceiling of the Sistine chapel; the Prophets and Sibyls of this great work are, for sublimity and grandeur, indisputably the triumphs of modern art. The element of his style, whether in painting or in sculpture, is an abstract impersonation of dignity, which sentiment prevails under whatever emotion the subject may be represented. A similar uniformity of style in design, is of such constancy as to amount to this mannerism of form is the chief the works of this great artist; but one muscular standard of form is evident man, or child, of every age and of eve (Condivi, Vita di Michelangelo, &c.; &c., ed. Flor. 1846 Seqq; Duppa, Li angelo, &c.; Taylor, Michelangelo Co Philosophic Poet, &c.; Wornum, Epoc ing Characterized.)

MICHELET, S., a French poet, 17

MICHELI, the name of three Ven —the first, VITAL MICHELI, succes Faledro, 1096, died 1102. The second, reigned 1116-1130. The third, VIT II., succeeded in 1156, killed in a sedi

MICHELI, JAMES BARTHOLOME astronomer and mathematician, 1692-

MICHELI, P. A., an Ital. naturalist

MICHELOZZI, MICHELAZZO, a sculptor and architect, pupil of Don 1402-1470.

MICHIEL, J. L., an Italian account

MICHOVIUS, M., a Polish annalis

MICHU, B., a Fr. painter on glass

MICHU, L., an opera performer, 1

MICIPSA, a king of Numidia, 148

MICKLE, WILLIAM JULIUS, a S and scholar, employed as corrector rendon Press at Oxford, translator o of Camœns, and author of some of th lada,' published by Evans, the booksell Dumfries 1784, died 1788.

MICRELIUS, J., a Lutheran divine

MIDDLETON, CONYERS, well kno lemical writer and critic, was the son Middleton, a Yorkshire clergyman, a at York 1683. In 1717 he was create divinity by the mandamus of George I. to Cambridge, and his refusal to pay manded by Bentley, the regius profess involved him in a lawsuit, and, finall tion for libel brought against him by man. The enmity thus established be issued in a literary and critical contro was interrupted by Middleton's going 1724, for the benefit of his health. I a controversy with Dr. Mead, concern dition of the medical men of ancien published his 'Letter from Rome,' similarity between the Roman Catholic the pagan rituals of antiquity. This w a great popularity, but it laid its aut the suspicion of being at heart an and, two years later, his animadvers Waterland, who had written against Ti such a feeling against him that he ha deprived of his degrees. The line adopted by Middleton, who professe better method of dealing with the will speak for itself; and it is stat cinctly in Tayler's 'Retrospect,'—'He history the inadequacy of the simpl reason to the necessities of the mu that, in every civilized community, the been a traditional system of faith adapted to them, distinct from the of philosophical minds; that where tem was already established, though much superstition and folly, it would be wrong to attempt its overthrow, without being prepared to put something better fitted for the purpose in its place; that Socrates, and the wisest of the heathen, always acted on this principle; and that, consequently, it must, à fortiori, be much more absurd and mischievous to endeavour to substitute the simple inferences of reason for a belief in Christianity, which is the best of all traditional religions, the best contrived to promote peace and the good of society, and acknowledged by deists themselves to come the nearest of all others to their perfect law of reason and nature.' Such a book of course exposed Middleton to a fresh controversy, in the course of which, 1731, he was appointed to the professorship of mineralogy, then recently founded by Woodward. In 1734 he abandoned this uncongenial appointment for that of librarian to the university. In 1735 he wrote, controversially as usual, concerning the origin of printing in England. In 1741 he published his greatest work, the 'History of Cicero,' in 2 vols. 4to, which was the signal for a scholastic controversy on the authenticity of certain documents adopted by him. In 1749, having thrown out an 'Introductory Discourse' on the same subject two years previously, he gave to the astonished quidnuncs of the period his 'Free Inquiry into the Miraculous Powers which are supposed to have subsisted in the Christian Church from the earliest ages.' For their replies to this work, Dodwell and Church obtained the degree of D.D. from the University of Oxford. Middleton, however, published his 'Vindication,' and, the year following, made an attack on Dr. Sherlock, endeavouring to show that there is no uniform chain of prophecy pointing to the Saviour. With such views as we have indicated, this singular divine could yet accept the living of Hascomb, in Surrey, which he held at his death in 1750. The only excuse we could imagine for such a career as Middleton's, must be found in the unsettled state of the Church of England at the commencement of last century—in all the circumstances, to speak briefly, by which we should account for the rise of Wesleyanism, and the various movements of dissent and free inquiry, which marked the period. [E.R.]

MIDDLETON, Erasmus, a methodist scholar of Oxford, author of a 'Dictionary of Arts and Sciences,' last century.

MIDDLETON, Sir Hugh, a citizen and goldsmith of London, celebrated for bringing a supply of water to the metropolis, was son of Richard Middleton, Esq., governor of Denbigh castle. The date of his birth, and the early events of his life, are unknown, with the exception of the fact that he had been engaged in mining adventures in Wales. This costly enterprise for supplying London with the fresh streams of Hertfordshire, dates from 1608 to Michaelmas-day 1613, when the water was admitted into the reservoir at Pentonville, at a cost of nearly half-a-million sterling. Middleton was subsequently reduced to the necessity of occupying himself as an engineer. He was created a baronet in 1622, and died 1631.

MIDDLETON, R., a learned theologian, d. 1304.

MIDDLETON, T., a dramatic writer, d. 1627.

MIDDLETON, Thomas Fanshawe, the first English bishop of Calcutta, was born at Redleston, in Derbyshire, where his father was rector, in 1769, and consecrated at Lambeth in 1814. He departed for the East the same year, and in 1820 founded a college at Calcutta for the education of clergymen and missionaries devoted to our Eastern possessions. His principal work is an erudite dissertation on the Greek article, which has given rise to some controversy. Died 1822.

MIDDLETON, W., a Welch poet, 16th century.

MIEL, Edmund F. A. L., a Fr. au., 1775-1842.

MIEL, Jan, a Flemish painter, 1599-1664.

MIERIS, Francis, a Dutch painter, pupil of Gerard Dow, 1635-1681. His son, John, a painter, 1660-1690. His younger son, William, equally celebrated as a landscape and history painter, 1662-1747. Francis, son of the latter, principally known as an historian, 1689-1763.

MIFFLIN, T., gov. of Pennsylvania, 1744-1809.

MIGNARD, Nicholas, of Avignon, a French painter and engraver, born at Troyes 1608, died 1668. His brother, Peter, 'the Roman,' an eminent painter, 1610-1695. Peter, son of Nicholas, an architect, 1640-1725.

MIGNAULT, C., a Fr. jurisconsult, 1536-1606.

MIGNON, Abraham, a celebrated flower painter of Frankfort, teacher of Maria Sibylla Merian, and of his two daughters, who distinguished themselves in the same line of art, 1639-1679.

MIGNOT, C. F., usually called Marie, a beautiful peasant of Dauphiné, who in 1672 became the wife of John Casimir, king of Poland, d. 1711.

MIGNOT, J., a Fr. architect, end of 14th cent.

MIGNOT, S., a doctor of the Sorbonne, dist. as an archæologist and canonist, 1698-1771.

MIGNOT, Vincent, the nephew of Voltaire, author of an Ottoman History, 1730-1790.

MILBERT, J. G., a Fr. naturalist, 1766-1840.

MILBOURNE, Luke, a Church of England minister, known as a poet and critical wr., d. 1720.

MILDENHALL, J., a diplomatist of the age of Elizabeth, celeb. for his treaty of alliance with Persia, concluded in defiance of the Jesuits in 1606.

MILDMAY, Sir Walter, a statesman of the age of Henry VIII. and Elizabeth, disting. as the founder of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, d. 1589.

MILE, Francis, a Flemish painter, 1644-1680.

MILHOUSE, Robert, a poetical writer in the humble occupation of a weaver, author of 'Sherwood Forest,' 'Vicissitude,' 'The Destinies of Man,' died 1839.

MILIZIA, F., an Italian architect, 1725-1798.

MILL, James, born in Kincardineshire on 6th April, 1773; died at Kensington 23d June, 1836: one of the three or four remarkable minds which, in the generation just past, have vindicated the title of Scotland to a place of high glory in the annals of Inquiry and Thought. Mr. Mill was originally designed for the Scottish Church; but reflection inclined him to abandon a purpose of Life, which, however honourable, was not suited to his peculiar intellectual tendencies: and after some intermediate passages, he settled in London as a literary man in 1800, where he resided ever afterwards, and gained his very distinguished name. The work by which Mill earliest rose into notice is the History of British India, one that through the profoundity of its general views, and its liberal spirit, will remain a classic among our English Histories. It is not, in merely literary characteristics, on a level with the remarkable productions of HUME or GIBBON; nor did Mill aim at the peculiar excellencies of these writers. But he aimed at the discovery of pure historic Truth, as earnestly as Gibbon; he had a stronger feeling of Justice, and less regard for the morals of Authority: nor when high occasion called them forth, were his powers to appreciate character and narrate stirring events, ever defective. How admirably and incisively he delineates CLIVE,—the man, to whose audacious, unscrupulous, cruel, but successful coups d' etat, our British empire in India owes its first stability: and we rarely find among descriptive writers, a clearer presentation of rapid and brilliant events in war, than Mill, in his fifth volume, has given of the operations before Seringapatam. It must be recorded, to the high honour of the East India Company, that on the publication of this great History, they secured the services of its Author, and always retained them. Few governments—certainly not the English one—have been politic enough, to evince so large an appreciation of ability, if coupled with obnoxious opinions. From the commencement of his public life to its close, Mill was an English Radical of the broadest stamp; he was the friend and associate of Jeremy Bentham,—he may be termed par excellence, the theorist and philosopher of the Bentham school: and in all he wrote—especially in his memorable systematic treatises, in the Supplement to the Encyclopædia Britannica, there is proof in every line of the presence of a lofty Intellect that could seek Truth for its own sake, and dare to speak it. The subjects of these essays are Government, Education, Jurisprudence, Law of Nations, Liberty of the Press, Colonies, and Prison Discipline. Published afterwards in a separate form, they have had an extensive circulation, and have produced great influence on current political and social speculation. They evince an ability alike in analysis and ratiocination, belonging only to first-rate minds; and their tone and leanings are what might be called ultra-liberal. They are of the same class as the Author's celebrated article on the Ballot in the London Review.—Mill's greatest work, in the estimation of many of his admirers, is the Analysis of the Phenomena of the Human Mind; an effort at once original and bold, to give extension to the analytic system of Hartley,—resolving every feeling and idea belonging to the human mind, into simple sensations, and the products of these, as manufactured by the principle of 'Association.' It is impossible to miss the evidence of Power in every step of this remarkable analysis; although in the view of the writer of this notice, the speculation is based on an imperfect psychology—an imperfect review of the actual characteristics of the beliefs and ideas of which the Analyist takes account. One important fallacy, however, of the opponents of Mill, must be noticed. Although an author traces, or supposes he can trace, many of our moral feelings—gratitude, benevolence, &c.—to simple elements, it does not follow that he disowns either the existence of such feelings, or their high import in practical life. The question at issue, is not a practical, but a theoretical one; and its real bearing is this—Are certain feelings and ideas part of the Mind's primal constitution, and evolved by its own inherent Force; or, is the Extern constructed, that Mind cannot come with it—supposing Mind a tabula r those feelings and ideas arising in i and conquering sway over its movem last work was anonymous — the Mackintosh; a remorseless criticism tation' by Sir James, concerning th Ethical Philosophy.' There is little d that the name of Mackintosh must b long list of writers, who to high asp not joined the industry and honest realize them: nor did he resist as temptation constituted by a high po tion, apart from adequate performan know, when he did not know. Mill's ality could brook neither pretence no vice that appeared hugest in his eyes, in any form, to TRUTH; and it cann that through the ordeal to which his C jected him, the popular Whig Pote escaped without serious damage. H tion could not fail to be especially a superficial, but withal supercilious the 'Dissertation' on his favourite— although unpopular HOBBES.—Thi powerful Writer also contributed to th Political Economy. To an intellect Ricardo's he joined a more rigid L 'Elements' are accordingly our b easily read Manual of the scheme o that important department of Socia prevailing among the Reflecting, in cannot be claimed for Mill, that th views were always the most enlar fabric he built on these, was ever strong. As to strength and reach Intellect, his native Country has o that can be placed beside Mill's.—I to omit, that Mr. Mill left a Son, in Philosophy is even higher than h author of the 'System of Logic,' an ciples of Political Economy' has al a name which must last in the histo Thought; and if that scheme of Psyc seems so congenial to British idios be saved by any Intellect, certain saved by his. His sympathies are Father's, and he has the same inde love of truth. To a command of our which none save the purest Thinke conjoins the Wisdom of the Philos the Sagacity of the Statesman.

MILL, JOHN, a learned divine of England, author of an edition of the ment, 1645-1707.

MILLAR, JAMES, a Scottish chemist, editor of the fourth editio cyclopædia Britannica,' to which h many articles in chemistry and natu This industrious writer was also a m Scotch Church. Born at Ayr 1762,

MILLAR, JOHN, a native of La educated at Glasgow. In early life in the family of Lord Kames, throug ence he obtained the professorship university of Glasgow, which he h forty years; he is the author of 'Th Distinction of Ranks,' &c., 1785-18

MILLE, A. S., a French historian, born 1750.

MILLER, EDWARD, a doctor of music, chiefly known as composer of the Psalms, which he arranged for every Sunday throughout the year, and for his works on musical theory. He is author also of a History of Doncaster; died 1807.

MILLER, JAMES, a dramatic writer and satirist, author of several political tracts, written against Walpole, the tragedy of 'Mahomet,' &c., 1703-44.

MILLER, JOSEPH, a clever and witty comedian, whose name has acquired a wide reputation as author of a jest-book, presumed to have been written by Mortley. Born 1684, buried in the church-yard of St. Clements, in the Strand, 1738.

MILLER, J. M., a Germ. novelist, 1750-1814.

MILLER, LADY, author of 'Letters' from Italy, died 1781.

MILLER, PHILIP, a celebrated writer on horticulture, author of 'The Gardeners' Dictionary,' 'The Gardeners' Kalendar,' 'Introduction to Botany,' &c., 1691-1771.

MILLER, SIR T., a Scotch lawyer, 1717-1789.

MILLES, JEREMIAH, a divine and antiquary, publisher of an edition of the poems of Chatterton, for the pretended antiquity of which he was a great advocate, 1714-1784. His uncle, THOMAS MILLES, a learned prelate, author of a life of his father, the Rev. Isaac Milles, rector of High Clear, in Hampshire; died 1740.

MILLEVOYE, C. H., a French poet, 1782-1816.

MILLIEU, A., a French Jesuit, 1575-1646.

MILLIN, AUBIN LOUIS, an eminent archæologist and naturalist, one of the founders of the French Linnæan Society, and keeper of the antiquities in the Royal Library at Paris, author of numerous works, 1759-1818.

MILLINGEN, JAMES, a connoiseur in art, and classical antiquarian and medallist, died 1845.

MILLON, C., a French historian, 1754-1839.

MILLOT, CH. F. XAVIER, a French ecclesiastic, and professor of history at Parma, 1726-85.

MILLOT, J. H., a French surgeon, 1738-1811.

MILLS, CHARLES, son of a physician of Greenwich, an. of several middle age histories, 1788-1825.

MILLY, COUNT, a French chemist, 1728-1784.

MILMAN, SIR FRANCIS, physician to George III., an. of some professional works, 1746-1821.

MILNE, COLIN, a divine of the Church of England, born at Aberdeen, distinguished as a botanist, died 1815.

MILNE, JOSHUA, a famous writer on annuities and assurances, more than thirty years actuary to the Sun Assurance Company, 1773-1851.

MILNER, JOHN, a Roman Catholic divine, famous for his researches in ecclesiastical history and antiquities, and for his zeal and acuteness in theological controversy, was born in London 1752, and commenced his career as a priest at the catholic chapel in Winchester, 1779. In 1803 he was appointed vicar apostolic of the midland district, with the title of bishop of Castabala, and, in 1808, became agent to the Irish hierarchy. He died in 1826. Dr. Milner's works are a 'Dissertation on the Modern Style of Altering Cathedrals,' 'History, Civil and Ecclesiastical, and Survey of the Antiquities of Winchester,' 'Treatise on the Ecclesiastical Architecture of England during the Middle Ages,' and some others.

MILNER, JOHN, one of the nonjuring divines of the Church of England, author of several learned works, 1628-1702.

MILNER, JOSEPH, best known for his 'History of the Church of Christ,' was born at Leeds, 1744, and became vicar of Trinity Church at Hull, where a monument is erected to his memory; died 1797. His brother, ISAAC, b. 1751, became a dignitary of the church, and is au. of many papers in the Philosophical Transactions. He also edited the fourth volume of his brother's history; d. 1820.

MILO, a famous Greek athlete, 6th cent. B.C.

MILO, a Roman tribune, 57-48 B.C.

MILONOFF, M. W., a Russian poet, 1792-1821.

MILORADOWITSCH, MICHAEL, Count, a Russian general, distinguished in the wars against Napoleon, 1770-1820.

[Miltiades—From an Ancient Bust.]

MILTIADES, the famous Athenian commander at the battle of Marathon, was grandson or nephew to a Grecian leader of the same name, who established a colony of Athenians in the Chersonesus of Thrace. His father was Cimon, and his elder brother Stesagoras, whom Miltiades succeeded as governor of the Chersonese, and is then said to have made a conquest of Lemnos, in the interest of Athens; but this part of his history is doubtful. Soon after the expedition of Darius against the Scythians, Miltidates consulted his safety by returning to Attica, having advised the Greek colonists to break down the bridge of the Danube, as a means of harassing the Persians, and of course merited their resentment. His military talents, in fact, were now needed to meet those formidable invaders at home, an army of 300,000 men, led by Datis and Artaphernes, being soon afterwards set in motion for the conquest of all Greece. Miltiades animated the Athenians, and mustered all the men capable of bearing arms. The Spartans were not prepared to take the field, and their only allies were the inhabitants of the little town of Platææ. When these forces were drawn forth they amounted to no more than 10,000 men, commanded by ten generals, and this was the army that awaited the shock of battle on the plain of Marathon. They were arrayed ten deep, and presented a front of 1,000 men to the enemy, who made a fierce attack on their centre, which gave way, and immediately the two wings closed in, and this with such quickness and impetuosity, that they may be said to have crushed the unwieldy host between them. More than 6,000 Persians were left dead on the field, with a loss to the Grecians of less than 200 men, the rest were scattered or escaped in their ships, and Athens had obtained a victory, which not only liberated Greece, but raised the city to great importance. Immediately after the victory of Marathon, Miltiades was sent in command of an expedition to the Ægean sea, to reclaim the island conquests of the Persians, and was wounded while laying siege to Paros. The approach of the Persian fleet and other sufficient reasons caused him to raise the siege and return home, when he was condemned to pay a fine of fifty talents, and imprisoned in default. Miltiades died in confinement, as much hurt by the ingratitude of his countrymen as by the wounds, under which he sunk, only a year after his great victory, B.C. 489. The first historian of these events was Herodotus, who wrote about seventy years after the battle of Marathon, and derived his materials from the heroic poem of Chœrilus. [E.R.]

MILTIADES, a pope and saint of Rome, 311-314.

MILTON, JOHN, was born in London on the 9th of December, 1608. His father, a man of good family in Oxfordshire, had been educated at the university, and disinherited for embracing protestantism; on which he became a scrivener, and acquired a competent fortune.—Milton's education was begun under a private tutor of puritanical opinions, and continued from his fifteenth year at St. Paul's School. He has himself related that his love of letters was deeply rooted before he was twelve years old, and was sedulously indulged in spite of headaches and weak eyes: he studied languages, both ancient and modern, delighted especially in poetical reading, and cultivated the musical taste which he inherited from his father. In 1623 he wrote his translations of the 114th and 136th Psalms. In February 1625, when he was a little above sixteen, he was admitted a pensioner at Christ's College, Cambridge. In the same year was written his ode 'On the Death of a Fair Infant;' and in his nineteenth year he produced the verses 'At a Vacation Exercise in College.' In the interval were composed several of those elegies, and other poems, which have gained for him the reputation of being one of the best among modern writers of Latin verse. But there is evidence yet more brilliant of the poetic ripeness of his youth. The 'Ode on the Nativity,' one of the noblest of all his works, and perhaps the finest lyric in the English language, was composed about December 1629, when the poet was twenty-one years old.—The particulars of his life at the university are imperfectly known. The tradition of his having been whipped is ill-vouched and improbable; but the fact would not have been irreconcileable with the ideas of academical discipline which were then prevalent. He does appear to have at first excited the displeasure of the authorities, probably for too free expression of opinions, and certainly for no serious moral offence; but he took his degrees of bachelor and master in the regular course, and was pressed by the fellows of his college to remain at Cambridge. He could not resolve to comply with the wish of his parents that he should enter the church; and he declined also the profession of the law, for which, indeed, he had always a great contempt.—In 1632, leaving the u he went to the house of his father, who chased an estate at Horton in Buckingh In this retreat he lived from his twen year to his twenty-ninth; a period which only very important in the developme mind, but very fertile in the fruits of hi He read the Greek and Roman classics, b particular attention on the historians; a his study of Spenser and Shakspeare, a contemporaries, had probably begun in there is, in his own poems of this stage, prove that he now became exactly as wel miringly familiar with Italian poetry. after his retirement to the country, must h produced the verses which he contribute masque of 'Arcades;' his exquisite masqu mus,' one of the masterpieces of English poe acted in Ludlow Castle at Michaelmas 16 in 1638 was printed the monody of 'Ly refined embodiment of classical fancies in t woven melodies of the Italian lyrists. 'L' and 'Il Penseroso,' likewise, the most b of all descriptive poems, had their birth certainly in those few years of 'a calm an ing solitariness, fed with cheerful and e thoughts.' Milton, in short, had already immortal fame. The mantle of the Eliz poets had fallen on him: and, though hi career had now been arrested, he would h illustrious as the last survivor, and one of t highly gifted, of that energetic and fruit Nor is it uninteresting to note how the d turn, which had been taken by poetry in th part of Elizabeth's reign, still affected on greatness was to reach its climax in works n in another form, and breathing ideas of cast. The most poetical kind of the old was adopted and ennobled by him in the es his sustained efforts; there is extant, in hand-writing, a memorandum of a hundred from Scriptural and British history, wh presented themselves to him as fit themes gedies, and the treatment of which, in instances, he lays down in outline; and t paper contains a plan, the most elaborat for working up, into a tragedy or mystery, dents which, in the end, took an epic shape adise Lost.'—In 1638, Milton's father furnis with the means of visiting the continen he remained fifteen months. He first few days in Paris, and there made the a ance of Grotius. He then passed two m Florence, finding his way readily into society, to which, indeed, he recommended by the remarkable skill with which he c Italian verses; and at Arcetri, near that l city, he waited on the illustrious Galile months more were spent in Rome; and, b and in Tuscany, his classical predilections sense of beauty in form, were richly nour the ruins and the scenery, the Greek sculpt the masterpieces of Italian painting. verses, addressed to Manso, the patron he hints at a design of celebrating, in an ep Arthur, the mythical hero of early British Naples, where Milton became acquainted accomplished person, was the farthest poi travels. He had intended to visit Sicily an ews reached him of the outbreak of dis- s in England; and his zeal on public , (which had shown itself in Rome by t rash talk on matters of religion,) made mediately resolve to retrace his steps. g to Rome, and crossing the Apennines to and Ferrara, he passed along Lombardy ice to Milan, and thence crossed the Alps s, where he remained a considerable time. reached England about August, 1639, and is residence in London. The next twenty re the times of the Civil War, the Com- th, and the Protectorate. During this nd severe period the poet's lyre was mute. al questions his views passed rapidly into nism: and his ecclesiastical opinions, episcopacy from his youth, were matured nflict around him, till he attached himself ndependents. Always deeply impressed importance of the great controversies of and naturally far from being disinclined ics, he threw himself promptly and into the vortex of the struggle. For a e after his return from the Continent, he himself quietly in teaching his nephews Edward Phillips, and other boys whom ed into his house. Very soon, however, that career as a controversialist, which, has exposed him to much obloquy from dissent from his opinions, has enrolled among the noblest and most eloquent of s of Old English prose. His polemical re keen and sometimes abusive; but they larly able. His first work of this sort reatise 'Of Reformation,' published in id the attack then made on the bishops. ngaged in the famous controversy, in which riters on the puritanical side wrote under ammatic name of Smectymnuus: to it he d four successive treatises, measuring h bishops Hall and Usher. It is inter- see the poet, in the heat of this fiery ooking back with regret on the time when ed 'in the still and quiet air of delight- s,' and avowing his design of still exe- his own proper sphere, some work worthy ality, some work nourished by observation ng, and by 'devout prayer to that Eter- , who can enrich with all utterance and ledge.'—At Whitsuntide in 1643, being is thirty-fifth year, Milton married Mary he daughter of an Oxfordshire gentleman, y of the cavaliers. The courtship seems to short; and we know little as to the circum- hich, a few weeks after the marriage, led his sit her father's house, and to refuse to re- husband was vehemently indignant, pub- wned her, and proceeded to justify the step t of four Treatises, in which he maintains ness of divorce for disobedience and other ort of matrimonial unfaithfulness. The n of these works was decidedly the most r as well as the most objectionable step 's controversial career. Before the last ared, he gave forth, in 1644, his treatise eation,' expressing views which, though o Utopianism, are very elevated, and are in a strain of finely ornate eloquence. year gave to the public the grandest of his prose works, an appeal, against all parties, in behalf of the freedom of the press. It was entitled 'Areopagitica: a Speech for the Liberty of Unlicensed Printing: to the Parliament of England.' Soon after this his wife, contriving to obtain an interview with him by surprise, and entreating his pardon, a reconciliation ensued: she lived with him without further separation; and his three daughters were hers. Her parents, also, being dispossessed of their house by the parliamentarians, were sheltered by Milton; and his interest with the ruling party was actively exerted to procure for his father-in-law a favourable composition with the commissioners of the sequestrated estates. It is worth notice, also, that the poet's brother, afterwards a catholic and judge under James II., was one of the sequestrated royalists. In 1645 Milton superintended a collected edition of his poems, Latin and English, some of which indeed, Lycidas being one, had not till now been acknowledged.—Before this publication, Milton's sight had begun to fail. His left eye was almost blind in 1644, or very soon after. His strong feelings, however, made him, instead of sparing himself, enlarge his field of battle: he passed from ecclesiastical to political questions. In February 1649, a few weeks after the death of Charles I., he published a treatise, defending his deposition and execution, and entitled 'The Tenure of Kings and Magistrates.' In March he accepted an appointment as 'Secretary for Foreign Tongues' to the Council of State. The extant order-book of the Council, and many letters also preserved, give evidence of his activity and usefulness in his office. By the desire of the Council, too, though without receiving any payment beyond his salary, he composed his 'Eikonoclastes,' an answer to the 'Eikon Basilikè,' which had been published as a work of the unfortunate king. This was followed by two books, written in Latin, being designed for circulation abroad: the 'Defence of the People of England;' and the 'Second Defence.'—In 1652, before the latter of these works was composed, he had become totally blind: and soon afterwards another Latin secretary was appointed to act along with him; Andrew Marvel holding that place for a while. About this time his first wife died in childbed; and the same fate befell his second wife, Catherine Woodcock, within a year of her marriage, which took place in 1656. It was to her memory that he dedicated his fine sonnet. His blindness, though it made him inapt for regular official business, left him able to perform important public duties. In 1655 he drew up the Protector's Manifesto in justification of the war with Spain: and several controversial treatises came from his pen in the last years of the Protectorate. To his literary employments he now returned with redoubled ardour. Some progress was probably made with his History of England, of which four books had been written before his appointment to the secretaryship: he collected large materials (which were used by the Cambridge scholars in 1693,) for a Latin Dictionary, in amendment of the Thesaurus of Stephens: and there is good reason for believing that, during this period of honoured repose, he proceeded a considerable way in the composition of his great epic.—The Restoration of 1660 consigned Milton, for the last fourteen years of his life, to an obscurity which, wearing no terrors for his firm soul, gave him full leisure to execute the mighty poetical task he had undertaken. At first he thought it necessary to conceal himself: his friends are said to have made a mock funeral for him: and a proclamation was actually issued for the apprehension of him and Goodwin the theologian. But, though the most offensive of his books were burned by the hangman, he was included in the act of indemnity; and it is even asserted that his former office was offered to him, but of course refused. He had in the end inherited but little from his father, had failed in getting payment of the portion of his first wife, had lost money lent, and had had his house accidentally burnt. Accordingly, his circumstances were now indifferent, yet not very low for a man so moderate in his habits. He published, in 1661, a Latin grammar in English. In 1664 he married his third wife, Elizabeth Minshul, of a good Cheshire family.—In 1665, being in his fifty-seventh year, he completed 'Paradise Lost;' and it was published in 1667. It was sold for five pounds to a bookseller, who engaged to pay a like sum for each fifteen hundred copies that should be sold from each of three editions of two thousand each. In two years the first of these additional payments was due and made; a second edition was published in 1674, and a third in 1678. This was a large sale for a serious poem in an age like that of the Restoration; and, though it could not meet with applause from the fashionable debauchees of the court, the hearty and respectful admiration of Dryden was not the only tribute that was immediately paid, by competent judges, to the extraordinary merit of the only great epic in the English language. The poet next published his 'History of England,' down to the Norman Conquest; and in 1671 appeared the 'Paradise Regained,' to which was subjoined 'Samson Agonistes.' His second epic was written with great quickness, perhaps altogether during a retirement of several months which he made to Chalfont in Buckinghamshire, on the breaking out of the plague in London in 1665. John Milton, one of the greatest of poets, and the very greatest of all poets who have consecrated their genius to the service of Christianity, had now, amidst evil men and evil days, discharged the debt which, many years before, he had proudly said that he held himself to owe to posterity. He had enriched the world of poetry with a host of the noblest images and sentiments, and in his sacred epic had given to English diction and rhythm new and original developments.—His literary labours closed with a Treatise on Logic, very ably written in Latin; a new treatise in controversial theology, 'Of True Religion,' directed against popery; and a Latin collection, published in 1674, of his private letters and academical exercises. To the latest years of his life may have belonged the completion of his Latin treatise 'Of Christian Doctrine,' which, left unpublished till it was disinterred from the State Paper Office in 1823, showed him to have become decidedly an Arian.—In July, 1674, having long been distressed by gout, and thinking himself near death, he gave his brother directions as to the disposal of his property. These throw some light on his domestic position. The facts exhibit traces of those infirmities of temper with which the great ditionally charged. The current acco represents his daughters as having b to read and write for him, appears to as to Deborah, the youngest; and all lived uncomfortably with him and his

and had left his house some years befo
He was chiefly served in his studies position by Elwood the Quaker, by men who were attracted by his genius, whom he hired. He now intimated h (which his widow unsuccessfully att establish as a completed will) of bequea property to his wife, leaving to his only, besides what he 'had done for th
on their mother's family for her portio paid. He spoke of them as his 'u dren,' and said they had been 'very u him.' He died, so easily that the mom perceived, on Sunday the 8th of Nove and was buried beside his father, in th
St. Giles in Cripplegate.

MIMAUT, J. F., a Fr. historian, 17

MIMNERMUS, a Greek poet, 6th c

MINA, Don Francisco Espoz y
general and statesman, born in Navarr
of the guerillas when Spain was inv
French 1809, defender of the constitut
and again in 1820. He became an e occasions, but returned on the death o
and took an active part against Carlos, 1

MIND, Godfrey, a Swiss painter,

MINGARELLI, F., an Ital. theolog

MINIANA, J. E., an Ital. historian,

MINOT, G. R., an Amer. historian,

MINOT, Laurence, an Eng. poet,

MINTO, Gilbert Elliot, Lord, commenced his political career in t Commons 1794, and was governor-gen gal 1807-1812; died 1814.

MINUCCIO, M., an Ital. prelate, 1

MINUTIUS-FELIX, Marcus, a cate, author of the 'Octavius,' a La written in defence of Christianity, attributed to Arnobius, 3d century.

MIOLLIS, A. F., a French general

MIONNET, T. E., a Fr. numismat

MIRABAUD, Jean Baptiste, a F
first known as a translator of Tasso and afterwards for his free inquiries i quities of religion, was born at Paris 1
teacher in the family of the duchess and died 1760. The 'System of N lished under his name, was written de Holbach, with the assistance of D

MIRABEAU, Boniface Riquet
De, known as 'Barrel-Mirabeau,' wa
the great tribune, and appeared in general as his adversary, being depu noblesse of Limousin. He was born having emigrated to Germany in 1
there two years afterwards, command
which he had raised for the service and with which he joined the army of

MIRABEAU, Victor Riquetti,
father of the preceding, was born in P and died 1789. He was a great po mist, and was called 'the friend of m title of one of his works. His pri nay, and he suffered an imprison-the Bastile.

HONORE GABRIEL RIQUETTI,
f the greatest orators of France,
ier of the revolution, was son of Marquis de Mirabeau, and was near Nemours, 1749. Though stablished in Provence, it was of d Mirabeau derived from his anius and passion which mark the e of seventeen, his father endeais spirit and reform his manners, nprisonment in the Isle of Rhé,
fortress there, under the autho-e Cachet. On being liberated he of dragoons, and after serving a eturned to Provence involved in ties, as a means of extrication arried the heiress of the Marig-his lady was already engaged to ttempt to gain her hand was bees, all which were overcome by nd intriguing policy of Mirabeau, st cruel means to accomplish his travagance, and his old debts still
, and his life was so scandalous, he terror of the peasantry around to have treated his wife with An opportunity being afforded u, he contrived in 1774 to place
e under arrest, first in the castle
a rock in the gulf of Marseilles,
a fortress of the Jura mountains.
ed place Mirabeau seduced the ntained, the sutler's wife, and in off Sophia de Ruffey, wife of the ier, the only being he ever really loss embittered all his after life, his genius, and render him the wn to history. The lovers took d, where Mirabeau commenced booksellers as a means of subsisthus engaged they were both agem, Madame de Monnier being vent, and Mirabeau conducted to [Castle of Vincennes.]

stle of Vincennes, where he re-rs and seven months. Previous ad been condemned by the parliament of Dijon, par contumace, and beheaded in effigy; and all his endeavours to obtain a trial during this long imprisonment were in vain; as were his efforts, pleading with surprising eloquence in his own cause, to recover his wife by law, who procured a divorce from him. The works which he had written up to this period were chiefly licentious productions, but he used the interval of his freedom in 1776 to publish an 'Essay on Despotism,' the fruit of which he had so bitterly tasted. Between the recovery of his liberty and the convocation of the 'Estates-General' in 1789, Mirabeau occupied himself as a political and historical writer, and becoming known to Calonne the finance minister, went to Berlin on some secret mission. His ambition, at the commencement of the national troubles, was to be returned to the estates-general as a deputy for the noblesse; but being rejected by his own order, he threw himself into the arms of the popular party, and was the first in the assembly to defy the royal authority. The occasion was the famous sitting of June 23d, 1789, when the deputies were charged to separate by the king, to the end that each of the three orders might meet in its own separate place on the morrow. The noblesse and the majority of the clergy departed after the king and his retinue, but the commons still lingered in uncertainty, and Mirabeau began to address them on the mission with which they were intrusted by the nation. He was interrupted by the marquis de Brézé, master of the ceremonies, who reminded them of the king's orders. The orator, flushed with anger, turned upon him with the glare of a lion—'Go, tell your master that we are here by the will of the people, and no power but the force of bayonets shall send us hence!' The commons rallied to his voice as to the call of a trumpet, and instantly decreed the inviolability of the people's representatives, and being joined by some of the noblesse and the clergy, formed themselves into the national assembly, of which body, in January 1791, Mirabeau became president, only two months before his death. We have not space to follow his career in the assembly, and the great questions decided by the magic of his eloquence. His characteristic was irresistible power, not only expressed in the deep bass of his voice, but represented in his defiant looks, his large head, his massy black hair, which he shook from his brow like the mane of a lion when he ascended the tribune, and his tall thick-set frame. 'His gestures were commands; his movements coups d' etat,' 'his sonorous phrases became the proverbs of the revolution.' He compared himself to Marius, 'less great for having exterminated the Cimbri than for having prostrated the Roman aristocracy.' The most graphic writers of every shade of opinion have exhausted their skill in words to reproduce him as the people's tribune, 'In fiery rough figure, with black Samson-locks under the slouch-hat, he steps along there,' writes Carlyle in The Procession, 'roughest lion's whelp ever littered of that rough breed!' After the first burst of passion as the orator, Mirabeau devised rationally, and intended honestly as the statesman. In less than two years from the commencement of his political career, it was terminated by his death, and it cannot be doubted that he foresaw clearly, and was prepared to resist strenuously, the evil designs of those who involved France in such calamities afterwards. It is difficult to believe that a man could be devoid both of shame and virtue in private life, and at the same time act sincerely as a politician, and yet it is highly probable that such was the case with Mirabeau. A man of wild ungovernable passions, he had only just discovered the arena in which he could devote them to one sufficient end, and therein lies the whole secret. Like Danton, he took money from the court to support his extravagances, and still pursued his own purposes. When cut off by a sudden illness, 2d April, 1791, he was in all likelihood preparing to dissolve the national assembly, and to undertake the guidance of the nation as minister. He was honoured with a magnificent public funeral, and his remains deposited in the pantheon, from which, two years afterwards, they were removed and replaced by those of Marat. [E.R.]

MIRAMION, M. Bonneau De, a French lady, celebrated as founder of a house of refuge for prostitutes, and of the Miramionites, or restored order of the daughters of Saint Genevieve, 1629-1696.

MIRANDA, Don Francisco, one of the earliest patriots of South America, was born about the middle of last century, and commenced his career as a soldier in the Spanish army. In 1783 he visited the United States and the principal countries of Europe, with a view to the independence of his country, and, in 1790, joined the French army under Dumouriez. Sharing in the unpopularity of that general, he was tried at the revolutionary tribunal and acquitted, but was banished by the directory, and at a later period by Buonaparte. From 1806 to 1810 he was engaged, with varied success, in the struggles of his countrymen for freedom. He was at length captured by the Spaniards, and died in prison at Cadiz, where he had been confined four years, 1816.

MIRANDA, R. De, a Spanish painter, last century.

MIRANDOLA, the name of a distinguished family in Italy, was first borne by Francesco Pico Della Mirandola, a chief of the Ghibellines, and prince of Modena, 1312-1321. The next, and most illustrious of the family, mentioned by biographers, was Giovanni Pico Della Mirandola, one of the greatest lights of his age (next article). After him are mentioned,—Giovanni Francesco, his nephew, a great theological and philosophical writer, massacred, with his son, by Galeotto, 1533. Galeotto, the nephew and murderer of the preceding, succeeded to the principality, and died 1551. Louis, son and successor of the latter, died 1574. Marie, the last of the dukes of Mirandola, was born 1688, and despoiled of his estates by the emperor Joseph I., in the Spanish war of succession. He retired with his family, who established themselves in France.

MIRANDOLA, John Pico Della, was born in 1463. The precocious prince of Mirandola and Concordia showed great accomplishments in his youth, and challenged disputation on abstruse subjects in many of the most famous universities. He had few matches in that age as a finished scholar and acute philosopher, a subtle debater and a polished gentleman, nay, he was deep in theology, and devout in his life. But his sun went down at mid-day, and he died at the age of thirty-two at Florence in 1494. His fond pursuit was an endeavour to harmonize the sophy of Aristotle and Plato. His wor published at Basel, folio, 1601, and co letters, a treatise on the Lord's Prayer, t dom of Christ, the 15th Psalm, and for a Holy Life, &c.

MIREVELT, M. J., a Dutch painter,

MIRTCHOND, M., a Persian hist.,

MISSON, Maximilian, a Fr. writ

MITAN, J., an engraver of Londo

MITCHELL, Andrew, a Scotch 1757, captured the Dutch fleet 1799.

MITCHELL, Sir Andrew, En dor to Berlin, time of Frederick II. and ambassador, time of William

MITCHELL, Sir David, a na

MITCHELL, J., a Scottish dra

MITCHELL, Thos., a classic contributor to the 'Quarterly Re

MITELLI, A., an Italian pai

MITFORD, George, a coun magistrate, father of Miss Mitf novelist, 1760-1842.

MITFORD, John, a misce

MITFORD, John Freem an eminent chancery lawye ment, and speaker of the 1801, subsequently lord cha one of the privy council, di

MITFORD, William, the Royal Academy, wa and educated for the law, and obtained a commi militia. His principal Greece,' an 'Essay on t 'Observations on the P some military treatises

MITHRIDATES, of Pontus, reigned 336-302 B.C. The th 266-222 B.C. The preceding, chiefly inhabitants of Sin B.C.. The sixth, Pontus to form ascended the thr sinated B.C. 12 cording to som omitted, is the

MITHRIDA of Pontus, a power, was s ceeded at the attaining his intrigue and the empire 90, had op of whose p To explai midable mention Roman and rev fact, th when the p the w of th the sufficiently characterize the na-al times. Mithridates found the st ripe for change, and he was leliverer by whole populations lard appeared. In the first flush e inhabitants of Asia Minor rose

a citizens dwelling among them,
l at the lowest computation that all ages and of both sexes, were ther by order of Mithridates, or act of vengeance, can never be k and indefatigable in his moves was soon master of nearly all s Greece taken by Archelaus, his o surprising was his talent for languages, that he was able to natives of twenty-two different him. The fortunes of Rome at 7, were intrusted to Sylla, who igh Greece; and, by the capture victories of Chæronea and Orl the Roman power in that coun-rs Mithridates disputed posses-ras at last compelled to succumb, more than 200,000 men, and to his hereditary dominions,—not,
more fighting during the execuwhich is sometimes regarded as een him and the Romans. After ia, which occurred in B.C. 78, another army, numbering about
h a determination to expel the ia. With this force he awaited ıd when the kingdom of Bithynia Roman province, which happened
icomedia, he invaded the coun-beaten the army of Cotta, laid Obliged to retreat by Lucullus, ed consul B.C. 74, he was fol-rious Romans into his own states,
a refuge in Armenia, then ruled refused to deliver him up. Here, acility of a Buonaparte, Mithri-
d great army, and, in B.C. 67,
d the Romans under Triarius, the
ullus, who had been recalled;
his success, rapidly recovered the dominions. The Romans, whose time trembling in the balance, vest Pompey with absolute power by him, in B.C. 76, the forces of completely routed in a night at-phrates. Far from giving up a d lasted nearly forty years, this , after remaining some time in denly appeared at the head of th the vast design of marching
he had reason to hope his forces
the Gauls. This gigantic enterevolt amongst his troops, headed rnaces, whom they proclaimed dates, after a single attempt to ead of his guards, endeavoured l afterwards to stab himself; and ling, caused one of his Gaulish
t an end to his existence. Thus 64, the most formidable enemy ver encountered, and, in many
the most remarkable men of those ages. He was honoured with a magnificent funeral by Pompey, and Rome breathed again on hearing of his unexpected and unhappy end. In regard to the charges of cruelty brought against him, it ought to be remembered, as pointed out by a recent historian of the Roman emperors, that the materials for the history of Mithridates are furnished by his enemies, the chief source of them being the memoirs of Sylla. [E.R.]

MITHRIDATES, the first of the name, king of Parthia, surnamed 'the Great,' succeeded B.C. 164, died, after conquering Media, Persia, Babylonia, and Mesopotamia, 139. The second, reigned 126-86 B.C. The third, 61-53 B.C.

MITTIE, J. S., a Polish physician, 1727-1795.

MITZLER, LAURENCE CHARLES DE KOLOF, a German composer, settled at Warsaw, 1711-1778.

MIZAULD, A., a Fr. astrologer, 1520-1578.

MOAWIAH, first Ommiade caliph, 661-680.

MOAWIAH II., third Ommiade caliph, 683-704.

MOCHI, F., an Italian sculptor, 1580-1646.

MODEER, A., a Swed. naturalist, 1738-1799.

MODIUS, F., a Flemish critic, 1546-1597.

MOEHLER, JOHN ADAM, professor of Romish theology at Tubingen, and author of many learned works in theology and church history, 1796-1836.

MOEHSEN, JOHN CH. WILLIAM, a learned physician of Germany, author of works on the history of medicine, 1722-1795.

MOELLENDORF, RICHD. JOACHIM HENRY, Count De, commander of the Prussian army during the dismemberment of Poland, and the successor of Brunswick on the Rhine, 1724-1816.

MOESER, J., a German author, 1720-1794.

MOESTLIN, M., a Lutheran divine, died 1650.

MOET, J. P., a French author, 1721-1806.

MOFFAN, N. DE, a Fr. historian, 16th cent.

MOHLER. See MOEHLER.

MOHNIKE, T. C. F., a Ger. savant, 1781-1841.

MOHSIN, FANI, a Persian poet, died 1670.

MOINE, P. C. LE, a French savant, 1723-1780.

MOIRA, F. RAWDON, earl of, a general and statesman of the period of Fox and Pitt, distinguished in the American war, and more lately in La Vendée, born 1754, died governor-general of the East Indies, 1829.

MOIR, DAVID MACBETH, born in 1798, at Musselburgh, in the county of Edinburgh, settled as a medical practitioner in his native town, and till his death practised his profession there with eminent ability and success. He became known in literature by poetical contributions to Blackwood's Magazine, which, beginning about 1817, were soon marked by the writer's signature of 'Delta,' and continued to be furnished very frequently during the remainder of his life. Some of these were collected in two separate volumes: 'The Legend of Genevieve, with other Tales and Poems,' published in 1825; and 'Domestic Verses,' (several of which are very beautiful,) in 1843. Destitute of strong invention and original imagination, the poetry of Delta is yet extremely pleasing, through its refinement of sentiment, its frequent flow of sweetly natural pathos, and its grace and delicacy both of diction and of imagery. He was still more successful in a very different walk, that of familiar comic portraiture in prose. His compositions of this kind, contributed to Blackwood at intervals during several years from 1824, were collected and published separately, as 'The Life of Mansie Wauch.' This autobiography of a country tailor, though clearly suggested by Galt's Scottish daguerreotypes, has great humour and originality of its own. Dr. Moir was likewise the author of 'Outlines of the Ancient History of Medicine,' and of a volume of Critical Remarks on Recent English Poetry, which had been delivered as lectures not long before his death. He died in July, 1851, regretted as one whose amiability and uprightness were quite worthy of his fine taste and various accomplishments. [W.S.]

MOIVRE. See De Moivre.

MOJON, J., an Italian chemist, 1776-1837.

MOLA, P. F., an Italian painter, 1609-1665.

MOLAI, James De, last grand master of the Templars, was born of a noble family in Burgundy, and entered the order about the year 1265. He was elected grand master, though absent from the East, on the death of William de Beaujeu, and was present at the recovery of Jerusalem by the Christians in 1299. After fresh reverses suffered in Palestine, Molai found himself in Cyprus, and was mustering his forces for renewing the conflict, when a summons from the pope obliged him to return to France in 1305. The avowed object of his recall was to take measures for uniting the Templar and Knights Hospitalers in one body. The want of union among the different military orders having occasioned much scandal and provoked many hazards in Jerusalem. Our knowledge of the facts is very obscure, but it is certain that the great wealth of the Templars had excited the avarice of Philip the Fair, and this, conjoined with political and religious reasons, produced an understanding between him and the pontiff for their destruction. On the 30th of October, 1307, all the Templars throughout France were arrested by surprise, and their property seized, while the inquisitors proceeded to examine them by torture and parole evidence on various charges of heresy, immorality, and unnatural crimes. As usual in such cases, many confessions were made to escape the agony of the rack, many died under the infliction, many recanted afterwards, and were burnt alive at the stake, and nearly all who suffered, exhibited the devotion and constancy of martyrs. James de Molai, and others of the order, appealed to the judgment of the pope, who held an œcumenical council on the subject in 1311, and in May, 1312, published a bull abolishing the order. The grand master, after a long imprisonment, was cruelly burnt alive by a slow fire, on the 18th of March, 1314, at Paris. An apology for the Templars was published by Father Lejeune, Paris, 1789, and a history of their condemnation, written by Pierre Dupuy, appeared at Brussels, probably a reprint, 1751. This illustrious order took its name from the temple of Solomon, and inherited the traditions and spiritual symbols connected with its foundation—the same, perhaps, that are faintly recognized in freemasonry. While it cannot be doubted that many such wandering knights were of licentious lives, and that their esoteric doctrines were inconsistent with the papal dominion, it is absurd to suppose that the crimes committed by individuals were the laws of their order. They were just a more chivalrous kind of Illuminati than those of the last century, possessed higher traditions, a more earnest purpose, great temptation to their destruction, wealth.

MOLARD, F. E., a Fr. engineer, 177

MOLE, Edward, a French magistra Henry IV., 1558-1614. His son, Matth cellor during the war of the Fronde, 158

MOLE, F. R., a French comedian, 17

MOLE, John, an English algebraist,

MOLESWORTH, Robert, Viscount, dor to Copenhagen in the reign of Wi author of an 'Account of Denmark,' 16

MOLEVILLE, A. F. B. See Berth

MOLIERE is the name which Jean Poquelin assumed on becoming a play which he is celebrated as the best comi France. He was born in 1622, in Paris, father was a 'tapissier,' or upholsterer, h an appointment in the royal household. designed for his father's trade, was poorly till he was fourteen years old; after whi been inspired by his grandfather with a for reading and for plays, he obtained parents, with difficulty, the means of st the Collège de Clermont; and ther making other acquaintances that gained for him, he attracted the notice and ap of the philosopher Gassendi. In his year, having been appointed to fill hi place as 'valet-de-chambre tapissier' to he began to attend at court: his taste for was now confirmed by the fashion which set by Cardinal Richelieu; and he put h the head of a few young persons who, first as amateurs, soon became actors sion.—From about 1645, Molière's hist amidst the wars of the Fronde: but he have wandered in the provinces with and to have composed slight pieces for 1653, when his first regular comedy, 'L was played at Lyons with great success. guedoc, next year, he produced 'Le Dép eux,' and, bent on his favourite pursuit to become the secretary of his old sch the Prince de Conti. In 1658, Molièr company, finding their way to Paris, re patronage of the court: he was by thi excellent actor; and he immediately sh he possessed both a power of observati original invention, and a skill in dramatic tion, much exceeding anything that had in his two earlier pieces. His clever literary and accomplished ladies, called cieuses Ridicules,' was followed by his farce, 'Le Cocu Imaginaire:' 'L'Ecole and 'Les Fâcheux,' made him still mo as a witty and correct painter of life and and the series of his plays continued to increased till 1673, when it was ended wi by 'Le Malade Imaginaire.' Some of dies, such as that last named, 'Le Méde Lui,' 'Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme,' an Dandin,' are chargeable, notwithstand liveliness, with degenerating into broad f several of his comedies, though they do support his fame at the extravagant which his countrymen raise it, are yet cient to justify his rank as at once one brilliant and skilful of all comic dramati

ry best of those that have written comedies formal French model. Such praise belongs ally to 'L'Ecole des Femmes' (1662), in is his famous character of Agnes; 'Le Mis-pe' (1666), of which Wycherly's 'Plain-r' is an imitation, with improvement in man-nt and degradation in morality; 'Le Tar-(1667), so deservedly celebrated for its power-ture of hypocrisy in the person of the hero;
'Les Femmes Savantes' (1672), in which dless pretensions are ridiculed with great f humour.—In 1662, being forty years old, he d an actress of seventeen, whose light-minded ry embittered his comfort. He is described ving been a thoughtful, generous, and good-
d man, and more popular with his players nanagers are wont to be. He prided himself skill in playing low comedy, as much at s on the fame he won as a dramatic poet.
e all but died on the stage. In acting n' on one of the earliest appearances of his st comedy, he was seized with convulsions, on suffocated by blood from the chest. His as refused admission to consecrated ground, king prevailed on the archbishop of Paris
w a private funeral. [W.S.]

[Tomb of Molière.]

LIERE, F. De, a French novelist, d. 1623.
LIERES, Joseph Privat De, a French
cian, known as a philosophical and mathe-al writer, 1677-1742.
LIN, or DUMOULIN, James, a French
cian, understood to be the original of the rado of Le Sage, 1666-1755.
LINA, A. De, a Span. philolog., 1496-1584.
LINA, J. L., a Mexican natural., 1740-1829.
LINA, L., a Spanish Jesuit, author of a
on Free Will, which divided the theologians
e day into two parties, called Jansenists and nists, 1535-1601.
LINERI, J. A., an Ital. painter, 1577-1640.
LINET, J., a French poet, died 1507.
LINIER, W., a French troubadour, 14th c.
LINOS, Michael, was born in the neigh-hood of Saragossa in 1627, but was chiefly ret in Rome. In 1670 he published in Spanish famous book, 'The Spiritual Guide,' which nslated into Italian, and published at Rome 81. The object of the treatise was to teach the pious mind must possess quietude in r to its spiritual progress, that for this purpose
it must be abstracted from visible objects, that thus drawn within himself, it becomes susceptible of heavenly influence, and that the special functions of intellect and will are merged wholly in God. This species of mysticism was named Quietism. As it was in antagonism with the emphasis laid by the Church of Rome on external ceremonies, it brought down upon its author the hostility of the Jesuits and the higher powers. Molinos was thrown into prison in 1685, and though he recanted his errors, yet was he in 1687 condemned to perpetual imprisonment, and he died unreleased in 1696. This system was espoused in France by Madame Guyon, and the good and great Fenelon, bishop of Cambray. [J.E.]

MOLLER, Daniel William, a learned Hungarian 1642-1712.

MOLLER, H., a Lutheran divine, 1530-1589.

MOLLER, J., a German philologist, 1661-1725.

MOLLERUS, J. H., a Dutch statesman, minister of war in 1814, 1753-1830.

MOLNAR, A., a Hungarian philologist, b. 1574.

MOLLOY, Charles, a political and dramatic writer, educated for the law, b. in Dublin; d. 1767.

MOLYN, Peter De, called 'the Elder,' a Dutch landscape painter and etcher, born about 1600. His son of the same name, called 'Cavaliere Tempestu,' and 'Pietro de Mulceribus, famous for his storm pieces, 1637-1701.

MOLYNEUX, William, an Irish mathematician and astronomer, author of a treatise on 'Dioptrics,' &c., 1656-1698. His son, Samuel, an astronomer and optician, was born 1689. Sir Thomas, brother of the latter, a physician and philosophical writer, died 1733.

MOLYNEUX, Sir Wm., a brave officer, dist. at the battle of Flodden, reign of Henry VIII.

MOLZA, Francesco Maria, a licentious Italian, distinguished for his versatile skill in poetry, 1489-1544. His grand-daughter, Tarquinia, remarkable for her extensive learning and poetical talents, 1542-1617.

MONACI, L. De, a Venetian annalist, d. 1429.

MONALDESCHI, Marquis De, a nobleman attendant on Christina, queen of Sweden, whom she caused to be assassinated at Fontainbleau, 1657.

MONARDES, N., a Spanish naturalist, d. 1578.

MONBEILLARD. See Montbeillard.

MONBODDO, Lord. See Burnett.

MONCE, F. De La, a painter of Munich, d. 1753.

MONCEY, R. Adrian Jeannot, Duke de Conegliano, a French marshal, distinguished in the wars of Napoleon, and governor of the 'Invalides' when the ashes of the emperor were brought from St. Helena, 1754-1842.

MONCIEL, T. De, a Fr. statesman, 1790-1831.

MONCONYS, B. De, a wr. of travels, 1611-65.

MONCRIF, Francis Augustin Paradis De, a French poet and literateur, 1687-1770.

MONET, Philibert, a Fr. savant, 1566-1643.

MONETI, F., an Italian satirist, 1635-1712.

MONGAULT, N. H., a Fr. writer, 1674-1746.

MONGE, Gaspard, born at Beaune in 1746; died at Paris, 28th July, 1818: one of the very greatest of those illustrious scientific men who graced and exalted the Republic, the Consulate, and the Empire. Educated as a military engineer at the college at Mezières, he was transferred to the school of the Louvre in 1780, and thus was on the spot, prepared to sustain his part in those subsequent stupendous events which stunned Europe. It must not be supposed that in the Revolution Monge figured as a politician; neither at any period of his life did he evince sympathy with the mere struggles of Party; but among the foremost, he came, with all the energy of genius, in aid of the Convention, when France first stood at bay, and then single-handed beat back the Coalition and shivered their Empires. That was indeed a time! The super-human gallantry of the nation, and the prodigious force with which it rose in defiant vindication of its existence and rights, so strike one with amazement, and even at this late day so stir the blood, that, for the moment, one inclines to forget its crimes. It must be recollected, that not only was the enemy on the frontier, but the supply was stopped of all those substances, even to the raw material, which had to be wrought into weapons of defence; the means of procuring iron, steel, saltpetre, gunpowder, and many articles of prime necessity 'were,' says Biot, 'created during the reign of Terror.' The superintendence, or in terms more appropriate, the creation of the Engineering, fell in large part to Monge; and it was out of his herculean exertions to man the fortresses and instruct the new army, that those world-famous schools—the Ecoles Normale and Polytechnique—at that time sprung up. Nor were the ties ever severed that bound him to the fortunes of France. Side by side with their young Buonaparte during the ever-memorable campaigns of Italy, he afterwards formed one of the expedition to Egypt, whose records his pen has so largely enriched: and he kept the warm friendship of the Emperor, to the close of Napoleon's own career. It will be remembered as one of the earliest and meanest acts of the Restoration—that purging of the Institute, which got rid, by expulsion, of several associates to whom it then owed great part of its splendour: surely it is brighter honour to MONGE that he shared the fate of CARNOT, than if he had preferred to repent and be rewarded with Laplace!—Monge's achievements, however, were not merely those of Action. He contributed in many ways to improve analysis, and made important steps in the application of analysis to Geometry: but that which makes his name imperishable, is a stroke of pure genius, constituting an epoch in the Science it advanced. While yet a young officer in the engineers, the happy thought occurred to Monge, that by a new and peculiar method of projection, every solid figure might be represented on plane canvas, so accurately that the relations of its various points might be determined by rule and compass. Applying his idea in the first place to the solid works of fortification, &c., he soon discerned that he held in his hand the principles of a Geometry altogether new, and of exhaustless capacity; and that remarkable method was elaborated accordingly, which is now known as 'Descriptive Geometry.' A new Geometry, by every right,—the Method of Monge has already conferred the highest benefits on all departments of practical science; and it has opened to pure Geometry long courses of investigation, to which analysis alone had previously the key. No work yet exists exposing the foundation and nature of Descriptive Geometry as well as Monge's own: through its perspicuity, its ta prehensiveness, it ranks as a class matics. It is said that the oral expo remarkable person were as fascinatin

His pupils considered him the ide sophic teacher; and a few who still tinue to speak of his lessons as amo delightful recollections.

MONGELLAZ, MADAME, a F
author of 'The Influence of Wome ners,' 1798-1830.

MONGEZ, JOHN ANDREW, a Fre
and naturalist, 1751-1788. His broth author of several historical works, 17

MONGITORE, A., a Fr. antiquar

MONK. GEORGE MONK, gene commonwealth, and duke of Albem restoration, was born in Devonshire devoted himself early to a military acquired some experience in the wa
tinent, when the civil war broke ou between Charles and his parliame first served on the king's side; but prisoner in 1645, and after lying tw son, he consented to take a comm parliamentarian army. He comma his new masters in Ireland, where he himself greatly. He afterwards act ant-general under Cromwell in Sc
he aided much in gaining the victo Cromwell left him with 5,000 me
the subjugation of Scotland, a wor effectually performed. He was nex an admiral of the commonwealth's shared in the perils and the glori perate struggle with the Dutch Blake so successfully conducted.
soon back to command in Scotland
years he kept that kingdom in helpl to Cromwell, and in unprecedented o quillity. On the first protector's proclaimed Richard Cromwell as O
sor; but he soon discovered the we new ruler, and determined to follow
which he would both connect him strongest party, and also lay that un
est possible obligation to him.
for some months; listening to the all sides, and saying little in return.
his army from Scotland to London,
to dupe the parliamentarians and the very last. He had made up his royalist cause was the strongest, a on negociations with the Stuart prin
he secured high rewards for himsel
of conducting their restoration.
1660, Monk threw off the mask alt
manded the dissolution of the re
long parliament, and ordered a free vened. He introduced a messenger fr
the new parliament; and on the 3d received Charles II. on the beach a was rewarded by the dukedom of A large grants of offices and money.
sea again in 1666, against his al
Dutch, and maintained his reputati and conduct. He died in 1670.
strong nerves, strong common sens
an accommodating conscience, a c

changing countenance, and an imperturbmper. He showed considerable skill in civil nent as well as in military affairs. He had ness enough to see what was best for the na-interest; and, if it also promoted his own, he ility and vigour enough to bring it to pass.
s never unsettled by enthusiasm in deter-his ends, and he was never checked by le in choosing his means. [E.S.C.]

NK, MARY, a poetical writer, died 1715.

NK, NICHOLAS, brother of the famous duke
marle, became bishop of Hereford, d. 1661.

NMOUTH, JAMES, duke of, whose at-
to place the crown of England on his head an interesting and bloody chapter in our y, was a natural son of Charles II., by Lucy
rs, and was born at Rotterdam, in 1619.
s brought up in France as a catholic, and e restoration of Charles, was treated with mark of affection by him, and acquired ime popularity by the possession of qualities
h are always dear to the people—generosity courage, united to a handsome person and le manners. It was reported that the king been privately married to Lucy Walters, and popular dislike of the duke of York, afters James II., gave occasion to hopes that her ight succeed to the crown—hopes which were ripening into plots under the guidance of such as Shaftesbury—when the king was pre-
d upon by his brother to declare in council
the duke of Monmouth had no claims to macy. In 1679, Monmouth was intrusted a command in Scotland, and defeated the anters at the battle of Bothwell Bridge, June, but was soon afterwards sent beyond at the instigation of his uncle. A few hs afterwards he returned without leave, and me the centre of the popular movements ked by the arbitrary conduct of Charles, and read of the succession in the person of the of York—the same struggle in which the
of Lord William Russel, and Algernon
y were sacrificed. The result to Monmouth his exile in Holland, where he resided with Whig refugees until the accession of James nted him with the long desired opportunity ying the issue with his sword. It is one of problems of history how far the prince of ge favoured this enterprise. The duke
d in the neighbourhood of Lyme, in June, with only 80 followers, and within twenty-hours was at the head of 1,500 men, while royal troops were mustering to oppose him,
r the command of Churchill, afterwards the us duke of Marlborough, and hundreds of ns were arrested for alleged complicity.
re the action took place which terminated this enterprise, Monmouth was proclaimed king
mmton, and had mustered nearly 6,000 men, oldiers and rustics—none of the Whig ariscy or the regular army joining him, as he been led to hope. The hostile forces met at gmoor, in Somersetshire, and more than a mand of the undisciplined followers of Monuth were killed before they yielded the field.
e duke was captured in a miserable condition,
r Ringwood, in the New Forest, and was ated on Tower Hill, on the 15th of July.
The executioner was John Ketch, who had also beheaded Russel. Monmouth was the idol of the people, who refused for a long time to believe that he was really executed; and it is curious to speculate on what might have been the issue of his enterprise had he deferred it a year or two longer, when the undisguised tyranny of James, and the hopes of the catholics were prostrated by the glorious revolution of 1688. [E.R.]

MONNET, A. G., a French chemist, 1734-1817.

MONNET, J., a French writer, died 1785.

MONNIER, L. G., a Fr. engraver, 1733-1804.

MONNIER, P. LE, a Fr. philoso., 1575-1657.

MONNIER, SOPHIE DE RUFFY, Marquise De, a French lady of great personal and mental accomplishments, who became the mistress of Mirabeau, and committed suicide after the death of one of her subsequent lovers, 1789.

MONNOT, A., a French anatomist, 1765-1820.

MONNOT, P. T., a Fr. sculptor, 1658-1733.

MONNOYE, B. DE LA, a Fr. poet, 1641-1727.

MONOD, H., a Swiss statesman, 1753-1833.

MONOD, P., a Jesuit of Savoy, 1586-1644.

MONOYER, F. B., a Flemish painter, 1635-99.

MONPON, H., a French composer, 1804-1841.

MONRO, ALEXANDER, the famous professor of anatomy, and one of the first founders of the reputation borne by the medical school of Edinburgh, was born in London, 1697, and finished his studies at Paris, under the eye of Boerhaave. He was appointed professor at Edinburgh, where he had first studied, in 1719; and published his first work, 'The Anatomy of the Bones,' 1726. He contributed many papers on anatomical, physiological, and practical subjects to the transactions of a society which he originated in Edinburgh, and of which he was secretary; these were afterwards published in eight volumes. Died 1767.

MONRO, ALEXANDER, eldest son of the preceding. See MUNRO, ALEXANDER.

MONRO, DONALD, second son of Alexander, author of a 'Treatise on Medical and Pharmaceutical Chemistry,' 1731-1802.

MONRO, JOHN, a wr. on insanity, 1715-1791.

MONROE, JAMES, fifth president of the United States of America, elected 1817 and 1821, d. 1831.

MONS, J. H. VON, a Belg. chemist, 1765-1842.

MONSIAU, N. A., a Fr. painter, 1754-1837.

MONSYING, P. A., a Fr. composer, 1729-1817.

MONSON, SIR WILLIAM, a writer on naval tactics, disting. against the Dutch, 1569-1643.

MONSTIER, A. DU, a Fr. historian, d. 1662.

MONSTRELET, ENGUERRAND DE, a provost of Cambray, author of annals, 1390-1453.

MONTAGU, the name of a noble family, descended from one of the Norman barons who accompanied William the Conqueror to England. The most noted in English history are—EDWARD, who contributed to the overthrow of the duke of Somerset, in the reign of Edward VI., died 1556. EDWARD, earl of Sandwich, a general, admiral, and statesman, who served the commonwealth in company with Blake, and became a royalist of the restoration, born 1625, killed in combat with the Dutch 1672. CHARLES, earl of Halifax, a statesman of the reign of William III., 1661-1715. JOHN, fourth earl of Sandwich, a diplomatist and statesman, author of a voyage round the Mediterranean, 1718-1792. GEORGE, an admiral, 1750-

1829. And besides these, three celebrated names in the literary history of England mentioned below.

MONTAGU, Elizabeth, formerly Miss Robinson, and wife of Edward Montagu, Esq., grandson of the first earl of Sandwich, a lady of great literary ability, author of an 'Essay on the Writings and Genius of Shakspeare,' 1720-1800.

MONTAGU, G., a naturalist, died 1815.

MONTAGU, Lady Mary Wortley, whose family name was Pierrepoint, was the daughter of the earl (afterwards duke) of Kingston. She was born in 1690, received a solid and somewhat masculine education, and when she was twenty years old translated, from the Latin, not the Greek, the Encheiridion of Epictetus. Marrying, in 1712, Mr. Edward Wortley Montagu, she became, through her beauty and wit, at once a chief ornament of fashionable society, and a flattered friend of Addison, Pope, and other men of letters. In 1716 she went abroad with her husband, then appointed ambassador to Constantinople. Her residence of two years in the East produced her celebrated 'Letters,' pieces abounding both in liveliness and in observation, and altogether reckoned deservedly among the very best things of their kind. On her return home she was able, not without much opposition, to introduce in England the practice of inoculation for small-pox, to which, seeing it in Turkey, she had submitted her own son. She wrote verses freely for many years, and continued to keep up her intimacy with literary men; but she quarrelled with Pope, and was pilloried by him in some of his bitterest verses. She spent several years on the continent, chiefly residing near Venice; and, coming again to England, died in 1762. Her daughter married George III.'s favourite minister, the earl of Bute. [W.S.]

MONTAGU, Edward Wortley, son of the preceding, and au. of 'Reflections on the Rise and Fall of the Ancient Republics.' He exhibited traits of a most abandoned character from his school-boy days to the last hour of his life, 1713-1776.

MONTAIGNE, Michel, Seigneur De, was born in 1533, in the French province of Perigord, on the small estate from which his noble and ancient family took their name. The course of his boyish education was very eccentric: among other peculiarities of it, he was taught Latin by speaking it in childhood, to the exclusion of French, which he learned afterwards as a foreign tongue. When we remember that Montaigne was a Gascon by birth and breeding, this fact may account for the comparative purity of his style. He was sent to the college of Guienne at Bourdeaux, at a very early age, before George Buchanan had ceased to be a teacher there. Being a younger son, he studied law, and was for some years a counsellor in the parliament of Bourdeaux: but, succeeding early to his father's moderate property, he was for the remainder of his life a country gentleman. He resided almost constantly at his own chateau, making, however, tours in France, visiting Paris, (where he had an honorary post in the royal household,) and journeying through Italy for his health in his later years. Living in the troubled time of the League, he was, though attached to the royal party, disgusted by many things done on both sides; and, obstinately remaining inactive, and distrusted by both factions, he was once driven from his house, and had his estate ravaged. About 1572, when h horror at the massacre of St. Bart began to record the fruits of his desu and musings. His 'Essays' first appe but were repeatedly altered, and very m till they reached their complete sha They show much of historical and othe with a great amount of shrewd and rambling thought. They are made amusing and interesting by the garru with which the writer keeps himsel before us; parading, without reserve, tures of his character, his generous g ness, his love of ease, his triumphant his singular and touching combinati feeling with sceptical doubts, on po gion as well as of philosophy. He d in the sixtieth year of his age. His embracing the whole circle of huma been a rich storehouse of ideas fo authors; and, not long ago, the a Shakspeare was found on a copy of English translation of the 'Essays.'

[Tomb of Montaigne.]

MONTALBANI, Count J. B., an I in the Venetian service, author of a manners of the Turks, 1596-1646. Hi

Antonio, a naturalist, 1630-169 brother of Count Montalbani, a na philosopher, 1601-1671.

MONTALDI, P. J., an Ital. Hebrai

MONTALEMBERT, Adrian De engineer distinguished as a general years' war, and at the period of the the adviser of Carnot, 1714-1800.

MONTALEMBERT, Mark Rene ria, Count De, a French general and who became an exile at the period of tion and served in the English a restoration, 1777-1831.

MONTALTO, the name of two do —1. Leo, reigned 1383-1384. elected 1393, deposed and re-elected again 1411.

MONTANO, or DA MONTI, Jo an Italian physician, and translator o Latin classics, 1488-1551.

MONTANO, J. B., an Ital. archit

MONTANO, R. G., a Span. prote

MONTANUS, the founder of a in the second century, lived in the vi aban, on the confines of Phrygia. remarks, 'the Phrygian temperamen

orm of nature-worship, filled with magic and es for which the province was already famous.
pecial supernatural element of Christianity
with amazement such a people—its miracles, es, and early gifts of knowledge and prorhapsody. The object of Montanus was to linate everything else in the church to those uman and brilliant endowments, and to cast
e shade its ordinary teaching and govern-

Thus he maintained that he was the pro-Paraclete—not the Divine Spirit, indeed, e predicted enlivener, purifier, and Comfor-He threw himself into states of transport, ved with fluent sublimity. A new church unded at Pepuza, their New Jerusalem, and , tongues, and nervous spasms, were a daily cle. The followers of Montanus, among were two ladies, caught the infection, and ntagious mesmerism quickly spread. It ought that the apostolic age was revived, at the phenomena of Pentecost were to afed in augmented and interminable splen-

A transcendental code of morality was oclaimed, and in which fasts, penances, and y, held a prominent place. Tertullian was ted by the delusion, and became the most s and eloquent advocate of the system. nism, in the essence of it, has not been d to Phrygia, for it has been often sed in Europe, and has even crossed the ic. [J.E.]

NTANUS, Ben. Arias, a Spanish Orien-and antiquarian, 1527-1598.

NTAUSIER, Charles De Sainte Maure, e, a French statesman, distinguished for his s conduct during the civil wars of the , 1610-1690.

NTBEILLARD, Philibert Gueneau, a naturalist, and assistant of Buffon in the sition of his great work, 1720-1785.

NTBELIARD, Leop. Eberhart, Prince officer in the service of Austria, 1670-1725.

NTBRUN, C. Dupay, Seigneur De, a pro-t commander disting. at Jarnac and Mont-ur, in the civil wars of France, 1530-1574.

NTCALM DE ST. VERAN, Louis Joseph, uis De, a French commander, killed at the g of Quebec, 1712-1759.

NTCHAL, C. De, a Fr. prelate, 1589-1651.

NTCHRESTIEN, Anthony, a French play-ht, and writer on political economy, d. 1621.

NTEBELLO, Duc De. See Lannes.

NTECORVINO, J. De, a French miner, n as a missionary to Tartary, 1247-1330.

NTECUCULLI, Raimondo, Count Di, an rian general and writer on tactics, 1608-1681.

NTECUCULLI, Sebastiano Di, a gentle-of Ferrara, put to death on the allegation of ng caused the death of the son of Francis I., osed to have been poisoned in 1536.

NTEGRE, A. F. Jenin De, a French phy-n, and wr. on animal magnetism, 1779-1808.

NTEMAYOR, G. De, a Sp. poet, 1520-62.

NTEMERLO, J. S., an Italian poet, 1515-2. Hiason, Nicholas, histor. of Tortona, 1618.

NTENAULT, C. P., a Fr. writer, died 1749.

NTERCHI, J., an Ital. antiquarian, 17th c.

NTEREAU, P. De, a Fr. architect, d. 1266.

NTEREUL, or MONTEREUIL, Bernardin De, a French Jesuit, known as an ecclesiastical historian, &c., 1596-1646.

MONTESPAN, Frances Athenais, Marchioness De, one of the mistresses of Louis XIV., was born 1641, married to the marquis de Montespan in 1663, and supplanted the duchess de la Valliere in the affections of the king, 1668. She maintained her influence over Louis several years, and had three children by him, but was compelled to give way on his marriage with Madame de Maintenon. Died 1717.

[Birth-place of Montesquieu.]

MONTESQUIEU, Carl De Secondat, Baron De, was born on the 18th January, 1689, at the castle of La Brède, near Bourdeaux, whence he held another title of nobility. He was a very hard student in his youth. He seems at first to have devoted himself to physical science, but he turned his more mature attention to law, the hereditary profession of his family. In the year 1717 he succeeded both to the family estate and to the perpetual presidency of the parliament of Bourdeaux. While he occupied that high judicial office he laboriously performed its functions. His conscience would not permit him to sacrifice the public business to his literary and philosophical tastes, and he resigned his chair in 1726. He had five years earlier printed the most popular, but not the most important of his works, the 'Lettres Persannes.' A violent literary dispute has arisen from the question whether he withdrew or disavowed some of the religious opinions in this work, with the view of removing the king's opposition to his being a member of the Academy—at all events he succeeded in gaining his object. In 1748 he published his 'Esprit des Lois,' one of the most laborious books ever written. It had an immense influence on the literature of the age, and founded that method of philosophising and finding out facts to justify opinion, which characterized his followers of the French school, and entered in a great measure into the spirit of the Scottish school of philosophy. Like most original minded men he brought to his work a degree of genius and knowledge which his imitators could not cope with, and which concealed, in his hands, the defects of the system. His life is the history of his works, and the even tenor of his days was little disturbed by external events. Little is known of his personal character and habits, and it is hence interesting to find a curious notice of him in the memoirs of Lord Charlemont. He, when a young man, visited Montesquieu. They set off together on a ramble, when, as the narrator says, 'we soon arrived at the skirts of a beautiful wood, cut into walks, and paled round, the entrance to which was barricaded by a moveable bar, about three feet high, fastened with a padlock—"Come," said he, searching in his pocket, "it is not worth our while to wait for the key; you, I am sure, can leap as well as I can, and this bar shall not stop me." So saying he ran at the bar and fairly jumped over it, while we followed him with amazement, but not without delight to see the philosopher likely to become our play-fellow. This behaviour had exactly the effect which he meant it should have. He had observed our awkward timidity, and was determined to rid us of it.'—(Memoirs, 33). Montesquieu died in February, 1755. [J.H.B.]

MONTET, J., a French chemist, 1722-1782.

MONTETH, or MONTEITH, ROBERT, names common to two Scottish writers, one on historical subjects, and the other a collector of all the epitaphs of Scotland; last century.

MONTEZUMA, the first of the name, king of Mexico, reigned 1455-1483. The second, Mexican emperor at the time of the Spanish invasion, succeeded 1502, and died of a wound from a stone while in the hands of the Spaniards 1520. One of his children, baptized by the Spaniards, became the stock of the counts of Montezuma and Tula.

MONTFAUCON, BERNARD DE, a French Benedictine, distinguished as a critical and antiquarian writer, 1655-1741.

MONTFORT, A. DE, a Dutch painter, 1532-83.

MONTFORT, L. M. GRIGNON DE, a Fr. Jesuit and missionary, kn. as a relig. founder, 1673-1716.

MONTFORT, SIMON DE. 1. This name, famous in the middle age history of France and England, was first borne by a knight crusader, descended from the lords of Montfort, near Paris. His career dates from 1199, when he went to the Holy Land, companion-in-arms of Thibault, count of Champagne, but it becomes of more historical importance in 1208, when he was appointed chief of the barbarous crusade against the Albigenses, then protected by Raymond, count of Toulouse. In 1213 he obtained a great victory at Muret over the confederated armies of that prince, of his brother-in-law, Peter, king of Arragon, and the nobles who had united with them, and was then appointed by the pope sovereign of all the countries conquered from the alleged heretics. He was killed while besieging Toulouse, 1218. 2. The SIMON DE MONTFORT of English history, was a younger son of the preceding, who quitted France either in 1231 or 1236, in consequence of a dispute with Queen Blanche, mother of Saint Louis. He was the heir of estates in this country, which had been held by his family in the reign of King John, and on coming to settle here, received possession of them with the title of earl of Leicester. Henry III., in fact, received him into great favour, permitted him to marry his sister, the countess dowager of Pembroke, and appointed him lieutenant-general, or seneschal, of Gascony. From this time the interest of English history turns on the disputes between this turbulent subject at the head of a confederacy of the barons and the crown, the first incident in it being Montfort's re government. In 1258 Henry had parliament, to procure supplies for of Sicily. The occasion was seized and the barons, to make an armed pr his government, the end of which pointment of twenty-four of their n Montfort as president, to administer the kingdom. Such a truce could no nature of things be of long dur
king and his son, Prince Edward,
ing to reconquer the royal authorit arms, were defeated at the battle of an event which transferred the go reality, to Simon de Montfort, though ledged the bishop of Chichester and Gloucester as his associates. In the y
January, 1265, De Montfort conven
ment, in which representatives were s boroughs for the first time on recor originated the House of Commons.
the leader of the popular party, and to take the field by the disaffection o Gloucester, who soon after, with many barons, joined Prince Edward, previ
tive with his father in the camp of M battle of Evesham, 5th August, 1265 contest. Simon de Montfort, overpow bers, fell in the midst of his friends, a his family succeeded as a matter of cou

MONTGERNON, LOUIS BASIL C.
counsellor of the parliament of Pari
his vindication of the miracles wro tomb of the Abbé Paris, for which h
soned in the Bastile, and then exiled,

MONTGLOT, MARQUIS DE, a F
rian, camp-marshal time of Louis XI
XIV., 1610-1675.

MONTGOLFIER, the name of t
natives of France, celebrated in the hi balloons, and in the manufacture of elder, JOSEPH, lived 1740-1810.
JAMES STEPHEN, born 1745, commen
riments 1782, died 1799.

MONTGOMERY, the name of a sprung from ROGER DE MONTGOM
panion-in-arms of William the Con son of Roger was banished the kin reign of Henry I., and one of his des created earl of Eglinton by James IV.
BRIEL MONTGOMERY, a member of
had the misfortune to wound Henry nament, of which the king died, 155 wards distinguished himself in the
of France, and was beheaded by catholic queen, Catherine de Medici,

MONTGOMMERY, RICHARD, an
dist. as a partizan of the Americans,

MONTI, J., an Italian botanist, 1
MONTI, P. M., an Italian cardina

MONTI, VINCENZO, an Italian p
matist, kn. also as a versatile politicia

MONTJOIE, F. C. GALART D
royalist and man of letters, author o
of the French Monarchy,' and of a Robespierre's Conspiracy,' 1756-1816

MONTMORENCY, the name of a family, the first of whom was BOUC
the great feudatories of the 10th cen distinguished in succeeding ages are,—MATTHEW, grand constable 1130, regent during the crusade 1147, died 1160. MATTHEW, grandson of the latter, called the great constable, served in the crusade against the Albigenses, and under the regency of Blanche, during the minority of her son, Louis IX., died 1230. CHARLES, marshal and governor of Normandy, died 1381. ANNE, constable of France, born 1493, companion-in-arms and in captivity of Francis I., 1525-26, gained the battle of Dreux against the Calvinists 1562, and that of St. Denis, where he fell gloriously, covered with wounds, 1567. HENRY I., second son of Anne, born 1544, fought with his father, and was created marshal in Piedmont 1566. He was one of the first to recognize Henry IV., who made him constable 1593; died 1614. HENRY II., son of the latter, born 1595, was named admiral by Louis XIII. as early as 1612, and greatly distinguished himself against the Calvinists. He was beheaded, after vainly opposing himself to the ambition of Richelieu, 1632. He was the last of the first ducal branch of this house. His sister, CHARLOTTE MARGARET, became wife of the second Henry, prince of Condé, and mother of the great Condé; died 1650.

MONTMORT, PETER RAYMOND DE, a French geometrician, the disciple and friend of Malebranche, 1678-1719.

MONTPENSIER, ANNE MARIA LOUISA D'ORLEANS, known as Mademoiselle, Duchess De, was the daughter of Gaston, duke of Orleans, brother of Louis XIII. and of Marie de Bourbon. She is dist. for her part in the wars of the Fronde, and is au. of 'Memoirs' and some romances, 1627-1693.

MONTPENSIER, ANTHONY PHILIP D'ORLEANS, Duc De, younger brother of Louis Philippe, and an officer under Dumouriez, 1775-1807.

MONTPENSIER, CATHERINE MARIA OF LORRAINE, Duchesse De, daughter of the duke of Guise, and wife of the second Louis, duc de Montpensier, noted for her hatred against Henry III., during the wars of the league, 1552-1596.

MONTPENSIER, CHARLES. See BOURBON.

MONTPENSIER, FRANCIS DE BOURBON, Duc De, known as the prince dauphin, distinguished in the religious wars, and one of the first to acknowledge Henry IV., 1539-1592.

MONTROSE, JAMES GRAHAM, marquis of, b. 1612, was in early life attached to the covenanters, but afterwards entered the service of Charles I., for whom he gained several advantages. After the death of Charles I. he retired to France, and then to Germany, and took part in the last campaigns of the seven years' war. He next made a descent on Scotland in favour of Charles II., but, abandoned by his troops, he was delivered to the parliament, and executed at Edinburgh 1650.

MONTUCCI, A., an It. philologist, 1762-1829.

MONTUCLA, J. S., a Fr. mathem., 1725-99.

MONVEL, J. M. BOUTET DE, a French dramatic writer and actor, 1745-1811.

MOOR, KAREL DE, a Dutch paint., 1656-1738.

MOORCROFT, WILLIAM, a writer of travels to the Himalayan parts of Hindostan, died 1823.

MOORE, EDWARD, son of a nonconformist minister of Abingdon, distinguished as a poet and miscellaneous writer, 1712-1757.

MOORE, F., an African traveller, last century.

MOORE, JOHN, an eminent prelate and promoter of letters in the reign of William and Mary, born 1662, died bishop of Ely, 1714.

MOORE, JOHN, archbishop of Canterbury, was b. in Gloucestershire, where his father was a grazier, 1733; promoted to the primacy 1783; d. 1805.

MOORE, JOHN, a physician and miscellaneous writer, was born at Stirling 1729, where his father, the Rev. Charles Moore, was minister of the Episcopal church. In 1772, he set out on his travels as the medical attendant and tutor of the young duke of Hamilton, returning home in 1778. The observations made in the course of their extended tour over Europe, furnished the materials of his most interesting works. Died 1802.

MOORE. SIR JOHN MOORE was born at Glasgow in 1761. He was the son of Dr. John Moore, the well-known physician and author. He entered the army young, and soon rose to rank and distinction. He served in Corsica in 1785, and afterwards in the West Indies, in Holland, and Egypt. In 1802 he did permanent benefit to our army by disciplining several regiments as light infantry in a camp of instruction in Kent. He then introduced several tactical improvements, which have since been generally adopted in our service. After taking part in two expeditions to Sicily and Sweden, Moore received his most important command in 1808. He was then placed at the head of the British army, which was to co-operate with the patriots in Spain and Portugal, against the French invaders of the Peninsula. Moore advanced through the north of Spain to Salamanca; but the Spanish armies with which he was to co-operate were routed by the French; Madrid, which he was to protect, surrendered while Moore was on his march; the reports and promises of the Spanish juntas and their agents proved to be mere bombast and lies; and Moore found that the whole of the vast French armies of the Peninsula were gathering round him to overwhelm the small force that he commanded. A rapid retreat to the northern coast of Spain was the only chance of saving the English troops from destruction or surrender. This retreat was made in the midst of the severe winter of 1808-9, through the rugged country of Galicia; and it is almost unparalleled in military history for the sufferings of the retiring army. Moore at last reached Corunna, closely pursued by superior forces under Soult. Transports lay in the harbour to receive the British troops; but Soult pressed hastily forward, so that it was impossible to effect the embarkation without either checking the enemy by a battle, or entering into a convention. Moore indignantly spurned the dishonouring proposal of a convention, and on the 16th January, 1809, drew his men out, though exhausted and shattered by the horrors of their retreat, to face the advancing French before Corunna. The troops did their duty, and repulsed Soult's columns on every point with severe loss; but the victory was dearly purchased by the death of General Moore, who was struck down by a cannon shot, just as he had called on the 42d Highlanders to 'Remember Egypt,' and reminded them that 'though powder was short they had their bayonets.' Moore's wound was mortal: but he survived long enough to know that the enemy were beaten, and to remind his surviving friends that 'he had always wished to die in that way.' His last words were a hope that 'the people of England would be satisfied, that his country would do him justice.' He was buried that very night, 'with his martial cloak around him,' in a grave hastily dug on the ramparts of Corunna. The glorious stanzas of Wolfe have ennobled that burial; but it ought to be mentioned to the honour of the French as well as of the English general, that Soult, when he entered Corunna after the embarkation and departure of the British, ordered a fitting monument to be erected to Sir John Moore. Moore's only fault was an excessive sensibility to popular opinion, which impaired that political courage, which (as Nelson has truly said) is essential to a great commander. But a braver soldier, a more humane and excellent man, never stepped on a battle-field, than he who died the death of fame in command of the British army at Corunna. [E.S.C.]

[Tomb of Sir John Moore.]

MOORE, Sir Jonas, a mathemat. 1617-1681.

MOORE, Philip, a minister resident in the Isle of Man, known as a Manx scholar, died 1783.

MOORE, Thomas, was born in 1780, in Dublin, where his father carried on business with no great success as a wine merchant. He showed from boyhood an imaginative and musical turn; and various circumstances concurred in impressing him early with that indignant and melancholy sense of the wrongs and sufferings of Ireland, to which his poetry owes so many of its most powerful touches. His family professed the Roman Catholic creed, as he himself always continued to do; and among his father's friends were several of the United Irishmen, with others who were ardently bent on extorting redress from the government. The political disturbances broke out into rebellion while Moore was a student at Trinity College; he wrote anonymously for a seditious newspaper, and was only saved from implicating himself deeply by faithfully keeping a promise which his mother prevailed on him to give.—He took his degree in 1798, and went to London to keep his terms for the bar. Poetry, however, had taken possession of his mind; and the amatory cast which always prevailed in his poems, was allowed in some of the earliest of them to degenerate into looseness. His gay translation of A lished in 1800, was followed by 'Poems of Thomas Little;' and the with which these and another miscella of his were treated in the Edinburgh duced the abortive duel between Moor At this period the poet's means were and his prospects discouragingly un his rising reputation as a song-write accomplishments, and his pleasing m tated his introduction into aristocrati 1804, having obtained a registrarship through the patronage of Lord Moira to discharge the duties of the office. be much less lucrative than he had e in a very few months he returned allowed to leave a deputy, whose de plunged Moore into embarrassment he was long in being able to extricate refused all aid from his friends, Jeffrey intimate with him, offering generous end, the claims being favourably adju the whole sum from his literary earni continued to contribute liberally to t his parents.—From the time of his re land his course of life was very un was thenceforth wholly the man of porting himself by his pen, and court especially that of the higher Whig ci don. In 1811 he married Miss Dy been for a short time on the Dublin s able, attractive, and domestic lady. wards he took up his residence in a Ashbourne in Derbyshire, whence h Sloperton, near Devizes. There he live ever afterwards, visiting London quently, and making other excursio obliged soon after his removal to the refuge on the continent from his Be tors. In 1835 he received from Lord government a pension of three hun and in 1850, when his health was comp and all his four children were dead, M tained a pension of a hundred pou in the beginning of 1852.—Moore's into three groups: the serious poe and satiric rhymes; and the biograp works in prose. In the first of the compositions that support his

[Moore's Cottage at Sloperton.]

'Irish Melodies' (the series of which began in 1813) and other lyrics. Many of these are exquisite for grace of diction, for beauty, not without sameness, of imagery, and for a refined and ideal kind of pathos. They are poems for the drawing-room, and admirable as such. In 'Lalla Rookh,' published in 1817, the poet tried a more ambitious flight; and, while there is here very great skill and care of execution, with a marvellous richness of fancy, and singular correctness of costume, it cannot be said that he has vindicated his claim to be ranked, with Scott or Byron, among the great painters of romantic narrative. The second group of Moore's works, perhaps, shows his genius in a more brilliant light than any of the others. Unsparingly severe in his attacks on those public persons who were obnoxious to the Whig party, he has made satire as gaily witty, and as irresistibly amusing, as it ever can be. His chief political satires, besides many fugitive contributions to newspapers, were 'The Twopenny Post Bag,' 'Tom Crib's Memorial to Congress,' and the 'Fables for the Holy Alliance.' A lighter vein was opened in 'The Fudge Family in Paris.' Moore's prose works were really tasks performed for the sake of the gain they brought; and the best of them can only be asserted to be performed with good taste and care. If any of them was a labour of love it was the gorgeous romance of 'The Epicurean,' which appeared in 1827. The only others that require to be named are the 'Life of Sheridan,' (1825); and the 'Notices of the Life of Lord Byron,' (1830). [W.S.]

MOORSON, Sir R., a naval officer, 1760-1835.

MORALES, A., a Span. historian, 1513-1590.

MORALES, C., a Spanish singer, 16th century.

MORALES, J. B., a Spanish missionary, 1597-1664.

MORALES, L., a Spanish painter, 1509-1586.

MORAND, John, a French surgeon, 1658-1726. Sauveur Francois, his son, greatly distinguished as a surgical writer, 1697-1773. John Francis Clement, son of the latter, an anatomist and mineralogist, 1726-1784.

MORAND, J. A., a Fr. architect, 1727-1794.

MORAND, Louis Charles Ant. Alexis, Count, a French general, disting. at the period of the revolution and the empire, 1770-1835.

MORAND, P. De, a Fr. dramatist, 1701-1737.

MORANDE, C. Thevenot De, a French journalist, author of 'Memoirs of Madame du Barry,' al 'Anecdotes of the Court of France,' 1748-92.

MORANT, Philip, the historian of Colchester ad Essex, born in Jersey, 1700, died 1770.

MORATA, Olympia Fulvia, an Italian lady of protestant principles, distinguished as the most learned woman of her age, 1526-1555.

MORATIN, Nicholas Fernandez De, a celebrated dramatic author of Spain, 1737-1780. His son, Leandro Fernandez, appointed royal librarian under Joseph Buonaparte, and considered his father's superior as a dramatic poet, was born 1760, and was a great student of Shakspeare and Moliere, but especially the latter, d. at Paris 1828.

MORATO, Flavio Pellegrino, an Italian writer, father of Olympia Morata, died 1547.

MORCELLI, S. Antonio, an Italian Jesuit and archæologist, born 1737.

MORDAUNT, Charles, earl of Peterborough and Monmouth, a naval and military commander, time of William and Mary, 1658-1735.

MORE, Alexander, a French protestant minister, appointed professor of divinity, and pastor of the church at Middleberg in Zealand, author of theological works, 1616-1670.

MORE, Antonio, a Dutch painter, 1519-1575.

MORE, Francis, a famous lawyer, 1558-1621.

MORE, Hannah, the greatest name in the list of female writers on moral and religious subjects in the last century, was born at Stapleton, Gloucestershire, in 1744. Her father, who had taken orders in the Church of England, was master of a foundation school, in that town, and gave his four daughters a liberal education. They were all highly accomplished, but Hannah was distinguished above the rest of her sisters, both by her natural talents and her extraordinary thirst for knowledge. The Misses More, resolved on rendering themselves independent, opened a boarding school for young ladies in the village, and soon after, on the advic of friends, transferred their seminary to Bristol. In that town, they met with signal success. Their school grew in reputation, and every year added to its numbers, till it outstripped all other institutions of a similar kind, in the south and west of England. Hannah had early tried her powers in original composition, and at the age of seventeen, wrote her pastoral drama 'The Search after Happiness.' Having obtained the friendship of Garrick, she prepared several pieces for the stage, 'The Fatal Falsehood,' 'Percy,' 'The Inflexible Captive.' On attaining higher views of the character and duties of a Christian, she relinquished all thoughts of writing for the stage. But although she renounced the theatre, she still retained her respect and friendship for Garrick, with whom, as literary friends, she conjoined Johnson, Burke, Reynolds, and their learned associates. The death of Garrick produced a great change on her character. Reading and reflection made her a Christian; and she thenceforth dedicated her time and energies to works of piety and benevolence. She fixed her house at Cowslip Green, a beautiful residence in the neighbourhood of Bristol, and there devoted her time to literary pursuits. Having projected a series of didactic works, she published, in 1786, a little volume entitled, 'Thoughts on the Manners of the Great,' 'An Estimate of the Religion of the Fashionable World.' To counteract the principles of the French Revolution, she published 'Village Politics,' by Will Chip; and, next, a periodical work, 'The Cheap Repository Tracts,' including 'The Shepherd of Salisbury Plain.' Resuming her didactic series, she published 'Strictures on the Modern System of Female Education,' which obtained the high approval of Bishop Porteus, who recommended the writer for the office of governess to the Princess Charlotte. This was followed in rapid succession by 'Hints towards Forming the Character of a Young Princess,' 'Cœlebs in Search of a Wife,' and 'Practical Piety,' 'An Essay on the Character and Writings of St. Paul,' 'Christian Morals,' and 'The Spirit of Prayer.' By her various writings she amassed upwards of £30,000. Her sisters and she now relinquished public teaching, and devoted all their energies to the erection of schools, where there were no resident clergymen, and in which no less than twelve hundred children received, through their instrumentality, the benefits of a moral and religious education. In short, they produced, by their benevolent and Christian labours, so great a change on the aspect of society, that what had been a moral desert had produced in rich abundance, the excellent fruits of wide-spread intelligence, of elevated morality, and religious excellence. Miss More died in Sept., 1833. [R.J.]

[Hannah More's Cottage.]

MORE, Henry, a dissenting minister, d. 1802.

MORE, Henry, one of that profoundly learned and influential class of philosophical divines who arose in the 17th century to exorcise the spirit of Calvinism from the English universities. Born in 1614, and educated at Cambridge, he took his degree of B.A. in 1635, when he had already run through the scholastic philosophy, and rejected it with disgust for the warmer light and richer fancies of Platonism. The 'Germany Theology' of Taulerus soon after rivetted his attention as the summit of the mystic divinity which he had pursued through the writings of the Platonists and the school of Mercurius Trismegistus. In the works of Tauler the mystic divinity was Christianized, and written from a certain depth of experience, and from the age of Luther to the close of the 17th century, he exercised a vast influence upon the class of minds that revolted from the dogmatism of Geneva. In this class Henry More holds a distinguished place with Cudworth, Glanville, Whichcote, and others of less note, and while he is on a level with the best of them as a prose writer and philosopher, he has the merit of being their representative among the poets. In 1640, after being admitted M.A., he published his 'Psychozoia,' or first part of the 'Song of the Soul,' containing 'A Christiano-Platonical Display of Life,' in passages which may be pronounced rich and beautiful in their very obscurity. His most popular work, however, is the 'Divine Dialogues,' and while the erudition and beauty of such productions are admitted, it is curious to read the exception taken by biographers against the author's consciousness of their origin, in thoughts, full of spiritual wonder, communicated to his spirit. Henry More refused the highest ecclesiastical preferments, and chose a life of learned retirement and undisturbed contemplation, chiefly passed at the seat of Lord Conway. He died universally beloved 1687. His works were published in 3 vols. folio, 1679. [E.R.]

MORE, Sir Thomas, was born i London, in the year 1480. His fat was one of the justices of the king was, according to the practice of the the household of Morton, the cardi of Canterbury, where the boy obtain reputation for ready wit and subtl which excited high expectations of fu
After having studied at Oxford, chancery practice at the New Inn,
of the other inns of court, but now
ten. He entered parliament when twenty-second year, and immedia himself a place in history by standin privileges of the House of Commo questions of supply as their own excl
—Through his influence the aid Henry VII. for the marriage of his d king of Scots was refused. It was pected that after a victory of this kin rise in the court of Henry VII. He time in retirement under the shado displeasure, and it was then that with neglecting professional advancemen
his mind with the treasures of learnin
him so illustrious among the statesm
A great portion of his studies lay i he delivered lectures on St. Augus on the City of God. On the acces
VIII. he was soon put on the path
In 1521 he was knighted and mad
the exchequer. He appears to hav considerably enriched himself by pra
his wife, a daughter of Mr. Colt Essex, he kept up a noble hospit
VIII., who knew and appreciated
he as little permitted it as he did fe and worth to stand in the way o passions, used to be a frequent g
table, where he enjoyed the intell
According to the account of Eras
there collected must have been on brilliant and engaging that the w seen, and it was adorned by virtues, associations, high in intellect, ha wanting. In 1523 he became speake of Commons, and in 1529 succeeded perilous eminence of the woolsack.
meantime published, among other rious history of Richard III., an which, derived from the Greek for h become the source of a proverbial ex language. That he meant this ima seriously to embody his notions of a
of government can scarcely be belie who reads it, and remembers tha fanciful and abstract existence
was the dream of one who tho man in all his complicated relati deeply conversant in practical When Henry began those attacks supremacy, which, however sad his be, were instrumental in procurin
tion, More at once took up the pos conscience dictated to him as a su old system. Henry marked him out as an opponent of his matrimonia endeavoured to shield himself by ment from office. He was request oath to maintain the lawfulness of the marriage with Anne Boleyn. Though it was known that he would be the last man to disturb the succession, he refused to take the oath. This refusal was interpreted into high treason, under the statute. He was condemned to death, and beheaded on the 6th of July, 1535. [J.H.B.]

MOREAU, H., a French poet, 1810-1838.

MOREAU, JACOB NICHOLAS, a French historian, appointed librarian to the queen, and historiographer royal, author of 'Memoirs' towards the history of our own times, 'The Duties of a Prince,' 'Principles of Morality and Polity, and of Public Rights,' (written for the use of the dauphin, afterwards Louis XVI.,) and of a political journal written against England, 1717-1803.

MOREAU, JEAN, a French historian, 16th cent.

MOREAU, J. L., a physician, better known as 'Moreau de la Sarthe,' author of a work entitled 'Histoire Naturelle de la Femme,' 1771-1826.

MOREAU, J. M., an emi. designer, 1741-1814.

MOREAU. JEAN VICTOR MOREAU, was born in Bretagne, in 1763. He was educated for the law, but he enlisted when he was seventeen years old, and thenceforth devoted himself to a military career. He was rapidly promoted during the first campaign of the wars of the French revolution, and in 1796 he was commander of one of the two French armies that invaded Germany. The other army, which was under General Jourdain, was completely defeated by the Austrians, who then brought their whole force to bear upon Moreau. In this emergency Moreau extricated himself by a retreat through the Black Forest, which is considered a masterpiece of military skill. Napoleon, in 1800, gave Moreau the command of the armies of the Danube and the Rhine; and in the winter of that year Moreau gained the great victory of Hohenlinden, the most splendid of his achievements. Moreau was afterwards suspected of plotting against Napoleon's government, and was banished from France. He lived in retirement in America until 1813, when he returned to Europe and joined the armies of the allied sovereigns against the French. He was killed at the battle of Dresden in that year. [E.S.C.]

MOREAU, R., a French physician, 1587-1656.

MOREAU-SAINT-MERY, M. L. E., a deputy to the constituent assembly, and known as a writer on the French colonies of America, 1750-1819.

MOREELSE, N., a Dutch painter, 1571-1638.

MOREL, A., a Swiss antiquarian, 1646-1703.

MOREL, J. A., a Fr. wr. on music, 1775-1825.

MOREL, B., a Fr. devotional writer, 1653-1731.

MORELL, THOMAS, a classical scholar and doctor of divinity, famous for his editions of Ainsworth's and Hederick's lexicons, 1703-1784.

MORELLET, A., a French critic, 1727-1819.

MORELLI, J., an Italian critic, 1745-1819.

MORELOS, J. M., a priest and general in the Mexican war of independence, shot 1815.

MORERI, LOUIS, a French ecclesiastic, distinguished as the first compiler of the great 'Historical Dictionary' which bears his name, 1643-80.

MORES, EDW. ROWE, author of the 'History and Antiquities of Tunstal, in Kent,' was b. there, his father being rector of the parish, 1730. He was the originator of the Equitable Society for Assurance on Lives, and a wr. on that subject, d. 1778.

MORET, J., a French historian, 1615-1705.

MORETO-Y-CABANA, DON AUGUSTIN, a Span. dramatist of the reign of Philip IV., 17th ct.

MORGAGNI, JOHN BAPTIST, M.D., F.R.S., an eminent Italian anatomist and physician, was born at Forli in Italy, 1682; and died at Padua 1771. Morgagni was a rather voluminous writer, but the work by which he is best known is that entitled 'De Sedibus et Causis Morborum per Anatome indagatis.' [J.M'C.]

MORGAN, G. C., an exp. philosopher, d. 1798.

MORGAN, SIR HENRY, a famous buccaneer, appointed governor of Jamaica, by Charles II.

MORGAN, W., a Welch prelate, died 1604.

MORGAN, W., a famous mathematician, and writer on annuities and assurances, died 1833.

MORGHEN, RAPHAEL, a celebrated Neapolitan engraver, 1758-1833.

MORHOF, D. G., a German writer, 1639-1691.

MORICE, SIR WILLIAM, a relative of General Monk, raised by his influence to the office of secretary of state, author of a treatise on the Communion, died 1676.

MORICE DE BEAUBOIS, DON P. HYACINTH, an ecclesiastic and antiquary of Brittany, editor of Lobineau's History, &c., 1693-1750.

MORIER, JAMES, an English writer of Eastern travels, and novelist, 1780-1848.

MORILLO, G., a Spanish poet, 16th century.

MORILLO, P., a Spanish general, 1777-1837.

MORIN, B., a French lexicographer, 1746-1817.

MORIN, J., a French mathematician, 1705-64.

MORIN, J., a French Orientalist, 1591-1659.

MORIN, JOHN BAPTIST, a French physician and professor of mathematics, best known as an astrologer and adviser of Richelieu, 1583-1656.

MORIN, LOUIS, a famous botanist, 1635-1715.

MORIN, P., a French critic, 1531-1608.

MORIN, S., a Fr. visionary, burnt alive 1663.

MORIN, STEPHEN, a French protestant, professor of Oriental languages at Amsterdam, and a philological writer, 1625-1700.

MORISON, J., a Scottish writer, 1762-1809.

MORISON, ROBERT a native of Aberdeen, famous for his skill and writings in botany, appointed prof. at Oxford by Charles II., 1620-1683.

MORISOT, C. B., a French writer, 1592-1661.

MORISOT, J. M. R., a Fr. architect, 1767-1821.

MORITZ, C. P., a German writer, 1757-1793.

MORLA, TH., a Spanish general, died 1820.

MORLAND, GEORGE, an English painter, famous for his landscape and interiors, embodying scenes in humble life, was born in London 1764, and was at his meridian about 1790. He became the victim of his low tastes and drunken habits, and died under arrest for debt in 1804. His history is one of the most melancholy in the long list of those who have wasted their talents, and misspent their time. His genius, his moral character, and the circumstances under which he produced his works—many of them to discharge an ale score—entitle him to be regarded as the Sheridan of artists. His talent was most surprising in the delineation of pigs, introduced into his rustic scenes—these animals being his favourite subjects.

MORLAND, HENRY ROBERT, a portrait painter, son of a London artist, and father of the preceding George Morland, died 1797.

MORLAND, SIR SAMUEL, a diplomatist in the service of Cromwell, afterwards an adherent of Charles II., distinguished for his mechanical inventions, among which are mentioned the speaking trumpet, an arithmetical machine, the fire engine, the steam engine, improved pumps, &c., d. 1695.

MORLEY, GEORGE, an adherent of Charles II., appointed by him bp. of Winchester, 1597-1684.

MORLEY, THOMAS, a pupil of the celebrated Byrde, and one of the gentlemen of Queen Elizabeth's chapel, acquired much fame for his work, entitled 'A Plaine and Easie Introduction to Practical Musicke.' He composed many songs, ballads, canzonets, and madrigals. A burial service of his composition still continues to be performed on solemn occasions in Westminster Abbey. It is supposed that he died about the year 1604. [J.M.]

MORLIN, J., a German divine, 1514-1571.

MORNAY, PHILIP DE, Sieur du Plessis-Marly, an illustrious leader of the French protestants, and for more than thirty years in the service of Henry IV., who was greatly indebted to him for the success of his arms and negotiations. Born 1549, died some years after retiring from the court, during which he distinguished himself as a writer in the interest of protestantism, 1623.

MORNINGTON, GARRETT WELLESLEY, earl of, father of the duke of Wellington, acquired considerable celebrity for his musical compositions. He showed an early liking for music, and became, for an amateur, a very tolerable violinist. 'Here in Cool Grot,' is the most admired of his vocal works. The university of Dublin conferred upon him their degree of Doctor in Music. He was born in Meath about the year 1720, and died in 1781. [J.M.]

MORO, or MOORE, ANTONY, a Dutch painter, favourite of Charles V. and Philip II., 1512-1568.

MORO, CHRISTOPHER, a Venet. doge, 1462-71.

MOROSI, J., an Ital mechanician, 1772-1840.

MOROSINI, the name of several famous Venetians,—1. DOMINICHINO, doge from 1148 to 1156. 2. MICHÆL, succeeded as doge, and died the same year, 1382. 3. PAUL, ambassador to the emperor, and to the kings of Poland, Bohemia, and Naples, 1406-1483. 4. ANDREA, a senator and historian of the republic, 1558-1618. 5. FRANCESCO, born 1618, distinguished in the wars with the Turks as generalissimo of the Venetian troops, afterwards procurator of St. Mark, and successor of Giustinian as doge 1688, died 1694.

MORRELL, B., an Amer. navigator, 1795-1839.

MORRIS, C., an Eng. song-writer, 1739-1832.

MORRIS, L., a Welch antiquary, 1702-1765.

MORRISON, ROBERT, the famous Chinese scholar and missionary, was born of humble parents at Morpeth, in Northumberland, 1782, and was sent to Canton by the London Missionary Society in 1807. From this period to 1824 he was resident in China, and translated into that language the four Gospels, and the greater part of the Epistles. He wrote also numerous important works to facilitate the study of the Chinese tongue, the principal of which is his Dictionary, printed by the East India Company at a cost of £15,000. In 1824 Dr. Morrison visited England. In 1826 he returned to Canton, and died there 1834.

MORSE, J., an American geographer, d. 1826.

MORSER, A., a Swiss mechanician, 1771-1840.

MORTIER. EDMUND ADOLPHE CASIMIR JOSEPH MORTIER, marshal of France of Treviso, was born at Chateau-Cam 1768. He joined a regiment of volunte beginning of the revolutionary war, a under Kleber, Marceau, Pichegru, and the early campaigns of that contest. had reached the rank of general of div commanded the right wing of Massena the battle of Zurich. Napoleon made his marshals in 1804; and he was hig guished in the campaigns of the next ye the Austrians and Russians. In 180 possession of Hanover and Hamburg, with singular moderation to the inhabit signalized himself at the battle of Fri 1807; and was then employed by the e Spain, where he won the battle of Ocana. he served in Russia, and took an active p military operations of that year, and i 1813 and 1814. In conjunction with Marmont, Mortier defended Paris again lies, and fought the final battle of Montm was obliged to capitulate. Marshal Mor character for integrity, and his administr lity caused him to be much trusted and by the Bourbons after their restoratio Philippe placed equal confidence in him was riding by his side at a review of the guard of Paris, 28th July, 1835, when th machine, which Fieschi had prepared ag king, exploded, and killed among many veteran marshal.

MORTIMER, JOHN, an English g known as a writer on husbandry, died 1 son, THOMAS, vice-consul in the Austria lands, known as a writer on commercial cellaneous subjects, 1730-1809.

MORTIMER, J. H., an English artist

MORTIMER, ROGER, earl of, the of Queen Isabella, b. in Wales 1287, exec

MORTON, C., a learned antiquarian,

MORTON, JAMES, earl of. See Dou

MORTON, JOHN, archbishop of C and cardinal, distinguished as a state partizan of the house of Lancaster, w 1410. He rose in dignity through severa ing reigns, from that of Henry VI. to H having escaped the hands of Richard, h this interval, and fled to the continent joined the earl of Richmond. Died 150

MORTON, R., a medical writer, died

MORTON, THOMAS, a learned prel same family as the fam. Card. Morton,

MORTON, THOMAS, a drama. wr.,

MORUS, S. F. N., a German theolog.

MORVAN, a king of Brittany, 818.

MORVEAU. See GUYTON DE MOR

MORVILLE, CH. JOHN BAPT. F Count De, a Fr. ambass. and minister,

MOSCATI, P., a French politician,

MOSCHENI, M. C., an It. poetess,

MOSCHUS, a Greek poet, about 200

MOSCHUS, D., a Gk. poet and refug

MOSCHUS, J., a Greek monk, an. u of the Saints he had known in his trave

MOSELEY, BENJAMIN, an English experienced in the West Indies, authe fessional work on Dysentery, and of tw on Coffee and Sugar, died 1819.

OSER, G. M., a Swiss artist, 1705-1783.
OSER, JOHN JAMES, a German writer on ic law, author of a great number of important
s, 1701-1785. His son, FREDERIC CHARLES, tesman and writer, 1731-1798.
OSER, W. G., a writer on forests, 1729-1793.
OSES, the leader and legislator of the Hes on their departure from Egypt, supposed 1725-1605 B.C.
OSES ALSCHECH, a Syrian rabbin, 16th c.
OSES BEN-NOCHMANN, a Spanish rabbi,
or of 'Wars of the Lord,' &c., 1194-1300.
OSES, C., an Armenian prelate, 5th century.
OSHEIM, JOHN LAURENCE VON, was born noted family at Lubec, 9th October, 1694.
was educated at the university of Kiel, where,
gh a very young man, he became professor of sophy. He was especially distinguished as a cher. He framed his discourses on the best ch and English models, and published some nes of sermons. Such was his popularity, the king of Denmark invited him to a chair
e university of Copenhagen. In 1725 he was d by the duke of Brunswick to the professor-of theology at Helmstadt, a sphere which he hily occupied for twenty-two years. In 1747 as appointed by George II. of Britain to the ity chair, and to the chancellorship of the ersity of Göttingen. In this responsible posi-he remained eight years, when he died, 9th ember, 1755. The works of Mosheim are nsive, consisting of numerous translations, tises, sermons, and letters. He is chiefly known ng us as a church historian, by his 'Comtaries,' and by his 'Institutes,' both written atin. The Institutes, which are a brief and compound, have been translated into German , Von Einem and Schlegel, and into English in by Maclaine, minister at the Hague, and tely by Dr. Murdoch of America, a third on of whose admirable translation appeared in The last translation is incomparably the and must remove some prejudices against eim which Maclaine's dry and unfaithful
n may have originated. Mosheim's Latin is too succinct to be either classical or
t. His endeavour in recording the history ruggles of various religious parties was to e a dignified neutrality, which has been to such an extent, that to many it has
d to wear the aspect of complete indif-Such a view, however, would be very for those who read his sermons, and other will discover in them a decided, intelnd ardent piety. [J.E.]
ERON, J., a French writer, 1738-1830.
ROBERT, chaplain to William III., and the Bangorian controversy, 1666-1729.
w, CHARLES, successively bishop of St.
d of Bath and Wells, d. 1802. CHARLES, latter, bishop of Oxford, died 1811.
M, ROBERT, an Irish prelate, d. 1679.
, HENRY, an Irish actor, 1729-1773.
RT, JOHN, a D. painter, 1499-1555.
SKI, COUNT THADDEUS, one of the ous defenders of the independence of -1842.
E-VAYER. See LAMOTHE.
Y, G., an Eng. physician, 1731-93.

MOTHERWELL, W., a Scotch poet, 1798-1835.
MOTTE. See LA-MOTTE.
MOTTEUX, P. A., a French poet, 1660-1717.
MOTTEVILLE, FRANÇOISE BERTAUD, Dame De, the favourite and biographer of Anne of Austria, time of Richelieu, 1621-1689.
MOTTLEY, JOHN, son of Colonel Mottley, an adherent of James II., known as the biographer of Peter the Great and Catharine of Russia, and the alleged author of 'Joe Miller's Jests,' 1692-1750.
MOTTRAYE, A. DE LA, a French traveller and historical critic, 1674-1743.
MOUCHON, PETER, a Genevese ecclesiastic, and friend of Rousseau, author of a 'Table Analytique et Raisonnée de l'Encyclopédie,' 1733-1797.
MOUFET, or MUFFET, THOMAS, a physician of London, distinguished as a professional writer and naturalist, died about 1604.
MOUGIN, P. A., a Fr. astronomer, 1735-1816.
MOULIN. See DUMOULIN.
MOULIN, J. F. A., a Fr. general, 1752-1810.
MOUNIER, JOHN JOSEPH, a political writer and orator, distinguished in the estates-general of France, 1758-1806. His son, CL. PHILIPPE, a statesman, 1784-1843.
MOUNTAGUE, or MONTAGUE, RICHARD, a learned prelate, distinguished for his knowledge of ecclesiastical antiquities, and known to history as the personal friend and associate in principle of Archbishop Laud, 1578-1641.
MOUNTFORT, WILLIAM, a dramatic writer and actor, assassinated by his rival in love, Capt. Hill, after marrying Mrs. Bracegirdle, 1659-1692.
MOURAD-BEY, chief of the Mamelukes, and companion-in-arms of Ibrahim Bey, was born in Circassia 1750. On the invasion of Egypt by Buonaparte, he won the admiration of the French by his gallant resistance, but was forced to submit to Kléber, who left him the government of Upper Egypt, under the French protectorate. Died 1801.
MOURADGEA-D'OHSSON, IGNACIUS, a Swedish historian of Armenian descent, born at Constantinople 1740. While residing in the East as Swedish minister, he collected the materials of his 'General View of the Ottoman Empire,' published 1787-1790. Died 1807.
MOURAVIEF, M. NIKITISCH, a Russian poet, philosopher, and historian, tutor in the family of Catherine II., 1757-1807.
MOURET, J. J., a Fr. composer, 1682-1738.
MOURGUES, MICHAEL, a French Jesuit and mathematician, author of 'Traité de la Poésie Française,' &c., 1642-1713.
MOUSKES, PHILIP, a Fr. historian, d. 1282.
MOUTON, G., a French astronomer, 1618-94.
MOUTON, J. B., SYLVAIN, a Fr. Jansenist, one of the last refugees living in Holland, 1740-1803.
MOXON, JOSEPH, a map maker and writer on navigation, mathemat., astrono., &c., 1627-1700.
MOYLE, WALTER, a classical scholar, member of parlia., and wr. on politi. economy, 1672-1721.
MOYSART, F., a French writer, 1735-1813.
MOYSES, DAVID, page to King James, and author of a diary, published as 'Memoirs' of Scottish History, 1573-1630.
MOZART, JOHANN CHRYSOSTOMUS WOLFGANG GOTTLIEB, born in Salzburg, on the 25th of January, 1756, was the son of Leopold Mozart, a bookbinder of Augsburg, who studied music at

Salzburg, and was in 1762 admitted as one of the musicians of the prince-archbishop of that town. The young Mozart, born amidst music, soon evinced a most remarkable musical precocity. At three years old he first began to show signs of that astonishing ability which afterwards made him one of the greatest amongst many great musicians. At four years old, almost without a lesson, he was able to play upon the harpsichord several minuets and other pieces of music. At five he made his first essays as a composer. In all the other studies proper to his age, as letters and arithmetic, he showed a marvellous aptitude, and very rapidly became a proficient in his juvenile tasks. Music, however, was always his favourite study, and his principal amusement. At six years of age, Mozart's father removed with all his family to Munich, where he, with his sister Mary-Anne, had the honour of performing before the elector, who received the infant artists with the most marked condescension. About this time he began privately to study the violin, and before his father, or any one else, was aware of his proficiency upon this instrument, he was able to acquit himself like a master in the second part of some most difficult concertos. Amid all the wonder and admiration which his great talents caused, Mozart never ceased to be a simple, good-natured, and unassuming child, and his instant obedience to the slightest request of his parents was one of his distinguishing traits. In 1763, when only seven years old, his family left Germany, and after having visited and performed in the principal cities of his fatherland, he in November arrived in Paris, and was introduced to play upon the organ at Versailles in presence of the whole court. Here he published his two first compositions, and the wonderful powers of Mozart created quite an excitement amongst all classes of people. In 1764 he came to England, where he received the most unbounded applause, both from the court and the nobility before whom he performed. During his residence in England, he composed and printed six sonatas, which were by request dedicated to the Queen. He returned to France in 1765, and from thence went to Holland, and at the Hague, when not more than eight years old, composed a symphony for a full orchestra, on occasion of the installation of the prince of Orange. They then returned to Paris, where they resided for two months, and where the young artist and his gifted sister were feted and caressed by all manner of people. They then turned their course toward Germany, and from this time forward Mozart devoted himself with increased ardour to the study of his art. In 1768 the two children performed before the emperor Joseph II. at Vienna, who ordered young Wolfgang to compose music to the opera buffo, La Finta Semplice, which, though never performed, was approved of by all the masters and cognoscenti of the period. In 1769 young Mozart was nominated concert master to the archbishop of Salzburg. In the same year he went to Italy, where he was most rapturously welcomed. His first performance in Italy was given at Milan, where he was engaged to return and compose the first opera for the carnival of 1771. At Bologna and Florence the reception he met with was equally flattering to the young musician. At the latter city he made the acquaintance of Thomas Linley, who, about his age, [illegible] was then a pupil under Martini, the celebrated viol[illegible] Mozart arrived at Rome in Passion Week, [illegible] Wednesday went to the Sistine chapel, wher[illegible] heard for the first time the celebrated Mis[illegible] which was prohibited to be copied, or in any [illegible] ner published, on pain of excommunication. Good Friday the same Miserere was again [illegible] formed, when Mozart was present with the [illegible] copy he had made from memory concealed [illegible] hat, that he might have an opportunity of m[illegible] corrections. This circumstance created a [illegible] mense excitement at Rome, because the pe[illegible] ties of the Miserere were thought impossible [illegible] expressed by musical notation, and when [illegible] Mozart, in presence of some Sistine cho[illegible] sang the composition in the very manner in [illegible] it was sung by those who had acquired i[illegible] after long practice, the professional sing[illegible] pressed their astonishment in terms of unme[illegible] admiration. The fame of Mozart after this [illegible] was spread far and wide. His wonderful [illegible] talents and power of performing on the org[illegible] attributed to a charm which it was supp[illegible] carried in his ring. When the pope first [illegible] him perform, he conferred upon him the [illegible] the Golden Spur, and at Bologna he was el[illegible] member of the Philharmonic Society, whic[illegible] at that time an honour rarely conferred ev[illegible] the greatest musicians. On the 26th of D[illegible] ber, 1770, he produced at Milan his 'Mithri[illegible] which had a successful run of twenty nigh[illegible] caused him to be engaged to compose th[illegible] opera for the year 1773. This opera was [illegible] Silla,' which was performed twenty-six ni[illegible] succession. In the interval between the [illegible] named above, he went to Venice and V[illegible] where he received the highest musical ho[illegible] At Milan, he, in 1771, composed an opera,

[House of Mozart.]

Salzburg in 1772 he composed anot[illegible] election of the new archbishop. In 1[illegible] was so completely established, a[illegible] known, that he could have made cho[illegible] ments in all the capitals of Europ[illegible] preferred Paris, and therefore, in [illegible] his mother, commenced his second

e death of his mother made Paris and he returned to his father at the he year 1779. Some time after this to Munich, whence he went to ntered the service of the emperor, mained attached during the rest of tempted to leave him by many ad- rs. His principal works, composed r this time, were 'Cosi Fan Tutti,' L'Enlevement du Serail,' 'Nozze de Giovanni,' 'Zauberflöte,' 'Clemenza ses,' and his world-renowned 'Re- g the time he was engaged in the the 'Zauberflöte' he began to be ting fits, which recurred at short close of his life, which took place December, 1792, when he had not thirty-sixth year. He left a widow His works, which are too numerous name, were in all styles of his art, He is one of the greatest masters of works will live to all time. [J.M.] a controversial writer, 1746-1813.

A., an Italian historian, 1678-1736.

ACHARY, a dissenting minister, who ered the Church of England, author c., died 1769. THOMAS, his son, or his improvement of the chrono- 794. JOHN, brother of the latter, d professional writer, most distin- is improvement of the reflecting 1793. WILLIAM, son of John, an rmy, and an employé in the trig- rvey, 1762-1820.

BERT, a famous writer on natural ontributor to magazine literature, hire 1777, died in indigent circum-

ON, LODOWICKE, the principal of ts, (his companion being John the year 1651, announced them- two last witnesses, and went from denouncing with great violence all arded as false professors of religion, istrates and persons in authority. l attacks were directed against the Ranters, some of whom replied to g. The first publication of Muggle- 'A Remonstrance from the Eternal several Spiritual Transactions unto and Commonwealth of England, llency the Lord General Cromwell, State, the Council of War, and to the second appearing of the Lord wise God and everlasting Father, r.' This pamphlet was first printed as republished in 1710, with a por- hor, the subscription to which gives his life—'Dyed the 14th of March, l eighty-eight years, seven months, days.' Muggleton is depicted with , low forehead, protruding brow, ek bones, and what physiognomists aggressive nose. The exposition of is given in his work called 'The g-Glass,' published 1656, and his ed a sect which has survived to the His fanaticism was perfectly sin- ore than once suffered imprisonment for the vigorous manner in which he prosecuted his 'Commission.' [E.R.]

MUIS, S. M. DE, a Fr. Hebraist, 1587-1644.

MULLER, ANDREW, a German divine and Oriental scholar, especially dist. for his labours in illustration of the Chinese language, 1630-1694.

MULLER, CARL OTTFRIED, professor of archæology at Gottingen, distinguished for his skill in mythology, 1797-1840.

MULLER, HENRY, a Ger. divine, 1631-1675.

MULLER, GERARD FREDERIC, a German traveller and writer, skilled in the Russian language, and a long time resident in that country as historiographer of the empire. He is considered the father of Russian history, and is author of numerous valuable works in that branch of inquiry. Born in Westphalia 1705; died in Moscow, where he had been appointed keeper of the archives, 1783.

MULLER, J., a Dutch engraver, b. about 1570.

MULLER, JOHN, a Swiss historian, auth. of a 'Hist. of the Helvetic Confederation,' 1752-1809.

MULLER, JOHN, called 'Regiomontanus,' from his birthplace, distinguished as a Greek scholar, astronomer, and mathematical writer, 1436-1476.

MULLER, J. S., a Germ. engraver, 1715-1782.

MULLER, L., a military engineer of Prussia, an. of 'The Wars of Frederick the Great,' 1734-1804.

MULLER, OTHON FREDERIC, an eminent naturalist, was born at Copenhagen in 1730. He died in 1784. He was born of parents in a humble sphere of life, and was destined for the church. Recommended by his learning and regularity of manners to the situation of tutor to the young Count Schulin, he travelled into various countries with him; and was induced by his pupil's mother, a woman of excellent understanding, to engage in the study of natural history. Marrying advantageously, he abandoned his intention of going into the church, and was enabled to devote himself exclusively to scientific occupations. As a naturalist he acquired a high reputation both at home and abroad, and was honoured by his sovereign, who conferred upon him various marks of high distinction. His first works were the Entomology and Botany of the part of his native country where he was born and resided, which was followed by a continuation of the great work begun by Oeder, the Flora of Denmark. Zoology, however, soon superseded botany; and we know no naturalist who has more ably illustrated the fauna of his native country than Muller has done his. Selecting chiefly those portions of the animal kingdom, which from their diminutive proportions, had till then been but little attended to, he struck out an original path, and clothing his descriptions of the little animals of his studies in elegant Latin, he has rendered his works accessible to, and made them the delight of all succeeding zoologists. His histories, or monographs of the infusoria, the hydrachnæ or water spiders, and the entomostraca of Denmark and Norway, are models of composition and monuments of prodigious patience; while his great work, which, however, he did not live to finish, the Zoologia Danica, is one of amazing accuracy, both in the descriptions and in the figures of the animals described, and is indispensable to every naturalist even of the present day. The younger Linnæus has named a genus of plants after him, Mullera. [W.B.]

MULLER, W., a German writer, 1794-1827.

MUMMIUS, L., a consul of Rome, B.C. 146.

MUNCER, MUNTZER, or MUNZER, THOS., a chief of the German anabaptists, executed 1525.

MUNCHAUSEN, GERLACH ADOLPHUS, Baron Von, Hanoverian prime minister, and founder of the university of Gottingen, 1688-1770.

MUNCHHAUSEN, JEROME CH. FREDERIC VON, a German officer, whose wonderful relations of his adventures in the service of Russia, suggested the story of Burger, remarkable for its humour and extravagance; died 1797.

MUNCK, J., a Danish navigator, died 1628.

MUNDAY, A., a dramatic writer, died 1633.

MUNDEN, JOSEPH SAUNDERS, a comic actor, distinguished for humour, born in London, 1758. He was intended by his parents for the medical profession; but, disliking it, he was next apprenticed to a law-stationer. Here having learned to copy, he was originally engaged to write out the parts for the performers, and thus introduced to the histrionic profession, was sometimes permitted to tread the stage as mute, and at length joined a strolling company at Rochdale, Lancashire. In 1780, he was engaged as low comedian at the Canterbury theatre. It was not, however, until 1790 that he made his debût in London, when he appeared at Covent Garden, as Sir Francis Gripe, in 'The Busy Body,' and Jemmy Jumps, in 'The Farmer.' Transferred in 1813 to Drury Lane, he continued there till 31st May, 1824, when he retired. Old Dornton in 'The Road to Ruin,' was one of his most successful characters. Munden indulged in broad grimace, but added to his humour a pathos which was sometimes irresistibly touching. Unlike most actors, he was distinguished in private life by his economical habits, and accumulated a large fortune. He died 6th February, 1832, in Bernard Street, Russell Square, where he had long resided. [J.A.H.]

MUNNICH, BURCHARD CHRISTOPHER, Count Von, a German officer in the service of Russia, who was exiled to Siberia. On being restored to favour, he appeared at court in the sheep-skin dress worn during his captivity; 1683-1767.

MUNOZ, J. B., a Spanish historian, 1745-1799.

MUNOZ, S., a Spanish painter, 1745-1799.

MUNOZ, T., a Spanish engineer, 1743-1823.

MUNRO, ALEXANDER, M.D., the son of Dr. Alexander Monro, professor of anatomy in the university of Edinburgh, was born at Edinburgh on the 20th of May, 1733, and after having been carefully educated as an anatomist, he was associated with his father in the chair of anatomy in the year 1755, and ultimately succeeded him in that charge. This chair he held for the remainder of his life, which was terminated on the 2d of October, 1817, when he had attained to the eighty-fifth year of his age. He is generally known in medical biography as Munro Secundus, and, with his father, contributed largely to the establishment of the fame of the Edinburgh school of medicine; but though a skilful anatomist and physiologist, he could lay no claim to the possession of the inventive powers and the original genius of the Hunters, with both of whom he was contemporary, and with the elder of whom he maintained a bitter, but now forgotten, controversy on the origin of the lymphatics. [J.M'C.]

MUNRO, SIR T., gover. of Madras, 1760—

MUNSTER, COUNT, a statesman of Ha… known at the congress of Vienna 1814, died …

MUNSTER, GEORGE FITZCLARENCE, … eldest son of the duke of Clarence and Mr… dan, born 1794, shot himself, after acquirin… tinction as a valiant soldier in India, 1842.

MUNSTER, SEBASTIAN, professor of H… at Basle, one of the most learned men of his … author of numerous works, 1489-1552.

MUNTER, B., a German divine, 1735-1…

MUNTER, F., a Ger. Orientalist, 1760-1…

MUNTING, ABRAHAM, father and so… tinguished as physicians and botanists, the … died 1628, the latter 1626-1683.

MURA, F. DE, a painter of Naples, died …

MURAND, E., a Dutch painter, 1622-1…

MURAT. JOACHIM MURAT, le beau sol… the imperial armies, was born in 1767, ne… gord. His father was a country innkeeper. Murat was distinguished, even in boyhood, … courage, and for his horsemanship. He … tended for the church; but he entered the … the age of 20, and soon became notorious … duels, and for the fervour of his democratic o… In 1795, when Buonaparte put down the r… the Sections of Paris, Murat was an offic… of the regiments of cavalry in the capital; … was of the greatest service to his future m… securing for him the possession of the park … lery, which was employed by Buonaparte … tively against the insurgents. When Napo… made general of the army of Italy, he place… on his personal staff: and he afterwards t… with him to Egypt. Both against the Austr… Piedmontese in Italy, and against the Ma… and Turks in Egypt, Murat proved his brill… our, and his ability as a leader of horse. He … from Egypt with Napoleon, and through… consular and early imperial campaigns in G… he increased his martial renown. His h… stature, his handsome features, his showy c… and the unrivalled skill and grace of his ho… ship, all combined to increase the effect w… daring courage and personal prowess p… both on friends and foes. His white plu… that of Henri Quatre, was the standard w… men followed best through the thick of eve… He had little strategic ability. Napoleon, … Elba, described him truly in these words—'… a good soldier—one of the most brilliant … ever saw on the field of battle. Of no … talents; without much moral courage; tim… in forming his plan of operations: but the … he saw the enemy, all that vanished—his … the most sure, and the most rapid—his … truly chivalrous. Moreover, he is a fine ma… and well-dressed, though at times rather fa… cally. It was really a magnificent sight to … in battle heading the cavalry.' Murat m… Caroline Buonaparte, Napoleon's youngest … He was made a marshal of France, when th… pire was established, and in 1806 Napoleon … him the grand duchy of Berg and Cleves. In … Murat received from his imperial patron the … of Naples, and reigned over that beautiful … for seven years. Botta, the Italian historian, … of him, 'He was courteous and affable to all; … was no lover of rapine, still less of cruelty; … pu…

sary to his happiness.' Such was l character, both before and dur-
: but his implicit devotion to Na-im on several occasions become the not the cause, of acts of great injustice.—In 1812 he joined Na-great expedition against Russia,
ral of the whole cavalry of the
After the disasters of that cam-continued to serve under Napoleon ies in Germany, till the great defeat
at Leipzig in the autumn of 1813, er his cause desperate. Murat then e his own possession of the Neapo-
He basely betrayed his benefactor;
nself to the Allied Sovereigns against tacked Napoleon's forces in Italy.
ry he preserved himself as king of 1814; but he found that the Allied ugh they suffered him to reign, reth suspicion and ill-will. On learn-escape from Elba in 1815, Murat change sides again; and he attacked in Italy. He was speedily defeated, take refuge in France, before the e campaign in Belgium between the Allies, by which the war was eep was the abhorrence among the y of Murat for his treachery in the that Napoleon did not dare bring rench army; though the emperor
rat's value in the day of battle.
St. Helena, Napoleon referred to d said, that perhaps Murat, had he oo, might have changed the fate of d of the world. 'There were mo-he battle,' said the emperor, 'when f a single English square might have ictory; and if ever there was the who could have done it, Murat was r the second fall of Napoleon, Murat t for some months in the south of Corsica: and finally, on the 7th
he landed with a small band of armed e Calabrian coast, in the chimerical uering his kingdom of Naples. He verpowered and taken prisoner. The olitan court showed him no mercy.
efore a military commission, tried,
nd shot within half-an-hour after met his fate with the chivalric
ad ever distinguished him; and his his wife, written by him while the ere making for his court-martial, is st pathetic and heroic that history
When he confronted the soldiers
hoot him, he refused to have his eyes
l bade them 'spare the face, and to the heart.' Then he pointed to his right hand; and held in the left icture of his wife and children, on gazing when the soldiers fired, and ed a corpse at the instant, still hold-ion to the very last. [E.S.C.]

I, D., an Ital. painter, born 1661.

I, Lodovico Antonio, an Italian nd historian, author of many valuccessively librarian at Milan, and and librarian at Modena, 1672-1750.

MURDOC, a king of Scotland, 715-730.

MURE, Sir W., a Scotch poet, died 1657.

MURENA, C., an Italian architect, 1715-1764.

MURET, J. L., a Swiss economist, 1715-1796.

MURET, M. A. F., an Ital. savant, 1526-1585.

MURILLO, Bartholome Esteban, was born at Seville 1st January, 1618. He was the pupil of his relative Juan del Castillo. In 1642 he visited Madrid, and was aided by Velazquez, then painter to the king, who procured him permission to copy in the Royal Galleries. Murillo returned to Seville in 1645, where he commenced that great series of works which have now made his name so glorious. He married a lady of fortune in 1648, which much aided his personal influence, and he succeeded in establishing an academy of the arts at Seville in 1660, and acted as president the first year. He died at Seville, 3d April, 1682, in consequence of a fall from a scaffolding at Cadiz, where he was engaged in the church of the Capuchins, painting a large altar piece of St. Catherine. —Murillo's principal works are eight large pictures which he painted for the hospital of St. George, called La Caridad, finished in 1674, but which were dispersed during the peninsular war: three are in this country—'The Return of the Prodigal Son,' and 'Abraham Visited by the Angels,' in the possession of the duke of Sutherland; and 'Christ Healing the Sick of the Palsy,' called 'The Pool of Bethesda,' in the possession of Mr. George Tomline, London, 'Our Lady of the Immaculate Conception,' painted in 1678, and lately purchased by the French government, for the enormous sum of £23,600 sterling, and the picture of the 'Holy Family,' or 'Trinity,' in the British National Gallery, are fine examples of Murillo's later style. In the later part of his life Murillo changed both his style and his subjects; his earlier pictures, chiefly fancy subjects, and illustrative of humble life, are painted in a forcible manner, with predominant dark shadows; his latter works are of equal truth of character, but in a more elevated and chaste style, and are almost exclusively of religious subjects.—(Cean Bermudez, Diccionario Historico de los mas Illustres Profesores de las Belas Artes en Espana, Madrid, 1806; Stirling, Annals of the Artists of Spain.) [R.N.W.]

MURNER, Th., a French poet, 1465-1533.

MURPHY, Arthur, an Irish dramatic and miscellaneous writer, author of 'The Grecian Daughter' and other plays, highly popular in their time. Having supported the government, he was appointed one of the commissioners of bankruptcy. Born at Cork 1727, died 1805.

MURPHY, James Cavanagh, an Irish architect and antiq., au. of works on Portugal, d. 1816.

MURR, Chr. Theophilus Von, born at Nuremberg 1735, distinguished as a literary savant, Orientalist, and bibliopole, died 1811.

MURRAY, Alexander, a poor self-educated Scotchman, distinguished for his researches into the nature and origin of languages; born 1775, professor at Edinburgh 1812, died 1813.

MURRAY, Charles, a successful dramatic wr. and performer, born at Cheshunt 1754, d. 1821.

MURRAY, Daniel, late Roman Catholic archbishop of Dublin, was born in 1768, and educated at Salamanca, where he was consecrated priest in 1790. He succeeded to the archbishopric in 1823, and during the agitation for catholic emancipation supported that measure by his influence, after which he took no part in political questions. In 1831, he was joined with Archbishop Whately and others in the commission for Irish education, and sanctioned the institution of the Queen's Colleges; he withdrew, however, on knowing the contrary pleasure of the pope. Died 1852.

MURRAY, Sir George, a British general, born in Perthshire 1772, entered the army in 1789, and greatly distinguished himself in the late wars. In 1812 he was appointed governor of Canada; and, returning to England on the escape of Napoleon from Elba, became, after the peace, governor of Edinburgh castle. He held several other offices, and in 1828 was secretary of state for the colonies. The principal event of his political life was his defeat at the Westminster election 1837. In 1841 he became master-general of the ordnance under Sir Robert Peel; died 1846.

MURRAY, Hugh, a Scottish geographer, historian, and miscellaneous wr., au. of many volumes in the 'Edinburgh Cabinet Library,' 1779-1846.

MURRAY, James, a Scotch divine, 1702-1758.

MURRAY, James, a dissenting divine, d. 1782.

MURRAY, James, an East Indian officer, who commenced his career in the service in the Mahrattas 1790, died 1807.

MURRAY, James Stuart, earl of, a natural son of James V., king of Scotland, was born 1531, and educated in France with his sister, Mary, but joined the reformers soon after her marriage with the dauphin. His political history is connected with the fortunes of the queen, after whose imprisonment in Lochleven castle, 1567, he was proclaimed Regent, and defeated her troops at the battle of Langside. He was shot by James Hamilton, whose wife he had seduced, 1570.

MURRAY, John, a Scotch physician and chemist, author of works on the Materia Medica Pharmacy, 'Elements of Chemistry,' &c., d. 1820.

MURRAY, John, the eminent publisher whose name is associated with the works of Byron, dist. for his literary acquirements and liberality, 1778-1843.

MURRAY, John And., a Swedish naturalist, 1740-1791. His brother, Adolphus, professor of anatomy, 1750-1803. A third brother, J. Philip, distinguished as a man of letters, 1726-1776.

MURRAY, Lindley, born of Quaker parents in Pennsylvania 1745, was educated for the mercantile profession, and practised some time as a barrister. He afterwards realized a competency in his earlier pursuits, and acquired the leisure which he devoted to literary studies. He wrote, besides his well-known English Grammar and Spelling-book, several works on education and morals, d. 1826.

MURRAY, Patrick, fifth Lord Elibank, a writer on the currency and public credit, 1707-78.

MURRAY, William. See Mansfield.

MURRAY, W. H., a Scotch actor, 36 years manager of the Theatre Royal, Edinburgh, 1791-1852.

MURRAY, Wm. Vans, an American diplomatist, chiefly dist. for his services at the Hague, and at a later period at the French court, d. 1803.

MUSA, Antonius, a Roman physician, celebrated for his skilful cure of Augustus.

MUSA, Ibn N., an Arabian general, 640-717.

MUSA, Abu Abddallah Mahammed Ben, the earliest Arabian writer on algebra.

MUSÆUS, an ancient philoso
who flourished at an unknown dat

MUSÆUS, a Greek poet of t author of the 'Loves of Hero and

MUSÆUS, John Charles A ular German writer and satirist, 1

MUSCALUS, A., a German di

MUSCHER, M. Van, a Dutch p

MUSCULUS, Wolfgang, a and divine, who distinguished hi
early reformers, 1497-1563.

MUSGRAVE, Sir Richard,
parliament, and collector of the e author of 'Memoirs of the Rebel born about 1758, died 1818.

MUSGRAVE, Samuel, a phy
known as a classical scholar and c

MUSGRAVE, William, gra preceding, known as a medical quarian, 1657-1721.

MUSONIUS, a Stoic philosoph

MUSS, Charles, an enamel p

MUSSATO, A., an Ital. histori

MUSSCHENBROEK, Peter
physician, celebrated as a natural mathematician, 1692-1761.

MUSSO, C., an Italian prelate,

MUSURUS, M., a Greek savar

MUTIS, Don Giuseppe Cele
physician of Spain, dist. as a bota

MUTIUS CÆLIUS. See Sc

MUZIANO, Girolamo, one o brated Italian painters, at who Academy of St. Luke was founde

MUZIO, G., an Italian writer,

MYCONIUS, F., a German di

MYCONIUS, O., a Swiss refor

MYDORGE, C., a Fr. mathem

MYLE, A. Vander, a D. phil

MYLIUS, J. C., a Ger. bibliog

MYLNE, Robert, the archite bridge, London, afterwards surve Cathedral, and engineer to the pany, born at Edinburgh 1734, di

MYN, H. Vander, a D. paint

MYRO, a Greek poetess, 3d ce

MYRON, one of the most cel
antiquity, was born at Eleutherx 432 B.C. He was the pupil of A temporary with Phidias and Po established at Athens.—Myron among Greek sculptors for the turalism of his forms as contrast style of Phidias and other great G sented man and animal with e almost, says Petronius, gave the animals to brass. 'He was,' say in all corporeal detail, but paid expression,' this is not a bad desc now termed naturalism. The wo which very many are recorded, bronze, of Delos; but he was a marble, a carver in wood, and metals. The celebrated Townle quoit-thrower, found in the villa
Tivoli, in 1791, is the work of M posed to be a marble copy of t amongst all his great works, th
was a bronze cow suckling a calf,

at Athens: there are thirty-six epigrams his work in the Greek anthology. So extra- ary a popularity can be owing only to life- imitation, which must have been a compara- novelty. No quality in art is so popular, it is the most vulgar and least informed can un- and.—The following will serve as a specimen high reputation of this remarkable work: it m an old Greek epigram in Curl's Anac-

"This heifer is not cast, but rolling years
Hardened the life to what it now appears:
Myron unjustly would the honour claim,
But nature has prevented him in fame."

ow was, in the time of Procopius, the sixth century, in the temple of Peace at Rome. See a full account of Myron and his works, by the writer, in the Supple. to the Penny Cyclopædia. [R.N.W.]

MYRTIS, a poetess of Bœotia, 5th cent. B.C.

MYRTIUS, CHERUBIN, a local historian, born near Treves, and settled in an Italian monastery in 1592; date of his death unknown.

MYTENS, A., a Flemish painter, 1541-1602.

MYTENS, DANIEL, the name of two Dutch painters, father and son, the elder, known to have been living in 1656, the younger, 1636-1688.

MYTENS, M., a Swed. painter, famous for his imitations of the antique, born at Stockholm, 1695; d. at Vienna, where he was paint. to the court, 1755.

MYTZES, a king of the Bulgarians, 1258.

N

BEGA, an Arabian poet, 6th century.

BI-EFFENDI, a Turkish poet, 17th cent.

BIS, a general and tyrant of Sparta, who a considerable part in the affairs of Greece 205 to 192 B.C., at the time his country was fflict with the Roman power. He was killed pretended ally, Alexamenes, after being re- dly defeated by the army of the Achæan league.

BONASSAR, a k. of Babylonia, whose name s an era commencing 26th Feb., 747 B.C.

BOPOLASSAR. See NEBUCHADNEZZAR.

DAB, a king of Israel, 343-341 B.C.

DAL, A., a French miscel. wr., 1659-1741.

DASTI, or DE NADAZD, THOMAS, a garian nobleman distinguished in the wars of inand of Austria against Solyman II., and in e of Charles V., 16th century. His grandson, NCIS, Count de Forgatsch, a patriot and his- n, executed 1671.

ADAUD, JOS., a French ecclesiastic, d. 1792.

ADAULT, J., a French naturalist, 1701-1782.

ADIR SHAH, otherwise THAMASP KOULI AN, a famous military adventurer, who was in Khorassan, 1688; and by 1736 had raised self by a series of crimes and conquests to the ne of Persia. He then invaded the empire of Mogul, and after carrying fire and sword ugh some of its richest provinces, enriched self and his officers with nearly a hundred ions sterling in money, jewels, and effects. He despatched in his tent, after a fierce personal ggle with the conspirators, 19th June, 1747.

ÆVIUS, C., a Roman dramatist, d. B.C. 203.

ÆVIUS, J., a Saxon physician, 1499-1574.

AGOD, F. C., a French ascetic, 1734-1816.

AHL, J. A., a Prussian sculptor, 1710-1795.

AHUM, one of the Jewish prophets, 7th c. B.C.

AIGEON, J., a French painter, 1757-1832.

AIGEON, J. A., a French atheist, 1738-1810.

AIVEN, M., a Dutch painter, 1570-1651.

AKHIMOV, a Russian poet, 1782-1814.

ALDI, NALDO, an Italian wr., d. about 1470.

ALDI, S., an Italian singer, killed 1819.

ALSON, JOHN, a Church of England min- r, author of historical works elucidating the n of Charles I., 1638-1686.

ALSON, V., a Ch. of Engl. divine, 1641-1724.

NANGIS, W. DE, a French historian, 14th ct.

NANI, GIOVANNI BATISTA FELICE GAS- ARE, a diplomatist and hist. of Venice, 1616-78.

NANNI, GIOVANNI, an Ital. painter, called from his birth-place, Giovanni di Udine, 1494-1564.

NANNINI, A., an Italian writer, 15th century.

NANNIUS, PET., the Latinized name of Peter Nanni, or Nanning, a Dutch philologist, 1500-57.

NANNONI, A., an Italian surgeon, 1715-1790.

NANTEUIL, P., a French dramatist, d. 1681.

NANTEUIL, R., a French engraver, 1630-78.

NANTIGNI, L. C., a Fr. genealogist, 1692-1755.

NAPIER, LIEUTENANT-GEN. SIR CHARLES JAMES, who combined the talents of a great administrator with those of a conqueror, and was in many respects one of the most remarkable men of the present age, was born in 1782, and began his military career in Ireland at the period of the rebellion. He won his first laurels in the peninsular war, where he fought desperately under Sir John Moore, and became the prisoner of Ney, dreadfully lacerated by the wounds he had received during the retreat on Corunna. Being permitted to return to England on parole, he filled up a period of military inaction by writing several works on colonization, the state of Ireland, military law, and engineering. In 1811 he joined Wellington as a volunteer, and was present at some of his hardest fought actions in the peninsula, including Fuentes d'Onore and Badajoz. It was his fate to be absent on a cruising expedition when Europe was surprised by the sudden return of Napoleon, but he reached the army three days after the battle of Waterloo, assisted in what fighting there remained to do, and accompanied it to Paris. He was then some years governor of Cephalonia, and drew up a plan, in conjunction with Lord Byron, for achieving the independence of Greece, won the lasting gratitude of the Cephalonians, who call him the father of their country, and was ultimately recalled. In 1841, during the administration of Lord Auckland in India, he was appointed commander of the Bombay army, and commenced that reform of abuses which rendered his name a hateful one to the magnates of Leadenhall-Street, and the authorities under their influence. On the appointment of Lord Ellenborough, his plan for a campaign in Affghanistan found support in a kindred spirit, and taking the field with only 2,000 men, he found himself face to face with an army of 30,000 whom he defeated with dreadful slaughter at the famous battle of Meeanee, 17th February, 1843. His forces were afterwards augmented to 5,000, and with these he completed the conquest of Scinde, by the defeat of Shere Mahomed at the head of 25,000 men in a pitched battle at Hydrabad. Lord Ellenborough appointed him governor of the conquered territory, and it was now that his brilliant talents as a ruler found the scope necessary for their development. Troops of bandits had to be put down, sutteeship abolished, a general survey of the country taken, roads made, the laws revised, the whole of the administration reorganized; yet in addition to all this, Sir Charles Napier added to his labours the social improvement and education of the people; besides writing and arguing against the opposition of the civil authorities of India. In the midst of these toils the battles of Ferozeshah and Sobraon finished the scheme of conquest while he was speculating on its enlargement, and in 1847 he was induced by the declining health of Lady Napier to return to England. In 1849 another Sikh war had broken out, and the anxious eyes of the country were fixed on Sir Charles Napier, who, conscious that his only friends were in the army and the people of England, for some time declined going. He yielded at last to the duke of Wellington, whose last words were,—'If you don't go, I must,' and forty-three days after he was in Bombay, where he learned that the war had been concluded. The manner of his reception by Lord Dalhousie completely realized his misgivings. 'In ten minutes,' (says Sir Charles) 'he told me in substance, nay, the words were,— That in letters from England he had been warned against my endeavouring to encroach upon his power, and had answered he would take d——d good care I should not!' On such terms it is rather surprising that Napier remained commander of the army two years than that he tendered his resignation at the end of that period and returned home—not, however, until he had effected further reforms in all that came under his authority. He died at Oaklands, near Portsmouth, 29th August, 1853, leaving a name that will long be honoured among the worthies of England—a great soldier, a great ruler, and a fearless exposer of all manner of abuses. His last appearance in public was at the funeral of the duke of Wellington, when his usual grotesque appearance on horseback was rendered painful by his too evident infirmity. The vanity so conspicuous in his writings, is rendered less objectionable than it might otherwise be, by his soldier-like frankness, and graphic skill in circumstantial description. The last from his pen is entitled 'Defects, Civil and Military, in the Indian Government,' lately edited by his brother, Sir W. F. P. Napier; the most interesting is his account of Scinde as he found it and as he left it. [E.R.]

NAPIER, JOHN, Baron of Merchiston, the illustrious inventor of logarithms, was the eldest son of Archibald Napier, of Edinbellie and Merchiston, master of the mint in Scotland. He was born at Merchiston castle, near Edinburgh, in 1550. After going through the usual course of study at St. Andrews, he is said to have applied himself to mathematics, during a tour to the Netherlands, France, and Italy. Upon his return to Scotland, he declined all civil employment in order that he might devote himself entirely to literary and scientific pursuits. The principal subjects of his study were mathematics an sacred writings, and he began his career as a thor by the publication of his commentari the apocalypse, under the title of 'A Plain covery of the Revelation of St. John.' This was translated into French, and published, vised by himself, at Rochelle in 1602, and wards in 1605 and 1607. It was highly l by the protestants of France, owing to th and learning with which he endeavoured t that the pope was the antichrist of Scriptur he was more successful in this discussion t others, in which he vainly attempted to future events from the revelations at Pat The attention of Napier was at this time d to other subjects than theology, though re feeling was the motive which impelled him task. In 1596 he addressed a letter to A Bacon, (the original of which is in the Arc copal Library of Lambeth), entitled—'Sec ventions Necessary in these Days for the D of this Island, and Withstanding Str Enemies to God's Truth and Religion.' T of these inventions, is a burning mirror for d ing the enemy's ships at any distance, by ing to a focus the beams of the sun; and the another mirror for effecting the same ob reflecting 'the beams of any material fire or It does not appear that Napier made any ments with these mirrors, or placed his inv in the hands of those who alone could appl When, a short time before his death, a pa friend implored him not to bury in the gra himself such excellent inventions, he repl there was already too many devices for th and overthrow of man; and that as the m the human heart would not allow man diminish the number of them, 'they shoul be increased by any new conceit of his.'—T reason to believe that Napier had previous t begun those investigations which led t the invention of logarithms. We are infor Wood in his 'Athenæ Oxoniensis,' that Dr. a Scotchman, who had come from Denmar Napier that Longomontanus had invented a 'of saving the tedious multiplications and d in astronomical calculations,' and that th done by 'proportionable numbers,' 'whic Napier taking, he desired him upon his re call upon him again. Craig, after some had passed, did so, and Napier then showed rude draught of what he called Canon M Logarithmorum; which draught, with some tions, he printed in 1614.' Wood adds, ' came into the hands of our author Brigge, William Oughtres, from whom the relation matter came.'—It is quite possible that Long tanus may have been occupied with the atte abridge astronomical calculations, but if h made the slightest progress in such an inv tion, his friend Kepler would not have fai give him the credit which he may have de Whereas, in a letter to Cruger, he distinctly that 'nothing can surpass the method of N (Nepereanam rationem).—The work in Napier gave his great invention to the world, published at Edinburgh in 1614, with the tit 'Mirifici Logarithmorum Canonis Descrip When the invention of logarithms was first m

r. Henry Briggs, Reader in astronomy college, and the improver of logaras so surprised with admiration that he est till he saw the inventor. When d of this he invited Briggs to Scotland.
met, 'about one quarter of an hour
each beholding the other with admira-one word was spoken.' The Baron his guest most nobly, and Briggs chiston castle every summer during his friend.—Baron Napier improved
y by the invention of his universal he calls the first circular parts, for the cases of right-angled spherical nd which was published in his pos-rk, 'Mirifici Logarithmorum Canonis
' which appeared in 1619.—The last of our noble author was his 'Rab-umerationis per virgolas,' published in eprinted at Lyons in 1618, and 1620.
nent here described is known by the apier's Rods or Bones,' an account of e found in our various encyclopædias.
the last work written by Napier. He chiston castle, on the 4th April, o.s., sixty-eighth year of his age, and was church of St. Giles, Edinburgh, where t, with a Latin inscription, points out lace of the Napiers.—Baron Napier arried, and has left behind him a race
d by their talents, by their writings, ir military and naval services.—So apier's reputation, that the illustrious ated to him his 'Ephemerides,' which 1617; but the greatest compliment that d to his memory was that of Laplace, ng of the value of logarithms in astro-
his admirable invention,' he says,
e ingenious algorithm of the Indians,
to a few days the labour of several ables, if we may so speak, the life of
, and spares them the errors and disable from long calculations; an inven-
ich is the more satisfying to the hu-
from its having been entirely deduced resources. In the arts man makes aterials and the forms of nature to in-powers, but in this case, it is all his ('Systeme du Monde,' Liv. v., chap. iv.
. 326). See the 'Account of the Life,
d Inventions of John Napier of Mer-
the earl of Buchan, Perth, 1787;
of him by one of his descendants,
r, Esq., Edinburgh, 1834. [D.B.]

, MACVEY, a Scottish lawyer and nt, successor of Jeffrey as editor of rgh Review' in 1829, and editor of ion of the 'Enc. Britannica,' d. 1847.

, WILLIAM JOHN, Lord, a dist. naval at Kinsale, 1787, appointed superin-
the trade and interests of the British ina 1833, died at Macao 1834.

E, C. A. GALEANI, an Ital. officer and , died 1814. His brother, J. GALE-
de Napione, dist. as a dramatic writer.

ON BUONAPARTE, was born at Corsica, on the 5th February, 1768.
ls gave out that he was born on 15th 9, being his saint's day, and that is usually considered as the period of his nativity; but that the former is the real date is proved in the most authentic way by the attestation of himself,

[View of Ajaccio.]

his brother Joseph, and the principal members of his family, on occasion of his marriage with Josephine, in 1795, which still exists in the parish register, in Paris, where the marriage was solemnized. He had no interest at that time, and on that occasion, to make himself older than he really was, though he had a decided interest afterwards to make himself younger, as in the interval between Feb., 1768, and Aug., 1769, Corsica was annexed to France, so that he could not be a French citizen by nativity, without understating his birth. His family was respectable but not illustrious, and he always disdained to take advantage of the adventitious lustre of events. When some Italian genealogists, in the days of his greatness, tried to flatter him by tracing back his pedigree to the dukes of Treviso, he cut them short by saying that his patent of nobility dated from the battle of Montenotte, his first victory over the Austrians, in Italy. His mother was a woman of great beauty, courage, and ability, a peculiarity generally observed with those destined for future greatness; and having been taken with her pains in church, she was brought home, and Napoleon was brought into the world on a couch representing the heroes of the Iliad. He received the rudiments of his education at Ajaccio, in Corsica, where, by a curious coincidence, Count Pozzo de Borgo, afterwards his persevering and bitter opponent through life, was also instructed. Having early evinced a decided taste for military life, he was, at the age of eleven, sent to the military school, at Brienne, in Champagne, where he remained till he obtained his commission in the artillery. Pichegru, afterwards so famous, and whom Napoleon in the end destroyed, left the academy soon after the young Napoleon. At this academy, where he remained several years, his talents, especially for mathematics and the exact sciences, attracted the attention of his preceptors, who reported in the highest terms on his capacity to the government at Paris, and one of their memorandum books had this entry: 'Keep an eye on young Buonaparte, and promote him as fast as possible, for if you do not he will make his way for himself.' While at school, in a severe winter, the boys made bastions and ravelins of snow, and

Napoleon distinguished himself at the head of the storming party. He received his first commission in the artillery at the age of sixteen. His figure was then diminutive and so thin that when he first appeared with his uniform on, and the huge part of it on his legs, he looked so ridiculous that Madle. Permon, afterwards duchess of Abrantes, with whom he was in love, burst into an immoderate fit of laughter, which gave no small offence to the young soldier. His first employment in real service was at the siege of Toulon, in 1794, when it was observed 'that a young lieutenant of artillery was very busy about a gun.' Even in that subordinate situation, however, his talents made themselves felt, and it was by his advice that the operations were directed against an outwork on the Mount Taron, which, when taken, by commanding the ships in the harbour, rendered the place no longer tenable. When dictating a despatch there on the head of a drum to an unknown sergeant of artillery, a cannon ball fell close to them and threw a quantity of dust on the paper. 'That is lucky,' exclaimed the sergeant, 'we shall not require sand for this paper.' 'What can I do for you,' said Napoleon, 'to evince my regard?' 'Everything,' said the sergeant, 'you can convert my worsted shoulder-knot into an epaulette.' Napoleon recommended him for promotion, and he got his commission. His name was JUNOT, and he became duke of Abrantes, and one of the most distinguished marshals of France. After the fall of Toulon, Napoleon was for some time out of employment. He was suspected, not without reason, of being implicated with the government of Robespierre; and he shared in the disgrace of its fall. He remained in consequence about five months at Paris without any occupation, and in a state of extreme poverty. So low indeed were the fortunes of the future emperor fallen at this period, that, as he himself said, he never got his boots blackened, and never wore gloves, for they were a useless expense. His imagination, however, abated nothing of its vigour by the decline of his fortunes, and despairing of effecting anything in Europe he dreamed of the East, and entertained serious thoughts of offering his services to the grand seignor, with a view to pushing his fortunes in Asia. 'Asia,' said he, 'contains six hundred millions of men, it is there alone that anything is to be done! Europe is worn out, there is nothing practicable here.' He was ere long, however, called to active and important duties in his own country. Though suspected and therefore unemployed by the government of the Directory, his abilities were well known; and when the directors were reduced to extremities by the insurrection of the sections in October, 1795, the first great reaction against the crown and honour of the revolution, they cast their eyes upon him as the only man who could resuscitate their tottering fortunes. The first day's conflict, in which Gen. Menou commanded, turned out entirely to the advantage of the insurgents, who were 30,000 strong, all national guards, and comprised the whole flower and educated classes of Paris. In great agitation the directors sent for Napoleon in the evening, and gave him the command of their forces, which were only 5,000, shut up in the squares of the Carousel and the Louvre. Napoleon instantly took his line. In the night he despatched an officer, destined for future greatness, MURAT, to S a village in the neighbourhood of Paris, park of fifty pieces of artillery was placed the chiefs of the national guard with inconc infatuation had neglected to seize. Mu possession of the guns and brought them Tuileries. This decided the affair. Next insurgents commenced their attack from the of St. Roch, in the Rue d'Honore, and at t time from the opposite side of the river. were received with so terrible a discharge shot that after standing several rounds the and fled, leaving the victory to the regular and the government of the Directory firmly lished. Napoleon was rewarded, as well he for this important victory, by the command army of Italy. The favour of Barras as member of the Directory, contributed also elevation, as he had recently married Jose BEAUHARNAIS, his future empress, who h intimate with that profligate director. young Napoleon took the command of the Italy he was only 27 years of age, and wh accustomed to high command. He fo troops in the most miserable condition, per the shining summits of the maritime Alps, they had been driven by the united arms Austrians and the Piedmontese, in the pr campaign, and in want of everything. Fr long sufferings he predicted a speedy ch their fortunes. 'Famine, cold, and misery,' in his first proclamation, 'are the school soldiers. Here on the plains of Italy conquer them, and then you will find com riches and glory.' He was as good as hi Descending like a torrent from the summi Alps he soon carried everything before him ing defeated the combined armies in several he appeared before the walls of Turin an the Piedmontese government to conclude a peace with France, the condition of which cession of all their fortresses to the conque public, which at once gave him a solid fo Italy, and secure basis for ulterior op against the Austrians. He was not long ing this basis to the best account. Having his troops with a fortnight's rest and his with ample contributions he advanced t where he was received by the revolutionar with transports, which were soon cooled by position of a contribution of £800,000 on its tants, suppressed with dreadful severity an rection in Pavia, and forced the 'terrible b Lodi,' as he himself called it, though defe 25,000 Austrians. It was then, as he us in his memoirs, that high ambition took sion of his soul; he became impressed w idea he was destined to do great things. ing up his career of success he defeated t trians in several encounters and compell commanders to shut themselves up in M strong fortress in the centre of the plain bardy. Impressed with the importance stronghold, the bulwark of their possessions the Austrian government made the greate for its relief. They successively collecte powerful armies to relieve it; one of whi a series of desperate actions, succeeded v veteran Marshal Wurmser in penetrating fortress and reinforcing the garrison. But this advantage was gained only by incurring defeats in other quarters; for Napoleon raising the siege concentrated his forces and severely defeated the Austrians, who were incautiously advancing in two columns separated from each other by the lake of Guarda. The blockade of Mantua, encumbered with 10,000 additional mouths, was now resumed, and the Austrians assembled a second army for its relief, but it was defeated by Napoleon with desperate loss on the dykes of Arcota. A third collected in Tyrol, composed of the best troops in the monarchy, and shared the same fate on the Plateau of Rivoli, on the banks of the Adige, between Verona and Trent. Despairing now of being relieved, and having exhausted all his means of subsistence, Wurmser was obliged to capitulate. Napoleon, respecting his age and valour, granted him honourable terms, and this campaign closed with the French flag flying on Mantua and the whole fortresses of the Adige, the barrier in that quarter of the Austrian monarchy. Seriously alarmed now for the very existence of the monarchy, the cabinet of Vienna withdrew the archduke Charles, who in the preceding campaign had gained successes nearly as great in Germany, as Napoleon had in Italy, to oppose the redoutable conqueror in the Venetian plains. He brought with him 30,000 of his best troops, flushed with victory on the Bavarian plains, and the two youthful conquerors were arrayed against each other on the banks of the Tagliamonto. But the star of Napoleon prevailed. With equal skill and daring he forced the passage of the Tagliamonto, and drove the archduke out of the Venetian plains into the passes of the Alps, and following him up there, he drove him from one pass and one position to another, till he had placed his standards on the Simmering, the last ridge of the Alps, before they melt away into the valley of the Danube, and from whence the steeples of Vienna are visible. Driven now to their last shifts, the Austrians sued for peace, which Napoleon willingly accorded, for in truth his position, how brilliant soever, was full of peril from being too far advanced, with only 35,000 men, into the Austrian dominions. On this occasion Austria and France adjusted their differences without difficulty, for in return for large concessions to the conquering republic, the French handed over to them the whole dominions of the republic of Venice, a state which at first had been neutral, and had, in the close of the contest, effected a revolution in favour of France; one of the blackest instances of national ingratitude recorded in history. After this peace Napoleon remained inactive for about a year, an object of the utmost jealousy and terror to the French government, to whom his unbending disposition, his ambition, and fame rendered him an object of the utmost apprehension. To get rid of so formidable a rival, they fell upon the experiment of offering him the command of a great expedition they were preparing against Egypt, and as this promised to bring Napoleon into the theatre of his early and favourite dreams of ambition, and as he conceived matters were not ripe for the revolution which he meditated in Europe, he acceded to their offer. The expedition, the greatest that ever set sail in modern times from the shores of Europe, accordingly sailed, having 35,000 soldiers on board, convoyed by fourteen ships of the line and above 300 transports. Though Nelson was in the Mediterranean straining every nerve to intercept the expedition, it arrived in safety before Malta, which at once capitulated to the French arms, and then steering for Alexandria, disembarked the whole troops there in safety in June, 1798. Napoleon, overjoyed with his good fortune in having escaped the English fleet, pursued his advantage with the utmost alacrity. Advancing from Alexandria towards Cairo, his army, after undergoing incredible hardships in the desert, arrived in sight of the Pyramids, where they beheld the Turkish army 30,000 strong, of which 15,000 were splendid Mameluke horse, ready to receive them. Impressed but not daunted by the noble spectacle, Napoleon said to his men, 'From the summit of these monuments forty centuries are gazing upon you.' They were not unworthy of their mission. Drawn up in squares, a deadly rolling fire as from so many flaming citadels issued from their ranks, a charge of cavalry completed the rout of the Turks, Cairo opened its gates and the French dominion was established over the whole of Egypt. Meanwhile, a dreadful reverse, apparently fatal to Napoleon's prospects in Europe, had occurred at sea. Nelson having at length discovered where the French fleet was, had stood into the bay of Aboukir, where they lay moored under protection of the land batteries, and totally destroyed it, one only sail having escaped to carry the mournful tidings to France. This catastrophe seemed fatal to the French army, for it cut them off from any communication with their country. Napoleon, however, was not discouraged. 'We must remain here,' said he, 'or emerge from it great like the ancients;' and he immediately set about preparing an expedition into Syria. His plan was to rouse the Christian population of Lebanon and Asia Minor, and reinforcing by their aid his French troops, to approach Constantinople from the Asiatic side, and place himself on the throne of the East. Surprising success in the first instance attended his efforts. He crossed the desert which separates Asia and Africa; stormed Jaffa, and cruelly massacred 4,000 prisoners taken in cold blood, laid siege to Acre, pushed on to Nazareth, the early dwelling-place of our Saviour, and defeated 40,000 Ottomans with great slaughter, at Mount Thabor. But this was the summit of his success. Sir Sidney Smith landed with a party of marines from the British ships at Acre, placed himself with his brave followers in the breach, when the place was on the point of falling, and infused such vigour into the defences that all the assaults of the French were repulsed, and Napoleon, abandoning all his ideas of Oriental conquest, was obliged to wend his way back with disgrace to Egypt. During the retreat, he poisoned several hundreds of his wounded soldiers, to prevent them from falling into the hands of the Turks, by whom they would have been barbarously massacred, and soon after was consoled for his reverses by a victory over 20,000 Janissaries, whom the English landed in the bay of Aboukir. Yet though so great a career awaited him in Europe, Napoleon never ceased lamenting his check at Acre, and repeatedly said, especially when revolving his eventful career in the solitude of St. Helena, when speaking of Sir Sidney Smith, 'That man made me miss my destiny.' But another fate awaited the young general. France speedily felt the want of his tutelary arm when it was withdrawn. 'The sun of Buonaparte,' as Mr. Pitt expressed it, 'was falling before the rising star of Suwarrow.' That daring and celebrated general, at the head of a combined Austrian and Russian army, had defeated the French in several pitched battles on the plains of Lombardy, regained all the fortresses, surmounted the maritime Alps, and appeared on the shores of the Var, on the frontiers of Provençe. The republicans had been entirely driven out of Germany, and Massena, shut up in France with 50,000 men, with difficulty maintained himself against the superior army of the archduke Charles and Korsakow. In these circumstances all eyes were turned to Napoleon, as the only man capable of saving the country. He now felt, in his own words, that 'the pear was ripe,' and he resolved to return to Europe. His usual good fortune did not desert him on this occasion. Setting sail in a single frigate from Alexandria, he eluded the English cruisers who were anxiously looking out to intercept his return, and landed safe at Cannes, in Provençe, in October, 1799. From thence he proceeded to Paris, where finding the government of the Directory utterly discredited, and in the last stage of decrepitude, he ventured on the bold stroke of a coup d'etat, expelled the Legislatives from their halls by means of fixed bayonets, and under the name of 'first consul' seated himself on the throne of France. His first care after this great success, was to expel the Austrians from Italy, the scene of his earliest triumphs and of such obstinate conflicts between them and the French. His plan for this purpose was laid with equal skill and secrecy. Assembling an army, styled 'the army of reserve,' at Dijon, in the heart of France, he suddenly led them across the St. Bernard, a pass 8,000 feet high, deemed impassable for artillery or carriages, overcame the resistance of the Fort of Bard, in the southern declivity of the mountain, entered Milan in triumph, defeated the Austrian advanced guard, 10,000 strong, at Stradilla, and encountered their main body, 30,000 strong, returning from the Var, at Marengo. After an obstinate conflict, in which he was on the point of being destroyed, he defeated them with great slaughter. The peculiar position of the two armies rendered this victory decisive, and demonstrated the strategetical skill with which Napoleon's plan of the campaign and march across the St. Bernard had been laid. The Austrians, returning from the Var, fought with their faces towards Vienna and their backs towards the maritime Alps and the bay of Genoa. Defeat in such circumstances was ruin; and Melas, the Austrian commander, was too happy to conclude a convention, in virtue of which, he was allowed to retire to Mantua after delivering up the whole fortresses of Piedmont to the victorious French. Securely seated by this great triumph on the Consular throne, Napoleon ere long forced the Austrians to make peace at Luneville, and thereby pacified the whole continent. He underwent a deep mortification, however, soon after by the successful result of the English expedition, under Sir Ralph Abercrombie, to Egypt, and the wresting from his grasp of his whole conquests on the banks of the Nile. His projects for the destruction of this country, also the great object of his life, were blasted about the same time by Nelson's victory at Copenhagen, which destroyed the northern [illegible] tion, and the death of the emperor Paul, [illegible] withdrew Russia from that formidable a[illegible] England and France now had no longer the [illegible] of fighting. They could not reach each ot[illegible], for they were both victorious on their respect[illegible] ele-ments, and like monsters of the land and de[illegible] their hostility could not be exerted against each [illegible]other. Sensible of this they concluded peace in Jun[illegible] 1801, which put the first period to the dreadful h[illegible]ilities of the revolutionary war. The peace, h[illegible]ever, proved only an armed truce. Both parti[illegible] were only gaining breath for a renewal of th[illegible] fight. Napoleon did great things during its cont[illegible]nce. He reformed the whole civil administratio[illegible] of the country, and commenced the code Napoleon[illegible] which has survived his fall, and forms the most [illegible]lorious monument to his memory. He was indef[illegible]tigable during the interval of hostilities in increa[illegible]g his navy; and as the English government, in o[illegible] to the usual infatuated demand of the coun[illegible]y for a reduction of the national armaments on the re[illegible]rn of peace, had seriously diminished the British fl[illegible], we were all but overmatched on our own element[illegible] when hostilities broke out again in 1803. Encou[illegible]raged by this hopeful state of affairs, Napoleon f[illegible]rmed a gigantic fleet for our subjugation, whic[illegible] was very near proving successful. Having suc[illegible]eeded in forcing Spain into his alliance, he had a p[illegible]roject for assembling 70 sail of the line in the Ch[illegible]annel, who were to transport 130,000 men into En[illegible]gland, and 30,000 into Ireland, on board of 2,000 [illegible]gun-boats, which he had prepared at Boulogne for [illegible]their conveyance across the Channel. Vast as the [illegible] plan was, it was on the very verge of proving su[illegible]ccess-ful. The Toulon fleet set sail from Cadiz[illegible] and decoyed Nelson into the West Indies; speedil[illegible]ly re-turning it encountered Sir R. Calder off Finis[illegible]terre, and who, with 15 sail of the line, defeated their 2[illegible] in fatal took two sail of the line. This action proved [illegible]ended to the whole design. Villeneuve, who comma[illegible]d here the combined squadron, retreated to Terrol, w[illegible]here admiral instead of proceeding to Brest, where ab[illegible]ut to join Gantheaume was ready with 21 sail of the li[illegible]ne to join him, he went to Cadiz, where he was [illegible]n him blockaded by Nelson, and totally defeated by [illegible]mber, with the loss of 20 sail of the line, on 21st Octo[illegible]ber, 1805. Thenceforward the maritime war was at[illegible]n end, and Napoleon had to trust solely to continu[illegible]e his victories for our destruction. Instantly taking [illegible] the line he extracted out of his maritime defeat, [illegible] means of achieving his greatest land triumph[illegible]. Russia had joined Austria, and the army of the la[illegible]st, ter, 80,000 strong, had advanced to Ulm, in Bavari[illegible]a. Crossing France and the north of Germany wi[illegible] incredible rapidity, Napoleon defeated the Au[illegible]s-trians in several actions, and at length shut up [illegible] 30,000 in Ulm, where they were forced to capitu-late the very day before the battle of Trafalgar. Advancing then, at the head of 180,000 men, down the valley of the Danube he captured Vienna, and totally defeated the combined Austrian and Russian armies, under the emperor Alexander in person, on Dec. 2. This catastrophe drove Austria to a separate peace, which she only purchased by great cessions of territory; and the Russians, weakened by the loss of 30,000 men, wended their way back in mourning to their own dominions. Next year the Prussians with infatuated hardihood rushed oleon encountered them at Jena defeated them with such loss 100,000 men had disappeared h which they had commenced ia was speedily overrun, Berlin aant of their armies driven back re they were supported by the came up in great strength. ns took place during the depth he French discovered the sturdy ntagonists with which they had ched battle fought at Eylau, on French emperor was defeated 00 men. But ere long he had g gathered up all his reserves, 0 men round his standard, he ans, in June, 1807, and after as, defeated them in a pitched on July 14. The result of this eaty of Tilsit, which virtually r powers, in effect divided the Europe between Napoleon and ble in ambition, Napoleon had that great victory over his hen he turned his eyes to the seized on Portugal, without a , and decoyed the king, queen, of Spain to Bayonne, where ats, treachery, and cajolery he ding from them all a renuncia- f Spain, upon which he im- s own brother, Joseph, and at the throne of Naples to his at. About the same time he ous Berlin and Milan decree, the English permanently from ontinental Europe. His abo- to the Spanish royal family l war in the Peninsula, which ded with surprising success. with 25,000 men to Castanos, gal was recovered by Welling- were obliged to retire behind leon was at hand to repair the his whole reserves from Ger- ntered Navarre at the head of ted the Spaniards in several rid, and pursued the English re into Galicia, where, though leventh hour a glorious victory ult and Ney, they were forced rn to England, weakened by a rs, and having lost the whole paign. Austria deemed the when the chief forces of Na- ed in the Peninsula to endea- e of her lost provinces. She gly in May, 1809, and advanced to Bavaria, when the archduke ed considerable success. But spot, defeated the Austrians les, and treacherously gaining idge of Vienna, made himself al. He sustained, however, a ter from the archduke Charles rn, who defeated him with the and brought him to the very covered himself, however, and 0,000 men in Vienna, threw six bridges in one night over the Danube, and defeated the Austrians in a pitched battle which lasted two days, on the field of Wagram. This triumph won for France the peace of Presburg, which deprived Austria of a fourth of her dominions, and for Napoleon the hand of the archduchess Maria Louisa, daughter of the emperor of Austria. He had previously been declared emperor of France in 1804, and divorced Josephine in order to make way for this splendid alliance, and as he was now recognized emperor by all the states in Europe except England, and admitted to a matrimonial connection with the highest and proudest of them, he seemed to have arrived at the utmost limits of earthly grandeur and felicity. Nevertheless, it turned out otherwise, and his marriage proved not only the limit of his good fortune but the commencement of his decline. The emperor Alexander was personally hurt by the Austrian marriage, for Napoleon had been on terms of proposal for his own sister, and he never forgave the affront. This, coupled with the rapid strides of the French emperor in northern Europe, who had halved Prussia, and incorporated Holland, the Hanse Towns, and nearly the whole of northern Germany with his dominions, led to a rupture with Russia in 1812. The whole of 1810 and 1811 was spent by both parties in preparing for this contest, which every one saw was approaching; and at length his preparations being complete, Napoleon crossed the Niemen, and invaded Russia in May, 1812, at the head of 500,000 men, the greatest military armament of real soldiers ever seen since the beginning of the world. The Russians had not half the force to resist this crusade, and the consequence was they were driven back into the very heart of their territories. Smolensko was stormed by Napoleon in person, and in a desperate battle fought at Borodino, on Sept. 6, when 30,000 men fell on both sides, the Russians were so far wasted that they were obliged to abandon Moscow to the conqueror. But this was the extreme point of the French emperor's success. The Russians burned their ancient capital to prevent it from affording shelter to the enemy; the French reduced now by the sword, fatigue, and sickness to 100,000 men, were obliged to retreat on the wasted line of their former advance; and the cold having set in with great severity they were attacked by the Russians on several occasions, with such success that not 20,000 escaped across the Niemen, nearly all in the last stage of exhaustion and misery. Napoleon himself abandoned his troops in the middle of their sufferings, and made his escape to Paris on a sledge accompanied only by a single attendant. This terrible and unexampled reverse, coupled with the victorious career of Wellington in the same year in Spain, who had defeated the French in a pitched battle at Salamanca, recovered Madrid, and liberated all the southern provinces of Spain from their oppressors, produced a general insurrection in Europe. Prussia took up arms; desperate battles were fought at Lutzen, Bautzen, Dresden, and other places; and at length Napoleon having made a last stand at Leipzig, the battle of Giants began on 18th Oct., 1813. 300,000 Germans and Russians commenced the attack, which 200,000 French resisted. 2,500 pieces of cannon spread destruction around, and after a bloody conflict of two days'

duration, Napoleon was totally defeated with the loss of 40,000 men and 250 guns, and with difficulty brought back 60,000 of his vast army behind the Rhine. At the same time Wellington, who had totally defeated king Joseph in person at Vittoria, had crossed the Pyrenees and was threatening Bayonne, so that the French empire on all sides was crumbling into ruins. Early in the following spring, the allies invaded France along the whole course of the Rhine, while Wellington pursued his career of success in the south of France. Driven to extremities, Napoleon exerted himself to the utmost, and exhibited the most splendid military abilities. But, although he gained with forces greatly inferior several important victories over the allies, he was at length overpowered. Paris was taken by the emperor of Russia and king of Prussia in person, at the head of 200,000 men. Napoleon was dethroned, and the Bourbons restored to the French throne, and he himself banished to the Isle of Elba, where a mimic sovereignty was permitted him to console his mind after such a dreadful series of reverses. But the restless mind and ambitious spirit of Napoleon could not long rest in this state of forced seclusion. Having ascertained that discontent was universal in the French army, the natural result of their misfortunes, he set out from Elba accompanied only by 600 of the old guard who had shared his exile, and landing at Cannes, marched to Paris without opposition, dethroned Louis XVIII., and re-established himself on the throne of France. He was then immediately denounced by the allied sovereigns, who set about collecting forces on his frontiers; and despairing of averting a war by negotiation, he resolved, with his usual vigour and decision, to anticipate the allies and strike the first blow. He all but succeeded. Crossing the frontier of Flanders, on the morning of the 15th June, 1815, he attacked and defeated the Prussians, 80,000 strong, under Blucher, at Ligny, and the same day sustained a bloody conflict with Wellington's advanced guard, in which he was at length routed at Quatre Bras. But two days after he met the stroke of fate. Wellington retired to and stood firm at Waterloo, where, on the 18th, he gave battle to the French, with an army nearly equal in numerical amount, but greatly inferior in artillery and the quality of part of his troops, being not more than a-half of them English. A desperate battle ensued, in which both parties displayed prodigies of valour, and victory seemed long doubtful. At length the Prussians came up late in the evening, and Napoleon was by the united allied force totally defeated with the loss of 40,000 men and 150 pieces of cannon. This victory was decisive: Napoleon fled to Paris, where he was soon after forced to abdicate the throne and surrender to the English cruisers. St. Helena was assigned as the future residence of the fallen conqueror, where he was guarded with the most vigilant care by the English troops and vessels, to whom the custody of the illustrious state prisoner was committed. He remained there fretting in inaction and loudly complaining of trifling indignities till the period of his death, which occurred on May 5, 1821. His conduct there exhibited alternately the grandeur of a noble and the littleness of a despicable man. He wrote several most able and interesting works, chiefly relating to his eventful biography, and which, not less than his long series of victories, ha tributed to his colossal fame; but at th time he fretted beyond measure at being de title of emperor, and attended even at a by English sentinels in his rides. He was ficently treated by the English governme expended £12,000 a-year on his private es ment, and £400,000 yearly on the island; ardent spirit could not brook even s indignity and real inaction. His imaginar ances, coupled with a hereditary malady in the stomach, of which his father had died, on a mortal distemper, of which he died May, 1821. He quitted this life during a storm of wind and rain, which recalled to l the roar of battle. His last words wer d'armeé' (head of the army). He was int

[Tomb of Napoleon at St. Helena.]

Slain's valley, in the island of St. Hele whence his remains were, in December, 18 the consent of the English government, t to Paris, where on the 15th of that mon were interred in a mausoleum under the do Invalides, and now repose beside the bone renne and Vauban, the paladins of France.

[Tomb of Napoleon at the Invalides.]

NAPPER-TANDY. See TANDY.

NARBONNE, the viscounts of, distinguished for any particular merits are,—AYMERI, died in the Holy Land beginning of the 12th century. AYMERI II., perished in Arragon, on his way to join Alphonso against the Moors, 1134. ERMENGARDE, famous for the wise administration of her government, abdicated in favour of her nephew 1192, died 1197. PIERRE DE LARA, nephew and successor of the preceding, abdicated in favour of his son 1194, died 1202. AYMERI III., son and successor of the preceding, subdued by Simon de Montfort, who took the title of duke of Narbonne, died 1239. AYMERI IV., or AMELRIC I., son and successor of the latter, died 1270. AYMERI V., son and successor of the preceding, and his successor in the government, 1270, died 1298. AYMERI VI., or AMELRIC II., son and successor of the preceding, commander of the troops of Florence for Charles II., king of Sicily, died 1328. AYMERI VII., his son, who succeeded him, died 1336. AMELRIC III., son and successor of the preceding, died 1341. AYMERI VIII., brother and successor of the latter, named admiral of France by Charles V., 1369, died 1388.

NARBONNE-LARA, LOUIS, Count De, minister of war under Louis XVI., and lieutenant-general and ambassador to Vienna under the empire, born at Parma 1755, died 1813.

NARBONNE-PELET-FRITZLAR, J. F., Count De, a French officer, died 1784.

NARBOROUGH, SIR JOHN, an English naval officer, dist. against the Dutch and Algerines, d. 1688.

NARCISSUS, the freedman and favourite of Claudius, memorable for his part in the fall of Messalina: being afterwards exiled by the influence of Agrippina, he died by his own hand 54.

NARCISSUS, ST., patriarch of Jerusalem, died about 216.

NARDI, JACOPO, an Italian histor., 1476-1555.

NARDIN, TH., a French merchant, 1540-1616.

NARDINI, P., an Italian violinist, 1725-1796.

NAREG, G. DE, an Armenian ascetic, 951-1003.

NARES, JAMES, an eminent English composer and doctor of music, successor of Dr. Green as organist and composer to the king, author of a 'Treatise on Singing,' &c., 1715-1783. His son, ROBERT, assistant librarian at the British Museum, distinguished as a theologian and critic, died 1829. EDWARD, nephew of James, a clergyman of the Church of England, 1762-1841.

NARNI, J. M. DE, a Capuchin preach., 17th c.

NARSES, the companion-in-arms of Belisarius, and one of the most successful generals of the emperor Justinian, was an Asiatic slave and eunuch, whom the latter had taken into favour and appointed to a command in 538. Between that period and 552, he put an end to the dominion of the Goths in Italy, and in 553 was himself appointed exarch, and fixed his court at Ravenna. He was deposed under the emperor Justinus II. 565, and died at Rome 568.

NARUSZEWIEZ, ADAM STANISLAUS, a lyrical poet and historian of Poland, 1733-1796.

NARVAEZ, PAMPHILA DE, one of the Spanish conquerors of America, killed in Florida, 1526.

NARY, CORNELIUS, a catholic div., 1660-1738.

NASELLI, F., an Italian painter, died 1630.

NASH, JOHN, a distinguished architect of the metropolis, originally a miniature painter, designer of Buckingham palace, the Brighton pavilion, the Haymarket theatre, the Regent-Street improvements, &c., 1752-1835.

NASH, RICHARD, a man of taste and pleasure, commonly called Beau Nash, and the King of Bath, in which city he was for more than fifty years the arbiter of fashion. Born at Swansea in Glamorganshire 1674, died 1761.

NASH, THOMAS, a dramatic writer and satirist, known as the literary antagonist of the puritan writer Marprelate, flourished about 1558-1601.

NASH, T. R., a divine and antiq., 1724-1811.

NASINI, J. N., an Italian painter, 1650-1736.

NASMITH, J., a divine and antiq., 1740-1808.

NASMYTH, A., a Scotch painter, 1757-1840.

NASMYTH, P., a Scotch painter, 1786-1831.

NASSIR, EDDIN, a Persian astrono., 1201-74.

NATALE, J., a Span. Jesuit, who co-operated with Loyola, and became vicar-general, died 1580.

NATALI, P., a Venetian hagiographer, 14th ct.

NATALIS, M., a French engraver, died 1670.

NATHAN, a Jewish prophet, 10th cent. B.C.

NATHAN-BEN-JECHIEL, a learned rabbin, president of the synagogue at Rome, died 1106.

NATHAN, ISAAC, a rabbi of the 15th century, who was the first Jew to write a Concordance.

NATHAN, NATA-SPIRA, a rabbi of the 17th c.

NATTIER, J. M., a French painter, 1685-1766.

NATTIER, L., a medal engraver, died 1763.

NAU, M., a Fr. Jesuit missionary, 1631-1683.

NAUBERT, B., a German novelist, 1755-1819.

NAUDE, GABRIEL, a French physician, author of an 'Apology for Great Men Accused of Magic,' the principal argument of which is his scepticism concerning the existence of spirits, 1600-1653.

NAUDÉ, PHILIP, a Fr. mathema., 1654-1729.

NAUDET, T. C., a French painter, 1774-1810.

NAUMANN, JOHANN GOTTLIEB, master of the electoral chapel at Dresden, and one of the first German composers, was born of very poor parents, in a small village near Dresden, in 1741. He received his principal instructions in music from a Swedish master, named Van Weestrom, who took him to Italy and used him in a severe and niggardly manner. Though Naumann had to struggle on amidst poverty and hardships his industry never relaxed. He pursued his studies until he made himself one of the first musicians of his age. His compositions, which were very numerous, include works of every kind, operas, oratorios, songs, cantatas, odes, compositions for the piano-forte, symphonies, &c. For the last years of his life, he devoted himself to the composition of sacred music, and left many valuable works in the library of the chapel of Dresden. He died of apoplexy, in the year 1801. [J.M.]

NAUNTON, SIR ROBERT, secretary of state to James I., author of historical notices of Queen Elizabeth and others, died 1635.

NAUSEA, F., a Ger. prelate, about 1480-1552.

NAVAGERO, ANDREA, in Latin, NAUGERIUS, a Venetian noble, distinguished as a poet and orator, 1483-1529.

NAVAGERO, B., a Venetian cardinal, 1507-65.

NAVARETTA, DOMINGO FERNANDEZ, a Spanish friar and missionary to China, died 1689.

NAVARETTE, J. F., a Spanish painter, called 'El Mudo,' being deaf and dumb, 1526-1579.

NAVARRE, HENRY OF, the popular designation of Henry IV., king of France, was the son of Anthony of Bourbon, king of Navarre, descended in the direct male line from Robert of Clermont, fifth son of Saint Louis. He is sometimes called Henry of Béarn, from his birth-place, where he first saw the light in 1553. His mother, Jeanne D'Albret, educated him as a Calvinist, and though she imparted to him the full measure of her own intrepidity and intellectual superiority, it was unaccompanied with either her constancy of purpose or her domestic virtues. In 1569 she presented the young prince to the protestant camp at Rochelle, where he was hailed chief of the party—its leaders at that time being the famous Condé and Coligni. A few weeks afterwards, the battle of Montcontour deprived the Calvinists (or Huguenots as they were called) of 16,000 brave soldiers left on the field or taken prisoners, and on the 11th of August, 1570, the civil wars were hushed for the time by the peace of St. Germains. This was followed by a negotiation for the marriage of Henry with the Princess Margaret, daughter of Catherine de Medici, and sister of the reigning king, Charles IX., the catholic party, however, darkly plotting the massacre of St. Bartholomew, which, in August, 1572, drowned the marriage festival in blood. Henry, who was in the power of the king, saved his life by embracing catholicism; and remaining at the French court till 1576, was imbued with its licentiousness and intriguing policy. Meanwhile the succession of Henry III., brother of Charles IX., in 1574, tended to a breach of the truce with the Huguenots, in consequence of the ambitious designs and religious hatred of the Guises, chiefs of the catholic league, and in 1576 Henry of Navarre made his escape from Paris, and rejoined the protestants, once more in arms. He now displayed all the qualities of a great commander, and some years following were occupied with military operations and negotiations for peace, in which the reigning king accumulated defeat and shame upon himself, under the dictation of the duke of Guise; and the name of Henry of Navarre became identified with the protestant cause and the liberties of France. In 1585 he was excommunicated by Sixtus Quintus, and in October, 1587, obtained a splendid victory over the duke of Joyeuse at Coutras. The year 1588 was signalized by the attempt of the reigning king to liberate himself from the dictation of Guise, whom in December of that year he caused to be assassinated. He then made overtures to Henry of Navarre, who joined him with his troops, and took the field against the league—their reconciliation leading to his acknowledgment as the rightful successor by Henry III., who was assassinated in August, 1589. Henry of Navarre, at the head of his protestant subjects, had now to conquer his kingdom, his opponents being the duke of Mayenne, appointed lieutenant-general by the parliament of Paris, and in alliance with him the old catholic league, the house of Savoy, the forces of Spain, and the Cardinal de Bourbon, whom Mayenne acknowledged king. Henry repulsed Mayenne at Arques in 1589, and gained the great battle of Yvry in March, 1590, but was compelled to desist from the siege of Paris, and more lately from the siege of Rouen, both these cities being relieved by his active enemy the duke of Parma. The forces of the were capable of carrying on the war f
finite period, but neither of them cou obtain the superiority. So at least it their leaders, and as a consequence, in Henry purchased the crown by his ap catholics on their part agreeing to th of the Huguenots. In 1594 he entered principal cities of the kingdom soon su
him, and in the same year the Jesuits demned to exile in consequence of an
the king's life by the fanatic John Cha enne held out in Burgundy till 1596 Spaniards till 1598, when the war was by the treaty of Vervins. By the edict dated this year, Henry secured to his subjects the freedom of worship and
and they were even allowed to occu fortified cities as a guarantee of its
The remaining political events of thi summed up in our account of SULLY minister, whose designs were often Henry's intrigues with his mistresses.
MARIE DE MEDICI may also be cons princess having been married to him on of Margaret in 1601. Henry of Nava the dagger of Ravaillac, 14th May, 1
preparing for a political war with th Austria, and was succeeded by his XIII. He was the most popular mo ever reigned over France, and was ce possessor of many high and kinglik
The questionable point in his career is t
mise of his faith by the public professio
licism as a means of peace. Granting t of his motives, there is the question
ever could have had the faith of a p
the principles of the Bible, or the tru
vout man in the final triumph of Go On the other hand, the character of nation must be considered, and the ad Calvinism and catholicism, respective outward habits of a people in many res ourselves.

NAVARRE, M., a Spanish theolog.,

NAVARRE, P., a native of Biscay,
military adventurer and engineer, died

NAYLOR, JAMES, a well-known among the Quakers, was a native of born 1616. Converted by the pr George Fox, after serving in the pa army 1651, he was punished with the
the age for his extravagance, and died

NEAL, DANIEL, a dissenting mini of a 'History of the Puritans,' 'Hist England,' and other works, 1678-1743.

NEAL, or NELE, T., a catholic div

NEANDER, C. F., a German poet,

NEANDER, JOHANN AUGUST, th
Church Historian, was of Jewish desce at Göttingen, 13th January, 1789. H placed in Hamburgh to attend the clas of that town, he was introduced, durin dence, to the acquaintance of severa families, by whose conversation, as religious works put in his way, he earl Judaism, and embraced the Christian token of the sincerity and strength of
was publicly baptized, and, farther, ame 'NEANDER,' from two Greek words signifying a new man. Having resolved to dedicate his fe to the pursuits of Theology, he repaired in 806-12, to study successively at the Universities

f Halle, Göttingen, and Heidelberg, and at the nd of that period, the extraordinary extent of his quirements raised him at once to the status of rofessor Extraordinarius of Theology. Thence, s wide-spread fame procured his removal in a r years to the Metropolitan University of Berlin,
e scene of his public labours and honours, and ere he spent a life of intense devotedness to the udy of Ecclesiastical History and Literature.
was a very pious as well as learned man. In his pursuits, his animating principle was the e of Christ, and the advancement of the Re-mer's Kingdom: and accordingly he was a warm porter of Bible and Missionary Societies, to the ds of which, as well as to the cause of general
rity, he frequently contributed the whole prods of his publications. He took the greatest rest in his students, was always ready to assist and meritorious young men with his counsel his purse, and was in the habit of inviting a
of them every Saturday evening to his house,
re he held a familiar and literary conversazione.
nder was an interesting and most instructive
rer. His classes were always crowded, and the dreds of ministers, protestant, catholic, as well minor denominations, scattered throughout many, who attended his prelections, show the nt of his reputation, and the value of his liter-ervices. From his extreme short-sightedness, ell as his fits of mental abstraction, he was er eccentric in some of his habits. He was rly never trusted to walk alone in the streets;
dent or his sister generally accompanying him his house to the lecture-room, and waiting at close to conduct him home again. He was a of warm affections, of amiable manners, and bounded charity. Many a poor student was sted to him, not for gratuitous attendance on lectures only, but for maintenance at the uni-ity; and not seldom has he been known to all the money he had about him away, the mot an appeal was made to his benevolence. The racter, as well as the writings of Neander, has rcised an extensive and beneficial influence on religious sentiments and state of Germany.
ology found in him a stern and uncompromising,
, at the same time, a calm and judicious opponent;
d perhaps none, in the modern school of Evanlical divines, not even excepting Schleihermacher
d Hengstenberg, have rendered such essential rvice in restoring his countrymen to soundness in the faith. Neander having been seized with sudden illness during the delivery of his lecture, was with difficulty conveyed home, where he lingered in great sufferings till the 14th July, 1850, when he gently fell asleep. His funeral was attended by a large concourse of citizens, many of them in the highest rank in Berlin. A funeral discourse was pronounced, in German fashion, first in his house, another address being delivered, by Dr.
Krummacher, at the grave. Neander's works, which are also held in high estimation in England and America, as well as in his own country, comprise several volumes. The chief of them are his 'Life of Christ,' in refutation of Strauss, his 'General History of the Church,' and his 'History of the Apostolic Church.' [R.J.]

NEANDER, M., a Germ. philologist, 1525-95.

NEANDER, M., a German physician, 1529-81.

NEARCHUS, a Greek navigator, 4th cent. B.C.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR, whose name is otherwise written Nebuchadrezzar, Nabuchodonosor, &c., was a king of Assyria, who is supposed to have reigned from 669 to 648 B.C.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR, otherwise Nabopolassar, was a king of Babylonia, who united with Astyages in the conquest of Syria, and founded the second Assyrio-Babylonian empire, 626-605 B.C.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR, 'the Great,' who is the king of that name so much spoken of in Scripture, was the son and successor of the preceding. He died, after a reign of 43 years, B.C. 562.

NECHAM, NECKHAM, or NEQUAM, ALEXANDER, an English monk, who became abbot of Cirencester, and died 1217. He is author of a great variety of works remaining in MS.

NECK, JOHN VAN, a Dut. painter, 1635-1714.

NECKER, JAMES, the famous minister at the commencement of the French revolution, was descended from a family originally German, and was born at Geneva, where his father was in practice as an advocate, 1732. Having in a few years made a handsome fortune as a banker, he became, in 1764, syndic of the French India Company, which was dissolved by the government in 1770. Necker, ambitious of rising in the public service, now made himself known as an economist by publishing, in 1773, his 'Eulogium of Colbert,' the beginning of his controversy with the economists of the school of Quesnay. His next step was to forward a Memoir upon the French Finances to Maurepas, president of the Council of Finances, who persuaded Louis XVI. to appoint him to the treasury, the direction of which he retained during the five years 1776-1781. In May of the last mentioned year he resigned, in consequence of being refused a seat in the council —the fact being that his suppression of abuses had created him many enemies at court. He then published his famous 'Compte Rendu,' in which he furnished the public with a clear statement of the condition in which he had found things, of what he had done, and what he had intended to do. The effect of this document was quite startling—it was translated into all the languages of Europe; and when the successors of Necker, Calonne and Lomenie Brienne, were compelled to retire by the disastrous state of the finances, the honest minister was recalled, and public credit begun to revive again. This was on the 24th of August, 1788. On the 6th of November he summoned the old notables, who had met under Lomenie Brienne in 1787, and they remained in session till 12th December. In January of the following year the states-general were convoked, in fulfilment of the previous pledges of the government, and in May they were assembled for business. The constitution of this body was ruled by the advice of Necker, to whom therefore it was owing that the members of the 'Tiers Etat' were equal in number to the nobles and the clergy united. This circumstance occasioned a 'dead lock,' disagreement arising on matters of form necessary to constitute the assembly, and after three weeks had been wasted in altercation, a 'Séance Royale' was resolved upon, in which instructions were to be given from the throne. The deputies being excluded from the hall while preparations were making for this sitting, held that famous meeting in the Tennis Court, presided over by Bailly, where they swore an oath to meet under all circumstances, and in all places wherever they could get together, and not to separate till they had made the constitution. The issue of the 'Séance Royale' may be read in the article MIRABEAU, add to which that Necker made a decided stand in favour of the people, resisted the attempt to coerce the assembly by the action of the army, and in the course of a fortnight, 11th July, received his dismissal. This was known to Paris on the 12th, and the people instantly rose in arms, one of their principal movers being Camille Desmoulins, and their first step a tumultuous procession through the streets, bearing aloft the wax busts of Necker and the duc d'Orléans. On the 14th the Bastile was taken; on the 15th Necker was recalled, and his return to Paris was marked by a popular ovation, which placed him at the very summit of renown. He remained in office till 3d September, 1790, taking no salary, and advancing as much as two millions of livres to the government. During the whole of this period his popularity was rapidly declining under the rising star of Mirabeau, on the one hand, and the increasing difficulties of carrying on the government with such a court as that of Louis XVI. on the other. On the date mentioned he asked permission to resign, leaving the money he had advanced, together with his house and furniture, as the material guarantee of his previous integrity, and this being with the greatest indifference accorded him, he retired to Copet, near Geneva, where he died in 1804. Necker was married in 1764 to Mademoiselle Curchod, the daughter of a Swiss minister, who had previously won the heart of the historian Gibbon, (next article), and his daughter by her became the famous Madame de Staël. This lady published the numerous works of her father, whom she almost idolized, in 15 vols. 8vo, 1821. [E.R.]

NECKER, MADAME, whose maiden name was Susannah Curchod, was born in 1739, in the mountain village of Grassy, situated between the Pays de Vaud and Franche-Comté. Her father was a man of considerable talents as a pastor of the Swiss church; her mother was descended from an ancient family of Provençe, who had fled to Switzerland on the revocation of the edict of Nantes. As stated in the preceding article, this accomplished lady was married to the minister Necker, and she greatly distinguished herself during his terms of office in every possible form of benevolence. She erected an hospital in Paris with her own money, was a great reformer of prison abuses, and surrounded herself with the most distinguished men of the time, who offered her the homage due to her great learning, and her rare goodness of heart. She died in 1796, the year after publishing her 'Reflections on Divorce.' Her works were published by her husband in 5 vols. 8vo, 1798 and 1801. [E.R.]

NECKER, N. J., a Flem. botanist, 1729-1793.

NECTARIUS, patriarch of C'nople., 381-392.

NECTARIUS, patriarch of Jerusalem, d. 1668.

NEEDHAM, JOHN TUBERVILLE, Catholic divine, distinguished as a nat physiologist, 1713-1781.

NEEDHAM, M., a political writer,

NEEDHAM, W., an anatomical wr.

NEEF, or NEEFS, PETER, the name, a Flemish painter, 1570-1651. his son, born about 1600.

NEEL, L. B., a French author, die

NEELE, HENRY, a poet and m writer, born 1798, died by his own ha

NEER, ARNOLD VANDER, a Du 1619-1683. His son and pupil, EGLO distinguished for his portraits and hi positions, 1643-1703.

NEGRI, P., a Venetian painter, 17

NEGRI, VIRGINIUS, an Ital. religie

NEGRO, NERO, or NIGER, AND an astronomer of Genoa, born 1270.

NEGRO, F., an Italian savant, 16t

NEHEMIAH, a celebrated Jew of t who obtained permission of Artaxe manus to rebuild the Temple, and g people, 5th century B.C.

NELEDINSKJ-MELEZKJ, JURJ ROWITSCH, a Russian song-writer, 17

[Birth-place of Nelson.]

NELSON. HORATIO NELSON wa September, 1758, at Burnham Thorpe His father was a clergyman of th England, and the rector of Burn parish. His uncle, by the mother's Suckling, commanded the Raisonnable gun ship, on board of which young entered as a midshipman at the ag He was a lad of weakly frame, an suited for the hardships of a seafari he had moral courage as well as phy of the highest order. His strong s sublimed by earnest religious feeling, once the keenest incentive to exertion, failing stay and support amid the v fortune. As boy, and as man, he w well as the confidence of all whom h whether as superiors, equals, or The details of Nelson's early life, Southey's admirable biography, abou which mark out the spirit of the fu the Nile and Trafalgar, and of the al chief of the British navy.—In 1773, Nelson served in the expedition to the Polar seas under Commodore Phipps. In 1777 he was made a lieutenant, and two years afterwards he obtained the rank of post-captain, and the command of the Hinchinbrooke of 28 guns. He distinguished himself in some desperate attacks on the Spanish forts in Nicaragua, and served on the American coast till the general peace in 1783.—In 1784 he was appointed to the Boreas, and for some time was stationed in the West Indies. He here showed his political courage and independence of character by stopping the contraband traffic which the Americans carried on with our colonies. This had been connived at, and even sanctioned by the British authorities in the islands, and Nelson ran the greatest risk of ruin in purse and in professional prospects by the sturdy course which he pursued. He said himself afterwards of this trying part of his career, 'Conscious rectitude bore me through it;' and he obtained in the end the just thanks of our government for his patriotic conduct. While in the West Indies he married Mrs. Nisbet, the widow of Dr. Nisbet, a physician.—When England took part in the wars of the French revolution, Nelson was appointed to the Agamemnon, a 64 gun-ship. He did good service on board of her in the Mediterranean during 1793, 1794, and 1795, and he equally signalized himself on shore in Corsica, while co-operating with Paoli and the patriotic party in that island against the French. He lost an eye at the siege of Calvi. In 1797 he took a distinguished part in Jervis's victory over the Spanish fleet off Cape St. Vincent. He commanded the Captain, 74, in that action; and boarded and captured two of the enemy's large ships, the San Nicolas and the San Josef. He led the boarders himself from the first of these prizes to the other, exclaiming the well-known words, 'Westminster Abbey or victory!'—He was now knighted, and advanced to the rank of rear-admiral. In 1797 he led an attack on the island of Teneriffe, which was beaten off with severe loss to the assailants. Nelson, who led the attack in person, lost his right arm, and his life was saved with the greatest difficulty by his son-in-law, Lieutenant Nisbet. In a memorial which he was required to present, as a matter of form, after this action, to entitle him to a pension, he gave in the following catalogue of services performed by him during the war. He had been in four actions with the fleets of the enemy, in three cutting out expeditions, and in taking three towns. He had served ashore with the army four months, and commanded the batteries in two sieges. He had assisted in the capture of seven sail of the line, six frigates, four corvettes, eleven privateers, and fifty sail of merchant vessels. He had been actually personally engaged with the enemy one hundred and twenty times, in which service he had lost his right eye and his right arm, and received several severe wounds and contusions in the body.—In 1798 he rejoined the fleet in the Mediterranean, and was sent with a squadron to watch the French expedition which was fitting out at Toulon, and which ultimately escaped by favour of the weather, and reached Egypt. Nelson did not arrive off Egypt in time to prevent Buonaparte's army from landing, but he found the French fleet in Aboukir Bay, on the 1st of August, and though it far outnumbered his own force, he instantly attacked and nearly destroyed it in a battle, which it is hard to match in naval warfare, either for the genius shown by the victorious admiral in his tactics, or the heroism which he and his men displayed throughout the contest. This, the battle of the Nile, was, as Nelson truly said, not a mere victory, it was a conquest; and Napoleon in his memoirs bears ample testimony to its decisive effects on the French prospects. Nelson was now raised to the peerage, and honours of the highest kind were heaped on him by every Court that was engaged in war with France. He now took an active part in restoring the royal family of Naples to the throne of that country; and formed an unfortunate attachment for Lady Hamilton, a companion of the Neapolitan Queen, which led to the destruction of Nelson's domestic happiness; and caused his fame to be sullied by his lending his aid to the cruel reprisals which the mean and cowardly Bourbons of Naples took on the chiefs of their lately insurgent subjects. In 1801, Nelson was second in command of the expedition which was sent against Denmark. On the 2d of April in that year, he led the advanced squadron of the fleet against the Danish capital, and fought the desperate battle of Copenhagen. He refused to obey the signal to retire, which the commander-in-chief, alarmed at his peril, displayed; and continued the action till the Danish line of defences was nearly destroyed. A flag of truce was then sent by him, and after some negotiation the Danes submitted to the requisitions of the English government. On the renewal of the war between England and France, after the breach of the peace of Amiens, in 1803, Nelson received the command of the Mediterranean fleet. He blockaded Toulon for many months, but at length the French squadron under Admiral Villeneuve escaped to sea, and effected a junction with the Spanish ships off Cadiz. The combined fleets now sailed for the West Indies, and thither and back again to Europe did Nelson follow them, twice traversing the Atlantic in unremitting but unsuccessful chase. When Nelson anchored at Gibraltar on the 20th June, 1805, he went on shore for the first time since 16th June, 1803. In his own words, 'he had not had his foot out of his ship, the Victory, for two years, wanting only ten days.' For the seamanship and resolution which the English admiral showed during this arduous part of his career, the worthiest eulogium is to be found in the writings of a French naval officer, in Captain Jurien de la Graviere's History of the Last Naval War. Nelson returned to England; but when intelligence arrived that the combined enemies' fleets, after their action with Sir Robert Calder, were at Cadiz, Nelson volunteered to take the command again against them. His services were gladly accepted, and on the 15th Sept., 1805, our fine old English admiral left England for the last time. He arrived off Cadiz on the 29th Sept.; and, on the 19th of October, the enemy's admiral came out of port. They were deceived by Nelson's skilful tactics, as to the number of the English ships, and they hoped to crush him with an overwhelming force. Even as it was, they had 33 sail of the line and 7 frigates, against 27 of the line and

5 frigates under Nelson. On the 21st of October, he attacked them off Cape Trafalgar. Forming his fleet into two columns, one of which he led himself in the Victory, while Collingwood led the other in the Royal Sovereign, Nelson burst through the double line of the French and Spaniards, and brought on the close and general action, for which he had long ardently prayed. In four hours 20 of the enemy had struck; others were flying in despair; and the marine on which Napoleon had relied for the invasion of England was annihilated. But the victory was bought at the expense of the chief victor's life. About a quarter past one, in the heat of the battle, Nelson was shot through the back by a musket ball. He survived long enough to know that the victory was complete; and his last words were, 'Thank God I have done my duty.' His ever-memorable signal to his fleet, immediately before the battle commenced, had been 'England expects every man to do his duty,' and, if ever a man lived and died in earnest, fearless, unselfish discharge of his duty to his country, it was Admiral Nelson, victor of the Nile, Copenhagen, and Trafalgar. [E.S.C.]

NELSON, ROBERT, a minister of the Church of England, known as the author of several devout and learned works, the principal of which is his well-known 'Festivals and Fasts.' For the substance of this work, there is reason to believe, he was greatly indebted to Dr. Francis Lee. He is generally called 'the pious Nelson,' and was much esteemed by Archbishop Tillotson, who died in his arms. Born in London 1656, died 1715.

NELSON, SAMUEL, an Irish patriot, and editor of the 'Northern Star,' in the rebellion of 1790.

NEMESIUS, a Christian philosopher, 4th cent.

NEMOURS, a titular name borne by several persons distinguished in French history, among whom are—JAMES D'ARMAGNAC, Duc De Nemours, cousin by marriage to Louis XI., who caused him to be beheaded 1477. LOUIS, his son and successor in the duchy, viceroy of Naples for Charles VIII., killed at the battle of Cerignola 1503. GASTON DE FOIX, son of Mary, sister of Louis XII., killed at the battle of Ravenna 1512. PHILIP OF SAVOY, uncle to Francis I., who invested him with the duchy 1528. JAMES OF SAVOY, a distinguished commander, 1531-1585. HENRY, second son and successor of James, connected with the league, and afterwards with Henry IV., 1571-1632. HENRY II., second son and successor of Henry I., born 1625, appointed archbishop of Rheims 1651, abandoned the church on the death of his elder brother, and married Mary D'Orleans, daughter of the duc de Longueville, 1657, died 1659. This lady survived her husband many years, and, in 1694, was recognized sovereign of Neufchâtel. She died in 1707, leaving valuable 'Memoirs' of the minority of Louis XIV. and the wars of the Fronde. The title was borne again by the second son of Louis Philippe, late king of the French.

NENNIUS, a British historian, 7th century.

NENY, P. MAC, a Belgian statesman, 1712-84.

NEPOS, CORNELIUS, a Roman historian of the time of Julius Cæsar and the first six years of Augustus. The only remains of his works are some short biographies of twenty Greek generals, and of Hamilcar and Hannibal.

NEPOS, FLAVIUS JULIUS, empero predecessor of Angustulus, 478-475.

NEPREU, F., an ascetic writer, 1

NERI, POMPEO, an Ital. economis

NERI, SAINT PHILIP DE, founde
gregation of the Oratory in Italy, 15

NERLI, FILIPPO, an Ital. historia

NERO, emperor of Rome, whose f
LUCIUS DOMITIUS NERO CLAUDIUS
the son of Domitius Ahenobarbus a pina, daughter of Germanicus. He w at Antium, and after the marriage o
in third nuptials, with her uncle, Claudius, was adopted by that prince,
to his daughter Octavia. When Ne seventeen years of age his abando poisoned her husband, Claudius, and her criminal favours succeeded in raisi
the throne, over whom she expecte
the most absolute control. Nero bec in 54, and the year following disposed ful heir, Britannicus, by poison. For years his public conduct, under the co
rhus and Seneca, was unexceptionabl however, he disgraced himself by the vices, and his mother endeavoured influence by shamefully complying wit tions. In 59 Nero caused this detes to be murdered, and then, fearing no ri gave full scope to the darkest traits o
ter. In 62 he repudiated his wife 64 the burning of Rome occurred, whi charged, with great probability, upon who, however, accused the Christian and made it the occasion of the m cruelties towards them. His deba cruelties occasioned an almost gener against him, known as that of Piso, i covery of which led to more tortures a
The revolt of Vindex was also suppr of Galba in 68 succeeded, and Nero e
by stabbing himself, being then in th
year of his age, and the fourteenth
He was a lover of arts and letters,
much taste as a poet and histrionic p
was the remark of Nero's father, that 'nothing but what was hateful a to mankind, could ever come from A himself.' Yet, the story of a stran strewed flowers upon the tomb of t
well known.

NERVA, MARCUS COCCEIUS, emp
was born 27, and was twice consul, pasian in 71, and with Domitian in ceeded to the sovereign power on the of the latter 96; died 98. Trajan su

NESBIT, or NISBET, ALEXAND
antiquarian and writer on heraldry, 1

NESMOND, T. DE, a French prel

NESSE, C., a nonconformist divin

NESSEL, D. DE, a Ger. bibliograp

NESSON, P. DE, a French poet, 1

NESTOR, a monk of Kiefl, who the sources of Slavonic history, 1056

NESTOR, D., a classical writer, 1

NESTORIUS, a patriarch of Con
the 5th century, author of the Nest which is represented to this day b body of Christians in Mesopotamia.

of his doctrine was that of Anastasius, who held that it was the human person, and not the divine, that suffered in Jesus. Nestorius was deposed by a council assembled at Ephesus 431.

NETSCHER, the name of three Dutch painters —GASPAR, the father, celebrated for his domestic pieces and portraits, 1639-1684. THEODORE, his eldest son, a good painter of female portraits, 1661-1732. CONSTANTINE, younger brother of the latter, dist. for his portraits and groups, 1670-1722.

NETTELBLADT, CHRISTIAN, Baron De, a Swedish jurist, histor., and antiquary, 1696-1776.

NETTELBLADT, DANIEL, a learned German lawyer, 1719-1791. His brother, HENRY, historian of Mecklenburg, died 1761.

NETTER, THOMAS, an English monk, professor of philosophy and divinity, and privy councillor to Henry V., died 1430.

NETTLETON, THOMAS, a physician of Halifax, known as a miscellaneous writer, 1683-1742.

NEUBECK, V. W., a German poet, born 1765.

NEUHOF, THEODORE STEPHEN, Baron Von, a German adventurer, born of a noble family at Mentz in 1690, and proclaimed king of Corsica 1736, died in London 1755.

NEUKIRCH, B., a German poet, 1665-1729.

NEUMANN, G., a Germ. Hebraist, 1648-1715.

NEUMANN, G., a German chemist, 1683-1737.

NEUMANN, J. G., a Lutheran div., 1661-1709.

NEUSER, A., a Germ. theologian, died 1576.

NEVE, TIMOTHY, a dignitary of the Church of England, and professor of divinity, son of a divine of the same names, author of 'Sermons,' 'Notes on Cardinal Pole,' &c., 1724-1798.

NEVILE, or NEVYLE, ALEXANDER, secretary of Archbishop Parker, known as a scholar and a poet, 1544-1614.

NEVILE, or NEVILLE, HENRY, a republican agent and writer, member of the council, 1620-94.

NEVILE, or NEVIL, THOMAS, brother of Alexander Nevile, the dean of Canterbury, known as an eminent benefactor of Trinity College, died 1615.

NEVIZAN, J., an Ital. jurisconsult, died 1549.

NEWBOROUGH, or NEWBURGH, WILLIAM OF, commonly known as Gulielmus Newbrigensis, a monastic historian of the period, 1066-1197.

NEWCASTLE. See CAVENDISH and HOLLIS.

NEWCOMBE, THOMAS, chaplain to the second duke of Richmond, known as a miscellaneous writer, 1671-1766.

NEWCOMBE, W., archbishop of Armagh, born of nonconformist parents, in Bedfordshire, 1728, author of a 'Harmony of the Gospels,' and an advocate for a revision of the Bible, died 1799.

NEWCOMEN, M., a nonconf. divine, d. 1666.

NEWCOMMEN, THOMAS, a country locksmith, first projector of the means of creating a vacuum beneath the piston of the steam engine, 17th century.

NEWCOURT, R., an ecclesiast. lawyer, d. 1716.

NEWDIGATE, SIR ROGER, an elegant scholar and benefactor of Oxford, which he represented in parliament, 1719-1806.

NEWLAND, JOHN, an English abbot, employed as a diplomatist by Henry VIII., died 1515.

NEWLAND, P., a Dutch savant, 1764-1794.

NEWTON, SIR ADAM, a Scottish protestant and scholar, tutor to Prince Henry, son of James I., died 1630.

NEWTON, G. S., a disting. painter, 1794-1835.

[Birth-place of Newton.]

NEWTON, ISAAC, a celebrated mathematician and natural philosopher, was born at Woolsthorpe, near Colsterworth, Lincolnshire, on the 25th December, 1642, o.s. His father, Isaac Newton, was proprietor and farmer of the manor, and died a few months after his marriage to Hannah Ayscough, so that young Newton was a posthumous child. He was so small at his birth that 'they might have put him into a quart mug,' but he gradually attained size and strength, destined to enjoy a vigorous manhood, and to survive even the average term of life. The estate of Woolsthorpe, worth only about £30 per annum, had been in the family upwards of one hundred years. The origin of the family is still in obscurity. Newton himself, according to the usual forms, gave in his pedigree on oath to the Herald's Office in 1705, stating that he had reason to believe (from tradition), that his great grandfather's father was John Newton of Wesby, in Lincolnshire; but it is certain, that twenty years after this Newton told Professor James Gregory, that his grandfather was a gentleman of East Lothian, and it is equally certain that Newton corresponded on the subject with the last baronet of the family, Sir Richard Newton of Newton, and that this family considered Newton to be a distant relation of theirs. For three years Mrs. Newton watched over her only child with maternal anxiety till her marriage with the Rev. Barnabas Smith, of North Witham, by whom she had one son and three daughters. In consequence of this marriage Newton was left under the care of his grandmother, and was sent at the usual age to the day school at Skillington and Stoke. At the age of twelve he went to the public school of Grantham, where he was boarded with Mr. Clark the apothecary. Here he was very inattentive to his studies, and was low in the school till a quarrel with a boy above him in the class, who had used him ill, induced him to apply diligently to his lessons till he rose above his rival, and reached the head of the class. During his leisure hours he occupied himself with all sorts of mechanical contrivances, windmills, water-clocks, carriages, and paper kites; and among his early tastes may be mentioned his love for drawing and writing verses, in neither of which he was destined to excel.—On the death of his father-in-law in 1656, his mother came to reside at Woolsthorpe with her three children and Isaac, who was now in his fifteenth year. He was recalled from school, to assist in the management of the farm; but while he was occupied with books, models, water wheels, and dials, the business of the farm was neglected, and the cattle were luxuriating among the corn. Thus found to be unfit for the profession of a farmer, he was sent back to Grantham school, and in due time to Trinity College, Cambridge, with recommendations from his uncle, the Rev. W. Ayscough. —On the 5th of June, 1661, when nineteen years old, he was admitted sub-sizar in Trinity College, very ill prepared for its course of instruction by his preliminary mathematical studies. He had been disposed to undervalue the ancient geometry, and he afterwards confessed to Dr. Pemberton that he had applied himself to the works of Descartes and others before he had sufficiently considered the Elements of Euclid. On the 28th April, 1664, he was elected scholar. He took his degree of B.A. in January, 1665. He was elected Major Fellow in March, 1668, and he took his degree of M.A. on the 7th July.—On the 20th May, 1665, he committed to writing his first ideas on fluxions. In 1666, having procured a prism, he discovered the unequal refrangibility of light, and the true doctrine of colours, and having drawn the erroneous conclusion that the improvement of the refracting telescope was impossible, he set himself to the construction of a reflecting telescope. While thus occupied he was driven from Cambridge by the plague in 1666, and went to Woolsthorpe, where the idea of gravitation first presented itself to him, from observing the fall of an apple in his garden. Here he continued his inquiries into the application of fluxions, and after his return to Cambridge in 1668, he made a very small reflecting telescope, which he described to a friend.—On the 29th October, 1669, Newton was appointed to the Lucasian chair of mathematics on the resignation of Dr. Barrow, and from this time we may date the commencement of his great discoveries.—His first communication to the Royal Society was a description of a second reflecting telescope, which excited great interest in England and abroad. The telescope itself was sent to the Society in December, 1671, 'for his majesty's perusal.'—On the 18th September, 1672, he announced to the secretary, Mr. Oldenburg, a philosophical discovery which he considered the oddest, if not the most considerable detection hitherto made in the operations of nature. This was the discovery of the composition of light, which was read to the Society on the 8th February, 1672, and which led him into interminable controversies with Hook, Huygens, and several eminent foreigners. These controversies embittered his peace, and made him resolve to have nothing more to do with that litigious lady philosophy.— On the 11th January, 1671, Newton was elected a fellow of the Royal Society. In 1673 he was disappointed in a competition for the law fellowship, then vacant; a disappointment increased by the fact that he was about this time in such circumstances as to be unable to afford the weekly payment to the Royal Society, who 'excused him.' Very soon afterwards, however, when his fellowship was about to expire, he obtained permission from the crown to hold the Lucasian chair [illegible] with a fellowship, without being obliged to [illegible] orders.—On the 9th December, 1675, N[illegible] communicated to the Royal Society a discou[illegible] colours. This interesting paper contained [illegible] details on the composition and decompositi[illegible] white light, and a new hypothesis concerning [illegible] with some propositions explaining the col[illegible] thin transparent plates, and their relation [illegible] colours of natural bodies.—This discourse [illegible] brought Newton into a controversy with [illegible] but notwithstanding this interruption, he w[illegible] occupied with those profound studies, the re[illegible] which were afterwards consigned in his im[illegible] work the 'Principia.' He had long ago de[illegible] from the laws of Kepler the important law [illegible] gravity decreased with the square of the di[illegible] a law to which Sir Christopher Wren, Halley [illegible] Hook, had all been led by independent study— [illegible] demonstration of it, however, had been given [illegible] no proof obtained that the same power [illegible] made the apple to fall, was that which re[illegible] the moon and the other planets in their [illegible] Adopting the ordinary measure of the [illegible] radius, he had been led to the conclusion th[illegible] force which kept the moon in her orbit, if the [illegible] as gravity, was one-sixth greater than that wh[illegible] actually observed, a result which perplexed hi[illegible] prevented him from communicating to his f[illegible] the great speculation in which he was engage[illegible] June, 1682, however, he had heard of Pi[illegible] more accurate measure of the earth's dia[illegible] and repeating with this measure his former [illegible] lations, he found to his extreme delight th[illegible] force of gravity, by which bodies fall at the [illegible] surface, 4,000 miles from the earth's centre, [illegible] diminished as the square of 240,000 mile[illegible] moon's distance, was almost exactly equal t[illegible] which kept the moon in her orbit. Hence, it fo[illegible] that the same power retained all the other sat[illegible] round their primaries and all the primaries ro[illegible] sun.—In August, 1684, when Dr. Halley [illegible] Newton at Cambridge, he learned from him t[illegible] had surmounted the difficulties of the pla[illegible] motion, and promised him a copy of the tr[illegible] he had written on the subject. This treatise, [illegible] Mota Corporum,' was after some delay [illegible] pleted, and presented to the Royal Soci[illegible] the 28th April, 1686, being the first book [illegible] 'Philosophiæ Naturalis Principia Mathem[illegible] The second book was sent to the Society in [illegible] 1st March, 1687, the third on the 6th A[illegible] and the whole work published at the exp[illegible] Dr. Halley about midsummer of that year.— [illegible] have already seen that Newton discovered the [illegible] trine of fluxions in 1666, the principle and appl[illegible] tion of which he explained in his treatise 'Analy[illegible] per Equationes numero terminorum Infinitas,' which he communicated to Dr. Barrow in Ju[illegible] 1667. Although this treatise was not publish[illegible] till 1711, its contents were circulated throughout Europe by letters between 1669 and 1672. The principle of the new calculus was published in the Principia in 1687, and the Algorithms communicated to Dr. Wallis in 1692.—The great discovery of fluxions was also made by Leibnitz, and a controversy arose on the subject of priority, which has continued for nearly two centuries to agitate the mathematical world. The violent friends of each ged their principals with plagiaribittered a controversy carried on nce of politics or theology. There that Newton first invented fluxibnitz was an independent inven-ore Newton had published his year 1692 a rumour prevailed

rton had become insane, either ital application, or from the loss
, by fire. It is quite true that had at this time suffered from in-nd that he had exhibited symps indisposition in some of his lets; but his mind had never given during this period that he wrote
d letters to Dr. Bentley, and was e profound subject of the Lunar had now brought to a close the ns which had occupied the early ortion of his life. He was in the
of his age, and no mark of na-
had been conferred upon him, counted the pride of England, and his species. In this position a fulness was unveiled to him, and ours awaited his acceptance.—
ue, a fellow of Trinity College, years younger than Newton, ship at Cambridge. They had
e convention parliament of 1688, ined the same liberal opinions in Montague was appointed chan-equer, and after consulting New-Halley, he resolved to restore to ie the adulterated coin of the his view Newton was appointed nt in 1695, with a salary of about 9 he succeeded to the mastership, in the establishment, which was r £1,500 per annum. In the elected one of the eight associate Royal Academy of Sciences in e was re-elected one of the memrsity of Cambridge. In 1703 he ident of the Royal Society, an ld till his death, and on the 16th
e honour of knighthood was con-
by Queen Anne in Trinity Lodge, en George I. ascended the throne
then in his seventy-second year,
at court. His character, his re-piety, had gained him the favour Wales, afterwards queen consort
o took great pleasure in his concorresponded also with Leibnitz,
e availed himself of this privilege acter of Newton, by representing hilosophy as false and hostile to
was involved in the same charge, s desire an answer was prepared Dr. Clarke, which seems to have l scruples. At the princess's re-ave her a MS., which he calls a dex.' The Abbé Conti having got shed it in Paris without the leave
l thus involved him in a disagree-
He was in this way induced press his posthumous work, enonology of Ancient Kingdoms,' which appeared in 1728.—In the year 1722, when in his eightieth year, Newton was attacked with a complaint in the urinary organs, which continued to afflict him till the time of his death, but though he suffered also from an affection of the lungs and gout, he was able on the 28th February, 1727, to preside at a meeting of the Royal Society. He suffered, however, from the exertion which he made on this occasion, and as the master disease under which he suffered was found to be stone, no hope was entertained of his recovery. He preserved his faculties entire till two days before his death, when he became insensible, and expired on Monday, the 20th March, 1727, between one and two o'clock in the morning, in the eighty-fifth year of his age.—His body was removed from Kensington to London on the 28th March. It lay in state in the Jerusalem Chamber, and was buried in Westminster Abbey, in a conspicuous part of which a monument was erected to his memory in 1731 by his relatives.—Newton left about £32,000, which was divided among his four nephews and four nieces of the half blood, the grandchildren of his mother: one of them the beautiful and accomplished Miss Catherine Barton, was married to Mr. Conduit, in Newton's lifetime, and they lived together. Mr. Conduit left an only child, a daughter, who married Mr. Wallop, the eldest son of Lord Lymington, and from this cause all Newton's papers came into the hands of the Portsmouth family.—The most important of Newton's philosophical works are his 'Principia,' already mentioned, his 'Arithmetica Universalis,' his 'Geometria Analytica,' his 'Treatise on Optics,' published in 1705, his 'Lectiones Opticæ,' published after his death, and others which have been collected by Bishop Horsley, and published in 5 vols. 4to, under the title of 'Newtoni Opera quæ Extant Omnia,' London, 1779 and 1782. His literary and theological works, included in the same collection, are his 'Chronology,' his 'Observations on the Prophecies of Holy Writ,' viz., Daniel and the Apocalypse, and his 'Historical Account of two Notable Corruptions of Scripture.'—For further information respecting Sir Isaac Newton, see 'Life of Sir Isaac Newton,' by Sir David Brewster, London, 1831; a very brief but excellent Memoir of Newton by Professor De Morgan, in 'Knight's Cabinet Historical Gallery,' vol. XI., p. 78-118; and 'Memoirs of the Life, Writings, and Discoveries of Sir Isaac Newton,' by Sir David Brewster, in 2 vols. 8vo, (from the Family Papers), now in the press. [D.B.]

NEWTON, JOHN, a mathematician, 1622-78.

NEWTON, JOHN, a Calvinistic clergyman of the Church of England, author of a 'Review of Ecclesiastical History,' 'The Messiah,' a series of sermons on the well-known oratorio, a 'Narrative of his Life,' &c., 1725-1807. Newton was a friend of Cowper the poet, and his life has been written by the Rev. R. Cecil.

NEWTON, R., a learned divine, 1676-1753.

NEWTON, THOMAS, a clergyman of the Church of England, originally a schoolmaster and physician, author of a 'History of the Saracens,' 'The Herbal to the Bible,' &c., 16th century.

NEWTON, THOMAS, an English prelate, well known as the author of 'Dissertations on the Prophecies,' born at Lichfield, where his father was a wine and spirit merchant, 1704; appointed rector of St. Mary-le-Bow 1744, king's chaplain 1756, and bishop of Bristol 1761; died 1782.

NEY. MICHEL NEY, marshal of the French empire, duke of Elchingen, prince of the Moskwa, and 'The Bravest of the Brave' in Napoleon's armies, was the son of a cooper at Sarre-Louis. He was born in 1769. He entered the army very young; and was a subaltern in a hussar regiment at the commencement of the wars of the revolution. Ney soon attracted the notice of his commanders, especially of Kleber and Hoche, by his valour and skill in the campaigns against the Austrian armies; and in 1798 he had attained the rank of general of division. In 1799 he shared in the glories of Massena's campaign in Switzerland; and in 1800 he aided, under Moreau, in gaining the victories of Moeskirch and Hohenlinden. Napoleon afterwards employed him as minister plenipotentiary to complete the submission of the Swiss to French ascendancy—a task which Ney performed with success—and thereafter stood high in Napoleon's favour. He was made marshal of the new French empire in 1804; and in the campaign of 1805 against Austria, he commanded the French at the victory of Elchingen, whence the dukedom which the emperor conferred upon him was named. Ney contributed greatly to the overthrow of the Prussians at Jena, and to the defeat of the Russians at Friedland. In 1807 he was sent to the peninsula, and for some time commanded in Galicia, and on the northern frontier of Portugal. In 1810 he acted under Massena in the invasion of Portugal, which was baffled by the genius of Wellington, and the lines of Torres Vedras. During that invasion, and during the retreat of the French army, which was its result, Ney displayed 'A happy mixture of courage and skill,' to adopt the words in which the English historian, Napier, has justly described his conduct. But the altercations between him and Massena were frequent and violent, and at last Massena deprived Ney of his command. Napier says that Massena's general views were as superior to Ney's, as the latter's readiness and genius for handling troops in action were superior to Massena's. In 1812 Ney served again under Napoleon, and took part in the invasion of Russia. He commanded the French centre at the battle of the Moskwa, and gained from that victory his princely title. His heroic bravery was still more signally displayed in the dreadful retreat from Moscow. His honourable task was to protect the French rear. On leaving Smolensko, Ney, at the head of about 7,000 men, found his path barred near the river Losmina by a large Russian army under Miloradovich. Ney was summoned to surrender—'A marshal of France never surrenders' was his answer, and he led his men on with the bayonet against the Russian batteries. Driven back repeatedly with frightful carnage, Ney countermarched the remnant of his column, and wheeling to the left under shelter of the night, he eluded the Russian pursuit. He reached the bank of the Dnieper at a spot where the river was frozen over, but so thinly, that the ice bent beneath the soldier's tread. He effected the perilous passage, and in a succession of desperate contests with other Russian forces that strove to intercept him, Ney fought his way with 1,500 of his men to Orcha, where Napoleon was with the wrecks the main army. Napoleon's joy was almost r turous when Ney rejoined him, for all had beli that the intrepid marshal must have been k or captive. The emperor hailed Ney as 'bravest of the brave,' which thenceforth be his undisputed title. After Napoleon lef army, Ney still continued to fight in the against the advancing Muscovites. Thrice d rear guard which he commanded melt away b him by death, captivity, or flight; and was it reorganized by the indomitable m At last, Ney, with only thirty men und defended the gate of Kowno, the last plac Russian dominions through which the retreated—against the pursuing enemi his comrades escaped at the other end of t He was himself the very last man to re fired with his own hand the last shot ag foes, threw the musket into the river plunged into the neighbouring forests to enemies who held him in chase; and aft of almost incredible personal adventures his comrades in the Prussian territory. campaign of 1814 Ney was present at th of Lutzen and Bautzen, but he was defe great loss by the crown prince of S Dennewitz. He fell in consequence u poleon's displeasure, and was little during the rest of the struggle against which ended in Napoleon's first abdica the first return of the Bourbons, Ney and probably felt great willingness to s loyally; and when, in 1815, the new Paris of Napoleon's escape from Elba, the command of the army which wa oppose him. Ney expressed the utmos to the royal cause, and promised Louis that he would bring Buonaparte to Pari wild beast in a cage.' There seems no doubt Ney's sincerity in this unhappy cri career. He was an impulsive, rather reflective man; and prone both to speak with more enthusiasm than consistency. he advanced against the emperor, he rec letter from Napoleon, who summoned him magic name of 'The bravest of the brave' t his old master beneath the old banner. army which Ney was leading, showed, both o and soldiers, their fixed resolve to fight u and not against Buonaparte. Ney caught contagion. He became Napoleonist with v mence equal to that which he had displayed few days before in the Bourbon cause, and pass over with all his troops to the emperor, wh received him with expressions of the warmes passion and welcome. But, though Ney had thus deeply committed himself against the Bourbons, Napoleon seems to have mistrusted him, and to have long hesitated as to employing him in the campaign of 1815. It was only on the night of the 11th of June that Ney received at Paris an order to join the French army in Belgium. Hurrying forward to the frontier, Ney met Napoleon on the 15th at Charleroi, after active operations had commenced. Napoleon gave him the command of the left wing, and sent him to seize th post of Quatre Bras, and oppose the English. Those who censure Ney's supposed want o

this eventful campaign, should the marshal had been so suddenly is command, that he did not know
f the regiments placed under him,
ames of their commanding officers.
Ney attacked the allies at Quatre
r many hours' hard fighting was gh he succeeded in preventing the marching to the help of the Pruse being defeated by the emperor at e 18th, Ney acted as the emperor's Waterloo. He led in person several assaults upon various parts of the d especially the final charge of the Never was his valour more nobly essfully displayed. His horse was im in the last great attack, and he by friends and foes, on foot, his ith bullets, his face blackened with g, sword in hand, first to urge his
and at last to check their flight.
restoration of the Bourbons, Ney
o trial by them for treason. He d by the Chamber of Peers on the , 1815; and was shot, in pursuance
e, on the morning of the next day.
with the same firmness with which it on the battle-field for five and Ney was an erring, but a noble-
He was honourably free from the vices that tarnish the fame of many
-in-arms; and, take him for all in nan in whom even deplorable faults
en forgiven. [E.S.C.]

DE, a Dutch painter, 1596-1639.
C., a French antiquarian, 1623-1701.
ST., a martyr of the 3d century, said bishop of Rome. Another martyr
e name was bishop of Rheims, 5th c.
commander of the Syrian army for iphanes, slain by Judas Maccabæus
.c. 161.
or NICATOR. See DEMETRIUS.
, A., an Italian Jesuit, 1706-1784.
, J. B., an Ital. mathemat., 1726-93.
N., an Italian writer, 1363-1437.
RUS, the name of two saints—the
of Antioch about 260; the second,
ian and patriarch of Constantinople,
0, died 828.
RUS I., emperor of the East, formerly
r and chancellor of the empire under claimed on the fall of the latter 802, with the Bulgarians 811. NICE-
orn 912, succeeded 963, assassinated
ne of his generals, who suc. him 969.
III., commander of the Asiatic forces,
posed by Alexius Commenus 1081.
RUS, a Greek theologian, and me-
Kief, in Russia, 12th century.
RUS-BLEMMIDAS, a learned Greek
f a monastery at Miathos, 13th cent.
RUS-BRYNNE, a Byzantine gene-une emperor of the East, and was Nicephorus (Botoniates) III. 1078.
PHORUS, married to Anna, daughter mmenus, kn. as an historian, d. 1137.
RUS-CALLISTUS, a monk of Con-
n. of an 'Ecclesiastical Hist.,' 14th c.

NICEPHORUS-GREGORAS. See GREGORAS.
NICERON, J. F., a Fr. mathemat., 1613-1646.
NICERON, J. P., a Fr. historian, 1685-1738.
NICETAS, the name of several Greek writers—DAVID, author of a Life of St. Ignatius, 9th century. ACHOMINATUS, or CHONIATES, author of Annals, died about 1216. SERRON, author of several panegyrics and Commentaries, 11th century. EUGENIANUS, a novelist, 12th century.
NICETAS, ST., abbot of Mount Olympus, d. 824.
NICETIUS, FLAVIUS, a Gaulonite jurist, 5th c.
NICETIUS, ST., a bishop of Treves, appointed 527, died 566. Another of the name, bishop of Besançon, died about 612.
NICHOLAS I., pope of Rome, in whose reign the schism between the Greek and Latin churches commenced, 858-867. NICHOLAS II., reigned 1058-1061. NICHOLAS III., 1277-1280. NICHOLAS IV., author of Commentaries, 1288-1292. NICHOLAS V., a great patron of learning, founder of the Vatican library, &c., 1447-1455. An antipope (P. de Corbiere) assumed the title of Nicholas V., and died in prison about 1338.
NICHOLAS, an emperor of the East, deposed after a few days' reign by Alexis Ducas, 1204.
NICHOLAS, a king of Denmark, 1104-1134.
NICHOLAS, two dukes of Lorraine—the first, born 1448, succeeded John 1470, died 1473. The second, succeeded his brother, Charles IV., who abdicated 1634, died 1670.
NICHOLAS, three lords of Ferrara, Modena, and Reggio—the first reigned 1317-1346; the second, 1361-1388; the third, 1393-1422. This last, in his nineteenth year, was commander of the papal army directed against Milan, 1403. He caused his second wife, Parasina de Malatesta, to be put to death, together with his natural son, Hugues, for adultery; a circumstance which has furnished Byron with the subject of one of his poems.
NICHOLAS, patriarch of C'tinople., died 1111.
NICHOLAS, a monk of Clairvaux, 12th cent.
NICHOLAS, EYMERICUS, inquisitor-general of Spain, au. of 'Directorum Inquisitorum,' d. 1393.
NICHOLAS OF MUNSTER, founder of a German sect in the sixteenth century, whose followers called themselves the family or house of Love. He published the 'Evangel of the Kingdom,' and other mystic works.
NICHOLLS, F., an Eng. physiolog., 1699-1779.
NICHOLS, JOHN, a well-known name in literature, was the apprentice and successor of Bowyer, an eminent and learned printer. He was born at Islington 1744, became the partner of his master in 1766, and died 1828. His works are—'Literary Anecdotes of the 18th Century,' 13 vols. 8vo, 'Illustrations of the Literature of the 18th Century,' 8 vols. 8vo, 'The History and Antiquities of Leicestershire,' 6 vols. folio, &c.
NICHOLS, R., a poetical writer, born 1584.
NICHOLS, W., a learned divine, 1664-1712.
NICHOLSON, W., a wr. on chemis., 1758-1815.
NICIAS, an Athenian painter, 4th cent. B.C.
NICIAS, an Athenian general, companion-in-arms of Alcibiades and Lamachus, put to death after the ill success of his expedi. to Sicily, B.C. 413.
NICOLAI, a Dutch painter, born 1766.
NICOLAI, CH. FREDERIC, a famous bookseller and miscellaneous writer of Berlin, where he was born, 1733. He exercised great influence over the direction of the new literature in Germany, both by his enterprise and his own writings, and is generally mentioned with the literati of the revolutionary philosophy. Died 1811.

NICOLAI, E., a Swedish theologian, d. 1580.

NICOLAI, J., a Saxon philologist, died 1708.

NICOLAI, N. A., a Ger. pathologist, 1722-1802.

NICOLAI, N. M., an Italian writer, 1756-1838.

NICOLAI, W., a French writer, 1716-1788.

NICOLAS, A., a French historian, 1622-1695.

NICOLAS, ARMELLE, generally called 'the good Armelle,' was a French servant girl, remarkable for her charity and pious devotion, 1606-1671. Her life was published in 1676, entitled 'The Triumph of Divine Love in the Life of a great servant of God.'

NICOLAS, SIR NICHOLAS HARRIS, a naval officer who afterwards became a barrister, and devoting himself to literary pursuits acquired a distinguished name as a genealogical and historical critic. He is generally known by the shorter designation of Sir Harris Nicolas. His principal works are a 'Chronology of History,' 'Despatches of Lord Nelson,' 'Life of Hatton,' 'History of the Battle of Agincourt,' &c. He was engaged at his death on a 'History of the Navy,' and the Papers of Sir Hudson Lowe, the latter of which have since been edited by Forsyth. Born in Cornwall 1799, died 1848.

NICOLAS, P., a Fr. mathemat., d. about 1720.

NICOLAUS-DAMASCENUS, a poet and historian of Damascus, who lived in the 1st ct. B.C.

NICOLAUS-MYNEPSUS, a med. wr., 13th c.

NICOLAUS-PRÆPOSITUS, a med. wr., 12th c.

NICOLAY, L. H., a German poet, 1737-1820.

NICOLAY, N., a French traveller, 1517-1583.

NICOLE, CLAUDE, a French poet, 1611-1686.

NICOLE, F., a French geometrician, 1683-1758.

NICOLE, N., a French architect, 1701-1784.

NICOLE, PETER, nephew of Claude Nicole the poet, and one of the most celeb. of the Port Royal auth. as a moralist and theologian, 1625-95.

NICOLEF, N. P., a Russian dram., 1758-1816.

NICOLINO, G., an Ital. singer, cel. 1697-1717.

NICOLLE, G. H., a Fr. journalist, 1767-1828.

NICOLO DEL ABBATE. See ABATI.

NICOLO-ISOUARD, generally called NICOLO, a famous theatrical composer, born at Malta of French origin, and distin. at Paris, 1777-1818.

NICOLSON, WILLIAM, a learned prelate and antiquary, author of three valuable works entitled respectively the English, Irish, and Scotch Historical Library, b. in Cumberland 1655, d. 1727.

NICOMEDES, a Ger. geometrician, 1st c. B.C.

NICOMEDES, the first of the name, king of Bithynia, B.C. 278-250; the second, 148-89; the third, time of Mithridates, 89-75.

NICOT, JOHN, a French statesman, 1530-1600.

NICUESSA, D., a Span. navigator, 16th cent.

NIEBUHR, CARSTEN, a celebrated Danish traveller, was born in the duchy of Lauenburgh, 1733, and having raised himself from the condition of a peasant to that of a land surveyor, was sent on a scientific expedition to Arabia in 1758. The object of this mission was to collect materials for illustrating the Bible, as suggested to the Danish government by Michaelis, and it occupied six years, from 1761 to 1767, in travelling through the East. Niebuhr published his 'Description of Arabia,' in 1772: his 'Travels in Arabia and Countries,' in 2 volumes, 1774-8, to v volume was added in 1837. He was an office under the civil administratio 1778. Died 1815.

NIEBUHR, BARTHOLD GEORGE preceding, was born at Copenhagen, famous as an historian, diplomatist, a —holding, in fact, such high rank i these characters, that he has origi school of historical criticism, and our may be numbered among his foll father's stories of the East, and the literature ushered in by such writers Lessing, and Goethe, fixed his attentio a boy; and the Turkish war of 177 Revolution soon afterwards, and other ments of that age, deeply interested fortunes of states. His memory and methodising knowledge were at the se great. By his eighteenth year he had home and at school, ten languages, a few years afterwards, he added as and there were few facts in the compa to which he was not able to speak acc out the aid of books. In 1794 he pursue his sudies at Kiel. In 179 Copenhagen as private secretary to minister of finance, Count Schimmel 1797, exchanged this office for an ap the Royal Library. From 1798 to 1 cupied with a literary visit to Englan land; and in the last named year he first wife, Amelia Behrens, and took in Copenhagen as secretary to the Af late. In 1804, he became first directo and of the East India department of Trade, besides being promoted to th for the affairs of Barbary, of which he been secretary. From 1806 till 1810 Prussian civil service, part of the tim at the court of Holland, and, at Berli the department for managing the m In 1810, Hardenberg having return Niebuhr resigned, and became profes at the new university of Berlin till 1813 to 1816 he was engaged in af connected with the administration of countries re-conquered from Napoleo negotiations of the court of Berlin w and Holland; besides instructing the in finance. In 1816 he went on a mis and this occupied him till 1823. His procure a frank understanding and the new development of religion in G this, however, he was disappointed, shrewdly observed that he might ha position much easier there had he Atheist! He turned his lengthene account, however, in making those observations, which enter so largely i tories. At the close of this mission the most important period of his life of history at the university of Bon there 1831. The great work of hi Roman history, to which must now series of posthumous works in cours tion—among others his 'Ancient and Geography.' The novelty and v consist in their minute reproduction of the very circumstances, in the midst of which the events of history occurred, and the faculty of the author for judging of similar occurrences from the conflicts of his own times. In politics, he was the friend of constitutional freedom, with guarantees for a national education and religion, and perhaps no greater instance could be found of a statesman whose life and manners so completely represented his convictions. The men of the hour found it difficult to agree with him, simply because he had convictions and acted up to them. [E.R.]

NIEL, L., a French composer, died about 1760.

NIELD, JAMES, a goldsmith of London, who devoted himself, on retiring from business, to the visitation and improvement of prisons, and projected the Society for the Relief of Prisoners Confined for Small Debts, 1744-1814.

NIEMEYER, A. H., a German wr., 1754-1828.

NIENEMBERG, JOHN EUSEBIUS DE, a learned Spanish Jesuit, distinguished as a writer and naturalist, 1590-1658.

NIEPPERG, COUNT, an Austrian general, who was a principal agent in the coalition against Buonaparte, and afterwards lived with the empress Maria Louisa. 1771-1828.

NIETO, DAVID, a Venetian rabbi, 1654-1728.

NIEUHOFF, JOHN DE, an agent of the Dutch East India Company, who wrote interesting narratives of his embassies to China, &c., 17th cent.

NIEULANT, A., a Dutch painter, died 1601.

NIEULANT, W., a Dutch painter, 1584-1635.

NIEUPOORT, W. H., a learned Dutch philologist, professor at Utrecht, about 1670-1730.

NIEUPORT, CHARLES FRED. ANT. FLORENT. LE PRUD'HOMME D'HAILLY, Viscount De, a Fr. diplomatist and mathematical savant, 1746-1827.

NIEUWELANDT, WILLIAM, VAN DEN, a Dutch dramatic author and painter, 1584-1635.

NIEUWENTYT, BERNARD, a Dutch physician, also, as a philosopher and mathemat., 1654-1730.

NIEUWLAND, PETER, a classical scholar, professor of mathematics and physics, 1764-1794.

NIFO, AUGUSTIN, an Ital. philosopher, d. 1538.

NIGHTINGALE, JOSEPH, successively a methodist and unitarian minister, author of 'Beauties of England and Wales,' and some religious works, 1775-1824.

NIGIDIUS-FIGULUS, PUBLIUS, a learned Roman and Pythagorean philosopher, to whose assistance Cicero was much indebted in the defeat of Catiline's conspiracy. Being banished by Cæsar as a partizan of Pompey, he died in exile B.C. 45.

NIHUSIUS, B., a Ger. controv. wr., 1584-1657.

NIMMO, A., a Scottish engineer, 1783-1832.

NITHARD, a grandson of Charlemagne, known as a French historian, 790-859.

NITSCH, P. F. A., a German savant, 1753-94.

NIVELLE, G. N., a Fr. theologian, died 1761.

NIVELLE, J. DE, a Flemish lord, known as an adherent of the duke of Burgundy, 15th century. Being dispossessed by his father, his estates passed to his third brother, WILLIAM, who was father of the constable, Anne de Montmorency. See MONTMORENCY.

NIVELLE CHAUSSEE. See CHAUSSEE.

NIVERNAIS, LOUIS JULIUS BARBON MAZARINI, Duc De, a French ambassador and political writer, 1716-1798.

NIVERS, G., a Fr. musical writer, died 1707.

NIZAM-EL-MOLOUK, KOADJAH HASSAN, vizier to the Persian sultan, Alp Arslan, a great statesman, historian, and patr. of learning, 1017-92.

NIZAM-EL-MOLOUK, or AL-MOULK, vice-roy of the Deccan under Mohammed Shah, the Mogul emperor, to whose dethronement, by Nadir Shah, he was an active party; died 1748.

NIZAMI, a Persian poet, died 1180.

NIZZOLI, M., a Italian scholar, 1498-1575.

NOAILLES, a noble French family, many members of which are distinguished in history. The principal are—ANTHONY, admiral of France under Henry II., 1504-1562. FRANCIS, brother of Anthony, ambassador to Venice, Constantinople, and London, 1519-1585. LOUIS ANTHONY, second son of Anne, first duke of Noailles, cardinal and archbishop of Paris, noted for his vacillation in the religious quarrels of the age, first against the Jansenists, and afterwards against the Bull Unigenitus, 1651-1729. ANNE JULIUS, brother of the latter, a marshal of France, 1650-1708. ADRIAN MAURICE, son of Anne Julins, duke and marshal, distinguished in the Spanish war of succession, afterwards commander in the wars of 1733-5 and 1743, when he lost the battle of Dettingen. He was subsequently known as a statesman, and is the author of Political and Military Memoirs, 1678-1766. LOUIS, eldest son of the latter, duke and marshal, perished on the scaffold, 1713-1793. PHILIP, his second son, known as the marshal and duke de Mouchy, perished on the scaffold, 1715-1794. JEAN PAUL FRANCIS, eldest son of Louis just mentioned, 1739-1824. EMMANUEL MARIE LOUIS, marquis de Noailles, brother of the latter, 1743-1822. PHILIP LOUIS MARK ANTONY, prince de Poix, eldest son of Philip, the before-mentioned marshal de Mouchy, commander of a regiment of dragoons that had been raised by his grandfather in the war of succession, and a partizan of the Bourbons, 1752-1819. CHARLES, his son and successor in the command and the dukedom, 1771-1834. LOUIS MARK ANTONY, viscount de Noailles, second son of the marshal de Mouchy, and uncle of the last mentioned, born 1753. He was one of the first among the noblesse to join the commons in the estates-general 1789, and was killed at the Havannah 1804. ALEXIS, count de Noailles, son of the preceding, a diplomatist of the restoration, 1783-1835. ALFRED, brother of the latter, born 1786, killed in the retreat from Russia 1812.

NOBILI, R., a Roman Jesuit, 1606-1656.

NOBLE, MARK, a clergyman of the Church of England, author of historical and biographical writings, died 1827.

NOBLE, SAMUEL, a learned minister of one of the congregations formed by the receivers of the writings of Swedenborg, author of an 'Appeal' on behalf of those doctrines, and of 'The Plenary Inspiration of the Scriptures,' designed to enforce and illustrate the internal sense of the Word; d. 1853.

NOCETI, C., an Ital. savant, about 1695-1759.

NOEHDEN, GEORGE HENRY, a learned German, successively librarian and superintendent of the numismatic dep. in the Br. Museum, 1770-1826.

NOEL, F., a Germ. Jesuit, known as a Chinese scholar and missionary, born about 1640, d. 1715.

NOEL, F. J., a French scholar who fulfilled

many administrative and diplomatic functions, and wrote many useful works of research, the principal of which is his 'Dictionnaire de la Fable,' 1755-1841.

NOEL, P., a Flemish painter, died 1823.

NOETUS, an Asiatic theologian, supposed to have flourished about the middle of the 3d century. The Noetian Creed, attributed to him, is an endeavour to state the doctrine of Christ's divinity, without supposing a trinity of separate persons.

NOGAROLA, ISOTTA, a lady of Verona, remarkable for her beauty, her learning, and her talents for poetry, 1428-1466. A brother of hers, named LEONARDO, is also kn. as a theological wr.

NOGAROLA, L., an Italian savant, 16th cent.

NOGAROLA, T., an Ital. theologian, 18th cent.

NOIROT, CLAUDE, a Fr. writer on the origin of Masks, Mummings, &c., born 1570, publ. 1609.

NOLAN, M., an Irish lawyer, died 1827.

NOLDIUS, CHRISTIAN, a learned Danish minister and professor of divinity, 1626-1688.

NOLLEKENS, JOSEPH FRANCIS, an English painter, son of a Fleming, long resident in this country, 1706-1748. His son, JOSEPH, a cele. sculptor, and favourite of George III., 1737-1823.

NOLLET, D., a Flemish painter, 1640-1736.

NOLLET, J. A., a Fr. natural philos., 1700-70.

NOMSZ, JAN, a Dutch poet, 1738-1803.

NONIUS, MARCELLUS, a philosopher, 4th cent.

NONIUS, or NONNIUS, the Latinized name of Pedro Nunez, a Portug. mathemat., 1492-1577.

NONIUS, NONNIUS, or NUNNEZ, LEWIS, a Spanish physician and philologist, b. about 1560.

NOODT, GERARD, a Dutch jurist, 1647-1725.

NORBERG, or NORDBERG, DR. GEORGE, a Swedish historian, chaplain and biographer of Charles XII., 1677-1744.

NORBERG, MATTHIAS, a Swedish Orientalist, prof. of Greek and theology at Upsala, 1747-1826.

NORBY, S., a Danish admiral, killed 1530.

NORDEN, FRED. LOUIS, a Danish traveller, author of 'Memoirs upon the Ruins and Colossal Statues of Thebes,' and of 'Travels in Egypt and Nubia,' both illustrated, 1708-1742.

NORDEN, JOHN, a scholar and surveyor of the crown lands, author of several religious quaint works, died about 1625.

NORDENANKER, J. DE, a Swedish naval commander, author of several memoirs, last cent.

NORDEN-FLEICHT, HEDWIGE CHARLOTTE DE, a lady of Stockholm, known in Sweden as a poetess, 1719-1763.

NORDENHEIM, J. CHRISTOPHER, a Swedish physician, and wr. on Hereditary Diseases, d. 1719.

NORDENSCHOLD, a Swedish governor of Finland, disting. as a political economist, died 1764.

NORDENSKJOLD, AUGUSTUS, a Swedish traveller, and one of several followers of Swedenborg who interested themselves in African enterprise, close of last century.

NORDIN, CHARLES GUSTAVUS, a Swedish savant and statesman, author of 'Materials for Swedish History,' 1749-1812.

NORFOLK, ROGER BIGOD, earl of, one of the barons who compelled Henry III. to confirm Magna Charta, died 1270. His nephew, of the same names, distinguished in the reign of Edward I., about 1301. See HOWARD.

NORGATE, EDWARD, an Eng. artist, 17th cen.

NORIS, HENRY, a learned Italian cardinal of Irish descent, author of a 'History of ism,' and chief librarian of the Vatican,

NORIS, M., a Venetian dramatist, 1

NORMAND, CL. J., a Fr. antiquary

NORMANN-EHRENFELS, CHAS. BRECHT, Count De, a Ger. officer, who armed band at Corinth, and was mortal in the cause of Greek independence, 17

NORRIS, JOHN, founder of a profes prize essay at Cambridge university, 17

NORRIS, JOHN, second son of Henry Norris, distinguished in the military France during the civil wars of that cou went to Ireland with the earl of Essex, wards served in Flanders under the a Austria, the duke of Lorraine, and Nassau. In 1585 he was commander of troops sent to the aid of Antwerp. In 1 intrusted with the power of the crown by Queen Elizabeth, and in 1591 comm troops sent in aid of Henry of Navarre leaguers. He returned to his Irish gov 1594, and died a few years after.

NORRIS, JOHN, whose name ranks principal of our philosophical divines, Collingbourne Kingston, in Wiltshire, place his father was rector, 1657. H bachelor's degree at Oxford in 1680, an mitted M.A. 1684. In 1689 he becam Newton Sodoc in Somersetshire; in promoted to the richer living of Bem Salisbury; and died there in 1711 aft hard study, which probably hastened Norris, at college, was an ardent st admirer of Plato, and when, a few years the tendency of Locke's philosophy to o of belief, provoked a controversy whic the length and breadth of Europe, he with the opposite party—followers of and Malebranche. He published his prin in 1701, entitled 'An Essay towards a the Ideal or Intellectual World,' written, p in support of Malebranche—the theor perceive all things in God, whose thoug such a term, are our ideal forms. Norr was an idealist, to the extent of declarin all that had been argued from the time of to his own, the existence of external sensation is only probable but by no mea His other works, which rank in the Pla of divinity with those of Henry More, hi porary and correspondent, are 'The Pict Unveiled,' translated from Waryng, 'A Happiness,' 'Theory and Regulation 'Reason and Religion,' 'The Natural I of the Soul,' together with poems and on a variety of subjects.

NORRIS, SIR JOHN, a naval officer, Mediterranean under Sir Cloudesley Shov

NORRIS, ROBERT, a native of famous for his sojourn of eighteen ye coast of Guinea. He wrote 'Memoirs of of Bossa Ahadee, king of Dahomey, country of Guinea, to which is added th journey to Abomey the capital,' publish don, 1789.

NORRIS, S., a theological writer, di

NORRMAN, L., a Swed. Oriental., NORRY, C., a French architect, a ir of the Expedition to Egypt, which he panied, 1756-1832.

RTH, the name of a distinguished family, of we may mention—Sir Edward, an emi- awyer, created Baron North, of Catlidge, in ridgeshire, by Queen Mary. Dudley, Lord , his great grandson, born 1581, distinguished artizan of the parliament, and appointed by to the admiralty, died 1666. Dudley, son and ssor of the latter, distinguished in parliament, uthor of the 'Life of Edward, Lord North,' ages Relating to the Long Parliament,' t in the Way to Paradise,' &c., died 1677. sons of the last named—Francis, Baron ord, lord-keeper of the great seal in the reigns arles II. and James II., author of Political s and Narratives, and a Philosophical Essay sic, about 1640-1685. Sir Dudley, a great y merchant, author of 'Observations on the rs, Customs, and Jurisprudence of the ' died 1691. John, born 1645, elected pro- of Greek at Cambridge 1672, and created he following year on the visit of Charles II., 83. Roger, attorney-general to James II., as an historical critic and miscellaneous died 1733. To the same family belongs the of the following article.

RTH, Frederick, earl of Guildford, gener- alled Lord North, belongs to English as chief of the administration during the can war of independence. He was appointed ssioner of the Treasury 1759; and resigned s leader in July, 1765, when he joined the tion to the Rockingham ministry. He came fice again with the Grafton ministry, 1766; 7 became chancellor of the exchequer; and 0 succeeded the duke of Grafton as minister, he brought in a bill for the repeal of all the lately imposed upon the American colonists, he exception of that upon tea, and this ex- n, in 1773, led to disturbances, which in 1775 d in actual hostilities, and to the declara- f independence, 4th July, 1776. The struggle during the whole of Lord North's adminis- n, but was virtually ended by the surren- f Lord Cornwallis, at York Town, 19th Oct., Lord North resigned on the 20th of March, He became earl of Guildford by the death s father in 1790, and died 1792, after being ed several years with blindness; 1732-1792.

RTH, G., an Engl. numismatist, 1710-1772.

RTHAMPTON, Earl of. See Howard.

RTHAMPTON, Spencer Josh. Alwyne rton, marquis of, well known for his love of e and literature, was born 1790, and suc- d to the title of his father in 1828. He was n in the House of Lords as an advocate of lar measures; but the arena in which he ly distinguished himself was that already in- ed. From 1838 till 1849 he held the presi- y of the Royal Society, and during this period mansion was the scene of frequent and ant reunions of the most distinguished men philosophy, art, and literature. The marquis orthampton was also one of the presidents of British Association, and he filled the same in the Royal Society of Literature at the of his death, 1851.

RTHCOTE, James, an eminent historical painter and writer on art, was born at Plymouth, where his father was a coachmaker, 1746. His best works are 'Hubert and Arthur,' and 'The Murder of the Two Princes in the Tower.' He is author of Fables illustrated with his own designs, of 'Memoirs of Sir Joshua Reynolds,' and a Life of Titian.' Died 1831.

NORTON, Lady F., a religious wr., died 1720.

NORTON, John, a wr. on orthography, 17th c.

NORTON, Thomas, a barrister-at-law, known as a zealous Calvinist, and translator of the famous 'Institutes.' He assisted Sternhold and Hopkins in a metrical version of the Psalms, and is supposed to have died about 1584.

NORWOOD, Richard, an English geometer, one of the first to measure a degree of the meridian, 1635.

NORZI, Solomon, an Italian rabbin, 17th cen.

NOSTRADAMUS, Michæl, a physician of Provence, known as an astrologer in the time of Catherine de Medici. He composed 'Seven Centuries of Prophecies' in enigmatical rhymes, some of which are admitted to have been most exactly fulfilled; among others his prophecy, a hundred years before its occurrence, of the execution of Charles I., and still more surprising, of the exact date of the French Republic, 1792. He died in 1566. His brother, John, known as an historical writer, died 1590. His son, Cæsar, a poet and historian, flourished 1555-1629. Michæl, another son, known as an astrologer and prophet like his father, died 1574.

NOTARAS, C., a patriarch of Jerusalem, d. 1733.

NOTT, John, a surgeon in the employ of the East India Company, dist. as an Oriental scholar and poetical and miscellaneous writer, 1751-1826.

NOTT, Major-General Sir William, an officer in the East Indian service, greatly distinguished in the late Affghan war, born at Cærmarthen 1782, died 1845.

NOTTINGHAM. See Finch, Howard.

NOUE. See Lanoue.

NOUET, James, a French ascetic, 1605-1680.

NOUET, N. A., a French astronomer, d. 1811.

NOUGURET, P. J. B., a Fr. novelist, 1742-1823.

NOULLEAU, J. B., a Fr. theolog., 1604-1672.

NOUR-DJIHAN, wife of the Mogul emperor, Djihan-Guir, famous for the happy influence which she exercised over him, and said to be the discoverer of the essence of roses, reigned 1611-1645.

NOUR-ED-DEEN-ALI, sult. of Egypt, 1257-59.

NOUR-ED-DEEN-MAHMOUD, Melek-el-adel, commonly called Nouradin, or Nour-ed-deen, a celebrated Moslem ruler of Syria and Egypt, born 1117, succeeded his father in Syria 1145, commenced the conquest of Egypt after the death of Baldwin III., king of Jerusalem, 1162, died when he was preparing to march against his ambitious lieutenant, Saladin, 1174.

NOUWAYRI, Shehab-ed-deen Ahmed, an Arabian historian and encyclopædist, 1283-1331.

NOVA, J. Da, a Spanish navigator, 16th cent.

NOVALIS, the literary cognomen of Frederick Von Hardenberg, a German literateur and poet, born at Mansfield near Eisleben, 1772, died 1801. His works were published by Tieck and Schlegel in 1814—the principal of them being lyrical poems and the philosophical romance 'Heinrich Von Ofterdingen.'

NOVATUS, a presbyter of the church of Carthage in the time of Cyprian, who procured his excommunication for heresy, and gave him occasion to form a new church. After this, in 251, Novatus went to Rome and became a partizan of his namesake, the subject of the following article.

NOVATUS, NOVATIAN, or NOVATIANUS, supposed to be a native of Phrygia, and to have been educated as a Stoic philosopher, was a presbyter of the Roman Church, distinguished for his learning and eloquence. He is called the first antipope, from being chosen bishop of Rome by a minority of the clergy at the same time as Cornelius, whose election was confirmed by a council in 251. The party of Novatian was distinguished by their refusal to re-admit apostates to the communion of the church. This, with some other points of discipline, gained for them the appellation of Cathari, or Puritans. The time of his death is uncertain.

NOVERRE, J. G., a Fr. ballet comp., 1727-1810.

NOVIKOFF, N. I., a Russian au., 1744-1818.

NOWELL, ALEXANDER, a dignitary of the Church of England, and the last surviving father of the reformation in this country, was born at Whalley, in Lancashire, 1507 or 1508. He was first employed as second master of Westminster school, and, in 1551, became one of the prebendaries of Westminster. He was among the exiles at Strasburg in the reign of Queen Mary, and, returning on the accession of Elizabeth, he became dean of St. Paul's in 1560. He is the author of the Church of England Catechism, and the founder of a free grammar school in his native county, and of thirteen Oxford scholarships. Died 1602.

NOWELL, LAURENCE, younger brother of the preceding, became dean of Lichfield, and is known as the author of a Saxon Dictionary, now in the Bodleian library; died 1576.

NOY, WILLIAM, attorney-general in the reign of Charles I., and author of the ill-advised project for raising supplies without the consent of parliament, 1577-1634.

NUCK, A., a German anatomist, 1660-1692.

NUGENT, GEORGE GRENVILLE, Lord, known when a young man as Lord George Grenville, was the second son of the marquis of Buckingham, and brother of the late duke. He was born in 1789, and sat in four parliaments, as member for Aylesbury, previous to the passing of the reform bill. In 1830 he became connected with the Whigs in the government; and from 1832 to 1835 was lord high commissioner of the Ionian Islands. He had no seat in the house from this period till 1847, when he appeared for his old constituency. Died 1850. Lord Nugent wrote 'Memorials of Hampden and his Times,' and 'Lands, Classical and Sacred.' His name was generally a popular one.

NUGENT, ROBERT CRAGGS, Earl, a descendant of the Nugents of Westmeath, known as a poet, died 1788.

NUGENT, THOMAS, a miscellaneous writer and translator, au. of a French Dictionary, died 1772.

NUMA POMPILIUS, said to be the successor of Romulus as king of Rome, and distinguished as a philosopher and legislator, was of Sabine origin, and died after a reign of forty-three years, B.C. 672. He was the founder of the most important religious institutions of the Romans, and left writings explanatory of his system, which were burnt by order of the senate, four hundred years aft

NUMENIUS, a Ch

NUMERIANUS, M of Rome, succeeded hi and is supposed to l months afterwards b Aper, who was stabbed

NUMITOR, said to of Alba, and grandfath

NUNEZ, or NUNN tinguished Portuguese a physician and profes

FERDINAND, a learn editor, about 1473-15 tinguished painters; t tury, the latter abo Nunez de Sepulveda, in 1640, and Nunez Murillo, 1685-1700.

NUNEZ DE BAL of the small colony o of the Indians, that a journey to the south, and hazardous journey the isthmus in Septe discovering the ocean bus of a fruitless sear watershed, his impati and he ran forward i eminence in sight. mounted into a tree, the vast expanse of now hurried forward, claimed the sovereign for the crown of Spa coast he received th the power and wealt lands to the far sou no end. Thirteen y was fully confirm Magellan disprove immediately sent tidings; but inst appointment arr short time superv a mean, envious after, on some discoverer of th minious death.

NUNNING

NUVOLO Lombardy—J died 1651. surnamed t

GUISEPPE, Pamfilo, a

NUZZI,

NYE, P land, who have been

NYER

NYM

NYS sician, physiol Pathol Muser Anim

OATES, Titus, well known to English history as a political intriguer in the reign of Charles II., was the son of an anabaptist preacher, and was born about 1619. He was educated for the Church of England, and became chaplain in one of the king's ships, but was dismissed in disgrace, and joined the Jesuits. In September, 1678, having rejoined the Church of England, he made a disclosure of a pretended popish plot, which caused the execution and imprisonment of many eminent men; and for which he received a handsome pension, and a residence at Whitehall, till the end of Charles II.'s reign. On the accession of James, he was convicted of perjury and publicly whipped, but recovered his liberty, and was pensioned again by William III. Died 1705.

OBEID-ALLAK, a famous Arabian commander, successively governor of Khorassan, Basrah, and Koufah; killed 685.

OBEID-ALLAH, Abu Mohummed, the first caliph of the Fatimite dynasty, reigned 910-933.

O'BEIRNE, Thomas Lewis, an Irish prelate known as a political and miscell. wr., 1748-1823.

OBEREIT, J. H., a Swiss alchymist, 1725-98.

OBERKAMP, F. J., a Ger. physician, 1710-1768. His son, F. Philip, prof. of anatomy, died 1793.

OBERKAMPF, C. Philip, the originator of the French manufac. of printed cotton, 1738-1815.

OBERLIN, John Frederic, pastor of Waldbach, was born at Strasburg, on 1st August, 1740. His father held office in the Gymnasium of that city; and being a man of great vivacity, as well as assiduous devotedness to his duties, was in the habit of taking his children on holidays to a small patrimonial farm he possessed a few miles out of town. There entering into all the feelings and sports of boyhood, he joined in every active and healthy amusement, and especially, as playing 'at soldiers' was a favourite pastime, the father invariably acted the part of drummer and major. The mother, a woman of great talents, energy, and piety, imbued her family not only with her earnest spirit and sound principles of religion, but also with her own passionate fondness for sacred music, and never did the children separate at night without her leading the juvenile circle in chanting one of Luther's beautiful hymns. Dr. Lorentz, an evangelical minister of high popular gifts, was her favourite preacher, and as young Frederic frequently accompanied her to the Lutheran chapel, the tones, manner, as well as strains of the Doctor's preaching made such an impression on the susceptible and pious heart of the boy, that he early cherished the desire of devoting his future life to the service of God and the good of his fellow-men. Having completed his studies, and acted a few years as tutor in the family of an eminent surgeon in Strasburg, Oberlin entered on the duties of his sacred profession, by engaging to act in the capacity of chaplain to a French regiment which was quartered in the city. During the four years he filled that situation he prosecuted his private studies with great ardour, and at the expiry of that term, he resigned the office on obtaining a curacy in the Ban de la Roche, or Steinthal, a mountainous district in Alsace. It was an extensive valley lying in a state of wild uncultivated nature, divided into two parishes, of which the Waldbach was one, and comprising from eighty to a hundred families. These people, whose sequestered condition had hitherto placed them almost beyond

[View of the Ban de la Roche.]

the pale of civilization, were in a state of rude simplicity or rather barbarism, indolent and filthy—because almost entire strangers to all the useful arts of life; and their state as to religion may be imagined from the fact, that they knew nothing of the Bible, except that it was a large book, said to have come from God. The idea of undertaking the pastoral duties of such a wild and neglected people, was a prospect from which most persons would have shrunk. But Oberlin was known to possess the self-denying spirit, the energetic fortitude, and the enterprising genius suited to the exigencies of the place; and accordingly being urged by those who were interested in the regeneration of that people, he at length accepted the onerous charge. Oberlin was precisely of the cast of mind adapted for the Waldbach. A person of literary attainments or studious habits would have been perfectly useless in such a parish. The pastor who aimed at doing any good required bodily activity far more than study, and was under a necessity of combining physical and social with spiritual improvement. Wedded to habits of hereditary indolence, the people made open resistance to Oberlin's first attempts at innovation; and although his experimental measures were of an obviously useful and practical character, they excused themselves in the usual spirit of the sluggard, on the plea that what had done for their fathers might well satisfy them. The resolute minister, no way discouraged, proceeded to the execution of his projected schemes; and the first attempt he made was to form roads. Throughout the whole parish there was nothing but foot tracks, which were impassable during the greater part of the year, and the Bruche, a stream that bounded it in the direction of Strasburg was crossed only by a series of stepping-stones, which, when the river was swollen by the winter rains, were submerged, so that for nearly nine months the inhabitants were completely secluded from all intercourse with the world. Oberlin proposed to throw a wooden bridge over this stream, and by excavating the mounds or blasting the rocks, construct a road to the city. Having assembled his parishioners in a field, he explained his design, and finishing his address with the words "Whoever is persuaded of the benefits of the bridge, let them follow me," he shouldered a pick-axe, and accompanied by his servant, commenced the work of excavation. The effect of his words and his example was electric. When the first surprise was over, all classes—old and young, offered their assistance, and from morning to night continued to labour for six months at their pastor's side with unabated assiduity till the bridge was erected. When opened, it received the name of Le pont-de charité. The obvious advantages of this bridge disposed the parishioners to listen the more readily to other undertakings which their public-spirited pastor contemplated for their benefit. He opened roads to the neighbouring towns—introduced the use of agricultural implements—sent the more promising boys, some to the nearest counties to learn farming, and others to Strasburg to be taught the knowledge of different trades—erected neat cottages instead of the wretched cabins of turf in which the inhabitants dwelt—introduced the culture of the potato instead of the wild apples and pears which had hitherto formed their staple subsistence—showed them the use of many common plants for food and physic—instructed them in every useful art that tended to the comfort and advancement of social life, and made so many improvements in the villages, houses, fields, and gardens of the Steinthal, that the parish which at his entrance was a neglected waste, a dreary desert, began to blossom as the rose. These improvements on the domestic, social, and agricultural economy of the Steinthal were only preparatory to other and higher reformations he contemplated on the moral state and religious character of the inhabitants. The confidence he had gained by his benevolent exertions for their temporal good he employed for promoting their spiritual welfare by establishing weekly prayer-meetings, introducing infant schools, as well as seminaries of a higher character, in which, besides the common branches of education, astronomy, agriculture, and various mechanical arts, such as plaiting straw, knitting, cotton-spinning by the hand, and the manufacture of silk ribbons were taught by masters and mistresses properly qualified for the office. He himself superintended the religious instruction of the children, teaching them not only to read and understand the history and principles of the Bible, but instructing them in a knowledge of sacred music by chanting the hymns sung in the church, and also of several branches of natural history, with a view of illustrating the perfections of God. By means of a printing press he had in his own house, he prepared religious tracts for distribution, and established itinerant libraries which, after being devoted to one village for three months, were then removed for the use of another. The expense of all these various schemes he was enabled to meet by the liberality of some Christian friends in Strasburg. Oberlin having been deprived of his wife, who had entered with intelligen activity into all his undertakings, h care of his house as well as in the

of the parish was supplied by a pio
young woman, Louisa Schelper, wh resident in his family. There was n mical and prudent a manager; for orders consequent on the great Fre Oberlin no longer enjoyed his scan his maintenance was derived wholly tributions of his parishioners. Dur terror, however, when all worship proscribed, he was allowed to minis
—an immunity for which he was in the poor and isolated position of h partly to the excellence of his own
at once the result and the evidenc
improvements he had made, the pe Steinthal during his incumbency ro
or a hundred, to three thousand.
simple, earnest, evangelical preache acteristic of his discourses was the dotes he introduced of persons emi known to him by reading or intercou lation of his parish being of a mixe preached on Sabbaths in French, evenings in German. Other meeti reading to the people, and as he
to improve every moment of time,
women to knit stockings; and whe or spoken long, he used to stop and are you tired yet?' or, 'you have had night.' He was decorated by Lou the legion of honour. Oberlin died age of eighty-six, having earned th being one of the most useful men
peared in any country in modern ti

OBERLIN, JEREMIAH JAMES, the preceding, distinguished as an philological writer, b. at Strasburg

OBICINI-OBIZZING, THOMAS sionary, afterwards professor of Ori died 1636.

OBRECHT, ULRIC, a Fr. jurisc

OBSEQUENS, JULIUS, a Latin

OBSOPŒUS. See ORSOPÆUS.

OCAMPO, F. D., a Span. histor

OCARIZ, or OCARITZ, DON J lier D', a Spanish diplomatist, wh of chargé d' affaires at Paris in 17 guished himself by endeavouring XVI., born about 1750, died 1805.

OCCAM, or OCKHAM, WILL at Ockham in the county of Surrey of the thirteenth century; taught success in Paris, in the early part of a Franciscan, like his master, Du greatest of the later Schoolmen—h vincible Doctor;" the philosopher final blow to the fantastic Realism ages, and perhaps the first effecti authority of the Pope; the predec and Gerson, and, not remotely, of LUTHER.—It cannot be expe work like this, any extensive appe given of a subject so theory and Scholastic Philosophy; nevertheles be taken of our mention of Occa Student against hastily adopting t

common views of its deserts, and its place in the history of Thought. Difficult to peruse, as most of the writings of these singular disputants unquestionably are, and in great part from the apparent barbarism of their language, it must not be overlooked that this difficulty and uncouthness belonged almost necessarily to the excessive subtlety and sagacity with which they attacked the highest problems that can engage the Human Intellect. It falls to every new metaphysical school, or rather to every great school in a new epoch, to invent in so far its own language: take for example the writings of the Philosopher of Konigsberg, who, strangely enough, was long reputed obscure and even unintelligible, because of the very pains he took to render his expression of profoundest Thought, about the clearest and most precise, of which any language contains a record: nor is the remark of Mr. Hallam to be doubted, that as words are meant to express precise ideas, 'it was as impossible,' in the times of which we speak, 'to write metaphysics in good Latin, as modern naturalists have found it to describe plants and animals.' Besides the strangeness of terminology too, we must keep in mind that every age has a position peculiar to itself, around which, as a centre, the battle of Thought is contested; and it is only by taking account of this specialty, and separating from it the tactics and efforts of the contending Parties, that one can come to recognize the identity in all ages, of these Parties and Tactics —that one can discern in the East, in Greece early and late, in those Middle Ages, and in modern Europe, the representatives and movements of Forces, whose antagonism is perpetual, and amid whose conflicts we live. The form in which these Schoolmen placed the great question they discussed, was mainly a grammatical one; but, underneath that form, those precise problems were debated which divided the followers of Aristotle and Plato, which sever Descartes and Hobbes, Locke and Kant. If sometimes subtle to a fault, and minute apparently to painful affectation—an error into which the grammatical form of their speculations inevitably led them—Aquinas, Scotus, Roscelin, Abelard, and Occam, were neither pedants nor sciolists, but brave divers into the depths of human thought: men who struggled fearlessly with the difficulties, the doubts, and hopes of the Soul: and, by their energy of purpose, eloquence in speech, and the firmness of the grasp with which they held the tendencies of their time, they again emancipated the World. Let us note in illustration, and in general and catholic terms, the inquiries which engaged Occam.—It is universally known that Schoolmen became finally divided into two great sects—Realists and Nominalists. The former, whose leaders were Aquinas and Duns Scotus, had a subdivision into Thomists and Scotists; the latter—including the Conceptualists—following the great names of Roscelin, Abelard, and Occam. The following were the positions upheld by Occam.—In those days as now, the first field of dispute was the Theory of Perception. How do we perceive? How do Mind and Matter meet? Occam maintains that we know only two things, viz., the existence of an object, and the existence of a mental impression. The notion of image transmitted, he declares a pure fantasy. Certain senses, he says, receive an image of external objects, (sight, for instance), but this reception accompanies the act of perceiving, and does not constitute it. There are but two partial causes of sensation—the Subject which feels; and the Object, that is perceived:—further, we know nothing and need not inquire. And so of objects remembered: he rejects with equal decision the theory then in vogue, that we perceive or image what is past, through effect of Resemblances of objects continuing, as essences or shadows in the Mind: he says that Recollection is a power of the mind, and that we cannot define it more minutely. So also with regard to general terms or notions. They result from the action of the Intellect, on things perceived. Intelligible Species or Entities, representing general ideas, he utterly repudiates. The Mind, which has the faculty to perceive objects, has also a power to abstract, to compare, to differentiate, to combine. And so, it forms conceptions corresponding to these operations, and expresses their results. There was a prevalent belief or position connected with this subject, in reference to the Divine mind. His attributes of Justice, Goodness, Wisdom, &c., were imagined separate Entities, with which he held council, on proceeding to act. No! said Occam, these are modes or forms of the Supreme Reason; they are Attributes, and not Entities. The Nominalism of Occam as thus expressed, certainly does not reach that of Hobbes and Locke; nor indeed can we easily distinguish it from views that would not be termed Nominalist, in these our modern times. But is it not easy to recognize, in the basis of such disputations, the most important difficulties of Philosophy—those very problems that agitate us still? One thing at least is clear;—questions of such sort regarding all things Human and Divine, clothed in any garb—even in the grammatical—could not be presented with the ardour of an Abelard, or the logic of Occam, without stirring men's souls to an extent, so that no dogma of Popish Infallibility, could lay the tumult again. Occam, as we have said, was therefore a legitimate progenitor of Luther: but another point of most anxious interest is inseparable from the subject we contemplate,—we mean the singular influence on the fates of the World, of the genius of the French or Gallic race. It may be taken now almost as an historic maxim, that the Teuton originates Thought, France diffuses it, and the Anglo-Saxon realizes it, and gathers its good fruits. How strange in the providence of God, that Paris, even under its most absolute Monarchs, should have been the source—moral as well as material—of mightiest Revolutions! Is it that the peculiar genius of the Gallic Race, endows it with the gift to foresee, as well as the facility to be dazzled, by new Ideas? Paris when most Catholic, was, par excellence, the seat of those intellectual strifes which ultimately destroyed the Pope: Paris when most absolute, was, through the popularity of the Encyclopædists, the centre of those influences which first introduced the wildest Republicanism into Europe: Paris under a profound despotism, ploughed up the roots of every despotism in the old Continent: Paris, now, in its fresh anomalous condition, has, we doubt not, a similar and singular Destiny to fulfil. [J.P.N.]

OCCHIALI, the common appellation of Kilig-Ali, captain pacha under Selim II., distinguished at the battle of Lepanto 1572, died about 1577.

OCCO, ADOLPHUS, a Ger. numism., 1524-1605.

OCELLUS-LUCANUS, a Pythagorean philosopher, supposed author of a work 'On the Universe,' B.C. 500.

OCHINUS, B., an Italian polemic, 1487-1564.

OCHS, PETER, a doctor of law, dist. at Basle for his part in the Helvetic revolution, 1749-1821.

OCHTERLONY, SIR DAVID, an officer in the service of the East India Company, disting. in the Nepaulese war, b. in New England, 1758, d. 1825.

OCKLEY, SIMON, distinguished for his Oriental learning, and his zeal in promoting the culture of the Arabian language, of which he was professor at Cambridge, was born at Exeter 1678, and died, prematurely, 1720. His principal works are a 'History of the Saracens,' a 'Life of Mahomet,' a 'History of the Present Jews,' from the Italian of Leo Modena, 'An Introduction to the Oriental Languages,' and 'The Improvement of Human Reason, exhibited in the Life of Hai Ebn Yokdhan,' translated from the Arabic.

O'CONNELL, DANIEL, was born near Cahir Siveen in the county of Kerry, on the 6th of August, 1775. In his youth, and subsequently as the hospitable lord of Derrynane Abbey, he lived

[Derrynane Abbey.]

much amid the wild scenery, and as wild population of his native district. It is still a scarcely accessible territory, with but scanty road communication through the narrow gaps in the mountain ranges, and so sterile, as to present even a part of Ireland thinly peopled.—It is impossible to look at O'Connell's career and character without believing that the spot with which his career was so closely connected, had a characteristic influence on his mind. His father was a petty landowner. Whether O'Connell was of high or humble birth, has been a matter ever disputed. He claimed high descent, and it was conceded to him by his Irish followers; but this is one of the characteristics without which that singular people would never acknowledge leadership. It was necessary as a point of policy that he should be reported to come of the true old blood, and when he swept through the crowd in his great family coach, broadly emblazoned with a quartered shield and conspicuous supporters, it was the large-built, handsome, rather h

man, who looked around with the air prince, was by no means the democr
a republican people. He had an ur high in the military service of Franc used to speak as ashamed to own th occupied the humble position of an was educated at St. Owen and Douay destined for the church, but the reli admitted Roman Catholics to the b him a more brilliant career. He kep
the Middle Temple, and was admitte bar in Easter term, 1798. He was student, and is described by Sir Jon
as having 'bottled' a quantity of leg for subsequent use. His great char deed, as a daring leader of the peop existing order of things, was the wo city with which he could march alo
dary line of strict legal action witho or committing either himself or his f
the Irish bar he was beyond all que advocate of his day, whether for orat adaptation of the law. And thus known that he collected large subsi fellow-countrymen in the form of wh
the patriotic rent, it must at the s remembered that he gave up a prac tive as the Irish bar could afford. H is intimately connected with the re
all who have paid attention to the p
of the day. It may be mentioned, chronologically fixing the commenc
historical career, that it was in the y
he first came forth as a champion Roman Catholics, by boldly proposin meeting of the body in William-St
the establishment of a general co 1815 he made himself unpleasantly killing in a duel Mr. D'Esterre, wh him for calling the corporation of Du
When the 'Catholic Association, formed by him, was denounced by found means of evading the penalti structing the association on a firmer
he proceeded systematically to obtai persons who could not take the oat saw the necessity of concession, and Catholic Emancipation Act was pa
the Reform Bill he became conspic head of a parliamentary body, who, a his leadership, and voting together,
'O'Connell's Tail.' About the year 1
out the agitation for the repeal o
which became a failure in his hands.
1844 the government of Sir Robert P to grapple with him and the repeal gan criminal proceedings, and obtai
tion, followed by a sentence of impri
it was reversed in the House of Lo nell, however, was now an old m shook his nerves and his position. It by the miseries of the potato blight 15th of May, 1847, he died during Italy, which was called a pilgrima posed to partake of a penitential or r acter.

O'CONNOR, GENERAL ARTHUR,

notorious Feargus O'Connor, and one of the principal actors in the Irish rebellion of 1798, was originally a barrister, and having the good fortune to escape punishment, after that event went to France, where the first Consul appointed him general of division. In 1809 he married the daughter of the famous Condorcet, niece on her mother's side to Marshal Grouchy, and in 1834 purchased the chateau of Bignon from the heirs of Mirabeau, where he died 1852.

O'CONNOR, CHARLES, a catholic clergyman, author of works elucidating Irish history, d. 1828.

O'CONNOR, RODERICK, king of Connaught, in the time of the conquest of Ireland by Henry II.

O'CONNOR, TURLOGH, called 'the Great,' a king of Connaught, who aimed at the entire sovereignty of the country, 1088-1156.

OCTAVIA, the sister of Augustus, illustrious for her virtues, her beauty, and her accomplishments, was the widow of Claudius Marcellus, by whom she had a son and two daughters, when she was married, at the instance of her brother, to the triumvir, Mark Antony. The latter neglected her for Cleopatra, queen of Egypt; notwithstanding which, Octavia displayed the most noble fidelity to his house and fortunes, and devoted herself to the education of all his children. She died of the dejection into which she was thrown by the loss of her son by Marcellus, who was the intended heir of Augustus, and who was idolized by the people of Rome, B.C. 11. [E.R.]

OCTAVIA, a daughter of the emperor Claudius by Messalina. She was the sister of Britannicus, and, at the age of sixteen, became the wife of Nero. The latter divorced her and married Poppæa, at whose instance she was put to death in the twentieth year of her age, A.D. 62.

ODARRI, G., an Italian painter, 1663-1731.

ODENATUS, SEPTIMIUS, son of an Arabian sheik, who allied himself with the Romans against Sapor, king of Persia, and, after defeating the latter, was associated with Gallienus in the empire. He was married to Zenobia, who remained qu. of Palmyra after his death. Assassinated 267.

ODERICO-DE-PORTENAU, a cele. Franciscan missionary, author of his travels, 1286-1331.

ODERICO, G. L., an Italian numismatist, 1725-1803.

ODESCALCHI, the name of two noble philanthropists of Rome—the first of whom, MARK ANTONIO, was cousin to Innocent XI., and founder of an hospital for the destitute, died 1670. The second, THOMAS, almoner to the same pope, founder of an institution for the education and employment of poor children, died 1692.

ODIER, LEWIS, a physician of Geneva, who distinguished himself by the introduction of vaccine on the continent, author of a 'Manual of Practical Medicine,' 1748-1817.

ODIER, P. A., a Fr. administrator, 1774-1825.

ODILON, ST., a famous abbot of Clugny, distinguished as a Latin poet and theologian, 962-1048.

ODINGTON, WALTER, commonly called 'Walter of Evesham,' being abbot of that monastery, distinguished in music and astronomy, 13th cent.

ODO, a Romish saint, and abbot of Clugny, famous for his reforms in monastic discip., 879-943.

ODO OF KENT, a Benedictine monk, who became successively prior of St. Saviour's and abbot of Battle Abbey. He is the author of some learned writings, and was a friend of Becket, died 1200.

OECOLAMPADIUS, JOHN, was born at Weinsperg in Franconia in the year 1482. He was educated at Heilbrun, and afterwards at Heidelberg. At Stutgard he met with the famous Reuchlin, under whom he studied Greek so ardently as in a short time to compose and publish a Greek grammar. In 1515 he began to preach, and he cordially assisted Erasmus at Basle in publishing his Annotations on the New Testament. After this he entered the monastery of St. Bridget at Augsburg, but after two years left it for more active labours. In 1521 the protestant light began to dawn upon him, and he soon came to the assistance of Zwingli, the Swiss Reformer, and concurred with him in his views of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper in opposition to Luther. He was mingled up for many years in those discussions, and in the conventions held to secure agreement. He disputed with Dr. Eck at Baden, and the debate lasted eighteen days. Basle was his head-quarters, and the scene of his earnest and multiplied pastoral labours. In 1531 he was seized with severe and sudden sickness, and he died in December of that year, in the forty-ninth year of his age. He has left behind him several works, but his special memory lies in his living diligence, meekness, prudence, self-denial, and success in carrying on the Swiss reformation from Popery. His original name was Hausschein, House-lamp, which he, according to a prevalent custom, changed into the Greek surname Oecolampadius, of similar meaning. [J.E.]

OECUMENIUS, a Gr. commentator, 10th cent.

OEDER, G. C., a German botanist, 1728-1791.

OEFELS, A. F. D', a Ger. savant, 1706-1780.

OEHLENSCHLÆGER, ADAM, the greatest dramatic poet of the Scandinavian North, was b. 1777. He commenced his career on the stage, but abandoned the profession for literature, and finally became professor of Æsthetics in his native city. Among his greatest works may be mentioned—1. 'The Death of Balder;' 2. 'The Gods of the North;' 3. 'Aladdin;' 4. 'Stærkodder;' 5. 'Hakem-Jarl;' 6. 'Palnatoke;' 7. 'Axel and Valborg;' 8. 'The Admiral Fordens Kjold,' and many others. Died 28th January, 1850.

OEHLMULAR, D. J., a Ger. archit., 1791-1823.

OELRICHS, G., a Germ. antiquarian, 1727-89.

OELRICHS, J. C. C., a Germ. hist., 1722-98.

OELRICHS, J. G. A., a Ger. savant, 1767-91.

OENOMAUS, a Greek philosopher, 2d century.

OENOPIDES OF CHIO, a Pythagorean philosopher, 5th century B.C.

OERN, N., a traveller and wr. on Lapland, 1707.

OERNHEIM, or ORNSJOELMS, CLAUDIUS, called in Latin Aorhenius, a Swed. hist., 1625-95.

OERNSCHOELD, P. ABRAHAM, Baron De, founder of the manufacture of linens and prints in Sweden, died 1770.

OERSTED, HANS CHRISTIAN, professor of physics at the university of Copenhagen, and secretary of the Academy of Sciences in that city, was born 1777. He is the author of numerous works in physics—more especially in magnetism and chemistry, most of which are written in Latin. His last production, in Danish, entitled 'Aanden â Naturen,' caused a great sensation. Died 1851.

OESER, A. F., a painter and engraver of Presburg, 1717-1799. His son, FREDERIC, died 1792.

OETINGER, FRED. CHRISTOPHER, a learned philologist and mystic divine of Germany, who finally became prelate of Murhard, in Wurtemberg, and died at the age of eighty, 1782. His principal work is the 'Earthly and Heavenly Philosophy of Swedenborg and Others,' which included notices of Bœhmen, Malebranche, Newton, Cluvers, Wolffe, Plouquet, Bagliv, and Fricker. This publication involved him in considerable trouble with the Consistory; and in a controversy with Faber. Oetinger, however, was protected by the duke of Wurtemberg, as Dr. Tafel has been in the same cause by the present king. The son of Oetinger published a work, entitled 'Metaphysica et Chemica,' his father at the time being interdicted from writing. This prelate was a great master of the philosophy of Leibnitz. [E.R.]

OETTER, S. W., a German historian, 1720-92.

OEXMELIN, A. O., a Flem. buccaneer, au. of a 'History of the Adventures to India,' publ. 1686.

O'FARRIL, G., a Spanish general, 1784-1831.

OFFA, the successor of his uncle, Ethelbald, as king of Mercia, was placed on the throne after a successful insurrection in 757. He greatly extended his kingdom, and added that of the East Angles to it by treacherously murdering Ethelbert. In his latter years, he made peace with his conscience by the foundation of St. Alban's Abbey, and an annual payment to the pope, known in after ages as Peter's pence. Died 796.

OGDEN, SAMUEL, a learned minister of the Church of England, born at Manchester 1716, master of Halifax school 1744-1753, and, finally, rector of Lawford and Stansfield; died 1778. He is the author of some popular 'Sermons.'

OGE, a creole of the French colony of St. Domingo, who distinguished himself at the period of the revolution, as leader of an insurrection. Being overpowered by the troops, he and his lieutenant, Chavannes, were broken on the wheel.

OGEE, J., a French geographer, 1728-1789.

OGIER, C., a French writer of his travels and residence in the North of Europe, 1595-1654.

OGILBY, JOHN, an ingenious Scotchman, dist. as a literary speculator and author, 1600-1676.

OGILVIE, JOHN, a Scottish divine and poet, author of 'Philosophical and Critical Observations on Composition,' 'Evidence of Prophecy,' and an epic poem entitled 'Britannia,' 1733-1814.

OGINSKI, COUNT, a Polish patriot, 1731-1803.

OGLETHORPE, JAMES EDWARD, an English officer, who distinguished himself in the German wars under Prince Eugene, and afterwards as chief founder of the colony of Georgia. Being sent in pursuit of the rebels in 1745, and not overtaking them, he was tried by court-martial, and honourably acquitted. Born in Surrey 1698, died 1785.

O'HALLORAN, SYLVESTER, an Irish antiquarian, author of an 'Introduction to Irish History,' a 'General History of Ireland,' &c., 1728-1807.

O'HARA, KANE, an Irish dramatist, died 1782.

OIPENART, A., a Spanish historian, 16th cen.

OISEL, or OUZEL, J., a Ger. civilian, 1631-86.

OISEL, or OUSEL, P., a Ger. Hebr., 1671-1724.

OISELAY, J. D', a French poet, 15th century.

O'KEEFE, J., an Irish comedian, 1746-1833.

OKOLSKI, F. S., a Polish historian, 17th cent.

OLAFSEN, the name of several Icelanders—MAGNUS, a clergyman
translator of the Edda, 1573-1636.
translator of the Edda and Voluspa EGGERT, a minister, distinguished as 1721-1776. His brother, JOHN, an 1781-1801. A third brother, MAGNU nistrator and writer, 1728-1800.

OLAHUS, NICHOLAS, a Hungarian
statesman, au. of a 'History of Attila,

OLAUS, or OLOF, the first of chiefs who received the title of king received at his baptism the English na fried 1008, died 1026.

OLAUS, the name of two Danish
first of whom reigned in Jutland or killed 814. The second, reigned 1086

OLAUS, the first of the name, king reigned 994-1000. The second, 1014
third, shared the throne with Magnu 1096, and reigned alone 1069-1093.
reigned, with his two brothers, 1103
fifth, born 1370, became king of De Waldemar, 1376, and king of Norway
of his father, 1380; died 1387.

OLAUS, P., a Danish chronicler, 1

OLAVIDES, PABLO ANTONIO J
De Pilos, a Spanish statesman, distin promoter of agricultural industry in Morena, and author of a religious w
'The Triumph of the Gospel,' 1725-1

OLBERS, H. W. M., a Ger. astron.

OLDCASTLE, SIR JOHN, common
'good Lord Cobham,' was a domestic of Henry V., and is both the first aut martyr of our nobility. Becoming Wickliffe, he devoted his wealth and the propagation of the reformed d which he was hung in chains and the 1417. His life has been written by G

OLDENBURG, HENRY, a physic
the duchy of Bremen 1626, who becam first members, and the colleague of in the secretaryship of the Royal published the 'Philosophical Transa 1665-1677, and died 1678.

OLDERMAN, J., a learned German

OLDFIELD, ANNE, an Eng. actress

OLDHAM, HUGH, an English prel to have been born at Oldham, near founder of the grammar school in th town, and a great benefactor of Cor
Oxford; died 1519.

OLDHAM, JOHN, a satiric poet, 1

OLDISWORTH, W., a miscel. wri

OLDMIXON, J., an historical wr.

OLDOINI, A., an Italian savant,

OLDSWORTH, E., an Eng. writer

OLDYS, WILLIAM, distinguished phical writer, and for his great knowl
lish books, was the natural son of D chancellor of Lincoln, and was born was almost constantly employed by th and died 1761. His principal works of Sir Walter Raleigh,' 'The British translation of Camden's 'Britannia,' signed G. in the 'Biographia Britann

OLEARIUS, the name by which SCHLÆGER is generally known, a fam

…er and mathematician, author of Stories …he Persian, a Voyage to the Indies, a Chro… …f Holstein, &c., 1599-1671.

…EARIUS, GODFREY, a German divine, author …lical translations, &c., 1604-1685. JOHN, …, author of 'Sacred Hermeneutics,' and vari… …eological works, 1639-1713. JOHN GOD… elder brother of the latter, an ecclesiastical …her, 1635-1710. GODFREY, son of John, historical and theological works, 1672-1715.

…EARY, ARTHUR, an Irish priest, distin… …d for his loyalty to the English government, …of 'Addresses,' and of 'A Defence of his …ct and Writings,' 1729-1802.

…ASHER, J., a Portuguese divine, d. 1663.

…NSCHLÆGER, J. D., called 'Olearius,' a …n publicist and historical writer, 1711-1778.

…SNIKI, S., a Polish cardinal, died 1455.

…Y, BARNABAS, a learned divine, who be… …archdeacon of Ely after the restoration, and …86. He published the works of Dr. Jack… …d Herbert's 'Country Parson.'

…A, a woman of obscure birth, who became …e of Igor, grand duke of Russia; and after …th of her husband, in 945, governed the …y for ten years as regent. Having become …tian, and contributed to the spread of the …she is regarded as a saint in the Greek …; died 968.

…IERD, grand duke of Lithuania, 1330-81.

…ER, J. J., a French ascetic writer, 1608-57.

…NA, J. P., an Italian naturalist, 16th cent.

…VA, ALESSANDRO, a Ital. cardinal, 1408-63.

…VA, F. P. D', a Span. wr., abt. 1497-1533.

…VA, JOHN, an Italian antiquary, author of …Progress and Decay of Roman Learning,' …689-1757.

…IVAREZ, GASPER GUZMAN, Count Duke …Spanish statesman, devoted to the house of …ia, descended from the Guzmans of Castile, …at Rome, during his father's embassage to …us Quintus, about 1587, minister for twenty-…years during the reign of Philip IV. and his …cal enemy, Richelieu, died a few months after …isunsal, 1643.

…IVECRANTZ, JOHN PAULIN, a Swedish …man, and master of polite literat., 1633-1707.

…IVER, ISAAC, an English miniature painter, …-1617. His son, PETER, same profession, …-1654. JOHN, supposed to be his nephew, a …er on glass, 1616-1700.

…IVER, W., a physician of Bath, died 1764.

…IVET, JOSEPH TOULIER D', a Fr. Jesuit, …as an elegant writer and classic, 1682-1768.

…IVETAN, PETER ROBERT, a relative and …man of Calvin, said to have been poisoned at …in 1536, and, by other accounts, to have …at Ferrara 1538. He was one of the first re…ers, and published a French version of the …tures, which became the foundation of the …van Bible.

…IVEYRA, FRANCIS XAVIER DE, a Portu… …writer, who was connected with several em…es, and, becoming a protestant, took up his …ence in England, 1702-1783.

…IVEYRA, S., a Portuguese rabbin, d. 1708.

…LIVIER, C. M., a French critic, 1701-1736.

…LIVIER, F., chancellor of France, 1497-1560.

…LIVIER, JAMES, a president of the parlia… ment of Paris, born about 1460, died 1519. His son, JOHN, a poet, and grand almoner, afterwards bishop of Angers, died 1540.

OLIVIER, S., prof. of canon law, 1538-1609.

OLIVIER, W. A., a Fr. naturalist, 1756-1814.

OLIVIERI, A. C., an Ital. antiquary, 1708-89.

OLIVIERI, D., an Italian painter, 1679-1755.

OLLIVIER, R., a French writer, 1727-1814.

OLMOS, F. A., a Span. missionary, died 1571.

OLYBRIUS, FLAVIUS ANICIUS, emperor of the West, died after a three months' reign, 472.

OLYMPIAS, daughter of Pyrrhus, and wife of Alexander, king of Epirus, died about 240 B.C.

OLYMPIAS, daughter of Neoptolemus, king of Epirus, wife of Philip, king of Macedon, and mother of Alexander the Great. Having been repudiated by Philip, shortly before his assassination, B.C. 336, she is supposed to have instigated that crime, and was guilty of great atrocities during the minority of her son. Put to death B.C. 317.

OLYMPIODORUS, a Platonic philosopher of Alexandria, commencement of the 6th century. Another philosopher of the same name and place, author of a commentary on Aristotle, about the end of the 6th century. A third savant of this name was deacon of Alexandria about the end of the 7th century, and wrote Commentaries.

OLZOFFSKI, ANDREW, a Polish statesman and prelate, distinguished for his wisdom and patriotism, born 1678.

OMAR, the first caliph of the name, and father-in-law of Mahomet, succeeded Aboubeker 634, conquered Jerusalem 637, and Alexandria 640. It was on this occasion that the great library of the Ptolemies was destroyed, and in the reign of Omar that the institutions of the Mahommedans began to assume their proper form. He was assassinated by a Persian slave 644. The second Omar succeeded 717, and was assassinated 720.

OMAR, the fourth and last Arabian king of Badajoz, suc. his brother 1082, and was k. 1090.

OMAR, a cel. Mussulman doctor, abt. 1068-1142.

OMAR-PACHA, dey of Algiers, 1815-1817.

OMAYAH, or OMMIAH, a prince who ruled the Arabian tribe of Khoreish, the same to which Mahomet belonged, before the advent of the latter at the commencement of the 7th century. He was the stock of the Ommiade caliphs.

O'MEARA, BARRY EDWARD, a surgeon in the British navy, whose medical skill and knowledge of Italian induced the emperor Napoleon to invite him to St. Helena, in the capacity of his medical attendant. He remained with the emperor till 1818, when a rupture occurred between him and Sir Hudson Lowe, whose conduct he deemed oppressive, and he returned to England. He became a partizan of O'Connell in his later years, and died 1836, at the age of sixty-six. He wrote 'A Voice from St. Helena,' and several other works on the same subject.

OMMEGANCK, B. B., a Fle. painter, 1775-1826.

ONESICRITUS, a Gr. historian, 4th cent. B.C.

ONIAS, the name of several high priests of the Jews—the first of whom governed the Hebrew republic, 322-302 B.C. The second, 233-219 B.C. The third, who is much spoken of in the book of the Maccabees, 199-170 B.C. The fourth, called also Menelaus, reigned 172-162 B.C.

ONKELOS, a celebrated rabbin, supposed to have been a native of Babylon, and to have flourished about the time of our Lord. He wrote the Chaldee Targum, or paraphrase on the Pentateuch, which is remarkable for the purity of its language, and conformity with the Hebrew text.

ONOMACRILUS, a Greek poet, 6th cent. B.C.

ONOSANDER, a Greek Platonist, whose only remaining work is a discourse on the duties and virtues of the general of an army, 1st century.

OORT, LAMBRECHT VAN, a Flemish historical painter, born in 1520. ADAM, his son, 1557-1641.

OOST, JACOB VAN, the elder, a Flemish painter, greatly distinguished for his numerous altar-pieces, born about 1600, died 1671. His son, of the same names, called the Younger, a portrait and historical painter, 1637-1713.

OOSTERWICK, MARIA VAN, a pupil of J. De Heam, celebrated for her exquisite fruit and flower painting, 1630-1693.

OPIE, AMELIA, was the daughter of the late distinguished physician, Dr. Alderson, of Norwich, and the sister of Mr. Baron Alderson. She was married to John Opie, the eminent historical painter, in 1784, and survived him nearly half a century. From an early period she devoted herself to literary pursuits, principally in the composition of works of fiction and moral tales. These have been chiefly admired for their simplicity and genial feeling. Her public literary career extended from 1805, when she published her 'Adeline Mowbray,' down to 1834, when her 'Lays for the Dead' issued from the press. Besides these she is the author of 'Detraction Displayed,' 'Father and Daughter,' 'Madeline,' 'Temper,' 'Valentine's Eve,' &c. But her happiest effort is considered to be the 'Illustrations of Lying.' For the last twenty-five years of her life she was a member of the Society of Friends, and lived in the strictest retirement at Norwich, where in 1853 she died, aged 84.

OPIE, JOHN, the famous historical painter, was son of a carpenter, and was born in the neighbourhood of Truro, Cornwall, 1761. Having shown many proofs of his genius, he commenced painting under the advice of Dr. Wolcott, and at the age of twenty was introduced to Sir Joshua Reynolds, in London. He succeeded Fuseli as professor of painting at the Royal Academy, and was a lecturer at the Royal Institution. He wrote 'An Inquiry into the Requisite Cultivation of the Arts of Design in England.' Died 1807.

OPINEER, P., a Dutch annalist, 1526-1595.

OPITZ, or OPITIUS, HENRY, a German divine and Orientalist, whose singular opinions as the pupil of Matthias Wasmuth, subjected him to much enmity among the learned, 1642-1712.

OPITZ, or OPITIUS, MARTIN, regarded as the father of modern German poetry, 1597-1639.

OPPIAN, a Gr. poet and grammarian, 3d cent.

OPPIUS CAIUS, the name of two Romans—the first, a tribune of the people, B.C. 215. The second, one of Cæsar's lieutenants, 50 B.C.

OPSOPÆUS, J., a German critic, 1556-1596.

OPSOPÆUS, V., a Ger. philologist, died 1540.

OPSTRAET, J., a Fr. Jansenist, 1651-1720.

ORCAGNA, A., an Italian painter, 1320-1389.

ORDERIC, VITALIS, an English monk of French descent, kn. as an ecclesiastical historian, 12th cen.

ORDINAIRE, C. N., a Fr. naturalist, 1736-1809.

OREGGIO, A., an Ital. theologian, 1577-1635.

O'REILLY, ALEXANDER, Count, an I
ral, disting. in the service of Spain, 1735

O'REILLY, ANDREW, Count, a nati land, who became a general of cavalry i vice of Austria, and was governor of Vie it capitulated, 1741-1832.

ORELLANA, FRANCISCO, a Span. a regarded as the discoverer of the Amazo

ORESME, N., an eminent Fr. prelate,

ORFANEL, HYACINTH, a Spanish and hist. of Japan, where he was burnt al

ORFILA, M., a physician, celebrate contributions to toxicological chemistry
Port Mahon in 1783, died in Paris 1853.

ORGAGNA, A., an Italian painter, 13

ORIANI, B., an Italian astronomer, 1

ORIBASIUS, a Greek physician, 4th

ORIENT, J., a Hungarian painter, di

ORIENTIUS, ST., bishop of Auch, d.

ORIGEN, surnamed ADAMANTIUS,
at Alexandria about the year A.D. 1
father, Leonides, an intelligent and Christian, was martyred in the year Origen, his mother, and six younger left in great destitution. The father studied under Clemens Alexandrinus
monius Saccas, and made so great profici
in his eighteenth year Demetrius the bish him to the office of catechist. In this p success in teaching Christianity was so g
his life was threatened by his pagan ad
During this period he practised peculiar a and subjected himself to a strange m agreeably to what he deemed the correct of the statement in Matthew xix. 12. H library of secular books for a perpetual four oboli a-day, went without shoes, an the ground. About the year 212 he ma visit to Rome. On his return to Alex devoted himself more exclusively and a to biblical studies. Among the persons from error by him, was a man of wealt Ambrose, who gratefully supplied his tea
seven amanuenses and as many copyists.
ger in which persecution placed him, oblig leave Alexandria in 215, and he took Cæsarea. Here, though invested with n astical office, he publicly expounded the S In the year following he was recalled to dria, and still pursued his Scripture stud mediately afterwards he journeyed into G
his way through Palestine he was o
presbyter, and at Antioch had an intervi earnest request, with Mammaea, moth emperor Alexander Severus. The bish trius, who had been for some time jeal growing fame of Origen, now openly att on his return. In an assembly of prelate nounced sentence of exile upon Origen, a in another degraded him from the pri sent a circular to all the bishops deman concurrence in the judgment. In Pales ever, Origen was protected; he lived, st preached in Cæsarea. Persecution broke under Decius, and he was imprisoned an
He showed himself prepared for marty was at length released. His sufferings, shortened his life, and he died at Tyre 253, about his sixty-ninth year.—The

…cter of Origen were marked by great piety, …n, meekness, humility, and industry. …ying provocation he maintained an un…mper, and in times of danger he was never …. His orthodoxy was impeached during …ne, and Origenism became in succeeding … an interminable theme of wrangling and …m. The fancy of Origen did lead him …tray into wild and extravagant specula…ich as the dream of an ante-natal exis…he pre-existence of Christ's human soul, …final restoration of men and fallen spirits. …mmatical knowledge did not preserve him …e common and enticing error of spiritual…r allegorizing Scripture. As a defender of …h, Origen was far before any of his contem…as may be seen in his book 'against Celsus,' …e remains of the Philocalia, which was …d out of his writings by Basil and Gregory …anzus, and principally from this clever …

In the shape of commentary, scholia, …lies, he published on nearly the whole of …e, though only a few portions of these …ous works have been preserved. His trea… Principiis' is extant in the Latin version …us. Others of his numerous works exist … scanty fragments. The 'Exhortation to …om,' and the book 'On Prayer,' have come …us. Eusebius speaks of having collected …d of his letters. But one chief province …n's literary labours was upon the text of …e. His famous Hexapla, the best known …ditions, presents, in successive columns the …, Hebrew in Greek characters, and the … versions of Aquila, Symmachus, the …, and Theodotion; other Greek versions …casionally added in additional columns, …as a critical attempt to amend the text of …uagint. The surviving remains of this …d costly polyglot were published by Mont… in 2 folio volumes, Paris, 1714. The …editions of Origen's works were chiefly in …sions, such as those of Merlin, Erasmus, … and Genebrard. Huet published the exegeti…ks in 2 folios, Rouen, 1688; but the Edi…ceps is the Benedictine one, of De La Rue, …733-59, 4 vols., folio, reprinted in fifteen … by Oberthür, Würzburg, 1785. A later … by Lommatzsch in twenty-five 12mo …, was printed at Berlin, 1832-48, and a …e was published by Redepenning in two … at Bonn, 1846. With all his skilled dili…n biblical literature, Origen was not a safe …n theology. There is at the same time no …that many of his works were interpolated, …s plain that he was prone to theorize, and …ound hypotheses which could not be sus…

His hints were by and by broadened by …nto assertions, and his conjectures changed …itive affirmations. We cannot but admire …stry and erudition, though we smile at his …ogy, and refuse to admit the truth of many …dogmas with which his name has been so …nnected. [J.E.]

…GEN, the disciple and friend of Porphyry, … the same time as the preceding, and was …essor of Plotinus in the chair of philosophy …tandria.

…ANDI, Cr., an Ital. architect, 1694-1775.

ORLANDI, P. A., an Ital. art-writer, 1660-1727.

ORLANDINI, N., an Italian Jesuit, known as the first historian of his order, 1554-1606.

ORLAY, B. Van, a Flem. painter, b. abt. 1490.

ORLAY, J. Van, a Flem. painter, b. abt. 1656.

ORLEANS, an ancient dukedom, and titular name borne by the princes of the blood royal in France, of which there are two lines:—1. The first line has given the following names to history:—Louis I. of France, duke d'Orleans, second son of Charles V., born 1371, became regent in consequence of the mental incapacity of his brother, Charles VI., 1393, and was murdered by his cousin, the duke of Burgundy, 1407. This event was the source of the bloody feuds between the houses of Orleans and Burgundy. Charles, son of the preceding, duke of Angouleme in his father's lifetime, taken prisoner at the battle of Agincourt, died while attempting the conquest of the Milanese, which he claimed in right of his mother, 1465. He left a son, Louis II. of Orleans, who, in 1498, succeeded to the crown as Louis XII.—Between the first and second houses we find John Baptist Gaston, third son of Henry IV. and Mary de Medici, born 1608, created duke of Orleans 1626, and noted for his intrigues during the reign of his brother, Louis XIII. He was banished to Blois by Mazarin in 1652, and died there 1660.—2. The second house of Orleans commences with Philip I., second son of Louis XIII. and Anne of Austria, born 1640, received the title of Orleans on the death of his uncle, Gaston, 1660, and the next year was married to his cousin, Henrietta Anne, daughter of Charles I. of England. He is suspected of having poisoned this princess, and, in 1671, was married to Elizabeth of Bavaria, of whom his successor was born; died 1701. Philip II., born 1674, succeeded to the title of the preceding 1701, and became the celebrated regent Orleans after the death of Louis XIV. He was educated in profligacy by the abbé Dubois, and brought the kingdom to the verge of an insurrection (see Law); died suddenly 1723. Louis, son and successor of the latter, born 1703, was distinguished for his accomplishments as a universal scholar and linguist. He died, after passing his life in a literary and religious retirement, 1752. Louis Philip, son and successor of Louis the preceding, born 1725, was lieutenant-general in the Flemish wars and governor of Dauphiné. He was a man of taste and a lover of literature, and died generally regretted 1785. Louis Joseph Philip, son of the last named, see article below. Louis Philip, his son and successor, same as the late king of French. See Louis Philippe. Ferdinand Philip Louis Charles Henry, eldest son of the late king of the French, was born 1810 at Palermo, and distinguished himself in 1831 at the siege of Antwerp, and more recently in the African campaigns. He was killed by a fall from his carriage, near Neuilly, 13th July, 1842. His sons are the present Count de Paris, born 1838, and the duc de Chartres, born 1840. His sister, Marie, princess of Orleans, born at Palermo 1813, was greatly distinguished for her love of art, and especially for her skill in sculpture. She was married to the duke of Wurtemberg in 1837, and died of consumption 1839. Her greatest work is the statue of Joan of Arc, in the museum of Versailles.

ORLEANS, Louis Philippe Joseph, Duc D', father of the late king of the French, and cousin of Louis XVI., was born at St. Cloud, with the title of Duc de Montpensier, 1747, became duc de Chartres 1752, and succeeded to the title and estates of his father in 1787. In 1769 he married the daughter of the duc de Penthievre, and enjoyed some measure of the popularity that belonged to her as member of a family beloved by the people. In the conflict between the court and the parliaments, which preceded the revolution, Louis d'Orleans fully justified this preference by opposing the former, and, as a natural consequence, was received coldly by the royal family, and exposed to many mortifications at court; one considerable instance of which was the refusal of the king to appoint him grand admiral of France —a dignity that had fairly reverted to the duc d'Orleans by ordinary custom. His predilection for the popular cause was accompanied by a private character undeniably bad. It may be enough to say on this point, that, as he frequently visited England, he was the boon companion of the prince of Wales, and shared in all those nameless crimes against morality that we commonly understand by 'blackguardism.' The scene of his orgies in France was the Palais Royal. 'He changed the noble and spacious gardens of his palace into a market of luxury, devoted by day to traffic (as a means of repairing his shattered fortunes), and by night to play and debauchery—a complete sink of iniquities, built in the heart of the capital—a work of cupidity which antique manners never could forgive this prince; and which, being gradually adopted as their forum by the indolence of the Parisian population, was destined to become the cradle of the revolution.' The duc d'Orleans, in fact, and the Palais Royal, became the centre of the great conspiracy that was striding onwards to overthrow all that should have been dear to the descendant of a line of kings. Honour, decency, the privacy of the domestic life of royalty, and the fair name of his cousin Marie Antoinette, were all sacrificed by the man whose natural place at such a crisis was among the chief defenders of the throne. In 1792 Louis d'Orleans took his seat with the republicans in the National Convention, and adopted for himself and his heirs the name of Egalité—even voting for the king's death, 'simply occupied with his duty,' as he expressed himself, 'and convinced that the enemies of public liberty deserved to die.' It has been affirmed that he went to see Louis executed, but this is by no means certain; for his position, especially after the king's death, as first prince of the blood, was such as to bring upon him the hatred and suspicion of all parties. He was accused, at last, of plotting to re-establish the monarchy, either in his own person, or in his family, and the Jacobins were resolved to rid themselves of the embarrassment of his presence. A revulsion of feeling seems to have taken place after his arrest, and he conducted himself with unexpected courage, propriety, and self-possession on the day of his trial and execution—which took place, after several months' imprisonment, on 6th November, 1793. On being asked 'Whether he had not voted the death of the tyrant with the ambitious premeditation of succeeding him?' 'No,' he replied, 'I obeyed my heart and science.' 'Since you were determined to demn me,' he added, 'you should have found specious pretexts, for you will never persuad one that you believed me really guilty treason you charge me with.' Louis d'Orlea truth, understood the temper of the peopl well to think of aspiring to the crown, an made himself too familiar with them to dre any respect in such a character. The republ sacrificed him for future security, as they have done every member of the royal famil had been possible to secure their persons.

ORLEANS-DE-LA-MOTTE, Louis Fr Gabriel D', born 1683, became bishop of A 1733, and died 1774. He is regarded as the of a Christian minister, and is author of 'Spi Letters,' published 1777. His life, by Pr was published 1788.

ORLEY, B. Van, a Flemish painter, 1490-

ORLEY, Richard Van, and his son, J distinguished at Brussels as miniature painte engravers; the former 1652-1732.

ORLOFF, Gregory, a Russian genera political intriguer, who greatly promoted th vation of his mistress, Catharine II., to the t Being disappointed in his hope of sharin crown with her, and declining a private mar he was supplanted by a new favourite, and insane 1783. He had one son by the em named Bobrinkski. Alexis, his brother an low-conspirator, was a man of gigantic s and strength, and is said to have strangle emperor Peter with his own hands. He was vourite of Catharine, and was married t princess Taranoff, daughter of the empress beth; died 1808. Gregory Vladimirow nobleman of the same family, bearing the t Count Orloff, was distinguished for his p age and culture of letters. He is author of torical, Political, and Literary Memoirs of N a 'History of the Arts in Italy,' flour. 1778-

ORME, Robert, son of Dr. Alexander a physician and surgeon, employed by the India Company, distinguished for his hist works on British India, 1728-1801.

ORMEROD, Oliver, a Church of En minister and polemical writer of the time of J I., author of 'The Picture of a Puritan,' and Picture of a Papist,' died 1626.

ORMOND, James Butler, duke of, a mander in the army of Charles I., and a stre adherent of his son Charles II., whose resto he laboured to promote, 1610-1688. His Thomas, earl of Ossory, distinguished as a and military commander, 1634-1680. His son, James, second duke of Ormond, a parti the prince of Orange, and afterwards of the tender, 1665-1747.

OROBIO, Balthasar, called by some h phers Isaac De Castro Orobio, was a Sp Jew, who professed the Roman Catholic fa his native country, where he was a physicia professor of metaphysics. He was torture imprisoned by the inquisition on suspicion real character, and afterwards on going to A dam, was circumcised and became a Jew wardly, on which occasion he took the name of He wrote a philosophical book against Spino

IUS, P., a Spanish ecclesiastic, 4th cent.
NTE, P., a Spanish painter, died 1642.
TO, J. B., an Italian antiq., 1673-1720.
TO, SERTORIO, an Italian antiquarian
ian, usually called Ursatus, 1617-1678.
J. A., an Italian historian, 1692-1761.
II, a noble Italian family, the most cele-whom are—NICHOLAS, count of Pitig-Venetian general, time of the league of 1412-1510. His cousin, LORENZO, or E CERI, conquered the duchy of Urbino, terest of Leo X., and defended Rome
e constable Bourbon, died 1536. FULe Latinized form, FULVIUS URSINUS, a hed scholar and antiquarian writer, 1529-he popes, Nicholas III. and Benedict re of this family, and a branch of the tered the Neapolitan service, and became
s of Nola and dukes of Gradina. FRANd PAOLO, of this branch, were strangled
glia by Cæsar Borgia, and the cardinal s poisoned by Cæsar's father, the pope
r VI. See also URSINS.
, or ORTHES, H. D'ASPREMONT, Vis-
, governor of Bayonne at the period of cre of St. Bartholomew, in which, to his e refused to participate.
GA, C. G. DE, a Span. botanist, 1730-1810.
LIUS, A., a Flem. geographer, 1527-1598.
N, JOB, an Eng. dis. minister, 1717-1783.
APOLLO, otherwise HORUS APOLLO, RAPOLLO, the supposed author of two ooks concerning the Hieroglyphics of the s, first published by Aldus in 1505, was of Egypt, and first taught as a gram-Alexandria, and then at Constantinople, eign of Theodosius, about 380. The g fragment known by his name is sup-be, substantially, of much older date, and een written in the Egyptian tongue, the now have (according to this hypothesis)
production or abridged version in Greek.
nations of Orus Apollo have exercised a the curiosity of the learned, and some gns are admitted to have the value he them. The book has often been repubce the time of Aldus, and several times
atin version, the latest being that of Amsterdam, 1834. The following will idea of the meanings of Orus Apollo:—
baeus—virility, paternity, strength; the e and providence; the dew, or soft rain—
fire and water, as emblems of lustration ation—purity; the ox—temperance and the crocodile—insane fury, rapacity,
; the frog—an imperfect or unformed
lion's head—watchfulness; the anterior of the lion—power; the lamp burning—eye—God; the face without eyes, or two esented over a mask—the manes, or gods; the black dove—constancy in
d. It is quite clear that this interesting of antiquity contains the remnant of ditions of remote times, mingled with utions or guesses. Orus Apollo gives the of the cross as future life or salvation, esses that he cannot explain why. This x ansata, erroneously regarded as the key le, and usually held by Osiris. [E.R.]

ORVILLE, J. P. D', a Dutch critic, 1696-1751.
ORY, F., a French jurisconsult, died 1657.
ORZECHOWSKI, STANISLAUS, in Latin, ORICHOVIUS, a Polish orator and historian, 16th cent.
OS, J. VAN, a Dutch flower painter, 1744-1808. His son, T. WILLIAM, a landsc. painter, b. 1776.
OSBECK, P., a Swedish navigator, died 1805.
OSBORNE, FRANCIS, a parliamentary and republican statesman, formerly master of the horse to the celebrated earl of Pembroke, known as an historical and political writer, b. abt. 1588, d. 1658.
OSIANDER, ANDREW, a celebrated protestant theologian, who joined the party of Luther when he declared against indulgences, and took part in all the discussions when the confession of faith was formed at Augsburgh. Born at Guntzenhausen, in Franconia, 1498, died 1552. His son, LUKE, called the elder, a famous controversialist, 1534-1604. LUKE, son of the latter, chancellor of the university of Tubingen, 1570-1638. ANDREW, another son of the elder Luke, well known as a theologian and commentator, 1562-1617.
OSIANDER, JOHN ADAM, a theologian and philologist, professor at Tubingen, 1622-1697. His son, of the same names, a physician, 1659-1708. The son of the latter, who also bore the same names, 1701-1756. JOHN, son of the first John Adam, distinguished as a philologist, 1657-1724.
OSIO, F., an Italian historical critic, 1587-1631.
OSIUS, a Spanish theologian, bishop of Cordova at the period of the council of Nice, 256-358.
OSMAN, son of Ibrahim, emperor of the Turks, who was taken captive when a child by certain Maltese adventurers, and, being educated as a Christian, became vicar-general of the Dominicans at Malta: died 1676.
OSMAN-BEY, NEMSEY, a Hungarian officer in the service of Austria, who was born about 1740, and, when disgraced in his regiment, retired to Constantinople and became a Moslem. He was distinguished for his skill in archæology and numismatics, and was murdered by his servants, 1785.
OSMOND, J. B. L., a Fr. wr. on books, d. 1775.
OSMUND, ST., a bishop of Salisbury, 11th cent.
OSORIO, J., a Portuguese prelate, 1506-1580.
OSSENBEECK, J. VAN, a D. painter, 1627-78.
OSSIAN, a Gaelic bard, who is supposed to have lived in the 3d century, and is represented as the son of Fingal, king of Morven. See MACPHERSON.
OSSOLI, THE COUNTESS, better known as Margaret Fuller, was born in Massachusets, U.S., 1810, and when quite a girl was remarkable for the avidity with which she applied herself to classical and literary studies. She became mistress of a brilliant reputation in Boston and New York, chiefly founded on her conversational powers, and the leading part she took in the friendly conversazioni made up at her friends' houses, and in a less degree on the genius and sensibility displayed in her writings. In 1847, while on a tour in Italy, she became the wife of the marquis Ossoli, and on returning to America in 1850, they both perished by shipwreck on the beach of Fire Island. With her perished the MS. of a work on Italy, containing the last and ripest fruits of her genius.
OSSORY, THOMAS, count of. See ORMOND.
OSTADE, ADRIAN VAN, a Dutch painter, 1610-1685. His brother and pupil, ISAAC, 1617-1671.

OSTERVALD, J. FREDERIC, a Swiss divine, author of a Catechism and a History of the Bible, 1699-1747.

OSTERWICK, MARIA VAN, celebrated as a flower painter, born near Delft 1630, died 1693.

OSTIUS, a Latin poet, 1st century.

OSTROJSKI, vaivode of Kieff, died 1608.

OSTROWSKI, a Polish general, 16th century.

OSTROWSKI, TH. ADRIAN RAWICZ, a Polish statesman and friend of the constitution, 1739-1817.

OSWALD, a saint and king of Northumberland, converted, and killed in battle 642. Another St. Oswald, bishop of Worcester and York, died 922.

OSWALD, E., an Austrian savant, 1511-1579.

OSWALD, J., a Scottish philosopher, last cent.

OSYMANDIAS, a king of Thebes, who built the Memnonium, B.C. 2000.

OTFRID, a German poet and divine, 9th cent.

OTHER, OHTHER, or OTTAR, a Norwegian traveller of the age of Alfred the Great.

OTHMAN, or OSMAN, the founder of the Ottoman empire and the dynasty of the Osmanlis, was a Turkish chief who made himself master of Bithynia, flourished 1259-1326. A second, of the same name, was the sixteenth Ottoman sultan, reigned 1618-1622. A third, who was the twenty-fifth sultan, reigned 1754-1774.

OTHMAN AL RHADY, ABOUL SAID, a king of Fez and Morocco, reigned 1310-1331.

OTHMAN-IBN-AFFAN, son-in-law of Mahomet, succeeded to Omar as third caliph 644. He was murdered by Mohammed, son of Abubekr, 656.

OTHO, emperor of Rome, reigned 32-69.

OTHO I., emperor of Germany, distinguished as the Great, was the eldest son of Henry the Fowler, duke of Saxony. He was born 912, elected king of Germany 936, and crowned emperor 962, after subduing Bohemia and Italy, besides waging a successful warfare with Nicephorus, emperor of the East. Died 973. OTHO II., son of the preceding, was born 955, consecrated king of Lombardy 962, and reigned as emperor after his father 973-983. OTHO III., son and successor of the latter, was a boy when his father died, and died when only thirty years of age, probably of poison, 1002. OTHO IV., son of Henry, the lion duke of Saxony, was born about 1175, and succeeded 1197. He was not recognized over all Germany till 1208, nor consecrated till 1209. In 1214 he was totally defeated by Philip Augustus. Died 1218.

OTHO, duke of Saxony, was the first hereditary lord of that country, and reigned from 880 to 912. OTHO II., same as the first emperor of that name.

OTHO, a duke of Burgundy, 956-965.

OTHO, the first of the name, count of Burgundy, third son of the emperor Frederick I., succeeded him in the county 1190, died 1200. The second of the name succeeded the preceding by marrying his widow, Beatrice, 1200, and died 1234. The third, son of the preceding, died 1248. The fourth, eldest son and suc. of Alix, 1279, d. 1302.

OTHO OF BAVARIA, elected king of Hungary 1305, was compelled to abdicate 1307. OTHO, duke of Suabia, obtained the duchy of Bavaria in 976, and was killed the same year. The second Otho of Bavaria received the duchy from Agnes, mother of Henry IV., in 1061, and was slain after many reverses in 1083. The third, called 'the Great,' was nominated by Frederic Barbarossa, and reigned 1180-1183. The fourth, called the Illust ceeded his father, Louis I., 1231, died 1

OTHO OF BRUNSWICK. See BRUN

OTHO, HENRY, Count Palatine, reig

OTHO, ST., the apostle of Pomerania,

OTHO, or OTTO, bishop of Freysing Leopold, margrave of Austria, and Agnes of the emperor Henry IV., celebrated nicler; died 1158.

OTHO, OTHON, or OTTON, GEOR Orientalist and rabbinical philosopher,

OTRANTO, JOSEPH FOUCHE, duke ter of police under Buonaparte, was born in 1763. When the revolution broke ou himself conspicuous by the extravagance angues in the patriot club of that city, a was sent to the convention. His career as philosophy before the revolution was pr reason of his appointment, in conventi Committee of Public Instruction. This however, presented little scope for his ami he soon worked himself into the Committ ance. In this capacity he displayed his realizing a good deal of confiscated prope use of government; and his public spir highly approved that he was next sent battalion of troops in the city of Troyes. of Louis XVI. was now approaching, an who had identified himself with the party voted for the instant execution of the king tember, 1793, he was sent to the depa the Nièvre, to see the decrees of the executed; and besides suppressing publi he loaded himself with the spoil of the This mission being satisfactorily execut associated with that of Collot D'Herbois and there the most horrible atrocities mitted. His maxim was, that nothing arrest the will of the people, 'the explos mine, the devouring activity of the flan express their power . . . their dete like that of the tyrant, should be felt as a clap.' Such was the language of the da Fouché lent himself with Jesuitical cun for him there is no apology, as for a Ma sincerity. 'Brought up in a cloister, F learnt that monkish humility which stoo rise the higher; and he devoted hims tyranny of the people, until he became t ment of a new Cæsar. More of an actor than Collot was by profession, he played a Brutus with the soul of Sejanus.' He w then, in his real element; the overthrow the disgrace of the cross and the Bible, caused to be dragged through the stre tail of an ass, the plunder of many churches, and the wholesale butcheries of Lyons, were coolly calculated the p for popular influence. After the fall pierre accusations were heard against sides, and in June, 1795, he was driven convention. Enabled to return by the October, Fouché remained quiet for years, and then, under the Directory, succession ambassador to Milan, ambo Holland, and minister of police. This the very function for which nature had Fouché, and for which his career had prepared him. He was to the political became to the army; in him the of the born conspirator and the ayed itself against the daring of the genius of the statesman. He to be aware that power like his xercised in secret, and hence his ontribute to the establishment of sul; the successful soldier, on the ns to have been always conscious and danger of employing such an t in this he had no choice, for unave assassinated Fouché, the only ng such a man harmless, was to his own interest. Fouché had n of all parties, was thoroughly h their projects, and held the ousand conspiracies in his hands. g such a man in authority, and his age in full action, continued him peace of Amiens in 1802, when his nited to those of the minister of ier, and Fouché was sent to Aix of senator. In 1806, after Napoe emperor, a new coalition was him, and to meet certain of its uché resumed his post as minister of ing parties from this time becomt than ever, for he was now created , and opened his drawing-room to nobility, many of whom acted as oleon in the midst of his brilliant estive under the general persuasion his throne was dependent on such he retained the minister till his the Austrian princess, when he that his dynasty was established. event in 1809, Fouché had made ition of his power. During Nain the campaign concluded by the runn, the English made a descent Fouché at this time was minister s well as minister of police, and ing the emperor, he organized an National Guard with astonishing aving put Bernadotte at its head, favour with Napoleon, sent him my; about the same time he had, n private agent at the court of St. person of M. Onvrard. The com- g out of these circumstances deemperor's course, and after his e Fouché was appointed governor ke of Rovigo becoming minister of It was well understood that this ivalent to his disgrace, and Fouché splendid retirement till the disas- of Russia in 1812, when the em- f the mischief he might now do, aperner of the Illyrian provinces, and Germany, still to keep him at a nor of Naples. The services of t enlisted by the provisional govern- nd there is a question how far he ny way to Napoleon's return from ained his old function, however, olice during the hundred days, and of Waterloo, advised the emperor the same time making his own Bourbons at Ghent. The services of Fouché were retained some time by Louis XVIII., but he soon found his position untenable, and thought it convenient to make good his retreat by going as ambassador to Dresden. The law of 1816, passed generally against all the regicides, deprived him of this last political refuge, and after travelling some time in Germany, he settled at Trieste. Fouché died in 1820, leaving a fortune estimated at half-a-million sterling. [E.R.]

OTT, JOHN HENRY, a Swiss divine, 1617-1682. His son, J. BAPTIST, cel. as an Orientalist, b. 1661.

OTT, PET. CHARLES, Baron, an Austrian field-marshal, disting. against the Turks, and more recently in the wars of Italy against France, d. 1809.

OTTER, JOHN, a Swedish Orientalist, 1707-48.

OTTH, ADOLPHUS, a Swiss physician, 1803-39.

OTTINI, PASCAL, an Italian painter, d. 1630.

OTTLEY, WILLIAM YOUNG, late keeper of the prints in the British Museum, author of works connected with the fine arts, including a critical catalogue of the National Gallery, 'The Italian School of Design,' 'The Origin and Early History of Engraving,' &c., 1772-1836.

OTTO. See GUERICKE.

OTTO, EVERHARD, a Ger. juriscon., 1685-1756.

OTTO, LOUIS WILLIAM, Count De Moslay, a French diplomatist, who negotiated the marriage of Napoleon with Marie Louise, 1754-1817.

OTTO, VÆNIUS, an Italian painter, 1556-1634.

OTWAY, THOMAS, was born in 1651, at his father's parsonage in Sussex. From Winchester school he was sent to Oxford, but left the university for London in his twenty-first year, without a degree. Going on the stage, he failed completely, and began to write plays in 1675. His tragedy of 'Don Carlos' was extremely popular; two or three comic pieces, though very indifferent, were licentious enough to please the debauched patrons of the theatres: the author was likewise a jovial companion; and one of Charles II.'s natural sons procured for him, in 1677, a commission in the army then serving in Flanders. Very soon, however, he retired from service, returned to London in great poverty, and recommenced authorship. He now wrote some translations, and many occasional and miscellaneous poems, and produced a new series of plays. Among these were the two tragedies through which his name is remembered: 'The Orphan' appeared in 1680, and 'Venice Preserved' in 1682. Both of these, especially the latter, abound in that deep pathos which was so cordially admired by Dryden, and which attracted the sympathy of the poetic and imaginative Collins. Otway continued to be poor; and his unfortunate life came to a close in his thirty-fourth year. He died, 1685, in a house in Tower-Hill, where he was hiding from his creditors; and it is asserted that, suffering from hunger, he eagerly swallowed a crust of bread, and was choked by it. [W.S.]

OUDENARDE. See AUDENAERD.

OUDENDORP, F. D', a D. philolog., 1696-1761.

OUDET, JA. JOSEPH, a French officer, born about 1773, killed at Wagram, 1809.

OUDIN, CASIMER, a French monk, author of 'Commentaries on the Ancient Writings of the Church,' 1638-1717.

OUDIN, CÆSAR, a French interpreter and diplomatist, time of Henry IV., author of a translation of Don Quixote, died 1625. His son, ANTHONY, of the same profession, and author of a history of the Flemish wars, died 1653.

OUDIN, C. F., a French writer, 17th century.

OUDIN, F., a Jesuit and Latin poet, 1673-1752.

OUDINET, M. A., a Fr. medallist, 1643-1712.

OUDINOT, CHARLES NICHOLAS, duke of Reggio, and marshal of France, was the son of a merchant, and was born at Bar-Sur-Ornain 1767. He entered the army when nineteen years of age, and when the revolution broke out held the rank of captain. He embraced the popular cause, and rising to the rank of general, accompanied Massena into Italy as one of his staff-officers in 1799. His fortunes from this time were linked with those of Napoleon till the capitulation of Paris, March 31, 1814, when he became a Bourbonist. In that character he headed the army that invaded Spain in 1823, and was resident at Madrid some months as governor. In 1830, true to his principles, he adhered to the new dynasty. He succeeded Marshal Moncey as governor of the Invalides 1842, and died 1847.

OUDRY, J. B., a French painter, 1686-1755.

OUGHTRED, WM., a minister of the Church of England, dist. as a mathematician, 1574-1660.

OULOUGH-BEYG. See ULUGH-BEIGH.

OULTNEMAN, HENRY D', a Flemish historian, 1546-1605. His br., PHILIP, an ascetic, died 1652.

OUSEL. See OISEL.

OUSELEY, SIR WILLIAM, an Oriental scholar and wr. on Persian history and literat., 1771-1842.

OUTHIER, R., a Fr. astronomer, 1694-1774.

OUTRAM, or OWTRAM, WILLIAM, a Church of England minister, celebrated for his learning as a theologian, 1625-1679.

OUVILLE, ANTOINE LE METEL D', a French dramatist and translator, died about 1656.

OUVRARD, JULIAN, a French grocer who became contractor to the army, and ultimately a political employé, died in England 1847.

OUVRARD, RENE, a French ecclesiastic, disting. as a writer on music and polemics, died 1694.

OUWATER, A. VAN, a D. painter, 14th cent.

OUWATER, J., a Dutch painter, 1747-1793.

OVENS, JURIEN, a Dutch painter, 1620-1668.

OVERALL, JOHN, a learned prelate, author of a work entitled 'The Convocation Book,' written in opposition to Parsons, to advocate the divine right of government. He had a share also in the translation of the Bible and the Church Catechism. Born 1559, died bishop of Norwich 1619.

OVERBECK, BONAVENTURE VAN, a Dutch historical painter and designer, 1660-1706.

OVERBURY, SIR THOMAS, known as an elegant miscellaneous writer, but more especially for his tragical death at the instance of the earl of Rochester and the countess of Essex, was born in Warwickshire about 1581. He contracted an intimacy with the earl, then Robert Carr, at the court of James I., and provoked the anger of the countess by endeavouring to dissuade his friend from marrying her; the fact being that he was privy to their intrigues, and well acquainted with the infamous character of the lady. Rochester had the address to procure the imprisonment of his friend in the Tower of London, by creating a cause of offence between him and the king, and, some months later, caused him to be poisoned there, September 15, 1613. Though suspicions were entertained at the time, it was not till 1616 that the deed of darkness was discovered, when the inferior agents were all apprehended, tried, and executed. Rochester, now earl of Somerset, and the countess, were also tried and condemned, but they were both pardoned by the king, for private reasons. A nephew of Sir Thomas Overbury, who bore the same names, and inherited his estates, was author of some curious tracts, published 1676-1677.

OVID. PUBLIUS OVIDIUS NASO, the love poet of the Romans, was born at Sulmo, (now Sulmone,) a town in the country of the Peligni, about ninety miles south-east from Rome, on the 20th of March, B.C. 43, the year which witnessed the fall of the Roman consuls under the walls of Modena, the formation of the second triumvirate, and the cruel murder of Cicero. The leading events of his life have been transmitted to us chiefly in his own writings. His father belonged to an old equestrian family, and the future poet was the second son, his elder brother being exactly twelve months his senior. At an early age he was brought to Rome along with his brother, and there educated under the most distinguished masters. When the usual period arrived he repaired to Athens for the purpose of completing his studies; and, before returning to Rome, visited, along with the poet Macer, the magnificent cities of Asia Minor. Ovid had manifested even in boyhood a decided taste for poetical composition; but his father, believing that poetry did not necessarily lead to wealth or political distinction, endeavoured to check the youthful aspirations of his son, and urged him to adopt the profession of law, as that which opened up to him the highest offices of the state. Parental authority for a time prevailed, and his poetical studies gave place to attendance in the forum. On attaining the legal age, he performed successively the duties of several of the minor offices of state; but his bodily health and his mental constitution alike disqualified him for active or public life. Poetry was his delight; and, therefore, notwithstanding the remonstrances of his father, he resolved to abandon the forum, and to devote himself exclusively to the cultivation of the muse. He now courted the society of the most eminent poets of the day; and the admiration which he cherished for them is pleasingly evinced by his statement, that, when they were assembled, he regarded them as so many divinities. Among his most intimate friends were Macer, Propertius, Ponticus, and Bassus. Ovid was married three times. His first wife, to whom he was united when scarcely beyond boyhood, was, he tells us, unworthy of his affection, so that the union was of short duration; the second, though of a blameless character, was also soon discarded, without any serious charge being alleged against her. His third wife, who belonged to the Fabian family, appears to have been every way worthy of the sincere affection which the poet entertained for her till the day of his death. By her he had a daughter, Perilla, who was twice married, and had a child by each husband. Till the end of his fiftieth year, Ovid had spent a life of uninterrupted prosperity and enjoyment. His fortune, though moderate, placed within his reach the luxuries of refined life, and his fame as a poet collected around him a large circle of devoted he favour and patronage of Augustus rial family were also extended to him. e of fortune, as sudden as it was was destined to overtake him. At the year A.D. 8. he was ordered by dict to transport himself to Tomi, a country of the Getæ, on the shore , a little to the south of the mouths be. Resistance was vain. Over- grief he tore himself from the arms d wife, and set out in the month of the place of his destination, which he following spring. The cause of nt is a question which has long ingenuity of scholars; and though ons of it have been proposed, it still be a subject of discussion. The ison was the immoral tendency of ove, which had been published for ears, and to this Ovid frequently there is no room for doubt that the emperor had been excited by some re grave offence. The poet himself his offence was an inadvertence, a crime; but his expressions, when t, are ambiguous, and even incon- sudden transition from the luxury ut of Rome to the inhospitable soil arism of Moesia, would have tested the sternest philosophy; and it tted that Ovid did not display great ubmitting to his fate. He died at , in the sixtieth year of his age, and his banishment. Ovid was born a sped in numbers, for the numbers that he possessed high poetical questionable. His judgment and r, are sometimes at fault, and the y and warmth of colouring displayed of his works are required to counter- false taste and frigid conceit which selves in others. At the same time, anted that no poet, either ancient or expressed beautiful thoughts in more anguage. The works of Ovid con- Amores, or Loves, in three books; or Heroical Epistles, twenty-one in Ars Amatoria, or Art of Love; the oris; the Metamorphoses, in fifteen Fasti, in six books; the Tristia, in the Epistles from Pontus, in four some minor poems. [G.F.]

A. De, a Spanish prelate, died 1577.

Gonzalo Fernandes De, a Spanish came director of the gold and silver ti, and is known as one of the earliest torians of the New World. He was of the curative virtues of guaiacum. id abt. 1478, date of his death unkn.

famous British or Welch name borne Hexen Wledig, who was elected king f the Romans, and is numbered with ints. Another Owain was prince of 1114, when he was killed by Gerald, embroke, whose wife he had seduced.

AIN Civeilog, known as a warrior d about 1197.

LANDWR. See Glendower.

r OWEN TUDOR, the grandfather of Henry VII., was lord of Pennrynydd, in Anglesea. In 1426 he married Catharine, the widow of Henry V., and had three sons by her. The eldest became a monk. The second was Edmund, earl of Richmond, father of Henry VII., and the third, Jasper, earl of Pembroke.

OWEN, George, an English physician, d. 1558.

OWEN, Henry, a learned divine of the Church of England, born in Merionethshire 1716, died in London 1795. He is author of 'Observations on the Four Gospels,' 'The Intent and Propriety of the Scripture Miracles,' 'An Inquiry into the Present State of the Septuagint Version of the Old Testament,' an 'Introduction to Hebrew Criticism,' a 'Treatise on Trigonometry,' &c.

OWEN, John, D.D., a scion of an ancient Welch family, was born in 1616 at Stadham, Oxfordshire. His precocious talents and acquirements procured him admission into Queen's College at the age of twelve, and he was made Master of Arts at nineteen. Devoted to his studies at that age, he spent only four hours in bed, but at the same time was fond of all manly and athletic sports, which tended greatly to give vigour and stamina to his constitution. When only twenty-one, he headed the students in a determined resistance to some superstitious rites which the then chancellor of Oxford, Archbishop Laud, designed to impose: and though successful in putting down the innovation, Owen paid dearly for the part he acted, for he was obliged to leave the university. He immediately took orders, although he entered into no pastoral duties owing to the state of his bodily as well as mental health, for he became subject for a time to a deep and desponding anxiety about his spiritual interests. Owen's prospects in life were greatly affected by the part he acted on the outbreak of the civil war. Having zealously espoused the parliamentary cause, an incensed uncle, who had promised to make him heir to his large estate, expunged his name from his will; and he was left accordingly to his own resources. He went an entire stranger to London, and there commenced his career of authorship by publishing his 'Display of Arminianism,' a work suited to the times. The society for purging the church of heresies rewarded him through their Chairman with the living of Frodham in Essex, and during the year and a-half he resided in that parish, his popularity as a preacher was so great, that crowds flocked to hear him from all the surrounding districts. He resigned this living for a charge at Coggeshall, a market town about five miles distant, where he changed from the presbyterian form of church government to the congregational, as being more accordant with the primitive church of the New Testament. His name and character had risen so high, that he was invited to preach before the parliament on 20th April, 1646, and on several occasions afterwards he performed the same duty, being selected particularly from his energy as well as his full approval of the proceeding to preach before that body on the day after the execution of Charles I. He became a favourite with Cromwell, who took him as his chaplain first to Ireland, and at a later period into Scotland. On returning home, his design was to resume his pastoral labours at Coggeshall. But the parliament having nominated him dean of the university of Oxford, he removed thither in 1651, and was soon after chosen vice-chancellor. During his administration of the chancellorship, which he held for five years, he rendered important services, and by his moderation, amid the sectarian contests that were then bitterly carried on, secured the love and respect of all parties. His duties as chancellor, though onerous, were not allowed to interfere either with his labour in preaching, or his pursuit in literature. He preached every Sabbath at St. Mary's, and he published several of his best works, such as 'The Perseverance of the Saints,' in 1654, 'The Vindiciæ Evengelicæ, or the Mystery of the Gospel Vindicated,' and 'Communion with God,' which has been valued by many as one of his greatest performances. The restoration of the Stuart dynasty led, amongst other changes of government, to Owen's ejection from his university offices: and, having gone to reside at Stadham, a small estate he possessed, lived there in retirement, till, things having become settled and tranquil, he ventured to return to London, and take a public share in works connected with the interests of religion and learning. The rancour of the royalist and High Church party raged so violently against dissenters generally, and Owen in particular, that he contemplated seriously two successive offers made him of important offices in American colleges. His personal safety was sometimes endangered, for on one occasion, his mansion at Stadham was beset by troopers, and he narrowly escaped being made prisoner, by flight through a postern door. He was, even when invested with power and the chief direction of affairs, an enlightened and consistent advocate of the right of private judgment and religious toleration. A brief period of respite was granted to the nonconformists, during Buckingham's administration which commenced in 1667, and Owen undertook the charge of a numerous and influential congregation in Leadenhall-Street. But this interval of indulgence was of short duration. A bill against conventicles was passed into a law in 1670, and by the fines and imprisonments it imposed, gave a heavy blow and great discouragement to the cause of dissent. Owen about this time began to decline in health. His great and long-continued labours had made serious inroads on a frame naturally robust and athletic, and having retired to a house at Ealing, occupied himself in preparing his last work, 'The Glory of Christ,' for the press. He expired on 24th August, 1683, and was interred in the cemetery of Bunhill Fields. Owen has been often styled 'The Prince of Divines,' and his works, though marked by the tedious prolixity of the age, are a storehouse of valuable matter. [R.J.]

OWEN, John, a Welch epigrammatist, d. 1622.

OWEN, John, a minister of the Church of England, born about 1765, known as the secretary and historian of the Bible Society. He wrote also, 'Reflections on the State of Religion and Politics in France and Great Britain,' and 'The Christian Monitor for the Last Days.' Died 1822.

OWEN, Lewis, a Welch Jesuit, born 1572.

OWEN, Thomas, a learned judge, died 1598.

OWEN, William, one of the ablest English portrait painters, was born at Ludlow in Shropshire in 1769. He came to London, by the advice of Payne Knight, at the early age of seventeen, and became the pupil of Catton the Royal Academician. He attracted also the notice of Sir Joshua Reynolds by a copy he made of the 'Perditæ' of that painter. Owen first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1792; his connections increased so rapidly that in the following year he exhibited seventeen portraits. He frequently very much enhanced the value of his portraits by making them generally as interesting as fancy pictures, such as 'Venus'—'The Bacchante'—'Cottage Child from Nature'—'The Children in the Wood,' &c. His success was certainly very great; notwithstanding the rivalry of Lawrence, Beechey, and Hoppner, he had painted the Lord Chancellor and William Pitt before his thirtieth year; and the list of Owen's portraits comprises a very large proportion of the men of rank and talent of the early part of this century. He was superior to Lawrence in male heads: they were void of the simpering prettiness and delicacy of complexion which injure many of Lawrence's heads: the sitting full length of William Scott, Lord Stowell, in his robes, is worthy of Vandyck. He was elected a member of the Royal Academy in 1806; in 1810 he was made principal portrait painter to the Prince Regent, and in 1813 he declined the honour of knighthood. He died 11th February, 1825, in his fifty-ninth year, after a lingering illness, though the immediate cause of death was his taking opium instead of an aperient draught, owing to the mistake of the druggist, who had misplaced the labels.—(Cunningham, Lives of the Most Eminent British Painters, &c.) [R.N.W.]

OWTRAM. See Outram.

OXBERRY, W. H., a popular English comedian, 1808-1851.

OXENBRIDGE, J., an Eng. theolog., 1609-74.

OXENSTIERNA, Axel, Count, one of the greatest statesmen that Sweden ever produced, was born at Fano in Upland, 1583, and educated in several of the German universities. He made his first appearance at court in the reign of Charles IX., father of Gustavus Adolphus, and was employed in an important diplomatic mission as early as 1606. Gustavus and Oxenstierna were great friends, and when the former succeeded to the crown in the eighteenth year of his age, the latter, only ten years older, stood by his side as high chancellor. From that time, 1611, to the majority of Christina, 1644, the name of Oxenstierna occupies a large space in Swedish history, —indeed in the history of Europe, as the political antagonist of Richelieu. Gustavus reposed the most unlimited confidence in his honesty and statesmanship, and we shall see immediately that Christina, though far from feeling the same friendship for him as her father, was compelled to do him ample justice to his true worth and ability. We can only give a few principal dates to mark his career. In 1623 he negotiated the peace between Sweden and Denmark. In 1617 he concluded the peace of Stolbova, which followed the Russian campaign, and in 1630, when Gustavus took the field against the imperialists, he was invested with full authority in all civil and military affairs on the Rhine. On the fall of the Swedish hero at Lutzen, 1632, it devolved on the chancellor to take measures for the security of the kingdom, and the senate entrusted him with full powers, so that, in fact, he became virtual king during the minority of Chris-len of the war and the administra-

l on his shoulders, and he was not ık from the responsibility of either.
33, he presented his memorial to ich embraced a complete plan of and finance, provided for the imywns, the abolition of burdens on security of civil freedom. He was ısted with great power, and it is a ıtness that he retained it without ılarity; and though it was a period reorganization, he consolidated the d the daughter of his friend on an
one. In 1642 Christina began to council; in 1644 she assumed the l in the month of August, 1645, ıcluded the peace of Denmark, on
she created him count of Soder-
, of course, a principal party to the e thirty years' war, by the peace of 48, and sent his son, John Oxen-potentiary to the convention of the occasion: it was in answer to his diffidence that the chancellor used have become proverbial,—'You do son, with how little wisdom men Oxenstierna vainly opposed the queen to abdicate, and he died a erwards in the same year, 1654.
ughter of Gustavus writes of him:
ıan had large attainments, having his youth. He contrived to read his great occupations. He had a and knowledge of the affairs and world. He knew the strong and s of all the states of our Europe.
He had consummate wisdom and prudence, a vast capacity, a great heart. He was indefatigable. He had an assiduity and application to business incomparable. He made it his pleasure and his only occupation; and when he took relaxation his diversion was business. He was sober, as much as one could be in an age and country where that virtue was unknown. He was a full sleeper, and said that no affair had ever hindered him from sleeping in his life except twice: the first was the death of the late king, the other the loss of the battle of Nordlingen. He has often told me that when he went to rest he stript off his cares with his clothes, and let them repose till the next day. For the rest, he was ambitious but faithful, incorruptible, a little too slow and phlegmatic.' [E.R.]

OZANAM, J., a Fr. mathematician, 1640-1717.

OZAROUSKI, PETER, hetman or grand-general of the crown of Poland, hung by the people of Warsaw as a partizan of the Russians, 1794.

OZELL, JOHN, an English writer of great learning and industry, whose principal works are translations from the French, Italian, and Spanish. Among these are Don Quixote, Fenelon on Learning, Rabelais, a complete version of Molière, and some of the dramas of Corneille and Racine. He is introduced into the Dunciad by Pope, whose rival he was. He d. in the office of auditor for St. Paul's Cathedral and St. Thomas's Hospital, 1743.

OZERETZKOVSKI, NIKOLAI YAKOWLEWITSCH, a Russian naturalist, 1750-1827.

OZEROFF, WLADISLAV ALEXANDROVITSCH, a Russian officer, dist. as a dramatic wr., 1770-1816.

OZI, STEPHEN, a French composer, 1754-1805.

OZIAS, the chief of Bethulia, when it was besieged by Holofernes. See HOLOFERNES, JUDITH.

P

ER, a Dutch botanist, 1564-1617.

US, TITUS CLAUDIUS MARCIUS, cr, killed by Decius about 249.

LATINUS DREPANIUS, a poet and ne of Theodosius the Great, 4th c.

TOLOMEO, Cardinal, born at Bene- s raised to that dignity by Pius and distinguished himself in the succeeding period as the enemy of twice imprisoned him. He retired s in 1824, and has since published Died 1844.

I, A., an Ital. anatom., 1664-1726.

L., an Ital. mathematician, 16th c.

., an ascetic writer, 1649-1730.

CIO, an Ital. juriscon., 1550-1635.

ICE, RICHARD, one of the most atists and men of learning in the as born in Hampshire about 1482, the university of Padua. He comblic life in the service of Cardinal Bainbridge, whom he accompanied as afterwards often employed in Wolsey. Having fallen under the at haughty prelate, he was impri- in the Tower; and his mind was l that, in the later years of his life, the possession of his faculties at wrote several learned pieces, and was highly esteemed by his friends, Sir Thomas More and Erasmus. Died 1532.

PACHECO, FRANCESCO, a Spanish painter and art-writer, taught by the same master as Velasquez, 1571-1654.

PACHECO, DONNA MARIA. See PADILLA.

PACHYMERA, G., a Gr. historian, 13th cent.

PACIAN, ST., a Spanish prelate, 4th century.

PACIANDI, PAOLA MARIA, an Italian ecclesiastic, distinguished as an antiquarian and historian, 1710-1785.

PACIFICUS, an Italian mechanician, 776-844.

PACIFICUS, M., a Latin poet, 15th century.

PACIO, GIULIO, an Italian savant, 1550-1635.

PACK, R., a miscellaneous writer, died 1728.

PACUVIUS, M., a Roman poet, 2d cent. B.C.

PADILLA, DON JUAN DE, a Spanish noble, who distinguished himself as leader of the popular party in a revolt against Charles V., during the period 1620-1622. He organized a general convention of the malcontents under the title of a junta, by which body he was appointed chief commander of a force of 20,000 men, but not until the cause had been greatly endangered by an unskilful leader. He was taken prisoner at the rout of Villalar, April 23, 1622, and shot the following day. His wife, DONNA MARIA DE PACHECO, exhibited the same heroic spirit as her husband, and, after his death, defended the city of Toledo till reduced to the last extremity. She then made her escape to Portugal, where she died in poverty.

PADILLA, LORENZO DE, a Spanish antiquarian and historical writer, died about 1540. His nephew, FRANCIS, author of an ecclesiastical history of Spain, 1527-1607.

PAER, F., an Italian composer, 1774-1839.

PAEZ, F. A., a Portuguese divine, died 1532.

PAEZ, PEDRO, a famous Spanish Jesuit and missionary, author of a Description of Abyssinia, where he introduced the Roman Catholic faith, 1564-1622. Another of the name, GASPARD PAEZ, also distinguished in Abyssinia, 1582-1635.

PAGAN, a king of Bulgaria, reigned 764-771.

PAGAN, BLAISE FRANÇOIS, Count De, a famous marshal in the French wars, founder of the French school of fortifying, 1604-1665.

PAGANACCI, J., a French writer, 1729-1797.

PAGANEL, P., a French politician, 1745-1826.

PAGANI, the name of several Italian painters:—VICENZO, died towards the end of the 15th century. LATTANZIO, his son and scholar, known as a painter till 1553, when he abandoned the art. FRANCESCO, flourished at Florence, 1531-1561. GREGORIO, son of Francesco, 1558-1605. PAOLO, distinguished at Venice and Milan, 1661-1716.

PAGANINI, NICOLO, one of the greatest violinists that ever lived, was born at Genoa in 1784. His first lessons in music were imparted to him by his father, who seems to have discovered in the early infancy of the young Nicolo germs of that marvellous genius, which afterwards struck the musical world with wonder. At eight years old the boy was so far advanced that he took a prominent violin part in public saloons, as well as in the orchestra of the church. After having studied under Costa, Rolla, Ghiretti, and Paer, he was appointed director of the orchestra to the court at Lucca. In 1828, after having performed in various cities in Italy, he visited Vienna, when a charge of having murdered his wife was brought against him. He was able, however, to successfully refute the ill-founded charge. In 1831, Paganini went to Paris, were he created an immense sensation. After this he went to Brussels, where his wonderful slight of hand on the violin created only laughter. In the year last named the 'Wizard of the Bow,' as he was called, came to England, where he met with astonishing success, and where he received larger sums for his public performances then ever had even been dreamed of before his advent. Paganini died at Nice, in 1840, from a disease of the larynx, leaving an immense fortune. It has been said that though this great and original artist and inventor of difficulties and novel effects on the violin, was inordinately fond of money, he frequently ventured large sums at play in the gaming houses at Paris and other capital cities. His reputation is tarnished from the fact that he often condescended to mean tricks that he might secure the worthless applause of the crowds of 'pretended amateurs,' who flocked to his exhibitions. In person Paganini was tall and thin, with emaciated features, an acquiline nose, and long black elf locks, which personal peculiarities added greatly in the eyes of the unskilled, to enhance the merit of his performances. [J.M.]

PAGE, WILLIAM, a divine of the Church of England, au. of 'The Peace-Maker,' &c., 1590-1663.

PAGEAU, M., a French poet, 16th

PAGES, F. X., a French novelist,

PAGES, GARNIER, a French politi

PAGES, PIERRE MARIE FRANÇO De, a Fr. navigator, k. at St. Domingo

PAGET, EUSEBIUS, a puritan d 1617. His son, EPHRAIM, a divine, PAGET, LORD WILLIAM, a statesn bassador, reign of Henry VIII. and died 1564.

PAGI, ANTHONY, a learned eccles order of cordeliers, author of Annota Annals of Baronius, 1624-1690.

FRANCIS, a cordelier and historian 1654-1721. A nephew of the latte ABBE PAGI, author of a history of lands, about 1690-1740.

PAGNEST, A. H. C., a Fr. painte

PAGNINO, S., an Ital. Orientalist,

PAINE, THOMAS, born at Thetfor on the 29th of January, 1737. He w origin, and conducted in early life his ness of a staymaker. He was destine to a vast notoriety which might hav enduring reputation if he had well great talents with which he was en history may be cited as an unhappy i the defectiveness of any social syste not supply a legitimate place for t longings of men of humble rank, them with education and the means ment. In other conditions, Paine mig a great popular preacher, a distingu man, or an eminent lawyer. He wen at the outbreak of the war of indep there enlisted himself against the c terests of his own country, by writin let called 'Common Sense.' He led passing from one employment to an generally said that he was repeatedly misconduct. But the prejudices aga ings were so deep that all statemen personal conduct should be taken In 1790, he published the first part o of Man,' a controversial attack on on the French Revolution. The secon was a mere palpable attack on the co government of Britain, procured a ve against its author in the King's Ben no doubt that this work, not undese many abuses, but it, at the same tim so much a desire for reform as a rockl against every class and person wieldi influence in society. The clear tend style and the appliance of his illus made many readers regret their defec came still more flagrant in his subseq Reason.' He acted as a citizen of for all his sympathy with the republic escaped being guillotined by Robesp died at Baltimore on the 8th of June, 1

PAINTER, W., an English writer,

PAISIELLO, GIOVANNI, was bor in 1741. Having been placed at the lege, in his native city, Paisiello soon himself amongst his fellow-pupils w according to the rule of the college, t ing the hymn to the Virgin. His fa induced to send him to Naples, that h ic, where he was placed under the tuition of nte, a celebrated master of the period; and,

five years' study, he became first master ng the pupils of the Conservatoire. His first a was brought out at the theatre of Bologna, 763. The reputation of Paisiello rose so , that he had engagements to compose operas
all the principal states of Europe, and in the secution of his artistic career he visited Ger-ny, Austria, Russia, and France. Paisiello, ose compositions were the most popular of the
, composed about sixty operas, besides masses, ntatas, concertos, songs, &c. He was named mber of many learned societies in Italy, and was cted an associate of the French Institute, on the h of December, 1809. He died in Naples in the r 1818, when his remains received a public eral, attended with all the pomp which the holic church knows so well to employ on nd occasions. On the evening of his funeral
'Nina' was performed, when the king of Naples
the whole court attended. [J.M.]

AITONI, J. M., a Venetian writer, died 1774.

AJOL, P., a French general, 1772-1844.

AJON, C., a Fr. protestant writer, 1626-1685.

AJOU, H., a French author, died 1776.

AJOU, A., a French sculptor, 1730-1809.

AKENHAM, Sir Thomas, a famous naval
mander in the last general war, 1758-1836.

AKINGTON, Dorothy, Lady, supposed by Hickes to be the authoress of the 'Whole Duty Man,' died 1679.

'ALADINI, Filippo, a painter of the Floren-
e school, 1544-1614. His daughter, Arch-GELA, a painter, poet, and musician, 1599-1622.

PALÆMON, a Latin grammarian, 1st century.

PALÆPATUS, an ancient Greek philosopher.

PALÆOLOGUS, the surname of several em-ors of the East:—1. Andronicus II. and An-ONICUS III., which see. 2. John VI., born at nstantinople 1332, succeeded his father, Androus, 1341, shared his power with Cantacuzenus 1355, died, after a debauched life and many rses, 1391. He was succeeded by his son,
uel. 3. John VII., grandson of John VI., 1390, associated with his uncle, Manuel, succeeded him 1425, died 1439.

ALAFOX-Y-MELZI, Don Joseph, the brave der of Saragossa, was a Spanish officer ded from an old family of Arragon. He was in privacy at Alfranca, near Saragossa, when ity was menaced by the French armies in nd was proclaimed governor by the people, only twenty-nine years of age, and without nce, on the 25th of May in that year. Such heroism of the people of Saragossa, headed fox, that the French were compelled to after a murderous siege and bombardment one days. They returned, however, in ater force, under Marshals Moncey and n the month of November, and the for-weeks later, was succeeded by Lannes.
ld out till the 20th of February—men,
d children fighting in its defence till it heap of ruins, and suffering dreadfully idemic fever. Palafox himself being y the disease, and, hopeless of success, d the command to St. Marc, and the city capitulated. Its defender became a prisoner at Vincennes till the restoration of Ferdinand, who, in June, 1814, appointed him captain-general of Arragon. Died 1847. [E.R.]

PALAFOX-Y-MENDOZA, Juan De, a Spanish statesman and prelate, best known by his 'History of the Siege of Fontarabia,' and his 'History of the Conquest of China by the Tartars,' 1600-1659.

PALAPRAT, J. B. De, a Fr. dramat., 1650-1721.

PALAZZI, J., a Venetian historian, 1640-1713.

PALEARIUS, A., an Italian scholar and theologian, executed at Rome for heresy, 1570.

PALENCIA, A. De, a Span. historian, 15th c.

PALEOTTI, G., an Italian cardinal, 1522-1597.

PALESTRINA, Giovanni Pietre, Aloisia Da, sometimes, also, called Pierluigi, was born at Palestrina, the ancient Prænestе, near Rome, about the year 1524. It is believed that his first instructor in music was Claude Goudimel, a Huguenot, native of Besançon, who was murdered at Lyons in 1572, on the fatal day of the St. Bartholomew. Having distinguished himself as a composer he was about the year 1551, admitted into the pope's chapel at Rome, where he was soon afterwards appointed master by Pope Julius III. In 1555, it having been discovered that Palestrina had quitted the state of celibacy, Pope Paul IV. abruptly dismissed him from his post, to which he was afterwards restored in 1571. He having brought church harmony to a degree of perfection that had never before been attempted and never since excelled, departed this life on the 2d of February, 1594. In the course of this master's life, the council of Trent having, amongst other matters, taken the state of church music into consideration, appointed two cardinals to superintend the reform, which they had resolved upon. Immediately, by their direction, Palestrina set about the duty, and produced his celebrated work, known as 'The Mass of Pope Marcellus.' Such was the effect this work produced, that, when it was first performed, every person was enraptured, and the pope compared it to the heavenly melodies which the apostle John heard in his visions. The following account of Palestrina's death was entered in the register of the Pontifical chapel:—'February 2, 1594, this morning died the most excellent musician, Signor Giovanni Palestrina, our dear companion, and maestro dè capello of St. Peter's church, whither his funeral was attended, not only by all the musicians of Rome, but by an infinite concourse of people, when "Libera me, Domine," (as composed by himself) was sung by the whole college.' Upon his coffin was inscribed 'Joannes Petrus Aloysuis Prænestinus Musicæ Princeps.' His works, which were very numerous, were chiefly ecclesiastical. Several of his motets and sacred songs are in use in England at the present day. [J.M.]

PALETTA, J. B., an Ital. anatomist, 1747-1832.

PALEY, William, D.D., a celebrated divine of the Church of England, was born in 1743 at Peterborough, Northamptonshire. At the age of sixteen he entered Christ's College, Cambridge. But unhappily, seduced by the influence of a few gay and dissolute companions, the first two years of his university residence were entirely lost or misspent. Having had the wisdom and fortitude, however, to disentangle himself from this disgraceful connection, he resolved on a course of devoted study; and such rapid progress did he make that, in 1768, he became a fellow of the college, and soon after colleague to Dr. Law in his public lectures on Moral and Political philosophy, as well as on the New Testament. This early occupation directed the mind of Paley to those subjects, which, when more maturely studied, he gave to the public in works which have obtained him extensive fame as an author. Both as a college lecturer and a preacher, he was greatly admired for his sound sense and discretion, especially for his extraordinary skill in simplifying the most abstruse and difficult subjects, and bringing them down to the level of the humblest capacity. His early patron, Law, who had become bishop of Carlisle, and who was well aware of Paley's merits, promoted his views in the church by presenting him first to the vicarage of Dalston, Cumberland, then to Appleby, in Westmoreland, till in the course of years, he rose to be archdeacon of Carlisle. It was not till 1785, that his 'Elements of Moral and Political Philosophy' appeared. It was almost immediately adopted as a text-book in Cambridge; and although its leading principle,—that of expediency, has often drawn down upon the moral system of which it is the foundation, the weight of severe censure, the work from the sound sense that pervades it, as well as from the clearness and force of its arguments, still maintains its ground. Not long after, Paley again came before the world as an author by the publication of Horæ Paulinæ, or 'The Truth of the Scripture History' proved from undesigned coincidences in the epistles of Paul. More than any other of Paley's works, this treatise displays the characteristic qualities of the author's mind, and it formed a most important contribution to sacred literature, not only from the intrinsic value of the work, but from its opening up a new line of argument in illustration of the evidences. Paley did not take any open or prominent part in the discussion of public or political questions. But his hostility to the slave trade roused all his energies; and having drawn up an answer to the claims of the slave dealers, sent it to the parliamentary committee immediately previous to the discussion of the subject in the House of Lords. It produced a deep impression, and the author was rewarded not only by seeing the adoption of his views, but by promotion to the rectory of Bishop-Wearmouth, one of the most lucrative situations in the Church of England. It was there he composed and published his 'Natural Theology,' amid the paroxysms of a painful disease which brought him gradually to the grave. Dr. Paley was suspected of heterodoxy, having discovered a strong inclination to Arian sentiments. In other respects, he was a genial, warm-hearted, benevolent man, distinguished for shrewdness and strong good sense; and those mental qualities which he possessed in so eminent a degree were brought to bear predominantly on the subjects of religion. Died 1805. [R.J.]

PALFIN, J., a Flemish anatomist, 1649-1730.

PALISOT-DE-BEAUVOIS, Ambr. Marie Fr. Joseph, a dist. French naturalist, 1752-1820.

PALISSOT-DE-MONTENOY, Charles, a Fr. dramatic writer and literary critic, 1730-1814.

PALISSY, Bernard De, one of the greatest geniuses produced by the French nation, painter, physician, chemist, naturalist, and economist, born about 1500, died in the Bastile, where he was imprisoned by Henry III. as a Calvinist, 1589.

PALLADINO, Giacomo, or prelate and theologian, general
de Teramo, author of 'Consolat religious romance, 15th century.

PALLADIO, Andrea, a fam
tect, to whose skill Italy is ind
her most beautiful edifices, born author of a 'Treatise on Archit lished at Venice 1570, died 1580

PALLADIUS, the name of s cants:—1. A bishop of Helenop author of a 'History of the Her and friend of Chrysostom, born author of a 'Dialogue of the Li written at Rome 408. It is a q learned whether or not he is the ceding. 8. A Roman writer on a Gaulish præfect, born about 4 prelate, mentioned as 'the first a died about 450. 5. A physician named Sophista, or Satrosophis
dical works in Greek, 6th centu

PALLAS, the freedman and emperor Claudius, who, at his Agrippina. He was put to deat

PALLAS, Peter Simon, a
and naturalist, author of work topography, and natural history
the Russian dominions, 1741-18

PALLAVICINI, or PELAV
quis Oberto, a chief of the Ghibe

PALLAVICINO, Ferrante
and man of letters, born 1618, b

PALLAVICINO, Sforza, a
an. of a 'History of the Co. of '

PALLIERE, V. L., a Fr. pai

PALLIOT, P., a French genea

PALLISER, Sir Hugh, a Br
was born 1721, and after disting several occasions, including the
was second in command to Adm famous action off Ushant, 1778.
a misunderstanding arose betwe who preferred charges against ended in the censure of Palliser vernor of Greenwich Hospital, a PALLUEL, F. C. De, a Fr.

PALM, J. G., a German divi

PALM, J. P., a German patr

PALMA, Jacob, the name of ters, the elder of whom was born and died at Venice 1574. The nephew, flourished at Venice, 1

PALMELLA, Don Pedro
stein, duke of, a distinguished man, was born at Turin 1781; a tion in Portugal, followed by the pean travels of a nobleman, tool
the political troubles of his coun
in opposing the succession of Do

PALMER, H., a learned divi

PALMER, John, an Englis
in London about 1742, and com
as an actor in inferior parts at t Drury Lane theatres. Gradual putation, he was at length app
a new theatre proposed to be London, but not being able to p returned to Drury, under circum

ary embarrassment, which ultimately induced him to resolve to emigrate to America, which country, however, he never visited. His death was remarkable. It took place on the stage of the Liverpool theatre, while performing the character of the Stranger, and uttering the exclamation—'There is another and a better world.' This event occurred 2d August, 1798. Mr. Palmer was one of those actors who are made by time and practice. He was a modest and punctilious man, much respected, with, it would seem, a dash of superstition in his character; and, according to Boaden, seems to have had a presentiment of his death. [J.A.H.]

PALMER, JOHN, held in remembrance as the first projector of mail coaches, was a native of Bath, where he followed the trade of a brewer. After the adoption of his scheme, he became comptroller-general of the post office, from which office he was removed in 1792, died 1818.

PALMER, S., an historian of printing, d. 1732.

PALMIERI, M., an Italian annalist, 1405-1475.

PALMIERI, V., an Ital. theologian, 1753-1820.

PALMQUIST, MAGNUS, Baron De, a Swedish mathematician, and president of the Company of Miners, 1660-1729.

PALMSCHOELD, ELIAS, a Swedish historical antiquarian employed at Stockholm, died 1719.

PALOMINO-Y-VELASCO, A. ANTONIO, a Span. painter and biographer of artists, 1653-1726.

PALSGRAVE, JOHN, a polite wr., died 1554.

PAMELE, J. DE, a Fr. theologian, 1536-1587.

PAMPHILIUS, a Greek painter, 4th cent.

PAMPHILIUS, ST., a presbyter of Cæsarea, in Palestine, who suffered martyrdom in the persecution under Maximinus, 309.

PANARD, C. F., a Fr. poet, about 1691-1764.

PANASIUS, a Stoic philosopher, 2d cent. B.C.

PANCIROLI, G., an Italian jurist, 1523-1582.

PANEKOUCKE, ANDREW JOSEPH, a Flemish bookseller and literateur, 1700-1753. His son, CHARLES JOSEPH, distinguished as a journalist at Paris, founder of the 'Moniteur,' &c., 1736-1798.

PANEL, A. X., a Fr. numismatist, 1699-1777.

PANIGAROLA, F., an Italian prelate, 1548-94.

PANIN, NIKITA JOANOVITCH, Count De, a Russian statesman, who rose to distinction in the armies of Peter the Great, and became prime minister to Catharine; b. at Lucca 1718, d. 1783.

PANNINI, GIAN PAOLO, an Italian architect and landscape painter, 1691-1764. His son, FRANCIS, dist. in the same line of art, dates unknown.

PANNONINO, J., a Hungarian poet, 1434-72.

PANTÆNUS, a Christian philosopher, 2d cent.

PANTALEON, H., a Fr. historian, 1522-1595.

PANVINIO, O., an Ital. historian, 1529-1568.

PANGASIS, a Greek poet, 5th century B.C.

PANZACETIA, MARIA HELENA, an Italian lady, distng. as an historical painter, 1668-1709.

PANZER, G. W. F., a Ger. bibliog., 1729-1805.

PAOLI, D. S., an Italian literateur, 1684-1751.

PAOLI, HYACINTH, or GIACINTO, a native of Corsica, distinguished for his part in liberating his country from the Genoese, 1729. He became one of the chief magistrates of the country, and acted as the lieutenant of the king elected by the patriots. He retired to Naples on the invasion of the French, and died there about 1755. His son, PASCAL, is the subject of the following article. An elder son, CLEMENT, also a distinguished patriot, died in Italy, and with him, as he left only daughters, the name of Paoli became extinct.

PAOLI, PASCAL, was born in Corsica in 1726. His native island had long been under the oppressive domination of the Genoese, which the Corsicans made repeated efforts to shake off. Paoli was raised to the headship of the liberating party in 1755. He organized a regular civil and military government, and for thirteen years carried on the war of independence against the Genoese with unvarying spirit, and with general success. In 1768, the Genoese sold their right of sovereignty over Corsica to France. The French endeavoured to induce Paoli to recognize their dominion and adopt their interests, by lavish offers of rank and money. But Paoli rejected all their bribes, and made a gallant though unsuccessful resistance to the troops which they poured into Corsica. After the French conquest was completed, Paoli took refuge in England, were he was received with merited respect. The British government settled a pension on him, and he passed many years in honoured friendship with Burke, Johnson, and other distinguished Englishmen of the age. When the war of the French Revolution commenced, Paoli headed an expedition to Corsica, by which it was songht to detach that island from France, and unite it to the British dominion. This attempt, after some temporary successes, ultimately failed. Paoli returned to England, where he passed the remainder of his life in tranquillity. He died in 1807. He deserved the eulogium which the English historian Lord Mahon has pronounced on him, of being 'a brave and skilful soldier, and an upright and disinterested statesman.' He was also a warm and sincere friend; his literary acquirements were considerable; and he was a man of spotless integrity and pure morals in private life. [E.S.C.]

PAOLINI, P., an Italian dramatist, 1663-1726.

PAPA, J. DEL, an Ital. physician, 1649-1753.

PAPIAS, a grammarian of the 11th century.

PAPIAS, ST., a bishop of Hierapolis, 2d cent.

PAPILLON, A., a French poet, 1487-1559.

PAPILLON, JOHN, two French wood engravers, father and son—the former, 1639-1710; the latter, 1661-1710. A younger son, NICHOLAS, same profession, 1663-1714. A grandson of the elder John, named JOHN BAPTIST, noted for his foliage and flowers, 1698-1776. A brother of the latter, J. B. MICHEL, 1720-1746.

PAPILLON, P., a French canonist, 1666-1738.

PAPILLON, T., a Fr. jurisconsult, 1514-1596.

PAPIN, DENIS, an ingenious Frenchman, who assisted Boyle in many of his experiments, and invented the digester known by his name, died 1710.

PAPIN, ISAAC, a French divine, 1657-1709.

PAPINIAN, a celebrated Roman jurist, 175-212.

PAPON, J., a French Hellenist, 1505-1590.

PAPON, J. P., a French historian, 1734-1805.

PAPPENHEIM, COUNT, one of the most illustrious generals of Austria during the thirty years' war, 1594-1632.

PAPPONI, J., an Italian jurist, died 1605.

PAPPUS, a mathematician of Alexandria, 4th c.

PAPPUS, J., a German divine, 1549-1610.

PAQUOT, J. N., an Austrian hist., 1722-1803.

PARABOSCO, G., an Italian poet, 16th cent.

PARACELSUS. PHILIPPUS AUREOLUS

THEOPHRASTUS PARACELSUS BOMBAST, AB HOHENHEIM, was born about the year 1493, near Zurich. Although he has left no discovery behind him, he is highly distinguished as the founder of the modern science of medicine. He instituted an immense number of experiments on the influence of chemical remedies in disease, and acquired much fame by the successful result of his treatment. He travelled extensively throughout Europe for the purpose of adding to his stock of knowledge, and of studying nature in her varied departments. He was professor of physic and surgery at Basle, from 1526 to 1527, when he abdicated his office and afterwards became a wanderer through various parts of Germany, Colmar, Moravia, Vienna, Hungary, and finally Salzburg, where he died in 1541, in his forty-eighth year. Paracelsus was a man of most dissolute habits and unprincipled character; and his works (Opera) are filled with the highest flights of unintelligible bombastic jargon, unworthy of perusal, but are such as might be expected from one who united in his person the qualities of a fanatic and a drunkard. [R.D.T.]

PARADIN, WILLIAM, a French historian, 1510-1590. His brother, CLAUDE, a writer on genealogy, &c., about the same period. JOHN, cousin of the preceding, dist. as a poet, about 1508-1588.

PARADIS, PAUL, a Jewish convert, first professor of Hebrew at Paris, died 1559.

PARADIS DE RAYMONDIS, JOHN ZACHARIAH, a Fr. moralist and agriculturist, 1746-1800.

PARADISI, COUNT AGOSTINO, an Italian poet, professor of civil economy and the Belles Lettres at Modena, born at Vignola, Reggio, 1736, d. 1783.

PARADISI, COUNT JOHN, son of the preceding, born about 1760, became director of the Cisalpine republic in 1797, and, at a later period, president of Napoleon's Italian senate. He died 1826, distinguished as a philosopher and man of letters.

PARASINA MALATESTA. See NICHOLAS.

PARCK, THOMAS, an engraver, 1759-1884.

PARCELLES, JOHN, a Dutch painter, noted for his storm-pieces, 1597-1641. His son, JULIUS, born about 1628, painted in the same style.

PARCIEUX. See DEPARCIEUX.

PARDIES, J. G., a French savant, 1636-1673.

PARDOUX, B., a French physician, 1545-1611.

PARE, AMBROSE, one of the greatest surgeons of modern times, called the father of French surgery, was born in 1509, and was professional adviser of four French sovereigns. Though a Huguenot, he was in the fullest confidence of Charles IX., and by his favour escaped the massacre of St. Bartholomew; died 1590.

PAREJA, J. DE, a Spanish painter, 1606-1670.

PARENT, A., a Fr. mathematician, 1666-1716.

PAREUS, the name of three distinguished theologians and philologists of Germany:—DAVID WOENGLER, author of many commentaries, 1548-1622. PHILIP, his son, about 1576-1650. DANIEL, son of the latter, 1605-1635.

PARFAIET, F., a Fr. dramatist, 1698-1753.

PARIJI, J., an Italian architect, died 1635.

PARINI, J., an Italian poet, 1729-1799.

PARIS, A., a French ecclesiastic, 1631-1683.

PARIS, F., a notary of Paris, known at the period of the revolution as a friend of Danton.

PARIS, F., a French religious writer, d. 1718.

PARIS, FRANCIS, commonly called t
PARIS, was a French ecclesiastic, bo
He died after a life of religious mortifica charity 1727, and was buried in the cem Saint-Medard. Here the most extra scenes took place, occasioned by the all racles wrought at his tomb, where pers
into convulsions and transports of prop lirium. An account of these occurre written by the magistrate Montqueron, only ceased when the government too measures, prosecuted some of the par walled up the ground.

PARIS, J. B. F., a French gener
1748-1820.

PARIS, JEAN J., a political writer, di

PARIS, L. M., a writer on grammar, 1

PARIS, MATTHEW, one of our earlies historians, was a Benedictine monk of St and is known from 1245, to the year of 1259. He was a man of the highest c and distinguished as a musician, poet, ora logian, painter, and architect. His practic were turned to the reformation of mon cipline, on which account he was sent to by the pope. His principal work, first in 1571, extends over English history from of William the Conqueror to his own t earlier portion being lost. Other work exist only in MS.

PARIS, M. A., a French general, kille

PARIS, P. A., a French architect, 174

PARIS, P. L., an actor of the French re originally a priest of the oratory, executed

PARISAN, P. G., a French dramatist,

PARK, SIR J. A., a disting. lawyer, d

PARK, MUNGO, was born at the Fowlshiels, near Selkirk, on the 10th Se 1771. An aptness for learning which showed, and a reserved and thoughtful and grave deportment, which were na
him, and distinguished him through life
his parents to select him as the mo
of their sons for the ministry of the C Scotland. His education was directed ingly; but his own tastes and aspiration different turn, and choosing the medica sion, he was apprenticed, at the age of Mr. Anderson, a surgeon in Selkirk.
remained three years, and then went to Edinburgh college, where his attendanc usual course was continued for three sessions, the term necessary for gradua surgeon. A taste for botany acquired period, and freely indulged in during his rambles, was of the greatest use to him af and may be said to have in a great determined his future career. A young n James Dickson, afterwards his brother-in-l to London to seek employment as a gard engaged by a nurseryman at Hammer whose gardens Sir Joseph Banks was a visitor. Dickson's superior intelligence Sir Joseph's notice; and when some ye wards he began business on his own acc seedsman, and waited upon Sir Joseph most kindly received by him, and offered use of his library. Dickson gladly avail of the advantages thus presented to became afterwards a distinguished botanist, author of a work on cryptogamic plants, and of many valuable papers in the Linnæan transactions. He took Park with him on a botanical tour in the Highlands while he was a student; and when Park afterwards went to London, on the completion of his course, he introduced him to Sir Joseph Banks, through whose influence the situation of assistant surgeon in the Worcester East Indiaman was soon obtained. Park sailed in February, 1792, and returned the following year. He brought home some interesting plants, and contributed to the Linnæan Society a paper on eight new fishes from Sumatra. He now remained for some time inactive, enjoying intercourse with scientific men, to whom he was introduced by Sir Joseph Banks, then president of the Royal Society, whose warm friendship towards him knew no interruption during his entire career. Sir Joseph was an active member of the African Association, formed in 1778, for the exploration of the central portions of that continent; and Park's attention must, of course, have been much drawn to the subject. Having no ardour in the pursuit of his profession, and probably even no fondness for it, while he had long cherished a strong desire for foreign travel, it was natural that Park should offer himself to the Association when they were looking out for a successor to Major Houghton, who had perished in a late attempt to reach the Niger from the west coast. Park's knowledge of natural history and medicine, his age—the full vigour of youth—his previous experience of a hot climate, his enthusiasm, and a reputation for courage and address, founded, it would seem, rather upon an observation of his personal qualities and general bearing, than upon anything which he had yet done, formed recommendations of so strong a nature that the Association accepted his offer. After due preparation he left England on the 22d May, 1795; and on the 5th July reached Pisania, a British factory 200 miles up the river Gambia, where he remained some time with Dr. Laidley, the resident agent. Beginning his journey on the 2d December, he first crossed the country E.N.E. to Yarra, and then turning S.E. traversed the kingdoms of Leedamar and Bambarra, till he came in sight of the Niger near Sego: 'I saw with infinite pleasure the great object of my mission, the long sought-for majestic Niger, glittering to the morning sun, as broad as the Thames at Westminster, and flowing slowly to the eastward. I hastened to the brink, and having drunk of the water, lifted up my fervent thanks in prayer to the Great Ruler of all things, for having thus far crowned my endeavours with success.' Thus, the first step was gained in the solution of a most difficult problem, deemed by his country of great importance, and which had already baffled the skill of numerous enterprising travellers, and the efforts of powerful states. Park was determined to work the problem fully out, by tracing the mysterious course of this great river. He found it impossible, however, to proceed farther down than Silla, near Jenné, and on the 30th July he began his homeward journey towards the Gambia. Following the Niger as far up as Bammakoo, and there turning to the right, he crossed the country watered by the streams of the Senegal, by a route more southerly than his former track, and at length reached Pisania on the 10th June, 1797; having thus accomplished a journey whose hardship and suffering are, perhaps, without a parallel in the history of inland discovery. Soon after he returned home; and residing mostly at his native place, occupied himself in preparing an account of his travels. In August, 1799, being then in his twenty-eighth year, he married the daughter of his former master, Mr. Anderson, and, in October 1801, settled in the town of Peebles for the practice of his profession. During the few years which he spent here, he enjoyed much domestic happiness, and the privilege of associating with Sir Walter Scott, Dr. Adam Ferguson, the historian, and other persons of note. His mind was, however, kept in an unsettled state up till the end of 1804, by several proposals from government for new schemes of discovery. One for a new expedition to Central Africa was at length matured, and Park was requested to take the command. 'Park,' says his biographer, 'was so much afraid of encountering the distress of his family, that he proceeded directly to London from Edinburgh without returning to bid them a formal adieu.' Towards other friends he practised the same constraint upon his feelings. He sailed from Portsmouth January 30th, 1805. Pisania was again fixed on as the point of departure. His companions on his former journey were two negroes, and even these had accompanied him no farther than Yarra, so that for more than three-fourths of his journey he was quite alone. On the second journey he had stipulated for a good escort; and the presence of two friends, Mr. Anderson, his wife's brother, as surgeon, and Mr. Scott, a young neighbour, as artist. With these two friends, five artificers from the royal dock-yards, Lieutenant Martyn, thirty-five privates from the garrison at Goree, and Isaaco, a Mandingo, a priest and trader, as guide and interpreter, and forty asses with baggage, Park left Pisania on the 4th of May, 1805. He chose the route by which he had returned on his first journey; but the time of starting was most unfortunate and ill-chosen,—less by any fault of his, than the delay of the government in despatching the ships from England. On the 8th June the rainy season set in, and the misfortunes of the expedition began. On the 19th August, Park reached the summit of the mountain ridge, dividing the river basins of the Senegal and Niger, and came once more in sight of the latter, 'rolling its immense stream along the plain,' and, on the evening of the same day, pitched his tent on the banks of the Niger at Bammakoo, where he had struck off from the river on his homeward route. Only seven men now remained; most of the rest had died of fever or dysentery by the way, among whom was Mr. Scott the artist; a few had been left sick in charge of friendly natives, but were not afterwards heard of. Nearly a month before, the last of the forty asses had died. The expedition now descended the river in two canoes to Sansanding, between Sego and Silla, where his brother-in-law, Mr. Anderson, and two of the men, fell victims to the dreadful climate. Lieutenant Martyn and three soldiers were all who now survived. With their aid, Park constructed a vessel, which was named the schooner Joliba, 40 feet long by 6 broad, and drawing, when loaded, only one foot water; and having engaged a guide and interpreter, named Amadi Fatouma, instead of Isaaco, who was sent back to the Gambia with his journal and letters, purchased three slaves, and laid in a stock of provisions, he set sail down the river on the 17th November, in the hope of tracing the remaining course of this famed stream, the lower part of which, according to the theory which he had formed, was identical with the Congo, or Zaire, entering the Atlantic in lat. 15° S. This, however, it was destined that the intrepid and enthusiastic traveller was not to accomplish. His despatches, forwarded by Isaaco, contained the last intelligence ever received from him, and for many years his fate was involved in mystery. It was at length distinctly made out by information gleaned from various quarters, that, about the beginning of June 1806, he had descended the river as far as Boussa, 650 miles below Timbuctoo; that here his interpreter, whose engagement now terminated, was sent on shore with a present for the king of Yaouri; that this was withheld by the Dooty, or chief, to whom it was given, and the king was told the white men had gone to return no more; that the king hereupon imprisoned the interpreter, and sent a band of armed men to intercept Park's passage at rocky narrows near Boussa; and that here, after a vain struggle against superior numbers, Park and all his companions, except one of the negroes, leaped into the river to attempt their escape by swimming, and were drowned. Fatouma was afterwards released, and met with this negro. Their narratives, and Park's journal, with an introductory sketch of his life and labours, were published together in 1815. Government paid to his widow, according to stipulation before he left home, the sum of £4000. His family consisted of three sons and one daughter; the latter, married to H. W. Meredith, Esq., of Pentry-Bichen, Denbighshire, and his youngest son, Archibald, an officer in the East India Company's service, are still alive. All his brothers and sisters had families, many of whom are still living; and several of his relatives occupy stations of high respectability in Glasgow. In person, Mungo Park was tall and muscular, and possessed an extraordinary power of enduring fatigue; and by his many noble, mental, and moral qualities, was no less fitted for the right conduct of the important enterprises in which he was engaged. [J.B.]

PARK, T., a bibliographical writer, 1759-1834.

PARKE, J., a famous musician, 1745-1829.

PARKER, GEORGE, earl of Macclesfield, son of the first earl, who was lord chancellor of England, distinguished as a mathematician, died 1766.

PARKER, HENRY, Lord Morley, one of the barons who threatened Clement VII. with the loss of his supremacy if he refused his consent to the divorce of Henry VIII. He bears the reputation of a man of letters, and some of his works exist in MS., 1476-1556.

PARKER, MATTHEW, the second protestant archbishop of Canterbury, was born at Norwich 1504, and was early distinguished by his progress in every branch of knowledge connected with the study of divinity. In 1533 he became chaplain to Queen Anne Boleyn, and was charged by her with the care of her daughter Elizabeth. He remained in concealment during the reign of Mary, though search was several times made for him, and was elevated to the primacy on the accession of El beth. He was among the first selected to pre the Reformed Liturgy; and the 'Bishops' Bi which remained in use till the present transla was effected, was printed under his inspect Archbishop Parker was also a great antiqua and had some share, either as patron or ed in the work 'De Antiquitate Britannicæ Eccle besides being the founder of the first Societ Antiquaries. He died 1575.

PARKER, RICHARD, appointed admiral of fleet by the mutineers during the revolt at Nore, was a disgraced midshipman, who was s ing at that juncture as a common sailor. He a man of enterprise and address, and acquired mense influence over the men. On the redu of the mutiny by Lord Howe, he was hange board the Sandwich, June 30, 1797.

PARKER, ROBERT, a puritan writer on s logical subjects, known from 1588 to 1607.

son, THOMAS, a theological and religious w took refuge in America 1634, died there 167

PARKER, SAMUEL, a prelate of the re James II., who at that period joined the pa He is author of a history of his own times and other works, in particular 'A Discourse of siastical Polity,' written against the disse born at Northampton 1640, died 1687.

PARKES, SAMUEL, a practical chemist known as the author of many useful elem works, 1759-1825.

PARKHURST, JOHN, bishop of Norwich reign of Elizabeth, and previously the teac Bishop Jewel, at Merton college. He was late of eminent learning and piety; 1511-15

PARKHURST, JOHN, author of the well Hebrew and Greek lexicons, was born in amptonshire 1728, and educated at Clare Cambridge. He entered into orders, but h preferments in the church, and, possessing derable property, devoted himself to litera suits. He was a man of high principle, receiver of the philosophy of John Hutch Died at Epsom 1797.

PARKINS, J., a writer on law, 16th cen

PARKINSON, J., a writer on botany, d.

PARKINSON, T., a mathemat., 1745-16

PARMENIDES, of Elea, in Magna G born about 536 B.C.; one of the chief Eleatic school. That great search concerni substance of things occupied Parmenides instead of finding Unity in Nature, he dis it in Mind alone. It is the Reason which ceives and bestows Unity on Plurality; s true Reality is Subjective. The scheme of menides is a pure Idealism, and open to a objections to which one-sided schemes are li He exercised, however, much influence on speculations of Plato.

PARMENIO, a Macedonian gen., d. B.C. 3

PARMENTIER, ANTHONY A., a famous Fr agricultural writer and philanthropist, 1737-1

PARMENTIER, J., a Fr. painter, 1658-17

PARMENTIER, J., a French navigator, kn also as a versifier and translator, 16th century.

PARMIZIANO. See MAZZUOLI.

PARNELL, THOMAS, born at Dublin in 1 took orders, and became archdeacon of Clog He received, also, other preferments through

Swift, when he deserted the Whig eir fall in the latter part of the reign of
ie. He was a contributor to the Spec-Guardian, and, after flying to London ish parsonage, became intimate with the n of letters. His poetry comes nearer in sweetness of versification, than do erses of the time: and he has not only ty of diction, but also a very pleasing of sentiment, shown in such pieces as allegory 'The Hermit.' His death, urred in 1718, is said to have been y intemperate habits, and these have uted to the grief he felt for the loss of [W.S.]

I, FILIPPO, a Genoese sculptor, born
, died 1708. DOMENICO, his son, an ainter, 1668-1740. BATTISTA, brother o, 1674-1730. PELLEGRINO, son of a portrait painter, died after 1741.

ETTI, VICTOR MODESTE, an Italian list. as a philos. and natural., 1765-1834.

See CATHARINE PARR.

RICHARD, an Irish divine, au. of Ser-
'Life of Archbishop Usher,' 1617-91.

SAMUEL, an eminent classical scholar was the son of an apothecary of Harrow-in Middlesex, and was born there obtained a living in the Church of Eng-gift of Sir Francis Burdett, and wrote
ks of temporary interest; died 1825.

THOMAS, noticed here as an extraordice of longevity, was a native of Shrop-was born in 1483, and laboured in husafter he was one hundred and thirty
He died in 1635, when nearly one hunty-three years of age; and even then,
who opened his body, found no internal cay. His grandson died at the age of d and twenty.

V., a partizan of Mary Stuart, ex. 1584.

NNIN, D., a Fr. mission., 1665-1741.

ASIUS, a Greek painter, 5th cent. B.C.

ASIUS, AULUS JAMES, an Italian
n and classical editor, 1470-1534.

CEL, BARTHOLOMEW, a French pain-
60. His son, JOSEPH, a great painter
1648-1704. CHARLES, son and pupil 1688-1752. IGNATIUS, nephew and oseph, died 1722. PIERRE, younger the latter, also a pupil of his uncle out 1720-1765. IGNATIUS, son of last painter of the family, d. abt. 1774.

CALEB HILLIER, father of the well-tic navigator, distinguished as a phynaturalist, and more than forty years
t the Bath hospital, was born in 1756.
al work is entitled 'The Elements of
' died 1822.

R., bishop of St. Asaph, died 1620.

R., a divine and theologian, 1722-1780.

W., an English painter, 1742-1791.

J., a Dutch engraver, 16th century.

S, A., an English traveller, died 1785.

S, JAMES, a physician, anatomist, and
au. of several curious works, 1705-70.

S, JOHN, an anatomist, 1742-1785.

S, PHILIP, a minister of the Church
kn. as a miscellaneous wr., 1729-1812.

PARSONS, ROBERT, whose name is sometimes written PERSONS, an English Jesuit, famous for his intermeddling in affairs of state, 1547-1610.

PARUTA, PAUL, a Venetian diplomatist, and historiographer to the state, 1540-1598.

PARUTA, PHILIP, an antiquarian, died 1629.

PAS, ANTH. DE, a French general, 1641-1711.

PAS, or PAAS, CRISPIN DE, a Dutch designer and engraver, born about 1536, had three sons in the same profession:—CRISPIN, the eldest, born 1570; WILLIAM, the second, dates unknown; SIMON, the third, a portrait engraver, born 1574. His daughter, MADELEINE, also distinguished herself in the art, born 1576.

PASCAL, the first of the name pope, 817-824. The second, 1099-1113. The third, an antipope, elected in opposition to Alexander III., and supported by the emperor Frederick, 1164-1168. Another antipope, of the name, headed a faction some time in 687.

PASCAL, BLAISE, was a native of Clermont in Auvergne, where he was born 19th June, 1623. His ancestors had, for several generations, held high offices in the French government, and his father was a provincial judge in his native county. Even in boyhood, the extraordinary power and acuteness of Blaise Pascal displayed itself. His father, who was an eminent mathematician, undertook the sole management of his son's education, and for that purpose removed to Paris. The bias of young Pascal's mind being strongly inclined towards mathematical science, the prudent father, afraid lest the favourite subject might engross his mind to the neglect of other necessary branches, took care to give him little or no access to his library. He confined his son's attention, as much as possible, to the study of languages. But nature could not be repressed, and the daily pastime of the boy was to draw mathematical diagrams, with charcoal, on the floor. In this stolen enjoyment, his father surprised him, and the figure that was then absorbing his thoughts was the 32d proposition of Euclid; showing that he had already mastered all the previous elements that enter into that demonstration. His father thenceforth set him to the regular study of Euclid; and so great was his proficiency in the science, that, before completing his sixteenth year, he had composed a treatise on conic sections, invented an arithmetical machine, for which, in 1649, he obtained a patent; and at the age of twenty-three had finished those important experiments, in pneumatics and hydrostatics, which have so honourably connected his name with the progress of natural philosophy, and raised him to the same rank with Torricelli and Boyle. A serious illness, brought on by intense application to study, obliged him, for a long time, to suspend his favourite pursuits, and on his recovery, circumstances occurred that powerfully diverted his thoughts into a different channel. During his protracted sickness, he had received deep impressions of religion, so that under an overwhelming sense of its importance he resolved to renounce all the scientific and secular pursuits, to which his taste and genius so strongly directed him, and to apply his mind exclusively to the study of theology, and the means by which he might promote the best interests of his fellow-men. Through the loopholes of his pious retreat, however, he took an occasional glance at what was passing in the world, and on the outbreak of the fierce contests that were waged between the Jansenists and the Jesuits, Pascal showed himself a keen and powerful advocate of the former. It was in connection with the controversy respecting Arnauld, that he wrote his famous 'Letters of a Provincial to one of his Friends,' which first appeared in the year 1656, under the fictitious authorship of Louis de Montalte. They contain a most withering exposure of the false morality of the Jesuits, and the sentiments are expressed in a style of elegance, accompanied with the most sparkling wit and bitter sarcasms, which, although enlisted in a foreign and bygone controversy, have secured to the work a lasting fame. Pascal meditated a work of high importance, viz., an inquiry into the character and evidences of Christianity, and in the hands of so original, profound, and independent a thinker, there was reason to expect a production which would interest and instruct the whole Christian world. But his Pensées, or 'Thoughts on Religion,' a posthumous volume of loose and desultory fragments, which were meant to be woven into a regular composition, is all that was accomplished of this grand design, for he was arrested in the midst of his work by death in 1662, which happened so suddenly and in such suspicious circumstances, as gave some colour to the charge of his being carried off by poison. [R.J.]

[House in which Pascal died.]

PASCH, G., a German philologist, 1661-1707.
PASCH, J., a professor of philosophy, d. 1709.
PASCH, JEAN, a Swedish landscape and marine painter, 1706-1769. LAURENCE, of the same family name, is known as a portrait painter; and his daughter, ULRICA FREDERICA, was a member of the Academy of Painting and Sculpture, 1735-96.
PASCHAL. See PASCAL.
PASCHAL, C., a Fr. antiquarian, died 1625.
PASCHAL, F., a Fr. dramatist, 17th century.
PASCHIUS, G., a Ger. philologist, 1661-1707.
PASCOLI, A., an Ital. anatomist, 1669-1757.
PASCOLI, L., an Ital. art-writer, 1674-1744.
PASINELLI, L., an Ital. painter, 1629-1700.
PASQUALIS. See MARTINEZ.

PASQUIER, STEPHEN, an eminent Fr civilian, and enemy of the Jesuits, 1529-1615.
PASS, PASSE, or PAAS. See PAS.
PASSAROTTI, BARTALOMEO, an Italian ter and engraver, died 1592. He had two also disting. in art:—TIBURZIO, died 1612 AURELIO, who died between 1592 and 1605.
PASSEMANT, C. S., a Fr. astronomer, 17
PASSERAT, J., a French poet, 1534-16
PASSERI, GIAMBATTISTA, an Italian quarian and naturalist, 1694-1780.
PASSERI, GIAMBATTISTA, an Italian and poet, 1610-1679. His nephew, GU also a painter, 1654-1714.
PASSEROTTI. See PASSAROTTI.
PASSIGNANO, DOMINICO CRESTI DA ting. painter of the Florentine school, 1568
PASSIONEI, DOMENICO, a learned cardinal, and promoter of literature, 1682-PASSWAN-OGLOU, OSMAN, a pacha din, in Bulgaria, who revolted against the po his father had been put to death; and, after struggle, compelled the sultan to confirm the government. He was afterwards fat the Turks in a war with the Russians, 175
PASTEUR, J. D., a Dut. naturalist, 176
PASTORIUS, J., a Ger. historian, 1610
PATARASI, L., an Ital. naturalist, 167
PATEL, PETER, a French landscape killed in a duel, 1654-1703. His son, of t names, painted several emblematic subjects unknown.
PATER, PAUL, a Hungarian savant, 1656
PATERCULUS, a Roman historian, d. 18
PATERSON, C. W., a Brit. admiral, 1756-1
PATERSON, S., a bibliographer, 1728-18
PATICHI, A., an Italian painter, 1762-18
PATIN, GUY, a French physician, distinguish in the disputes which divided the profession co cerning chemical remedies, as the determine enemy of antimonial and similar preparation 1601-1672. His letters, which have been pub lished since his death, are curious and interesting. CHARLES, his second son, distinguished as a physician and numismatist, 1633-1693. The wife of the latter, and their two daughters, CHARLOTTE and GABRIELLE, were women of remarkable learning, and have left some writings.
PATISSON, M., a Fr. Hellenist, died abt. 1600.
PATKUL, JOHN REGINALD DE, a gentleman of Poland, who distinguished himself by his endeavours to shake off the Swedish yoke in the reigns of Charles XI. and Charles XII. He was treacherously given up to the latter by Augustus, and broken on the wheel 1707.
PATON, R., an English painter, last century.
PATOUILLET, L., a Fr. Jesuit and controversialist, au. of 'Apology for Cartouche,' 1699-1779.
PATRAT, J., a French playwright, 1732-1801.
PATRICK, A., a Polish prelate, 16th century.
PATRICK, PETER, one of Justinian's ambassadors, and finally master of the palace, was a native of Thessalonica. Very little is known concerning his history; and of his work, 'The History of Ambassadors,' written in Greek, only some fragments remain.
PATRICK, ST., the patron of Ireland, was the first to convert the pagan Irish to Christianity, and is supposed to have commenced his mission ling to his own account he k, between Dumbarton and ccounts represent him as a ire and of Brittany. Nen-ie 7th century, states that Maur, and that the name

o him when consecrated by ced his residence at Armagh, etropolitan see, and is sup-ed his missions about forty
r, places his death as late

EL, a divine and classical dition of Hederick's Greek

a learned prelate, born at ed bishop of Ely 1707. His Case, or a Remedy against all ypocrisy,' 'A Convert to the 'Parable of the Pilgrim,' mandments,' a 'Debate bed Nonconformist,' 'Treatise on,' 'The Devout Christian,' ection Justified by Witnesses
'A History of the Church of h he was dean), various pararies on the Prophets, and a ermons. When rector of St.
, he greatly endeared himrs by remaining with them
of the plague in 1665.
, a Fr. geologist, 1742-1815.
nch poet, 1585-1672.
talian historian, died 1496.
talian Platonist, 1529-1597.
ch architect, 1723-1814.
nglish theologian, 1754-90.
s, well known as member of
, and governor of the Bank 1786. He was the repremmercial family. His par-n in 1835. In 1841 he was returned on the death of Sir
d again at the general elec-849.
LAM, a native of Sussex, who
as a poet, and died in his r a miserable life, 1706-1727.
n Ital. theologian, 1700-69.
., a Fr. mathemat., 1736-98.
erman painter, 17th century.

(Acts xiii. 9,) was a native
and inherited the privileges (Acts xxii. 28, 29.) His n were wholly Jewish, and highest order. Under the iel, a distinguished Jewish Acts v. 34,) he became mas-(Acts xxii. 3; Gal. i. 14.)
ht a useful mechanical trade,
m of the nation, for the Tals not train his son to some
as bad as if he taught him ft to which Saul was trained ker.' Tent-making is a com-nch of business in the East,
l portable edifices are in so uisition. Cilicia, Saul's na-ned for a certain species of goat's hair, which was woven into haircloth. This form of industry may have been Saul's early employment, and as such tent-cloth was largely used in the army, this manufacture may have suggested to the apostle's mind the many military figures and illusions which are scattered through his writings. (Acts xviii. 3.) His residence at Jerusalem commenced at an early period, (Acts xxvi. 4,) and he was probably from twenty-two to twenty-five years old when Christ commenced his public ministry. He belonged to the sect of the Pharisees, as did also his father. (Acts xxiii. 6.) The preaching of the gospel by the apostles, and especially the fact of Christ's resurrection from the dead, on which they placed their chief stress, excited, of course, a violent opposition among the Jews, which, before long, broke out in open violence. Stephen, an eloquent and powerful advocate of the new religion, was seized and stoned to death. Among the spectators, and perhaps promoters, of this bloody deed, was Paul; who, we may suppose, from the manner in which he was regarded by the murderers, and, indeed, from his own confession, was fully with them in the act. (Acts vii. 58. Comp. xxii. 20.) His temperament, talents, and education fitted him to become a leader in the persecution of the apostles and their adherents; and he commenced his career with a degree of zeal bordering on madness. He 'breathed out threatenings and slaughter.' His whole spirit was excited against the new religion, and he even sought for authority to go to Damascus, whither many of the disciples had fled after the murder of Stephen, and bind and drag to Jerusalem, without distinction of age or sex, all the followers of Christ whom he could find. Just before he reached Damascus, however, he was arrested by a miraculous light, so intense as to deprive him of vision. He fell to the earth in helpless prostration and terror. (Acts xxii. 11.) At the same time Christ revealed himself as the real object of his persecution. (Acts xxvi. 15. Comp. 1 Cor. xv. 8.) Paul on being converted did not wait very long in Damascus; and we are not to infer from the narrative of Luke that immediately on leaving Damascus he went to Jerusalem. The time which he spent in Arabia may be estimated at from one year and a-half to two years; for immediately after his conversion, he must have spent at least some months at Damascus, before, as an apostle, he gave himself to his missionary journeyings,—and such was his journey into Arabia. When now he had returned to Damascus, he commenced making known, unreservedly and energetically, the gospel of Christ in the synagogues of the Jews, in the same manner that he did in his first abode in that city. The following chronological arrangement will enable the reader to connect the principal events in the life of Paul:—

	A.D.
Paul's conversion. (Acts ix.,) 21st year of Tiberius.	36
He goes into Arabia, and returns to Damascus; (Gal. i. 17;) at the end of three years in all, he escapes from Damascus and goes to Jerusalem, (Acts ix. 23, &c.)	39
From Jerusalem Paul goes to Cilicia and Syria. (Acts ix. 30; Gal. i. 21.) From Antioch he is sent with Barnabas to Jerusalem to carry alms, (Acts xi. 30.)	45
The first missionary journey of Paul and Barnabas from Antioch, continued about two years, (Acts xiii., xiv.,) commencing,	45

After spending several years in Antioch, (Acts xiv. 28,) Paul and Barnabas are sent a second time to Jerusalem, to consult the apostles respecting circumcision, &c., (Acts xv. 2,) 52
The Jews expelled from Rome, A.D. 52-54; Paul, on his second missionary journey, (Acts xv. 40,) after passing through Asia Minor to Europe, finds Aquila and Priscilla at Corinth, (Acts xviii. 2,).. 54
Paul remains eighteen months in Corinth. (Acts xviii. 11.) After being brought before Gallio, he departs for Jerusalem the fourth time, and then goes to Antioch, (Acts xviii. 22,) 56
The apostle winters at Nicopolis, (Tit. iii. 12,) and then goes to Ephesus, (Acts xix. 1,) 57
After a residence of two years or more at Ephesus, Paul departs for Macedonia, (Acts xx. 1,) 59
After wintering in Achaia, Paul goes the fifth time to Jerusalem, where he is imprisoned, (Acts xxi.; xxiii.,) 60
The apostle remains two years in prison at Cesarea, and is then sent to Rome, where he arrives in the spring, after wintering in Malta, (Acts xxiv. 27; xxv., xxviii.,) 63
The history in Acts concludes, and Paul is supposed by some to have been set at liberty, ... 65
Probable martyrdom, ... 66

[J.E.]

PAUL, the name of two saints besides the apostle, the earlier a hermit of the Thebaid, about 229-341. The later, a patriarch of Constantinople, elected 340, put to death 350 or 351.

PAUL, the first of the name, pope, reigned 757-767. The second, 1464-1471. The third, of the Farnese family, succeeded Clement VII., 1534, excommunicated Henry VIII. 1535, concluded a league with the Venetians and Charles V. against the Turks 1538, concurred in the foundation of the Jesuits 1540, convoked the council of Trent 1542, died 1549. The fourth, reigned 1555-1559. The fifth, of the Borghese family, succeeded Leo XI. 1605, sustained a quarrel with Venice, which was terminated by Henry IV. 1605-1607, died 1621.

PAUL I., emperor of Russia, son of Catharine the Great and Peter III., was born 1754, and succeeded on the death of his mother 1796. He was assassinated 1800, and suc. by his son, Alexander.

PAUL, an exarch of Ravenna, killed 728.

PAUL OF BURGOS. See PAUL OF S. MARIA.

PAUL THE DEACON, a monkish histor., d. 743.

PAUL-DE-LA-CROIX, an Italian founder of a religious congregation, 1720, died 1775.

PAUL OF SAMOSATA, bishop of that place, on the Euphrates, and patriarch of Antioch, flourished from 260 to 273. He was deposed for heresy 270, but could not be expelled from his dignities till after the fall of Zenobia. The sect of Paulians, or Paulianists, was named after him, and condemned by the council of Nice. Their doctrines were a form of Socinianism.

PAUL OF SANCTA MARIA, a converted Jew, born at Burgos in 1353, died a dignitary of the church 1435. His three sons, ALPHONSO, GONSALVO, and ALOARES, also rose in the church, the elder of them becoming bishop of Burgos. He is the author of an abridgment of Spanish history.

PAUL THE SILENTIARY, a Christian poet, chief of the officers who had charge of Justinian's palace.

PAUL DE VINCENT, one of the most revered saints of the Roman calendar, founder of the congregation of 'Priests of the Missions,' was born in humble life 1576; and in all the offices which he held, was renowned for his warm zeal and extensive charity; died 1660.

PAUL, A. L., a French ecclesiast
PAULA, a sainted lady of Rome,
PAULET, J. J., a Fr. medical wr PAULET, W., an English courti
PAULI. See PAULLI.

PAULIANS, AIME HENRI, a learn author of several philosophical work

PAULIN-DE-SAINT-BARTH
name by which JOHN PHILIP WERDI Carmelite and missionary, is generall principal scene of his labours was Indies, and he has left some valu works, 1748-1806.

PAULINUS, the name of three bishop of Treves, elected 349, depose exile 359. 2. A famous ecclesiastic in Gaul 353, died bishop of Nola 431
arch of Aquileia, 726-804.

PAULLI, SIMON, a Danish phys
turalist, 1608-1680. His son, of th settled at Strasburg as a painter 16
miscellaneous publications, 1664.

JAMES HENRY, was professor of m
history at Copenhagen, and was emp of state by Christiern V. A third born at Copenhagen 1644, became s India Company, and acquired a lar commerce. He then suddenly anno as the subject of certain visions, i mandates of which he lost his pro deavoured to engage the Christian crusade against the Turks, for th restoring Israel. He published nu in Flemish and German, and suffe ment in pursuit of this object, and in obscurity, 1715.

PAULINI, C. F., a Ger. naturali

PAULMIER DE GRENTEMES
LE, a French physician, who witne sacre of St. Bartholomew, and wro 1520-1588. His son, JAMES, a lea rian and philologist, 1587-1670.

PAULMY, ANTHONY RENE DE
GENSON, Marquis De, a Fr. literate

PAULUS OF ÆGINA, a medical

PAULUS, ÆMILIUS LUCIUS. S

PAULUS, JULIUS, a Roman law

PAULUS, PETER, a statesman o ders, author of a 'Commentary on Utrecht,' and other works, 1754-17

PAUSANIUS, a Greek geograph

PAUSANIAS, a general of Cle of Sparta, who distinguished himsel
of Platæa, and was afterwards dete sonable attempt to deliver his count siana. Having fled to a temple o sanctity of which secured him from Greeks surrounded the building
stones, and thus starved him to dea

PAUSIAS, a Greek painter, 4th

PAUSON, a Greek painter, 5th

PAUW, C. DE, a Dutch savant,

PAUW, J. C., a Dutch classic, 1

PAUW, REIGNIER, a Dutch s diplomatist, 1564-1636. ADRIAN, pensionary of Holland, 1631, plenipo
peace of Munster, 1648, died 1658.
brother of the latter, a statesman, L

PAUWS, P., Dutch physician, L

PAUWELS, J., a Belgian composer, 1771-1804.
PAVILLON, JOHN FRANCIS DU CHEVRON DU, a French naval commander, 1730-1782.
PAVILLON, NICHOLAS, a famous preacher, born at Paris 1597, died bishop of Aleth 1677. STEPHEN, his son, a man of letters, 1632-1705.
PAYNE, J., an English engraver, 1608-1648.
PAYS, RENE LE, a French poet, 1636-1690.
PAZ, J. A. DE, a Spanish Jesuit, 1560-1620.
PAZZI, JACOPO, chief of the Italian faction opposed to the Medici, put to death 1478.
PEACHAM, HENRY, an accomplished gentleman, who is supposed to have been tutor in the earl of Arundel's family, and who wrote many works known to the readers of polite literature: among these are some complimentary poems, 'The Gentleman's Exercise,' intended as a treatise on art; 'Minerva Britannica,' a collection of emblems in verse, illustrated with plates; and 'The Complete Gentleman.' This latter work is the one for which he was most celebrated, and it has been frequently reprinted. Died about 1640.
PEACOCK, R., a learned prelate, 1390-1460.
PEARCE, NATHANIEL, a sailor famous for his long residence in Abyssinia, 1780-1820.
PEARCE, ZACHARY, successively bishop of Bangor and Rochester, distinguished as a classical scholar, and author of a 'Commentary on the Evangelists,' 1690-1774.
PEARSALL, R., a nonconf. divine, 1698-1762.
PEARSON, EDWARD, a learned minister of the Church of England, author of a Norrisian prize essay on the 'Goodness of God, as Manifested in the Mission of Jesus Christ,' a 'Collection of Prayers,' and Tracts against the theory of Paley on moral obligation, 1756-1811.
PEARSON, GEORGE, a physician of London, and writer on analytical chemistry, died 1828.
PEARSON, JOHN a learned English prelate, was born in Norfolk, where his father was rector of Creeke and Snoring, 1612, and died, bishop of Chester, 1686. He is regarded as the greatest divine of his age, and is best known by his 'Exposition of the Creed,' published while he was rector of St. Clement's Eastcheap, 1650. The principal of his other works is a 'Defence of the Epistles' of St. Ignatius.
PEARSON, MARGARET EGLINTON, distinguished for her skill in the art of painting on glass, d. 1823.
PECCHIO, G., an Italian economist, 1785-1835.
PECEI, J. A., an Ital. antiquarian, 1693-1768.
PECHANTRÉ, N. DE, a Fr. dram., 1638-1709.
PECHMEJA, J., a Fr. literateur, 1741-1785.
PECK, FRANCIS, a dignitary of the Church of England, known as an antiquarian and historian. His principal works relate to English history, and the antiquities of Stamford, 1692-1743.
PECKHAM, J., archb. of Canterbury, d. 1292.
PECKWELL, H., a Calvinist divine, 1737-87.
PECQUET, ANTHONY, grand master of the waters and forests of Rouen, known as a writer on the forest laws and general politics, 1704-1762.
PECQUET, J., a French anatomist, 1622-1674.
PEDRAZI, P., an Ital. antiquarian, 1644-1720.
PEDRO, emperor of Brazil, was eldest son of John VI, king of Portugal, eldest brother of Don Miguel, and nephew to Ferdinand VII., king of Spain. He was born in 1798, and was married in 1817 to Leopoldine, archduchess of Austria, daughter of Francis I., emperor; and in 1829, when that princess had been dead three years, to Amelia, princess of Leuchtenberg, daughter of Eugene Beauharnais. In 1831 he abdicated the throne of Brazil in favour of his son, Pedro II., and came to England; his object being to solicit aid against his brother, Miguel, who had usurped the throne of Portugal. The defeat of Miguel's fleet in 1832, by Admiral Napier, decided the war, which had been marked by some sharp engagements on land. Pedro died in 1834, and his daughter by his first wife, Leopoldine, ascended the throne. She was the late Queen Donna Maria.

PEEL, SIR ROBERT, father of the celebrated statesman, was the third son of Mr. Peel, of Peel Cross, Lancashire. He was born in 1750, and amassed great wealth in the cotton trade, became a member of parliament, and in 1801 was created a baronet. Died at Drayton Manor, 1830.

[Birth place of Sir Robert Peel.]

PEEL, SIR ROBERT, was born on 5th February, 1788. His father was a celebrated manufacturer, whose successful career was intimately connected with the development of the industrial energies of Britain during the great European war. The elder Peel left a princely fortune to be inherited by his distinguished son, and there is no doubt that the peculiar position in which he was placed had much influence on the mind of the statesman. In wealth and rank he was nominally among the aristocracy, and his own character was reserved and somewhat haughty. In the external movements of society he would feel his place a high one, and the proudest aristocracy were naturally ever willing to acknowledge a considerable position to the clever, rich, and highly educated cotton-spinner's son. Yet he would have opportunities of being conscious that he was not admitted within the sacred arena of the old feudal aristocratic families, whose generations had been intermarrying for centuries. His was a nature to see and feel this, while the history of his father's rise, and all the antecedents of his own greatness, would concur to throw his sympathies into the cause of progress and energy. He studied at Harrow and Oxford, where he early distinguished himself among the most brilliant men of his day. When just twenty-one years of age he entered parliament as member for Cashel, and thenceforth the sphere of his exertions and triumphs was the House of Commons, in the history of which his career will form a large feature. He was no orator, nor was he properly speaking a natural and simple debater. His manner was the artificial one of thorough training, but for an artificial manner it was a good one, and the house from his practice got to like it, though to a stranger it was generally unpleasant. He could state his case clearly and forcibly, but he seldom liked to abandon a subject until he had discussed it at great length. He avoided in a marked manner the statement of general principles, as if he feared that he might afterwards have to say or do something inconsistent with them, and he generally made out his case on the details of the matter, rather than on any wide rule or principle of political opinion. At the beginning of his parliamentary career he was appointed to serve on Horner's bullion committee, and the peculiarities of his mind were then distinctly remarked. It was seen that he went into the inquiry with opinions totally unformed—that he proceeded with the examination systematically and calmly, as if it had related to some philosophical question about the composition of metals, but that after having formed his opinions, he deemed it his function and duty to carry them resolutely into practice. In 1811 he was made under secretary for the colonies, and in 1812, while only twenty-four, he received the very responsible appointment of chief secretary for Ireland.—After carrying his celebrated currency measure of 1819, he became in 1822 home secretary. Refusing to take office under Canning, he joined the ministry of the duke of Wellington in 1828. Here by conceding catholic emancipation, against which he had previously protested, he did one of those acts which have been called tergiversation by some, and the result of honest conviction, rising above original prepossession by others. He still, however, professed to belong to the Conservative party, and he became a strenuous opponent of Earl Grey's ministry and the Reform Bill. When a Conservative government was, from mere accidental and personal causes not well explained, established in 1834, he gallantly undertook the attempt to work it, though conscious that the task was hopeless. He became prime minister in 1841 with better prospects. The position in which he was placed was that of the head of a protectionist government, established to defeat and suppress the free trade party. As circumstances developed themselves in the few critical years from 1841 to 1846, some indications of opinion created alarm among the thorough protectionists, and it was seen that the prime minister becoming convinced of the truth of free trade, was determined to carry its principles into practice. After a repeal of the corn laws and other measures in the same spirit, he resigned office to the party to whom his later opinions legitimately belonged, in the summer of 1846. He died on the 2d of July, 1850, of internal injuries caused by a fall from a horse. [J.H.B.]

PEELE, GEORGE, a dramatic writer and poet of the age of Elizabeth, was a native of Devonshire, and died some time before 1598. He took the degree of M.A. at Oxford in 1579, after which he removed to London, and is supposed to have had the ordering of the city pageants plays are still extant.

PEGEL, M., a German savant, di

PEGGE, SAMUEL, father and son same name, distinguished as antiqua the former, a minister of the Church flourished 1704-1796; the latter, a b 1800. SIR CHRISTOPHER, son of Samuel, was regius professor of me ford, and died 1825.

PEINS, G., a German painter, 18

PEIRCE, J., a nonconform. divin

PEIRESC, NICHOLAS CL. FABRI man of Florence, descended from the dist. as an antiquarian, Oriental sch mer, and naturalist, and equally fa protection of the learned, born 1580, arms of his friend and biographer, G

PEIROUSE, PHILIP PICOT, Ba distinguished French naturalist, 174

PELAGIUS, sometimes surnam usually supposed to have been a n country, his Greek name being a tran Celtic one,—MORGAN. The opinio afterwards advocated were probabl of many years, for at first during hi Rome, whither he came in the yea noted only for his earnest zeal and tivities. He had even the address t course with Augustine, when he v and also with Jerome, without his be of heresy. At length the agitation Pelagius, who had meanwhile gone to accused before John of Jerusalem and Diospolis, but acquitted, though he anathematized by Pope Innocentius, Other sentences were passed upon t and his subsequent history is unknow trines were a denial of the distinctive t ture and evangelical theology,—suc sin and depravity, moral inability, a divine grace to renovate. In fact ascribed to Pelagius, ignore the guilt o but make him his own deliverer. I to denude redemption of mystery, be reality. His opponents, however, com lubricity, and perhaps his own views judged of by the extreme sentiments Several of the works of Pelagius ha to us, such as his 'Commentaries on tles,' and his 'Confession of Faith.'

PELAGIUS, a king of the Austu

PELAGIUS, the first of the name reign of Justinian, 555-559; the sec

PELAGIUS, MAGLOIRE, a man became a general in the French army

PELAGIUS, ST., a convert of An

PELETIER, CLAUDE LE, one of tinguished members of the ancient P trature, provost of merchants, and b quay which bears his name at Pari His brother, MICHEL, a learned ma cillor of state, died 1725.

PELETIER, JAMES, a French m and man of letters, 1517-1582. JOH a theologian, died 1588. JAMES, an ecclesiastic, executed in effigy fo share in the death of the president B

PELL, JOHN, a learned divine a

, who settled at Breda as professor of philo- and mathematics, and was a great corres- nt of Cavendish. Besides the works pub- by him, his MSS. and letters, in the British um, occupy nearly forty folio volumes. Born thwick, in Sussex, 1610, died 1685.

LLEGRIN, Simon Joseph, a French eccle- kn. as a dramatic wr. and poet, 1663-1745.

LLEPRAT, P., a Fr. missionary, 1606-1667.

LLERIN, J., a Fr. numismatist, 1684-1782.

LLETIER. See Lepelletier.

LLETIER, B., a pharmacopolist, 1761-97.

LLEW, Edward See Exmouth.

LLICAN, C., a Germ. Hebraist, 1478-1536.

LLICER, J. A., a Span. savant, 1740-1806.

LLICO, Silvio, was born at Saluzza, in nont, 1789. He was known in early life as a and dramatic writer, especially by his fine dy 'Francesca da Rimini.' In 1819, he started Conciliator,' a literary and scientific journal, h brought him under the Austrian censorship, n 1821, he was arrested and condemned to with Count Gonfalonieri and others; all ged with conspiracy as members of the Car- societies. This punishment was commuted e scaffold, and the patriots consigned to a hor- imprisonment; that of Silvio Pellico, chiefly d in the fortress of Spielberg, lasting till the al amnesty of 1830. The pathetic account of fferings, 'Le Mie Prigioni,' produced an im- e effect, and the name of Pellico, connected those of Gioberti and Balbo, has kept alive rest flame of patriotism that has yet burned r unhappy country. He died in the house of Marchesa Barolo, in February, 1854. [E.R.]

LLIEUX, J. N., a Fr. antiquary, 1749-1832.

LLISSON-FONTANIER, Paul, an emi- historian and member of the French Aca- , who was educated for the law, and at the f twenty-one published a 'Commentary on stitutes of Justinian.' He is famed also for ourage with which he defended his old pro- , Fouquet, on whose disgrace he was con- d to a five years' imprisonment in the Bastile. orks are a 'History of the French Academy,' tory of Louis XIV.,' 'History of the Conquest anche-Comté,' and 'Reflections upon Religious rences.' Born at Béziers 1624, died 1693.

LLOUTIER, Simon, a German of French nt, an. of a 'History of the Celts,' 1694-1757.

LOPIDAS, a famous Theban general, com- n-in-arms of Epaminondas, died B.C. 364.

LS, A., a Dutch miscellaneous wr., d. 1681.

LTAN, T. A., a Germ. theologian, 1552-84.

LTIER, J. G., a Fr. journalist, died 1825.

MBERTON, Henry, professor of medicine resham College, and a member of the Royal ety, bears a distinguished name as a mathe- ian and natural philosopher. He was the mporary and friend of Sir Isaac Newton. n in London 1694, died 1771.

MBLE, W., a learned divine, 1591-1623.

MBROKE, Mary Herbert, wife of Henry, of, a poetical writer, died 1821.

MBROKE, T., a painter, about 1700-1728.

NA, John, a Fr. mathematician, 1530-1560.

NA, John Nunez De La, a Spanish histo- of the Canary Islands, 1676.

NA, Peter, a French botanist, 16th century

PENINGTON, Isaac, son of an alderman and mayor of London, famous as a writer among the Quakers, was born about 1617, joined that religious body 1658, and died 1679. A daughter of his wife, by her former husband, was married to the celebrated William Penn.

PENN, Sir William, a brave and patriotic admiral, dist. in the war against the Dutch under the duke of York, born at Bristol 1621, died 1670.

PENN, William, was born in Windsor, on the 14th of October, 1644. His father was Sir William Penn, a distinguished admiral, who boasted a high and ancient lineage. While the young man studied at Oxford, the great feud between the Puritan and Carabic party then raging was interrupted by the appearance of a new claimant to their allegiances, in a representative of the startling opinions of George Fox. From their boldness and originality, and their rejection of the authoritative restraints laid on both the other factions, this had a charm for one of young Penn's bold and original nature, and he joined the new sect resolving to brave all the consequences. A far more painful portion of them, even than his expulsion from college, encountered him in the domestic circle, where the feelings of the proud old admiral were deeply wounded by finding his son a schismatic. It was one of the veteran's maxims, however, that conscience and honour were before all things, and the spirit and manliness with which his son carried out the principles he adopted seem to have appeased his indignation. In 1668, Penn published the first of his voluminous works 'Truth Exalted,' and two years afterwards he was imprisoned, under the conventicle act, for seditious preaching. In 1677, he travelled on the continent with his celebrated brethren, Robert Barclay and George Fox. It was in the year 1681 that, in compensation for a debt to his father by the crown, he received a grant of the province on the Delaware, called the New Netherlands. It was a signally fortunate incident that in the reckless disposal of such gifts at that time, one should have fallen into hands like his. Such was the foundation of the colony of Pennsylvania, now an empire. It was commenced in a spirit of magnanimous justice, incomprehensible to that age, in an agreement with the natives, and the admission that they had claims to be considered before the colonists took absolute possession. When the relaxations with which James II. wished to purchase the assent of the dissenters to his Romish projects began, the conduct of Penn created suspicions and accusations which have clouded his fame. His position was peculiar, since it was not easy to find among the dissenting bodies any other man whose rank and importance made him so likely a medium of communication with the court, and, at the same time, the Quakers not having much harmony with the others, and being little liked by them, were more apt to accede to measures not generally acceptable to dissenters at large. Thus Penn had friendly communications with the court, and gave his support to its measures. Whether he dishonourably implicated himself, is matter of too extensive controversy to be here entered on, and reference must be made to the vindication in Mr. Hepsworth Dixon's Memoirs, published in 1851. One charge against him is that when in Mon-mouth's rebellion, some young girls of Taunton were threatened with the punishment of death for having worked standards for Monmouth, Penn became the looker for their pardon, as a pecuniary consideration in favour of the maids of honour. Mr. Dixon has given reason to suppose that the negotiator was a different person, named George Penne. After the Revolution, Penn lived under the suspicion of favouring the Jacobite cause, and his latter days were clouded. The death of his first wife in 1693, was followed by that of his eldest son. He married a second time in 1696. He was afterwards encumbered with debt, and died on the 30th of July, 1718. [J.H.B.]

[Grave of Penn.]

PENNA, L., an Italian composer, died 1693.

PENNANT, THOS., a celebrated naturalist, was born in 1726. He died in 1798. His father was the proprietor of an estate in Flintshire, north Wales, to which he succeeded at the age of thirty-seven. He devoted almost all his spare time to travelling and the study of natural history and antiquities. He is the author of many works, some of which retain a considerable reputation. His 'British Zoology' is a work of much excellence, and his 'Tour in Scotland' obtained for him a high character as an accurate observer. He made that country much better known to the English than it had hitherto been, and he assisted Lightfoot materially in his excellent work 'The Flora Scotica.' Amongst his other works we may more particularly mention his 'Synopsis of Quadrupeds,' and the 'Arctic Zoology;' his 'Tour through Wales,' and the 'Antiquities of London.' He was a fellow of the Royal and Antiquarian Societies, and many others, both at home and abroad, and corresponded with Linnæus, Buffon, Haller, and many of the distinguished men of the day. Foster has named a genus of plants after him, Pennantia. [W.B.]

PENNI, G. F., a Florentine painter, 1488-1528. His brother, LUCAS, born about 1500.

PENNICUIK, A., a Scot. physician, 1652-1722.

PENNY, EDWARD, a painter, 1714-1791.

PENNY, THOMAS, an Engl. naturalist, 16th c.

PENROSE, THOMAS, a poetical wr., 1743-79.

PENRY, or AP HENRY, JOHN, the author of the famous tract which gave him the name by which he is generally known, Martin Mar-Prelate, was born in Wales 1559; and after taking his degree at Oxford became an anabaptist, puritan, as he is variously called. cuted for his opposition to the church

PENTHIEVRE, L. J. M. DE BO De, regarded as one of the most up men of France in the last century, 17

PENTZ, G., a German engraver,

PENZEL, A. J., a Ger. philologist

PEPIN OF HERISTAL, called als GROS, was the stock of the secon Carlovingian line of French kings. H son by the mother's side to Pepin de governed Austrasia in the reign of D stood in the same relation by his famous Arnaud, archbishop of Met bined in his own person the characters statesman, diplomatist, and prince o Pepin of Heristal took his surname fro the Meuse, near Liege, while the Ch derived from his maternal grandfath been chosen as a recommendation to Austrasia. The Austrasians, in fact, mayor of the palace of Neustria, becau governor by the death of Dagobert preferred the hazard of a contest Pepin, to the yoke of the well-known a struggle was then begun which assassination of the latter, and ma Heristal the virtual master of the Fran It is an historical question how far and the Dagoberts contributed to of this family, who at length ove dynasty, but there can be no doubt facts,—1, that it was the period between the local and the national po we often recognize at a later age in of feudalism; and 2, that the Merovin line of kings, descended from Clovis, a feeble, cruel, and debauched race. reigned nominally during this strug exception to the rule in point of fee when Ebroin was vanquished, who ha over him as well as the people, h make the amende honorable to the been injured. It was the disaffecti duced that armed the followers of P their common sovereign, and the ki feated, found that he had exchang hated by all his subjects for one wh garded as their saviour. Pepin, be tented himself with the old title, 'M Palace,' and not only propped up Th but crowned three of his descendant who are called in French history, Les R —'Do-nothing kings.' The real pow grasped in the hands of Pepin Herist dued the tributary princes by contin and consolidated the order of the daring to assume the pageantry of it. 714, leaving his natural son, Charl take the next step in advance, which administering the kingdom, not w of king indeed, but with the throu vacant.

PEPIN LE BREF, son of Charles grandson of the preceding, is the France of the Carlovingian dynasty ceeded to his father's authority conjo brother Carloman, in 741, and by throne with Childeric, a foolish prince of the Merovingian line, surnamed 'the idiot,' acquired the sanction necessary to support the continued assumption of power by his own family. While Childeric acted the part of the roi fainéant, Pepin le Bref, so named from his short stature, was reaping glory in the field, and in 746 was left without a competitor by the retirement of Carloman to a monastery. The clergy and the pope were easily conciliated in favour of a power which promised to preserve the church from the surrounding anarchy, and stop the progress of the Saracens, now spread as far as the south of France. In 750, therefore, Pepin le Bref dethroned Childeric, and having shaved off his long hair, which was an essential character of royalty with the Merovingian kings, confined him in a monastery. In 752 he caused himself to be consecrated at Soissons, and in 754 received the pope himself (Stephen II.) as a petitioner for intervention in Italy. This was the beginning of the Frankish empire, successor of the old Roman, which had ended in universal anarchy. Pepin and his queen Bertha were crowned in the church of St. Denis by the pope, and the king then accompanied him into Italy at the head of an army, besieged Astolphus, king of the Lombards, in Pavia, and compelled him to abandon his pretensions to the sovereignty of Rome and the exarchate of Ravenna. Another expedition was rendered necessary by the revolt of Astolphus, who was again subdued by the champion of the church, who also obtained a signal victory over the Saracens, reunited Aquitaine to his kingdom, and waged successful war against the German princes. Pepin le Bref died in the seventeenth year of his reign, 768, and was succeeded by Charlemagne. It is admitted by late historians that this change of dynasty was coincident with the elevation of the eastern Franks, whose fresher energy, guided by the chiefs of the Pepin family, enabled them to push upwards to the seat of government, and take the place of their feebler kindred. [E.R.]

PEPIN, the second son of Charlemagne, born 776, became king of Italy 781, died 810.

PEPIN, the first of the name, king of Aquitaine, was the son of Louis le Débonnaire, and was born 803. Aquitaine was apportioned to him in 817, died 838. The second of the name was son of the preceding, died in a monastery 864.

PEPIN, M., a Flemish painter, born 1578.

PEPOLI, a rich Italian family who aimed at the sovereign power in Bologna, 14th century.

PEPOLI, A. H., an Italian poet, 1757-1796.

PEPUSCH, JOHN CHRISTOPHER, one of the greatest theoretical musicians of modern times, was born at Berlin, about 1667. He came to London in 1700, and was engaged as musician at Drury Lane theatre, where it is believed he assisted in adapting the operas which were performed there. In 1713, the university of Oxford admitted him to the degree of Doctor in Music. At the instance of Gay and Rich he undertook to compose and adapt the music for the 'Beggar's Opera.' Having written a paper on the ancient genera, which was read before the Royal Society, and published in the Philosophical Transactions, in the year 1746, he was afterwards was elected a fellow of the Royal Society. He died in 1752. [J.M.]

PEPYS, SAMUEL, born in 1632, was the son of a tailor in London, but related to persons of distinction, whose patronage procured him public offices, and introduced him into aristocratic society. After having served with much ability as a clerk in the Navy Board, he became secretary of the Admiralty under Charles II., and held the place till the Revolution. He died in 1703. Pepys was one of the strangest of mortals: with great talents and activity in business he united a considerable knowledge of several of the fine arts, and a sufficient turn for science to make him no unworthy president of the Royal Society: he was a man of much shrewd observation on the follies of others and the habits of his time, and yet himself a fop and an egotist, vain to the extreme of the ridiculous, and delighting in trifling and gossipping as much as in his more serious occupations. His own character is most amusingly shown, and that of his profligate age most instructively painted, in his 'Memoirs' and correspondence. A collection of books and manuscripts which he bequeathed to Magdalen College, Oxford, contained 2,000 old English ballads, which were among the chief authorities of Percy in the compilation of his 'Reliques.' [W.S.]

PERANDA, S., a Venetian painter, 1566-1638.

PERAU, GABRIEL LOUIS CALABRE, a French writer, author of the 'Secrets of the Freemasons,' a continuation of the 'Lives of Illustrious Men of France,' and editor of editions of Rabelais, Boileau, and Bossuet, 1700-1767.

PERAULT, W., a Dominican writer, died 1275.

PERCEVAL, JOHN, fifth baronet of the family, and first earl of Egmont, was born at Barton, in Yorkshire, 1683, and died 1748. He was one of the founders of the colony of Georgia, and wrote several works of temporary interest. His son, of the same name, second earl of Egmont, was a member of parliament, and one of the privy council on the accession of George III. He was raised to the peerage by the title of Lord Lovel and Holland, and wrote some political tracts. Born at Westminster 1711, died 1770. His second son is the subject of the following notice.

PERCEVAL, SPENCER, a lawyer and statesman, the second son of John Lord Egmont, was born in the year 1762. His education appears to have been private until he entered Trinity College, Cambridge. He was called to the bar from Lincoln's Inn, in 1786. This connection was of a sort which, at that time, secured immediate success even to ordinary abilities. He was made a king's counsel in 1796, when he entered parliament. He attracted the notice of Pitt by a constitutional pamphlet, and soon found himself in the path to political or professional advancement as he might incline. In 1801 he was made solicitor, and in 1802, attorney-general. When the Grenville ministry was overturned in 1807, he led the new ministry as chancellor of the exchequer. This appointment marked the decided opposition of the new government to the tolerant views which had destroyed its predecessors. Perceval is one of the few men in the rank of statesmen, in this country, whose names are associated with rancour or intolerant religious views, and they seem in him to have sprung less from a desire to oppress than from a cold ungenial nature. One of his rivals said that he was like a fish, and the comparison seems to have been accepted by those who knew him. On the 11th of May, 1812, he was shot while passing through the lobby of the House of Commons by a man named Bellingham. Great alarm was, of course, felt that the maniac represented some political or religious combination, but it was soon discovered that his enmity was entirely on personal grounds. [J.H.B.]

PERCIVAL, THOMAS, a physician, who practised his profession at Manchester, and was dist. as an ethical and miscellaneous writer, 1740-1804.

PERCLIGIA, a Turkish visionary, who excited a commotion in Natolia, and was put to death, declaring himself an apostle of God, in 1418.

PERCY, the family name of a follower of William the Conqueror, from whom sprang the lords of Alnwick, in Northumberland. The members of this family best known to history are—WILLIAM DE PERCY, whose grand-daughters were married to the earl of Warwick, and to the brother-in-law of Henry I. After him a HENRY DE PERCY, reign of Edward I. A second HENRY was married to the Princess Mary of Lancaster, in the reign of Edward III., and it was his sons whom Richard II. created respectively earl of Northumberland and earl of Worcester. The latter was beheaded after the victory of Henry IV., near Shrewsbury, while the son of the former, HENRY PERCY, called 'Hotspur,' fell gallantly in the battle; and his father, Northumberland, was killed in Yorkshire 1408. The son of Hotspur was restored by Henry V. to the title of earl of Northumberland, and was killed in the battle of St. Albans 1455.

PERCY, PETER FRANCIS, Baron, a French army surgeon, time of Napoleon, famous for his professional skill and devoted zeal, and the contriver of perambulating hospitals, which he organized for the army of the Rhine, 1754-1825.

PERCY, THOMAS, the well-known editor of 'Ancient English Poetry,' was the son of a grocer of Shropshire, who was educated at Oxford, and became a minister, and finally a prelate, in the Church of England. He was born 1729, obtained a vicarage in Northamptonshire 1756, and commenced his literary career by publishing a Chinese romance in 1761. The fame of his first-named publication procured him an introduction to the Percies of Northumberland, and he became, in 1765, chaplain to the duke. In 1770 he published the 'Hermit of Warkworth,' and his translation of Mallet's 'Northern Antiquities' Died at his episcopal palace of Dromore 1811.

PERDICCAS, one of the generals of Alexander the Great, killed while aiming at the sovereignty after the death of Alexander, 322 B.C.

PEREDA, A., a Spanish painter, 1599-1669.

PEREFIXE, HARDOUIN DE BEAUGMONT DE, a French prelate and historian, 1605-1670.

PEREGRINUS, a Cynic philosopher, 2d cent.

PEREIRA, D. NUNEZ ALVAREZ, a Portuguese statesman and commander, 1360-1431.

PEREIRA-DE-FIGUEIREDO, ANTONIO, a Portuguese ecclesiastic, theologian, and ecclesiastical historian, 1725-1797.

PEREIRA, G., a Spanish physician, 16th cent.

PEREIRA, JONATHAN, late physician to the London Hospital, distinguished for his knowledge of pharmacy and general science, author of 'Elements of Materia Medica.' Born of h tage at Shoreditch 1804, died 1853.

PEREIRE, JACOB RODRIJUES, a famous as a teacher of the deaf and du

PEREYRA, D., a Portug. painter, PEREYRA, M., a Portug. sculptor
PEREYRA, V., a Spanish painter,
PEREZ, A., a Spanish painter, 16
PEREZ, A., a Spanish jurisconsult

PEREZ, DAVID, who was born of rents at Naples, in the year 1711, musical education from Antonio Gall cisco Mancini. He early showed a genius for music, and his progress i remarkably rapid. After having broug at Palermo and in Naples, he was invi
where he soon became extremely 1752, Joseph, king of Portugal, offered ation of chapel-master at Lisbon, w accepted, and where his talents we prized as they had been in Sicily and died in the service of the king of P sixty-seven years, after having reside much admired and respected, during twenty-seven years. Though wanting compositions were valuable from the ge and power displayed in them. Like H was blind during the latter years of when labouring under this severe dep confined to his bed, he frequently, wi
of any instrument, dictated compositio parts. Besides twelve operas, he sacred music, which possesses almos beauty.

PEREZ, DON ANTONIO, a Spanish celebrated by the unhappy story of hi Princess d'Eboli, mistress of Philip persecution it brought upon him.
also as an historian. Died in poverty a

PEREZ, J., a Spanish writer, 1512

PERGOLA, ANGELO DE LA, one able Ghibeline commanders of Italy, d

PERGOLESI, GIOVANNI BATTIS near Naples, about the year 1704, and under Gaetano Greco, and Durante.
covered that music, previous to his ov
too much loaded with mere scientific en he determined to leave the style in w
been taught, and to adopt the more n simple one of Vinci and Hasse. He c eral operas, which did not meet with His sacred compositions, however, w preciated, and upon these his fame no died of consumption in 1737, and his death made public, than all the c
that had paid no attention to his wo was alive, strove which should do m
them when he was dead; and every p anxious to possess even the most t compositions.

PERI, J. D., an Italian poet, 17th

PERIANDER, who is one of the sages of Greece, was a tyrant of Corin ceeded his father, Cypselus, B.C. 633,
the reputation of an able ruler B.C. 56
man of licentious manners, and, in t
of his reign, became a cruel ruler.

PERICLES, the greatest of Athens
was the son of Xanthippus, the conque and Agarista, niece of the famous Cleisthenes. The date of his birth is unknown, but as he first took a share in public business in B.C. 469, we may legitimately infer that he was born soon after the beginning of the fifth century B.C. He early gave indications of a mind capable of great achievements, and, following his natural inclinations, spent his youth in retirement, devoting himself to those studies which he felt to be best calculated for fitting him to enter upon political life. His rank and fortune opened to him the schools of the most eminent teachers of their respective arts and sciences. He was taught the higher music by Damon, who contributed mainly to train him for his political career; was initiated into the subtleties of the Eleatic school under Zeno, and especially profited by the philosophical teaching of Anaxagoras, with whom he was long united in intimate friendship. By his intercourse with the last named philosopher, his habits of thought, and also the style and tone of his eloquence, were believed to have been formed; and an abiding effect on his future life was produced by the sublime speculations to which he listened. No specimens of his oratory remain to us; but by the unanimous testimony of ancient authors it is admitted to have been of the highest kind. In the year B.C. 469, two years after the ostracism of Themistocles, and about the time of the death of Aristides, Pericles began to engage in the political movements of the time. His hereditary prepossessions led him to espouse the cause of the people, and his pre-eminent talents, combined with untiring assiduity in public affairs, soon placed him at the head of the democratical party, and in opposition to Cimon, who was the acknowledged leader of the aristocracy. From this period till his death, the biography of Pericles is the history of his country. He aimed his first blow at the aristocracy through the council of the Areopagus, which, notwithstanding the powerful opposition of Cimon, he succeeded in depriving of its judicial power, except in inconsiderable cases. This triumph was soon followed by the ostracism of Cimon, an event which for some time left him without a formidable rival. After B.C. 444 the power of Pericles was nearly absolute. But the boundless influence which he had thus acquired was not debased by the promotion of selfish objects. Averse to the further extension by conquest of the Athenian dominions, he employed himself chiefly in consolidating the empire already acquired, in establishing the surplus population as additional colonies, and proving, when necessary, by military achievements, which place him high as a commander, that the resources at his disposal were sufficient to maintain the position which he claimed for his country. Believing that the supremacy of Athens rested on her maritime superiority, he bestowed especial care on the navy, and maintained a well-trained fleet in constant readiness for action. But Pericles found a more congenial occupation in cultivating the arts of peace. The public funds, which had been greatly increased by his management, were expended in the erection of those magnificent temples and public buildings which rendered Athens the wonder and admiration of Greece. Architecture and sculpture attained to a degree of perfection which modern ages have in vain endeavoured to rival, poetry started into full maturity, and the drama, in the hands of Sophocles, reached the highest excellence. From these peaceful pursuits Pericles was withdrawn by the Peloponnesian war (B.C. 431), which he lived to conduct for the first two years. At the conclusion of the first campaign he delivered the funeral oration in honour of those who had fallen, a speech which, as reported by Thucydides, is one of the most remarkable of all the compositions of antiquity. During the following year Athens was visited by the plague, which carried off his two sons, his sister, and most of his intimate friends. In the middle of the succeeding year (B.C. 429) Pericles died of a lingering illness, which was perhaps connected with the epidemic, though not attended by any of its violent symptoms. [G.F.]

[Pericles—From an Ancient Bust.]

PERIER, Casimir, a statesman of the reign of Louis Philippe, was born at Grenoble 1777, and from 1798 to 1800, or shortly after, served in the French army. In 1802 he commenced those commercial and manufacturing speculations, by which he acquired an immense fortune; in 1816 brought himself into notice by a financial pamphlet, and in 1817 was elected one of the deputies for the Seine. From that period till 1830 he opposed the ministry, and on the 30th July became minister of the interior. He succeeded Lafitte as head of the government, in March, 1831. Died 1832.

PERIER, James Constantine, associated with his brother, Charles, in the famous cannon foundries of Chaillot and Liege, and more lately in the manufacture of steam engines, was born at Paris 1742, and died 1818. He is author of an 'Essay on Steam Engines,' the construction of which he had studied in England.

PERIERS, B. De, a French writer, died 1544.

PERIGNON, Dominique Catherine, Marquis De, a peer and marshal of France, was born 1754, became a deputy to the legislative assembly 1791, succeeded Dugommier, and distinguished himself at the battle of Escola 1794, ambassador to Madrid 1796, marshal 1804, governor of Parma and Placenza 1806, and successor of Jourdan at Naples 1808, joined the Bourbons, and became a peer after the fall of Napoleon; died 1818.

PERINGSKIOELD, JOHN, professor at Upsala, and secretary and antiquary to the king of Sweden, 1654-1720.

PERKINS, ELISHA, and his son, BENJAMIN DOUGLAS, American physicians, known as advocates of metallic tractors as a means of healing, once famous by the name of PERKINISM; the latter died 1799.

PERKINS, WILLIAM, a minister of the Church of Eng., kn. as a Calvinistic theologian, 1558-1602.

PERNETTI, DOM ANTHONY JOSEPH, a learned French ecclesiastic of the Benedictine order, author of a curious Historical Journal of a voyage to the Falkland Isles, where he accompanied Bougainville; a Dictionary of Painting, Sculpture, and Engraving, a Dictionary of Hermetic Philosophy and Mythology, and several works on physiognomy and ethnology. He also published a translation of Columella, of Wolff's Mathematics, and of some of Swedenborg's works, 1716-1801. His brother, JAMES, a priest, and historiographer to the city of Lyons, 1696-1777.

PÉRON, F., a French naturalist, 1775-1810.

PERONI, J., an Italian sculptor, 1627-1663.

PEROTTI, N., a Italian grammarian, 1430-80.

PEROUSE. See LAPEROUSE.

PERPENNA, a Roman general, and partizan of Marius, put to death by Pompey B.C. 74.

PERPINIAN, P. J., a Spanish painter and theologian, one of the best modern Latinists, d. 1566.

PERRAULT, CHARLES, a French barrister, who became comptroller-general of the royal buildings, and a member of the Academy, and acquired great celebrity as a literateur and a poet, was born at Paris 1628. He commenced that famous controversy concerning the comparative merits of the ancients and moderns, in which Boileau advocated the former and Perrault the latter. His principal work is The Age of Louis XIV. Died 1703. CLAUDE, brother of the preceding, celebrated as an architect, mechanician, and naturalist, flourished 1613-1688. Among his artistic productions are the colonnade of the Louvre, and most of the vases which ornament the gardens of Versailles. The principal of his writings are a Translation of Vitruvius, Memoirs of the Natural History of Animals, and Medical Essays. PETER, a third brother, wrote on fountains, 1674. NICHOLAS, a fourth brother, died young in 1661, and left a treatise entitled 'La Morale des Jésuits,' which was published in 1667.

PERREAU, J. A., a French writer, 1749-1813.

PERREIN, J., a French naturalist, 1750-1805.

PERIER. See DUPERIER.

PERRIER, F., a French painter, 1590-1650

PERRIER, F., a French jurist, 1645-1700.

PERRIN, A. S., a French painter, 1761-1832.

PERRON. See DUPERRON.

PERRONNET, JOHN RODOLPH, a celebrated French engineer and bridge builder, 1708-1794

PERROT, SIR J., a naval officer, died 1592.

PERROT D'ABLANCOURT, NICHOLAS, a Fr. wr., au. of several classical translations, 1606-64.

PERRY, JAMES, known as a miscellaneous writer and journalist, was son of a man of business at Aberdeen, where he was born 1756. He came to London 1777, and was employed as a reporter on the General Advertiser and the Evening Post. In 1782 he projected and edited the European Magazine, and finally became sole edi prietor of the Morning Chronicle. It suggestion that the modern plan of re adopted, by employing a succession instead of a single one. Died 1821.

PERRY, JOHN, an English engineer ler, au. of 'The Present State of Russi

PERSEUS, or PERSES, the last ki don, was a natural son of Philip V., w ceeded B.C. 179. He was vanquished mans B.C. 167, and died in prison at PERSEUS, AULUS FLACCUS, a Ro who directed his shafts against the ruption of the times, and died young.

PERSIUS, a Roman orator, 2d cen

PERTI, J. A., an Italian composer,

PERTINAX, PUBLIUS HELVIUS, t of Commodus as emperor of Rome, wa a charcoal burner, and was born 126, of Adrian. He was assas. by the praeto three months of his elevation to the th

PERUGIUS, PIETRO, whose family VANUCCI, is most celebrated as the Raphael. He was born at Citta Della Perugia, 1446; and first distinguished a 'Descent from the Cross,' painted fo of Saint Chiara, at Florence, 1485. best pictures is said to be an Infant C Albani Palace, at Rome. Died 1524.

PERUSE, J. DE LA, a French poet

PERUZZI, B., an Italian painter, 1

PESARESE, the surname of SIM RINI, an Italian painter and engraver, PESCATORE, GIAMBATTISTA, an and senator of Ravenna, died 1558.

PESCENNIUS NIGER, CAIUS, a Syria, proclaimed emperor of Rome at the death of Pertinax 193, slain 195.

PESSELIER, CHARLES STEPHEN dramatic author and poet, 1712-1763.

PESTALOZZI, HENRY, descend family of Italian origin, was born at January, 1745. He was educated for and even commenced preaching, bu reason abandoned this occupation w twenty-eight years of age. He then the law, wrote an essay on the Con Sparta, and on discovering the intens of the profession, bound himself appr farmer. With the experience thus spent the remainder of his property in t and cultivation of a piece of land, sake of employing the poor became cotton mill; it is probable that he w both these enterprises by the 'Æmilia seau, which afforded him a view of his and the only one which he could recon benevolent feelings. He began his e educator on his farm of Neuhof, b orphan children into his own house, w vided with food, clothing, and edu Helvetic government refusing to take ance of his projects. This was in 177 however, some time after publishing romance, entitled 'Leonard and Gertru he partly developed his ideas, he wa by the Swiss Directory to the charge number of children who had been left the French wars. He was allowed t suppressed convent at Stantz, the capital of Underwalden, and being compelled to abandon this by the approach of the French army, was transferred to the canton of Berne, where the chateau of Burgdorf, with its surrounding domain, was placed at his disposal. Pestalozzi availed himself of this opportunity to enlarge his plans, pupils flocked to him who paid for their instruction, and he was able to engage assistants. In 1804, after a temporary removal elsewhere, he established himself in the castle of Yverdun, in the canton of Vaud, which, with its surrounding estate, was generously given to him by that government. This change had been rendered necessary by the increase of his pupils, and Yverdun became a normal school, where young men of all nations surrounded the venerable philanthropist, and were instructed in his new system of education. The fame of Pestalozzi was widely spread, and his name everywhere honoured. The canton of Zurich nominated him member of the Helvetic Consulta, convened by Buonaparte, and the emperor of Russia graced him with the order of St. Wladimir. He continued at Yverdun till 1825, when he retired to Neuhof, and in 1826 was named president of the Helvetic Society of Olten. Meantime, indeed, for some years past, the institution of Yverdun had been going to ruin, and soon after the retirement of Pestalozzi, his successor, M. Schmidt, was ordered to leave the country. The works of this great benefactor are 'Leonard and Gertrude,' already mentioned, 'How Gertrude Instructs her Children,' 'Researches on the Course of Nature in the Education of the Human Race,' 'Elementary Education,' and several others, developing his plan of instruction by objects, the essential principle of which is the drawing forth of the internal faculties. Whatever may be thought of his system as a whole, the present generation is deeply indebted to Pestalozzi for the fresher thoughts and experiments which his plans suggested. It is his grand distinction to be among the first benefactors of the poor—the first to claim for their squalid children the full advantage of all that is impressive in art and beautiful in nature—the first to share his bread with them, and to dwell amongst them, as a poor man himself, in order, as he expresses it, that he might 'Teach those harassed with poverty to live as men.' [E.R.]

[Tomb of Pestalozzi.]

PESTALOZZI, J. J., a physician and professional writer at Lyons, 1674-1742. ANTHONY JOSEPH, probably his son, a physician, 1703-1779.

PESTEL, F. W., a German jurist, 1724-1805.

PETAN, PAUL, a chronologist and antiquarian, flourished at Orleans, 1568-1614. His great-nephew, DENIS, commonly called Petavius, one of the most learned chronologists of his age, 1583-1652.

PETAVIUS, DIONYSIUS. See PETAN.

PETER, THE APOSTLE, whose name was originally Simon, was born at Bethsaida, in Galilee, and was about forty years of age when he became a follower of our Lord. He is supposed to have suffered martyrdom at Rome, along with Paul, 65.

PETER, the name of five saints of Rome:—1. A bishop of Alexandria, martyred 311 under Maximinus. 2. PETER, surnamed Chrysologus, an Italian prelate, author of Sermons and Homilies, died 452. 3. An archbishop of Tarentaise, died 1174. 4. PETER NOLASQUE, founder of the order for the redemption of Christian slaves from the infidels, entitled 'The Confraternity of Mercy,' died 1256. 5. PETER OF ALCANTARA, a Franciscan friar, 1499-1562.

PETER I., emperor of Russia (next article.) PETER II., son of Alexis Petrowitz and the Princess Charlotte of Brunswick Wolfenbuttel, born 1715, succeeded Catharine I. 1727, died 1730. PETER III., son of Anne, eldest daughter of Peter I. and of Charles Frederic, duke of Holstein Gottorp, born 1728, was created grand duke by his sister, Elizabeth, 1742, and succeeded her 1762. He was put to death the same year by his wife, Catharine, who succeeded him as Catharine II.

PETER THE FIRST, czar of Russia, was born May 30, 1672. He is usually called PETER THE GREAT, nor can the epithet be justly denied to the man who gave his country sea ports, commerce, fleets, and manufactures, arts, and educational institutions; and who changed the despised and barbarous Muscovy, which our ancestors spoke of as we now speak of Timbuctoo, into the Russia whose ambitious schemes and preponderating force all the world now anxiously watches. Moreover, the exploits which Peter achieved, were mainly due to his own innate strength of character, and not to the favourable coincidence of circumstances. If it be true that the secret of greatness lies in energy of the will, in resolute endurance, and in self-sacrifice, there are few historical personages in whom its elements have been more strongly developed than in the imperial organizer of the Russian power. Peter succeeded to the crown of Russia at the age of ten; but his half-sister Sophia, who held the regency, strove not only to keep him as long as possible from the exercise of power, but to render him unfit for it, by giving him a purposely defective education, and by placing in his way, as he grew up, every temptation to idleness and sensuality. Much of the coarseness, the vice, and the savage violence which deformed Peter's career in after life, may be traced to the taints thus early given to his moral system; the spirit must have been surpassingly strong and self-relying that could rise to any greatness in manhood, after a boyhood and early youth of such neglect and corruption. In 1689 Peter emancipated himself from the regent's domination, and took the reins of government into his own hands. He strove hard to repair the defects of his education; he acquired, almost entirely by self-teaching, a knowledge of several foreign languages; he studied earnestly the mechanical arts, especially such as related to ship-building; his darling object being to give Russia ships and commerce, though, when he began his reign, she possessed no sea-port except that of Archangel in the northern sea. He endeavoured also to form a body of troops on the model of the armies of the civilized nations of western Europe. He exercised them in hostilities against the Turks and Tartars on his south-eastern frontier, during which he gained the important city of Azoph. In 1697, having provided for the safety of his empire, and left troops under the command of the best of the foreign officers who had aided him in his reforms, so as to curb any reactionary movements of the discontented part of his subjects, Peter travelled as a private person through Germany, Holland, and England. He laboured hard to improve his knowledge of ship-building, and other useful parts of practical knowledge. To do this the more effectually he worked with his own hands as a common shipwright in the dockyard at Amsterdam, and afterwards in the English yard at Deptford. During his absence from Russia the Strelitzes (the old Muscovite soldiers) mutinied, but were put down by General Gordon, whom Peter had left in command of his new troops. Peter hurried back to Russia, and punished the mutineers with frightful cruelty. He now proceeded with renewed vehemence in the changes of manners and dress, as well as the introduction of useful arts, which he forced upon his barbarous subjects. In his zeal to do good he was too frequently injudicious in choosing times and seasons for the work; and the least show of opposition irritated him into ferocity, which was fearfully aggravated by the habit of drunkenness, which he had acquired during his neglected youth, and from which he never set himself free. In 1700 the war between him and Charles XII. of Sweden commenced. At first the Swedes always defeated the Russians; but Peter was not disheartened. He recruited his armies; improved their discipline, and foretold that in the long run the Swedes would teach them how to win. Charles XII. neglected the coast of the Baltic; and Peter took advantage of this to pour troops into Ingria, Carelia, Livonia, and Esthonia. In 1702 he laid the foundation of St. Petersburg Not less than 100,000 lives are said sacrificed in raising the future capi among the swamps, where Peter or tion, and where, with characteristic purpose and indifference to human urged on the completion of the work,

[House in which Peter lived at Zaandam.]

aware of its perils and difficulties.
defeated Charles XII. in the deci
Pultowa; and when the war betwee
Russia was ended, by the peace of Ny
Russia gained as part of her domi
Esthonia, and Livonia. Her empire w planted along the coast of the Baltic
fluence upon Poland, and other easte Europe, christendom, was developi paramount ascendancy. Peter was in his wars against the Turks. In on the Pruth in 1711, his army was the enemy; and he was only saved b of his empress, Catharine, who was who succeeded in either bribing or p
Grand Vizier of the Turks into a which the Russian army was permi and peace was restored, though at t restoration of Azoph. In his fam perienced heavy sorrows. His first duced mutual unhappiness; and h
Alexis, thwarted all his projects,
himself with the disaffected party,
abolish all Peter's reforms and r Muscovite fashions. Peter compell renounce all claim to the succes
him before a high court, which cond death. Two days after this, Alexis
It was said that he sickened when that his illness was natural; but th of his death is a mystery. Peter favourite wife, Catharine, was a Liv girl, who married a Swedish soldier, prisoner of war to Peter's favourite zikoff. Menzikoff made her his Peter saw her and fell in love with her as his own. Seven years afterw
he married her; and she ruled Rus
after his death. Peter died in 1725.
collect anecdotes of coarse debauch frantic cruelty, and injudicious obst acts of his long reign. But, to estim he and his deeds must be taken for their grand result upon his country'
be considered. Nor must the defe tages of his early education be eve
those who sit in judgment on his ruler and a man. His last words that in respect of the good I have d people, God will pardon my sins.'

PETER, king of Castile, surnam
born 1334, succeeded his father, 1350, assassinated, after a cruel re
his natural brother, 1369.

PETER I., king of Arragon,
King of Navarre, reigned 1094-110
succeeded his father, Alphonso II., put himself at the head of the Alli defeated and killed at the battle of by Simon de Montfort, 1212. Pe 1239, succeeded his father, James inherited the kingdom of Sicily b with Constance, daughter of Manfred. He took an active part in the expulsion of the French, and was crowned in Sicily, after the massacre of the Sicilian vespers, 1282; died 1285, after sustaining, gloriously, a war with Charles of Anjou and Philip of France. PETER IV., born 1319, succeeded his father, Alphonso IV., 1336, died, after a fruitless war for the sovereignty of Castile, 1387.

PETER I., king of Sicily, same as Peter III. of Arragon. PETER II., son of Frederick I., was crowned 1321, during the lifetime of his father, and succeeded him 1337, died 1342.

PETER I., king of Portugal, born 1320, succeeded his father, Alphonso IV., 1357; died, after a beneficent reign, 1367. This prince was secretly married to Inez de Castro, who was murdered by order of his father 1339. PETER II., second son of John IV., born 1648, became regent after the fall of his brother, Alphonso VI., 1667, compelled Spain to recognize the independence of Portugal 1668. On the death of Alphonso, 1683, he received the title of king; died, while effecting the conquest of Estramadura, 1706.

PETER, king of Hungary, reigned 1038-1047.

PETER I., king of the Bulgarians, succeeded his father 927. His reign was troubled with internal dissensions, and wars with the Russians and Greeks; died 970. PETER II., obtained the royal power, in association with his brother, Asan, 1186, and they were both slain about 1195.

PETER I., king of Cyprus and Jerusalem, succeeded his father, Hugh IV., 1361, and was assassinated 1367. PETER II., son and successor of the preceding, died 1382.

PETER I., duke of Brittany, succeeded by his marriage with Alix, daughter of Guy, 1212, and, after her death in 1221, became chief of the league of the great vassals against Blanche of Castile. He went to Palestine 1240, accompanied Louis IX. to Egypt 1248, and died on the voyage home. PETER II., second son of John VI., succeeded his brother, Francis I., 1450, died 1457.

PETER, count of Savoy, surnamed 'the Little Charlemagne,' succeeded his father, 1263, d. 1268.

PETER OF ALCANTARA. See above (Saints.)

PETER OF ST. ANDREW, a theologian, philosopher, and hist. of the Carmelite order, 1624-71.

PETER OF BLOIS, an ecclesiastic who settled in England in the reign of Henry II., and is esteemed one of the most learned men of his age, died about 1200.

PETER CHRYSOLOGUS. See above (Saints.)

PETER OF CLUGNY, an abbot of that monastery, called also PETER THE VENERABLE, and by his proper name PETER MAURICE, a distinguished theologian and Latin poet. He was born 1092 or 1094, became abbot after Hugh II. in 1122 or 1123, and in 1140 gave shelter to the unfortunate Abelard, and interceded for him at Rome. Died 1156. His works were published in 1522.

PETER OF COTTONA, a name by which the Italian painter, F. Berettini, is known, 1596-1669.

PETER THE HERMIT, preacher and leader of the first crusade, was born in the eleventh century, and was first known as an officer in the army of the counts of Boulogne, serving in Flanders, about the year 1071. After this he passed some years in the quiet of domestic life, had several children, and on the death of his wife became a professor of religion, and devoted his days to solitude and austere practices. About 1095 he was led by the prevalent feeling of the age to make a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, then in possession of the Turks, and was deeply impressed by the profanation of the holy places, the indignities suffered by the pilgrims, and the general oppression to which the Christian inhabitants of the East were then subject. The same feeling was universal throughout Christendom, and the popes had long cherished the design of an expedition against the Mahommedans, which it only required the enthusiasm of a man like Peter the Hermit to render practicable. Urban II. received him as a prophet, and authorized his mission. He now traversed the greater part of continental Europe, riding on an ass, his head and feet bare, his body clothed with the coarse garment of a hermit, girded round the waist with a rope, and bearing a heavy crucifix in his hand. To understand his success, we must take into account the poverty of the masses, and the alluring prospect of a residence in Eastern lands, the scenes of which were painted in glowing colours by the apostle of the holy war. Thousands of outcasts had always been ready to follow the princes in their marauding expeditions or political wars, and how much more in a war which enlisted the highest sympathies of their nature in its behalf, which received the sanction of the ministers of religion, and was regarded as the will of God! The pope summoned a council, which met at Placenza and Clermont, and making an eloquent appeal to the assembly, was frequently interrupted by their acclamations. He was acknowledged chief of the crusade, and ordered that every one engaged in it should wear a cross of red stuff. Peter, meanwhile, collected a vast body of adventurers, estimated at a hundred thousand souls, from the borders of France and Lorraine, and while Godfrey of Bouillon mustered those of higher rank in a more soldierlike and deliberate manner, proceeded with this fanatic crowd, by way of the Rhine and Danube to the East. Ignorant of the route, and without the means of subsistence, it is fearful to contemplate the disorders and sufferings of such a march. About a third part reached the mountains of Thrace, and Peter himself took refuge in Constantinople, where he awaited the coming of Godfrey of Bouillon. At the same time he induced the emperor Alexis to send troops in aid of his followers, about three or four thousand of whom were rescued. Peter accompanied the army of Godfrey, and was present at the storming of Antioch, and before the capture of Jerusalem addressed the crusaders on the Mount of Olives. He then acted a short time as vicar-general for the patriarch of the holy city—the Jesuit Outreman says, as viceroy. The latter part of his life, like the commencement, is wrapt in obscurity. It is not known when he returned to Europe, but he died in a monastery he had founded in the diocese of Liege, 1115. The movement he had commenced continued to agitate Europe for nearly two centuries, and its general effect upon the march of civilization may be pronounced almost incalculable. [E.R.]

PETER OF ST. LOUIS, a French ecclesiastic of the Carmelite order, kn. as a poet, about 1626-84.

PETER MAURICE. See PETER OF CLUGNY.

PETER NOLASQUE. See above (Saints.)

PETER OF SICILY, a political negotiator in the service of the emperor Basil in 870. He wrote a History of the Manichæans, published 1604.

PETER THE VENERABLE. See P. OF CLUGNY.

PETERBOROUGH, earl of. See MORDAUNT.

PETERKIN, ALEXANDER, son of a Scottish minister, and known of late years as a miscellaneous writer, was born in 1781. He was educated as a solicitor, and, in 1843, was engaged professionally for the Strathbogie clergymen—in the struggle which led to the disruption in the Scottish national church. Died 1846.

PETERS, BONAVENTURA, a Flemish painter, famous for his storms and shipping, 1614-1615. JOHN, his brother and pupil, 1625-1677.

PETERS, C., a German painter, 1808-1830.

PETERS, C., a learned Eng. divine, died 1777.

PETERS, F. L., a Flemish painter, 1606-1654.

PETERS, G., a Dutch painter, born 1580.

PETERS, HUGH, an English Jesuit, known as the counsellor and confessor of James II.

PETERS, HUGH, a disreputable character who connected himself with the English republican party as a pamphleteer and pulpit demagogue. He was born in Cornwall 1599, educated at Cambridge, and figured successively as an actor, a minister in the Church of England, and a preacher among the independents. Executed 1660.

PETERS, WILLIAM, a minister of the Church of England, best known as an artist, died 1814.

PETERSEN, H., a Swiss minister, died 1820.

PETERSEN, JOHN WILLIAM, born at Osnaburg 1649, and pastor at Hanover, became celebrated about 1692 for his prophetic announcements. He was then deposed, and died in obscurity. His wife, JEANNE ELEANORA DE MERLAN, partook in his enthusiasm, and published his life.

PETERSEN, P. N., a Ger. musician, 1761-1830.

PETHION DE VILLENEUVE, JEROME, a Girondist leader of the French revolution, was the son of an attorney at Chartres, and was himself an advocate when chosen deputy to the Tiers Etat of the Estates-General. His character placed him in a political situation between the Girondists and Jacobins, but his political and philosophical creed was the same as Brissot's, and he held it sincerely and implacably. He was one of the most zealous parties to the propagation of the 'Rights of Man' as the basis of a constitution, and it was at his instance that the Jacobin Club was reorganized—which led to the foundation of the Cordeliers, and the separation of the more violent members. The nation at this time was with the moderate party, and the influence of Lafayette was only just on the wane. Pethion profited by it, as one of the most practical men in his party, and was successively president of the National Assembly, president of the Criminal Tribunal, and mayor of Paris. In the latter function he succeeded Bailly, November, 1791, and polled twice as many votes as Lafayette. On the famous 20th of June, 1792, when the mob of Paris compelled the king to put on the red cap, Pethion and Louis exchanged angry words; the next day, however, the mayor addressed a proclamation to the people calling upon them to defend the constitution and the king, and to respect his person. He maintained his position as mayor of Paris, after the victory of the Marseillaise on the 10th of August and the dreadful massacres of September, but found it impossible to prevent the excesses on that occasion. Returned to the National Convention, he was unanimously elected its first president, and voted for the king's death, but pronounced in favour of delay. From this time he was identified with the Girondists by the followers of Robespierre, and included in the proscription of that body on the 31st of May, 1793. He was among the few who escaped the guillotine to meet a more miserable fate. Having fled with Buzot and Salles to the department of Calvados, they made a fruitless attempt to raise the populace and were obliged to hide in the woods. Whether they put an end to their own existence, or were starved to death, is not known, but the remains of Buzot and Pethion were found by the gleaners in a corn-field gnawed by wolves. [E.

PETION, ALEXANDER SALIES, president of the republic of Hayti, was a man of colour, born free at Port-au-Prince, 1770, and educated at the military school of Paris. He served with distinction in the French army, and after the expulsion of the English, was an active party in the civil wars of the island. In 1804 Dessalines became chief of the infant republic, and having made himself emperor, was killed in October, 1806. His successor was Christophe, who also assumed the kingly title, and it was against this latter that Petion obtained his most signal victory on the 1st of January, 1808, a year after his own election as president. This success fully established his authority as chief of the republic, and he retained the presidency till his death in 1818, when he was succeeded by his friend General Boyer.

PETIS, FRANCIS, a learned French Orientalist and historian, 1622-1695. His son, FRANCIS PETIS DE LA CROIX, like him, a great Oriental scholar, but also a traveller in the East, and successor as royal interpreter, 1653-1713. MARIE, son of the latter, professor of Arabic in the Royal College, 1698-1751.

PETIT, A., a French medical writer, 1718.

PETIT, A. T., a French physician and writer on experimental philosophy, 1791-1820.

PETIT, F. P. DU, a Fr. naturalist, 1664-1

PETIT, JEAN LOUIS, a celebrated French surgeon, born at Paris on the 13th of March, 1 and died in that city on the 20th of April, 1 aged 76. Petit enjoyed a deservedly great re tion during his lifetime, and was undoubtedly of the founders of modern French surgery. was remarkable for his professional enthusiasm a industry; and his writings are still held in high timation. The first edition of his work on the was published at Paris, in 12mo, in 1705; but, 1758, it was enlarged to two volumes. His treatise Surgical Diseases was a posthumous work, and published by his pupil, Dr. Lesné, in 1774, twenty four years after the author's death. [J.M'C

PETIT, M., an advent. traveller, died 1815.

PETIT, M. A., a French surgeon, 1766-1811.

PETIT, P., a physician, distinguished as a writer on physiology, and Latin poet, 1617-1687.

PETIT, P., a dist. mathematician, 1594-167

PETIT, S., a philologist and theolog., 1594-16

PETIT-DIDIER, MATTHEW, a learned Fren

friend and advocate of ultramonuthor of critical, historical, and lissertations on the Scriptures,
s brother, JOHN JOSEPH, a Jesuit 1664-1756.
UARS, ALBERT DU, a French
of 'Botanic Miscellanies,' d. 1831.
L. B., director-general of the Paris or of several tragedies and trans-25.
JOHN, a famous enameller and
r, born at Geneva 1607, died 1691.
, NICHOLAS, a learned French 1630-1705. His nephew, of the loctor of the Sorbonne, and a very
in favour of Jansenism, 1665-1747.
EL, L. F., a distinguished French 1818. His brother, PHILIP, a llenist, 1749-1815. A third bro-NCIS, an archæologist, 1756-1836.
RAIMOND DE, author of a 'Lib-
Artists,' about 1715-1780.
AS., surgeon to the Charter House,
ished as a botanical wr., d. 1718.
T., a Danish Orientalist, d. 1673.
, FRANCESCO, was born at Arezzo 1304. His father, a Florentine n exiled two years before, in the e which drove out the poet Dante;
Italy for Avignon, where the papal
d. The son was educated there and and then sent to study law at Bo-Petrarch certainly loved the Æneid andects, and copied ancient manu-ingly than law papers, yet the sub-f his public life proves that he did essional pursuits, and that he preor being a useful man of business.
ignon soon after he became of age,
f in possession of a small inherit-ged for some years in an alternastudies and political composition,
y (sombre, perhaps, but not the hat account) as the clerical court year 1327 he conceived an attachignonese lady, young but already ttentions to her were treated much
f course; the admirer was cernitted even to the most innocent cicisbeism: there appears to have e much intercourse between the
do not know with certainty so dy's real name. She became fa-etime, and is still celebrated, as the verses in which Petrarch sang t his passion does seem to have a than a flight of imaginative rkable only for the length of its
for the genius of the person by tertained. About 1338 he retired e years to dwell in the beautiful lûse, near Avignon. He himself thdrawal to the retreat which he
as caused by no reason more senti-
c than his disgust with the licen-
papal court, and the disappoint-es of preferment which the pope
him. Long before this time his mplishments had procured for him
not only distinguished patronage, but frequent and active employment. He now speedily quitted Vaûclûse for Italy, where he became the confidential friend and diplomatic agent of several sovereigns, and skilfully executed missions not only in Italy, but in France and Germany. Though he never took orders, his employers rewarded him by ecclesiastical benefices in the north of Italy; and his longest residences were at Parma, Milan, Padua, and Venice. In 1370, when his health was already failing, through attacks of palpitation and epilepsy, he left Padua for the neighbouring village of Arquà, seated among the lovely Euganean Hills. There he built a house, still preserved, but was hardly ever free from illness till his death in 1374.—Petrarch, whose life was thus active, is immortal in the history of literature in virtue of more claims than one. He is placed as one of the most celebrated of poets in right of his 'Rime,' that is, verses in the modern Italian tongue, of which he was one of the earliest cultivators and refiners. Celebrating in these his visionary love, he modelled the Italian sonnet, and gave to it, and to other forms of lyrical poetry, not only an admirable polish of diction and melody, but a delicacy of poetic feeling which has hardly ever been equalled, and a play of rich fancy which, if it often degenerates into false wit, is as often delightfully and purely beautiful. But, though Petrarch's Sonnets, and Canzoni, and 'Triumphs,' could all be forgotten, he would still be honoured as one of the benefactors of European civilization. No one but Boccaccio shares with him the glory of having been the chief restorer of classical learning. He was himself a voluminous Latin writer, both in prose and verse; and his fame as a poet in his own day, and his coronation in the Roman capitol in 1341, rested on his celebration of the second Punic war in his epic poem 'Africa.' But his greatest merit lay in his having recalled attention to the higher and more correct classical authors;

[Tomb of Petrarch.]

in his having been an enthusiastic and successful agent in reviving the study of the Greek tongue; and in his having been, in his travels and otherwise, an indefatigable collector and preserver of ancient manuscripts. To his care we owe copies of several classical works, which, but for him, would, in all likelihood, have perished. [W.S.]

PETRE, Sir William, a chancery clerk, employed in the visitation of the monasteries by Henry VIII., for which he received a grant of abbey lands and knighthood, died 1572.

PETRI, B., a professor of Brabant, died 1630.

PETRI, C., a Danish divine, 16th century.

PETRI, Suffrid, historiographer of the states of Friesland, secretary to Cardinal Granvella, (see William I. of Nassau), and professor of law at Cologne, author of historical and philological works, died 1597.

PETRI, or PETERSON, Laurence, one of the three principal Swedish reformers, first protestant bishop of Upsala, and a theological writer, 1499-1573. His brother, Olave, also a reformer, whose vehement addresses almost produced a civil war, author of 'Memoirs,' 1497-1562. A third of the name, Jonas Petri, bishop of Linkoping in the 17th century, was author of a Latin and Swedish dictionary, published 1640.

PETROF, Wassilj Petrowitsch, a famous Russian poet and philologist, appointed her reader and councillor of state by Catharine, 1736-1799.

PETRONI, R., an Italian cardinal, died 1314.

PETRONIUS, Titus, called 'Petronius Arbiter,' a favourite of Nero, and supposed author of a fragment entitled 'Satiricon,' died 66.

PETRUCCI, Pandolph, a citizen of Sienna who obtained the sovereign power, and died 1512.

PETTUS, Sir John, a member of parliament, and deputy-governor of the royal mines, author of some professional and other works, died abt. 1690.

PETTY, Sir William, son of a clothier in Hampshire, and founder of the Lansdowne family, was born 1623, and being educated as a physician, became, in 1650, professor of anatomy at Oxford. His talents, however, were of the most versatile description, and he had the happy gift of turning them to some practical account in every way that promised to be a source of emolument; not satisfied with teaching anatomy and chemistry, he became Gresham professor of music; and as to inventions, a copying machine to write two letters at once, and a double-bottomed ship to sail against wind and tide, show what he was capable of. In 1652 he was appointed physician to the army in Ireland, to which he added the office of contractor for surveying the forfeited lands, one of the commissioners for their division, clerk to the council, and secretary to the lord-lieutenant, Henry Cromwell. With the wealth thus amassed, he became a member of parliament in the time of Richard Cromwell; and as he succeeded in making his peace at the restoration, his lands were confirmed to him, with the honour of knighthood in addition, and the office of surveyor-general of Ireland. Even the fire of London, which destroyed the fortunes of so many, only provoked Sir W. Petty to fresh speculations, by which he recovered his losses. He died 1687, leaving great wealth to his successors, and numerous tracts on economy, especially 'Political Arithmetic,' 'Taxes and Contributions,' and other subjects growing out of his knowledge of Ireland. For his descendant, the celebrated statesman, see Shelburne.

PETTYT, or PETYT, William, keeper of the Tower records, author of writings on Constitution of Parliament, 1636-170

PEUCER, G., a Ger. mathematicia

PEUERBACH, G., an Austr. astr

PEUTEMAN, P., a Dutch painter

PEUTINGER, C., a Gr. antiquar

PEYER, J. C., a Germ. anatomist

PEYMANN, Henry Ernest D general, commander of Copenhage bombardment by the English in 18 tried by his countrymen for signing the and condemned to death,—a punis was commuted to a long imprisonmen

PEYRARD, F., a Fr. mathematic

PEYRE, Marie Joseph, a Fre 1730-1785. His brother, Antoine painter and architect, 1739-1823.

PEYRERE, Isaac De La, a Frenc the protégé and librarian of the prin author of a curious work on the ' and the 'Restoration of the Jews, His brother, Abraham, a jurisconsu PEYRON, Jean Fr. Pierre, painter, and director of the Gobelins 1744-1815. His brother, J. Franco an author, 1748-1784.

PEYRONIE, F. De La, a Fr. surg

PEYROUSE. See Laperouse.

PEYSSONNEL, Charles De, a quary and consul of Smyrna, autho of the Kings of the Bosphorus, &c. His son, who succeeded him as consu distinguished historical and antiquar the same countries, 1727-1790. John Anthony, was appointed p naturalist to the island of Guadalo and was the first to write on the coral according to the received theory

PEZ, Bernard, a learned Benedi tria, 1683-1735. His br., Jerome,

PEZAY, A. F. J. Masson, M French historical writer, 1741-1777.

PEZENAS, Esprit, a French J as a mathematician and astronomer,

PEZRON, Paul, a monk of Bri as a chronologist, philolog., and antiq

PFAFF, J. C., a Lutheran theolo temburg, 1631-1720. His son, C Matthew, a voluminous protest. wr

PFAFFRAD, G., a Germ. philoso

PFANNER, T., a Germ. archivist,

PFEFFEL, J. Conrad, a nati distinguished as a jurisconsult and 1684-1738. Chr. Frederic, his learned writer on public law, 1726-1 philus Conrad, young brother of dramatic writer, poet, and literateu

PFEFFERCORN, John, a conver endeavoured to persuade the emper to burn all the Hebrew books except containing the principles of magic a gerous matter, died after 1517.

PFEIFFER, A., a Germ. Oriental

PFEIFFER, J. F., a Germ. econo

PFENNINGER, M., a Swiss des graver, 1739-1810. Henry, of the a painter and engraver, who execut for Lavater, born 1749.

PFIFFER, or PFYFFER, L., a S

the service of France, 1530-1594. FRANCIS LOUIS, an officer probably of the same family, retired from the French army after fifty years' service, and executed a beautiful plan of Switzerland in relief, still existing in his native Lucerne, 1716-1802.

PFISTER, A., a German printer, died 1462.

PFLUG, JULIUS, an Italian prelate, died 1564.

PFNITSING, M., a poet of Nuremberg, 1481-1535.

PFUGUER, M. A. D., a Swiss poet, 1777-1824.

PHÆDON, a Greek philosopher, who studied under Socrates, and subsequently founded a school of philosophy at Elis, since known as the Eleatic. Plato gave his name to one of his Dialogues.

PHÆDRUS, LUCIUS, a Roman slave freed by Augustus, and known as the author of Fables, first discovered to modern literature in 1596 at Rheims. In the reign of Tiberius he suffered from the tyranny of Lejamus. His fables are written in Iambic verse with remarkable purity.

PHAER, THOMAS, a Welch poet, died 1560.

PHALARIS, a cruel tyrant of Agregentum, in Sicily, who acquired his power about 572 B.C., and was put to death by one of his own horrible devices, that of the brazen bull, 556 B.C.

PHARAMOND, a half-fabulous personage, supposed to have been the first king of France, and to have reigned about 418 or 420. The Salic law is attributed to him. He was probably a chief of the Franks.

PHARNACES, the first of the name, king of Pontus, succeeded his father, Mithridates the Great, about 185 B.C., died 157. The second, born 97 B.C., became king of Bosphorus 64, and, after reconquering Pontus, was killed in battle 47.

PHAVORINUS. See FAVORINUS.

PHELIPEAUX, JOHN, a French theologian and historian of Quietism, died 1708.

PHELIPPEAUX, A. LE PICARD DE, a Vendean officer of artillery, born 1768, joined the army of Condé with the emigrants 1791, died in the English service after the siege of Acre, 1799.

PHELIPPEAUX, J., a Jesuit, 1577-1643.

PHELYPEAUX, RAIMOND BALTHASAR, Marquis De, French governor of Canada, died 1713.

PHERECRATES, a Greek poet, 5th cent. B.C.

PHERECYDES, a Greek philosopher, from whom Pythagoras is said to have acquired his doctrine of the Metempsychosis, 6th century B.C.

PHERECYDES, a Greek historian, 5th c. B.C.

PHIDIAS, a Greek sculptor and the most celebrated artist of antiquity, was the son of Charmidas, and the pupil of Ageladas of Athens, where Phidias was born, about 490 B.C., or even a year or two later, for according to this supposition he must have already reached the mature age of fifty before the execution of any of his most celebrated works, as the Minerva and other sculptures of the Parthenon, and the Olympian Jupiter. Phidias was the greatest ornament of the age of Pericles, and became eminent at Athens about 450 B.C.; the latter portion of the period of Pericles, however, 444 to 430, defines, probably in the best manner, the exact period of Phidias, for his greatest triumphs were achieved during the administration of the affairs of Athens by Pericles. Great patrons have generally found great instruments to carry out their schemes, or the patron is himself developed by the opportunity: in some respects both positions are true, but the former is the more easily explained: the magnitude of an undertaking regulates and developes accordingly the faculties of those who undertake. Thus Pericles, Julius II., and Ludwig I. of Bavaria, all found artists of the highest genius ready to accomplish all their desires. Pericles appointed Phidias superintendent of public works. The Parthenon was completed 438 B.C., the year also in which Phidias dedicated his colossal statue of Minerva in ivory and gold, placed in the temple; the architecture was the work of Ictinus. In the following year he commenced, aided by Colotes of Paros, the great sitting colossus of Jupiter at Olympia, in Elis, also of ivory and gold; this was completed in the year 433, and was considered one of the seven wonders of the ancient world. (See Quaktremere de Quincy, Le Jupiter Olympien, &c.) The great chryselephantine works, that is of ivory and gold, are the most remarkable monuments of which the ancient records give us any account; there seems to have been no limit to the magnificence or art-glory to which the anthropomorphistic worship of the Greeks might not lead them. These gigantic images, from 40 to 60 feet in height, apparently of solid ivory draped in gold, with all necessary enrichments in colour, must have more than realized the grandest notion of a human god that any of the Greek devotees can have brought to their shrines. The unparalleled height to which statuary has attained among the ancient Greeks is, therefore, to be attributed as much to the utilitarian end, the honour of religion and the stability of the priesthood, as to any æsthetic refinement, though this too did exist among the Greeks perhaps in a higher degree than any other people. The chryselephantine sculpture was the natural result of the Greek polychromy; once established the system of colouring images, the costliness must necessarily enter into the material as well as the external decoration of the image; thus we find these great images gradually progressing from rude wood and stone, to marble, and to bronze, and finally (ostensibly) to ivory. The ivory was, however, only a coating, the core of the statue was wood, the gold was real. Phidias executed six of these great works, but this of Elis cost him his life, for he was accused of having embezzled the gold given by the Elians for the draperies, &c. of the statue, and upon this accusation cast into prison, where he died within the year, 432 B.C. The accusation appears to have been found to be quite groundless; and in honour of the memory of the great statuary, the charge of the image was granted as an heir-loom to the family of Phidias, and when Pausanias visited Elis, 600 years afterwards, the descendants of Phidias still had the care of it. Another account states that it was in Athens, after his return from Elis, that he died, and that the charge in question related to the gold of the Minerva, which Pericles himself had taken off, and ordered to be weighed, and found exact; that he was finally committed on a charge of impiety for carving his own portrait on the shield of Minerva, and that he died during imprisonment for this offence. The Olympian Jupiter adorned Elis for about eight centuries, it was then removed to Constantinople, by the emperor Theodosius, and was either lost at sea, or destroyed in the fire of the Lauseion, 475 A.D. In carrying out so many and extensive works,

Phidias must necessarily have had many assistants. His principal scholars were Agoracritus, Alcamenes, and Colotes. Such were his assistants probably in the extensive sculptures of the Parthenon, now in this country, and known as the Elgin marbles; brought from Athens by Lord Elgin in 1803, and purchased by the British government in 1816. We have in these wonderful works adequate testimony of the deserved reputation of Phidias, and quite sufficient to show that the arts of Greece, at least of the time of Pericles, cannot be too highly esteemed. We have in these marbles the best exposition of the ideal, and a perfect illustration of the æsthetic element of style as distinct from mere representation or imitation. The so-called Thesens, the Ilissus, the Metopes, and the Panathenaic frieze all exhibit the most perfect ideality of form, at the same time of a grand generic character. The ideal or generic development of these sculptures can only have resulted from the long experience of centuries, or from extraordinary circumstances, but partly from the combination of both. All healthy bodies, subject to similar exercise, would most probably assume much the same character: the athletic games of the Greeks, common and popular, gave their artists such opportunities of viewing the naked form in all its perfection, that the general excellence of their sculpture is not surprising. In the Elgin marbles we have doubtless all the several beauties of the athlete combined in the individual, yet so modified as altogether to obviate the sense of any special individuality, leaving only the impression of the perfect human form, illustrating its general attributes themselves in all their wonderful versatility and perfection, without suggesting for a moment the notion of a limited individual fitness or quality; always excepting when such special limit or quality is not the specific object of the individual representation, as in the Farnese Hercules, the type of muscular strength. This is the ideal in its general and special development, and which we find invariably well illustrated in Greek sculpture, but nowhere with more refined grandeur than in the works of Phidias, as exemplified in the invaluable Elgin marbles.—(Müller, Life and Works of Phidias de Phidiæ vita et operibus &c., Göttingen, 1827. A very full account of Phidias and his works may be found in the Dictionary of Greek and Roman Biography, edited by Dr. Smith.) [R.N.W.]

PHILASTER, an Italian prelate, 4th century.

PHILES, MANUEL, a Greek poet, 14th century.

PHILELPHUS, FRANCIS, a celebrated Italian philologist and state secretary, 1398-1481.

PHILEMON, a Greek poet, 4th century B.C.

PHILEMON, a Greek grammarian, 12th cent.

PHILIBERT, the first of the name, duke of Savoy, succeeded his father, Amadeus IX., 1472, died 1482. The second, succeeded his father, Philip II., 1497, died 1504.

PHILIBERT-EMANUEL, son of Charles Emanuel, duke of Savoy, grand prior of Castile and Leon, and grand admiral of Spain, died 1624.

PHILIDOR, ANDRE, born at Dreux in 1726, was the son of a musician, whose real name was MICHEL DANICAN, but who, for the excellence of his performances upon the hautboy was named Philidor by the king of France. The young Andre, in childhood, entered as page in the band of the king of France, then under the directi chapel-master Campra. After having le ation of page, Philidor settled in Paris supported himself from his income as t copier of music. Besides his musical had gained such a reputation as a ch that he was induced to travel; accor the year 1745, he left Paris for Holland, England, &c. During his travels h improved his musical taste. In 1753 England, when he set Dryden's Ode to to music. He had while here devoted tion principally to chess; and he gained fame from having published his analy game, which is still referred to as an On his return to France, in 1754, he agai his musical studies, and produced musi matic piece, which was performed with cess in 1759. This work laid the founda musical reputation. Philidor, along with Monsigny, is regarded as one of the foun modern French comic opera. After h duced about twenty operas at the Opera he came to London in the year 1779, whe duced the music to Horace's 'Carmen which is esteemed as his best work. London in 1795.

PHILIP, the name of three saints apostle, who is supposed to have pr Phrygia, and died at an advanced ag deacon chosen by the apostles who pr Cæsarea, where he received Saint Paul 3. PHILIP OF NERI, an Italian ecclesia der of the oratory, &c., 1515-1595.

PHILIP, son of Herod the Great and man named Cleopatra, obtained from the rank of tetrarch, and governed his great wisdom from B.C. 4 to A.D. 33. death his states were reunited to Syria.

PHILIP, king of Syria, son of Antioc dethroned by Tigranes B.C. 80, died 57.

PHILIP I., king of Macedon, reigne obscure period of its history when it wa as a barbarian territory by the Greek st B.C. 400. Nothing worthy of notice i of him. PHILIP II., see next article. III., a natural son of Philip II., reig years after the death of Alexander the was killed by order of Olympias 316 B. called Philip Arrhidæus. PHILIP IV., his father Cassander on the throne of B.C. 296, and died 295. PHILIP V., s metrius III., succeeded at the age of t B.C. 233, his uncle, Antigonus Dos guardian. After the battle of Cannæ into a treaty with Hannibal, and thus b Romans upon the stage of Grecian a was totally defeated 197, and though h reasonable terms, left the struggle to hi seus. Died B.C. 179.

PHILIP II., by whose valour and little state of Macedon was raised to the over all Greece, was the third son of and was born in 383 or 382 B.C. He his elder brother, Perdiccas, in the firs guardian of his infant son, but soon sovereign, in the twenty-third year of hi 360; the existence of rival claimants to and the exterior evils with which the rendering his usurpation, if it may be ceptable to the whole people. Philip tained at Thebes as a hostage from his his eighteenth year, and was thoroughly

e tactics of Epaminondas, with whose
d lodged; besides which, his brother, ad intrusted him with a government in
and had allowed him to organize s chief military arm was the after-us Macedonian phalanx, a force or-himself—the materials he drew upon ntain peasantry accustomed to poverty hout cities or even fixed habitations to e more desirable than war to them.
Thebes had reached their highest vigour came to the throne, but the latter presiding genius in Epaminondas, and was seriously weakened by the 'social now broke out, and which raged 355 B.C. Philip took advantage of period to possess himself of Amphigave him access to the gold mines of æus, soon a source of immense revenue
the reason of his founding the new lippi. The 'sacred war' carried on by tyonic council against the Phocians, acedonians another great opportunity in as armed arbitrators, and with the ose in view of humbling the power of Athens. After the capture of Methone possession of the Athenians on the coast—between 354 and 352, Philip
o Thessaly at the head of 20,000 men, out as the champion of Delphi, and soldiers with laurel, which they he vale of Tempe. He was now joined ous Thessalian cavalry, and having ter of Thessaly in 352, he endeavoured pass of Thermopylæ, but was repulsed
nians; Philip, however, compensated quipping a navy to harass the Athenian From 349 to 347 he became victor in ian war, which made him complete
he Chalcidian peninsula and doubled
The terror of his name provoked the of Demosthenes, who endeavoured to people of Athens to form a general st him—instead of which, each party
d or Phocian war was anxious to ob-our against the others. This state of o embassages, the members of which, eption of Demosthenes, were cajoled or hilip into a shameful peace, which in master of the Phocian cities, of the hermopylæ, and in the position of he Amphictyon council. In the latter was really the crowned protector of the h, and in the spirit proper to his office marched into Greece, but instead of st the profane Locians, he seized the ea, and began to fortify it. Demosexerted all his eloquence and states-raise the ancient spirit of Grecian inand a powerful army was soon in the eing without able or patriotic com-as defeated at the decisive battle of
In August, 338 B.C. After this last freedom, Philip was acknowledged chief Hellenic world by all the states except Sparta, and in 337 he summoned a congress at Corinth to organize an expedition against Persia. While preparing for this enterprise he repudiated his wife, Olympias, mother of Alexander the Great, and the same year espoused Cleopatra, niece of Attalus, who bore him a son, looked upon as the rival of Alexander in the succession. These circumstances led to dissensions at court, and in the year 336 B.C. to the death of Philip, who was murdered at the instigation of Olympias while engaged in a religious festival. He had several other wives or mistresses, and was addicted to intemperance; but as a king, for political and military genius, for persuasive eloquence, the general spirit of humanity, and for courage in the field, the name of Philip of Macedon may vie with any in history. At the time of his death the first division of his army had passed into Asia under the conduct of Attalus, and the young Alexander had already distinguished himself as commander of one wing of his army at the battle of Chæroneia. [E.R.]

PHILIP, emperor of Rome, was born in Arabia about 204, and having entered into the military service of the Romans, became prætorian præfect 243. The emperor Gordian was compelled to receive him as a colleague on the throne by the army which had conquered Sapor, king of Persia; and in the following year, 244, Philip assumed the whole authority by putting his rival to death. He was killed in battle by the soldiers of Decius 249.

PHILIP, emperor of Germany, was the second son of Frederick Barbarossa. He was born 1178, became king of Suabia and Tuscany after the death of his father 1190, and emperor after the death of his brother, Henry VI., 1198. He was assassinated 1208, and succeeded by Otho IV.

PHILIP I., king of France, son of Henry I. and Anne of Russia, was born 1052, and succeeded to the throne under the guardianship of Baldwin V., count of Flanders, 1060, died, after a troubled reign, mixed up with the affairs of William the Conqueror, 1108. PHILIP II., surnamed AUGUSTUS, son of Louis VII. and of Alix, daughter of Thibault, count of Champagne, was born 1165, succeeded his father 1180, accompanied Richard Cœur de Lion to the Holy Land 1190, invaded Normandy during Richard's captivity 1193, confiscated the possessions of King John in France, after the supposed murder of Arthur, 1203, prepared to invade England at the instance of the pope 1213, turned his arms against Flanders and gained the celebrated battle of Bouvines 1214, died 1223. Philip Augustus was one of the ablest princes that ever reigned in France, both as a commander and an administrator. PHILIP III., called the Hardy, was the son of Louis IX. and Margaret of Provence. He was born 1245, and succeeded his father 1270. In 1271 he possessed himself of Toulouse on the death of his uncle, Alphonso; in 1272 he repressed the revolt of Roger, count of Foix, and in 1276 sustained a war against Alphonso X., king of Castile. The invasion of Sicily by Peter of Arragon, and the massacre of the French, known as 'the Sicilian vespers,' caused him to make war against that prince, in the course of which he died, 1285. PHILIP IV., called the Fair, or Handsome, son of the preceding by his first wife, Isabella of Arragon, was born 1268, and succeeded his father 1285. He was engaged in wars with the English and Flemings; and in a quarrel with the pope, in the course of which he was excommunicated. In 1303 the estates-general were first assembled. In 1312 he suppressed the Templars (see MOLAI); died 1314. He was an able but most despotic sovereign. PHILIP V., called the Long, second son of the preceding, was born about 1293, and succeeded to the throne in virtue of the Salic law, which excluded the daughter of his brother, Louis X., who died 1316. In his reign a cruel persecution began against the Jews, in the midst of which he died, 1322. PHILIP VI., called De Valois, was son of Charles, count of Valois, a younger son of Philip the Hardy. He was born 1293, and succeeded Charles le Bel 1328. In his reign occurred the wars with Edward III. of England, who claimed the French crown as grandson, by his mother, of Philip the Fair. Philip lost the battle of Cressy in 1346, when 30,000 men, and the chief of his nobility, were slain. He died during a truce with the English, 1350.

PHILIP I., among the Spanish kings, was the son of Maximilian I., emperor of Germany, by Mary of Burgundy. He was born 1478, and on the death of his mother, 1482, became sovereign of the seventeen provinces of the Netherlands, the right of which he transmitted to his posterity of the house of Austria. In 1496 he married Joanna, daughter of Ferdinand and Isabella, and in 1502 the young couple were acknowledged lawful successors to the crown of Spain. In 1506 they were declared joint king and queen of Castile, and Philip died the same year. He was the father of Charles V. PHILIP II., (next article). PHILIP III., son of Philip II. and Anne of Austria, born 1578, succeeded his father 1598, died 1621. PHILIP IV., son of Philip III. and Margaret of Austria, was born 1605, and succeeded his father 1621. Besides a war with the Dutch, he had to contend against the league formed against the house of Austria by Richelieu, by which he lost many provinces. In 1640 the duke of Braganza made himself king of Portugal, in 1647 Massaniello led the revolt in Naples, and in 1648 Philip was compelled to renounce all claims upon the United Provinces by the treaty of Westphalia (see article MAURICE OF NASSAU). In 1659, after the junction of Cromwell with France, and the victories of Blake, Philip concluded the treaty of the Pyrenees. In 1665 his forces were totally defeated by the Portuguese, and he died the same year. PHILIP V., second son of Louis the dauphin of France, great-grandson of the preceding, and grandson of Louis XIV., was born 1683. He succeeded to the throne of Spain by the testament of Charles II., and was proclaimed at Madrid 1700. The succession was disputed, and a league formed against it between England, Holland, Russia, Savoy, and Portugal, which led to a twelve years' war, concluded by the treaty of Utrecht 1713. By this treaty the English obtained Gibraltar and Minorca; Naples, Sardinia, the Milanese, and the coasts of Tuscany, were relinquished to the archduke Charles, who had been the rival of Philip, and was now become emperor; and the duke of Savoy possessed Sicily. Philip now married Elizabeth Farnese, princess of Mantua, and the notorious Alberoni became his minister, whom he was obliged to dismiss, in 1720, by a fresh combination. He then fell into a state of melancholy, abdicated i of his son, Louis, and was obliged to re
crown in consequence of his death, 1724; d

PHILIP II., king of Spain, who proje conquest of England by the famous '
was the son of Charles V., emperor, and of of Portugal. He was born at Valladolid eight years after his father's accession to pire, and was married in succession to the Mary of Portugal, 1543, and to Mary,
England, in the month of July, 1554, t
year in which he became king of Naples a by the abdication of his father. The mos precautions were taken on this occasion to his assumption of any real power in this and the temper of the people, and the qu
self, were so little to his taste, that in th of 1555 (August) he retired to Flanders.
was a political reason for this journey,
Charles V. was preparing to resign the e
first investing his son with his hereditary ions, and in the succeeding October he sole nounced the sovereignty of the Low Cou
his favour, at an assembly of the states-g Brussels. About a month after, Philip the sceptre of Spain and the Indies by t self-abnegation of his father, and his first to propose a truce with France, which was almost as soon as concluded upon. Till ber, 1556, he lived rather a debauched
would appear, in his Flemish dominions, came to England, where he had the mort
to be refused the ceremony of a coronat
the troops he demanded in aid of his France. These, however, were at length to him by Mary, in violation of her articles, and the levy, joined to the Emanuel Philibert, duke of Savoy, and Egmont, assisted to gain the battle of St.
10th August, 1557. On the death of Mary Philip, who was still prosecuting the wa
proposals of marriage to her successor, E
and was refused; his military operations
while greatly retarding the Reformation country. In 1559 the French were reduce for peace, and the policy and the arms of though he was no soldier himself, were by the peace of Chateau-Cambresis on of April in that year; one condition of the marriage of Philip to the princes beth of France, daughter of Henry II.
from this political war, Philip now applied to the subjugation of the Moriscoes—the dants of the Mahommedan conquerors o
and commenced that intestine struggle w not terminated till the reign of his succes
the course of the year (1559) he returned ladolid, having appointed his half-sister, M sovereign of the Low Countries; his fir that city was to send thirty-three protes
the stake, of whose torments he went to h witness. About the same time he transf seat of government to Madrid. In 1566 t of the Netherlands commenced, which end separation of the seven northern provin
the crown of Spain, and their formation Dutch republic. This struggle lasted abo years till the close of Philip's reign; the incidents are noted in other articles, (V

r; MAURICE OF NASSAU). The protracted struggle were varied in estic tragedy—the rebellion, arrest, death of Don Carlos, the son of irst wife Mary of Portugal. Shortly lost the queen Elizabeth, his third ut the same time the Moors of ed, whose subjugation was effected 571 the archduchess Anne of Aus- fourth wife, and the same year his , Don John of Austria, obtained victory of Lepanto over the Turks. oops under Alva subdued Portu- and all its dependencies, Philip vereign. By this time the protes- its policy had become centred in Elizabeth, who at length openly in behalf of the Netherlands, and eatened the security of Philip; the e being ruled by our great Admiral 88 the pope, Sixtus Quintus, offered Philip, and the Invincible Armada r the invasion of England. It was the duke of Medina Sidonia, and by the combined Dutch and Eng- d by a great storm in the British The remainder of Philip's reign ith his French wars as a party to pursuance of the same dark policy IV. This struggle was concluded Vervins, 1597. (See NAVARRE). Madrid, 13th September, 1598; for himself the character of a cruel the most desperate efforts to sus- nderance of Spain in Europe, and he papacy. No European sovereign to resume the struggle on the same cence to this day. [E.R.]

count of Savoy, succeeded his 1268, died 1285. PHILIP II., succeeded Charles II., 1496, died PHILIP, born 1278, was prince of e Morea. He began to reign over death of Count Philip 1285, but s uncle, took the sovereignty, and of Piedmont; died 1338.

first of the name, count of Bur- d his mother, Jeanne of Valois, as 1335, and obtained the county of his brother 1338; died 1346. The of the preceding, succeeded to the f Burgundy, Auvergne, Boulogne, the age of eighteen months, and e third, PHILIP THE HARDY, born the duchy of Burgundy from his ohn, 1364, and, by his marriage of Flanders, became count of Flan- of Rethel, and of Nevers. He was nces appointed to administer the France during the incapacity of d whose rivalry with the duke of great troubles; died 1404. The n of the preceding by his son John, of Bavaria, was born 1396, and father 1419; died 1467. He was lois, afterwards Charles the Bold. ke of Brabant, reigned 1427-1430. nt of Flanders, called PHILIP OF is father, Thierry, 1169, died 1191.

PHILIP, elector palatine, born 1448, succeeded his uncle, Frederick, 1476, died 1508. A second of the name, PHILIP WILLIAM OF NEUBOURG, born 1615, succeeded the elector Charles 1686, died 1690.

PHILIP, duke of Parma, born 1720, was son of Philip V. of Spain and Elizabeth Farnese, and son-in-law of Louis XV. He became duke of Parma, Placenza, and Guastalla, by the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, 1748; died 1759.

PHILIP, duke of Suabia. See PHILIP, EMP.

PHILIP OF ALSACE. See PHILIP, COUNT OF FLANDERS.

PHILIP OF ORLEANS. See ORLEANS.

PHILIP THE SOLITARY, a Gr. monk, 12th ct.

PHILIP OF THESSALONICA, a Greek epigrammatist, supposed no later than the age of Augustin.

PHILIP OF THE MOST HOLY TRINITY, a famous missionary to Persia and the Indies, born at Avignon 1603, died 1671.

PHILIP OF VALOIS. See PH. VI. OF FRANCE.

PHILIPPE, C. A., a Fr. magistrate, 1614-98.

PHILIPPE, LOUIS. See LOUIS PHILIPPE.

PHILIPPI, H., a learned Jesuit, 1575-1636.

PHILIPPICUS-BARDANES, emperor of the East, proclaimed, after causing the assassination of Justinian II., 711, dethroned by the people 713.

PHILIPPIDES, an Athenian poet, B.C. 335.

PHILIPPON, BARON, the French general who defended Badajoz in 1811; 1760-1836.

PHILIPPUS OF ACARNANA, the friend and physician of Alexander the Great, whose life he saved, B.C. 333.

PHILIPPUS, the name assumed by the impostor, Andriscus, who pretended to be the son of Perseus, and became king of Macedonia.

PHILIPS, AMBROSE, descended from an ancient family of Leicestershire, known as a poet and miscellaneous writer. He was the associate of Steele, Addison, and the wits of that period; born about 1671, died 1749.

PHILIPS, CATHARINE, an accomplished lady, authoress of Translations from Corneille, 1631-64.

PHILIPS, FABIAN, a lawyer and royalist, author of several political pamphlets, and of books relating to ancient customs and privileges in England, 1601-1690.

PHILIPS, JOHN, a poetical writer, 1676-1708.

PHILIPS, RICHARD, F.R.S., F.G.S., an English chemist, died 1851.

PHILIPS, THOMAS, a Roman Catholic minister and theologian, author of the 'Study of Sacred Literature,' 'Life of Cardinal Pole,' &c., d. 1774.

PHILISTUS, an ancient historian, supposed to be a native of Syracuse, about 431-356 B.C.

PHILLIP, ARTHUR, an English naval officer, first governor of Botany Bay, 1738-1814.

PHILLIPS, EDWARD, son of Anne, the sister of Milton, and of Edward Phillips, secondary in the crown office, was born 1630. He was educated by his illustrious uncle, of whom he wrote a life. The best known of his works is a complete collection of the Poets, with observations upon them, in which it is supposed Milton assisted him. His brother, JOHN, at first a political adherent of his uncle, afterwards wrote in favour of the restoration. Dates unknown.

PHILLIPS, MORGAN, or PHILIP MORGAN, a Roman Catholic controversial writer, 16th century.

PHILLIPS, THOMAS, R.A., a distinguished portrait painter and writer on art, born at Dudley, Warwickshire, 1770, died, after co-operating in the foundation of the Artists' General Benevolent Institution, 1845.

PHILO OF BIBLOS, a Greek historian, chiefly known as translator of Sanconiatho from the Phœnician into the Greek language, fragments of which have been preserved in the works of Eusebius. He flourished in the reign of Nero.

PHILO OF BYZANTIUS, a Greek architect, au. of a Treatise on Machines of War, abt. 3d ct. B.C.

PHILO, JUDÆUS, was born of Jewish parents at Alexandria, not long before the commencement of the Christian era. He was a devotee of the Platonic philosophy, and it tinges all his interpretations of the sacred books. In A.D. 41, he was sent as chief deputy from the Jews in Alexandria to the emperor Caligula, in order to defend them against Apion, who had charged them with the crime of disloyalty. Again did he go to Rome in the reign of Claudius. Several of the writings of Philo have escaped the wreck of time, such as his treatise De Mundi Opificio; his 'Allegories of the Law,' full of strange fancy and wild interpretations, his book 'On Dreams,' and numerous tracts on biblical subjects, filled with Platonism and allegory. His works have been edited by Turnebus, fol., Paris, 1552; by Mangey in 2 vols. fol., 1742; reprinted under the care of Pfeiffer, at Erlangen, in 1820, and by Richter in 8 octavo vols., Leipzig, 1828-30. [J.E.]

PHILO OF LARISSA, a philosopher of Athens, who quitted that city on the success of the arms of Mithridates and went to Rome, where he had Cicero for a disciple.

PHILODEMUS, an Epicurean philos., B.C. 100.

PHILOLAUS: a later Pythagorean: born at Crotona, or Tarentum, towards the close of the fifth century before Christ. Aresas, a probable disciple of Pythagoras, was his master; so that we receive the doctrine from Philolaus, only as it appeared to the third generation. (Article PYTHAGORAS). It has been repeated once and again that Philolaus, divined the true theory of the Universe, and was the virtual predecessor of Copernicus. Nothing can be more false. In his scheme indeed, not the Earth, but FIRE is placed in the centre of the Universe: that Fire, however, is not the SUN, which, on the contrary, he makes revolve around the central πῦρ. The scheme, in so far as it can be understood, is altogether fantastic, based on no observation or comparison of phenomena, but on vague and now unintelligible metaphysical considerations. The only predecessor of Copernicus in Antiquity, was Aristarchus of Samos, whose remarkable conjectures appeared first, in the Editio Princeps of Archimedes—published after Copernicus wrote. [J.P.N.]

PHILOPOEMEN, called the last of the Greeks, was really their last great commander. He was born in Arcadia B.C. 253, became in 210 generalissimo of the Achæan League, and conquered the Spartans—at which time he abolished the laws of Lycurgus. The greatest of his victories in this long struggle was the battle of Mantinea. He was put to death by poison when a prisoner of the Messenians B.C. 183, the same year that proved fatal to Hannibal and Scipio.

PHILOSTRATUS, FLAVIUS, a cian, author of 'Lives of the Sophists
on the Heroes of Homer,' and a des on art, entitled 'Icones,' known abo
ther PHILOSTRATUS, his nephew, similar to the 'Icones,' and bearing
He was known about 217.

PHILOTHEUS, a patriarch of C
author of several learned works, died

PHILOXENUS, the name of thr
most ancient a didactic and burlesq 380 B.C. The second, a painter, porary with Apelles, and is known cuted a battle-piece, B.C. 316. Th also XENAIAS, was a bishop of He writer in favour of the Syrian J
A.D. 518.

PHILPOT, JOHN, son of Sir Pet
sheriff of Hampshire, known as a lea writer and minister of the Church burnt in Smithfield in the reign of M

PHILPOT, or PHILIPOT, JOH
and antiquarian, assistant of Camd of his Remains, time of James I THOMAS, his son, wrote a History o

PHLEGON, a Greek historian, 2

PHOCAS, emperor of the East, 6

PHOCION, a famous Athenian g
man, orator, and diplomatist, chief cratic party at Athens, and a grea Philip and Alexander. He was pu poison B.C. 317, and afterwards ho regrets of his countrymen.

PHOCYLIDES, a Greek poet, 4t

PHOTIUS, one of the most illus his age, was born of noble parents in of the ninth century. He was also the marriage of his brother with the
He held various secular offices unde such as that of proto-a-secretis, or
and the captaincy of the royal life literary attainments were of a very h result of diligent and continued st rose suddenly and unexpectedly to ecclesiastical dignity. The patriarch been deposed and banished, and Ph
a layman, was elected in his room.
week he summarily passed through grades of office, was in as many s monk, reader, sub-deacon, deacon, finally patriarch. This questionable confirmed by two councils, one in other in 859. But, in 862 Pope Ni sequence of a dispute about jurisdi
the election void, and excommunicate his adherents. Photius, however, place, but a schism was produced
Eastern and Western churches.
Michael III. was assassinated in A.D
murderer and successor, Basil I., e brought back Ignatius his predece general council held at Constantinop transaction was solemnly ratified.
tius died, in 877, Photius was ch
former position, and his restoration
by the head of the Western churc immediately laboured by the machi councils, to have all the previou
against himself declared null and v

…t, he incurred again the anathema of the Ecclesiastical intrigue and manœuvre, and …ath and right in those days determined the …r. Leo VI. succeeded Basil in 886, and be …iately, but probably on unjust grounds, …ed the restless patriarch to Armenia, where …ained in exile till his death. The date of …th is unknown, but some place it in A.D. 891. …s was a scheming diplomatist, keenly alive to …n interests, but not without a happy mixture …ignity and decision. His weapons of self- …e and self-aggrandizement where those of the …which he lived, suppleness and chicanery, …us watch over all rivals, and the unscru- …use of every means to enjoy, retain, and …the most of the imperial favour and patron- Photius had been a voracious reader, and was …n accomplished critic. His Myriobiblon or …theca is a review and epitome of ancient … literature in 280 divisions, and contains …s of many rare and valuable works which …selves have been lost. The best edition is that …kker, Berlin, 1824, 2 vols. 8vo. Numerous works were composed in the long life of this …rious prelate and statesman, and many of his …s have been collected. We have his Com- …um, his Amphilochia,—a theological treatise … form of question and answer—his collection …nons, Homilies, a tract on the Procession of …oly Spirit, one against the Manichæans, Com- …aries on St. Paul's Epistles, and a Catena on …salms, &c., but many of these still slumber in …

No collected edition of his works has ap- …d. Had Photius been a professional writer …nterrupted leisure, he could scarcely have writ- …more, and when we reflect on his long and …ing life, on his chequered and absorbing …, as courtier and patriarch, polemic and exile, …uer and preacher, we cannot surely with- …our admiration of his industry and erudi- [J.E.]

…RAHATACES, a king of Parthia, succeeded …ther, Phrahates IV., and killed in the year 9.

…RAHATES I., king of Parthia, succeeded …ther, Priapatius, 178 B.C., and, dying soon … left his kingdom to his brother, Mithridates.

…AHATES II., son of Mithridates I., reigned about …27 B.C. PHRAHATES III., about 70-58 B.C. …AHATES IV., obtained the crown by killing his …r, Orodes, 37 B.C., and was killed in turn by …on, Phrahataces, A.D. 9. PHRAHATES V., …f the preceding, was absent at Rome when his …her usurped the throne, and was invested with …oyalty by Tiberius. He departed for Syria to …n his kingdom while Abraham III. reigned …it, and died on his journey 35.

…IRANZA, G., a Greek historian, 15th cent.

…HRYGIO, F. C., a German divine, died 1543.

…HRYNICUS, three distinguished Greeks:— … earliest, an Athenian writer of tragedy, con- …porary with Æschylus, 5th century B.C. The …nd, a comic poet of Athens, known B.C. 430. … third, surnamed ARRHABIUS, a sophist and …rician of Bithynia, 2d century.

…HRYNIS, a Greek musician, 5th century B.C.

…IA, PHILIP N., a French chemist, 1721-1799.

…IACENTI, D. G., an Ital. antiqu., 1684-1754.

…IALI, an Ottoman admiral, 16th century.

…IAZZA, C., an Italian painter, 16th century.

PIAZZA, JER. BARTHOLOMEW, an Italian convert to the Church of England, formerly a judge of the inquisition, author of an historical account of the inquisition and its proceedings, d. abt. 1745.

PIAZZA, P., an Italian painter, 1547-1621.

PIAZZI, J., an Italian astronomer, 1746-1826.

PICARD, J., a French astronomer, 1629-1682.

PICARD, L. B., a Fr. dramatist, 1769-1828.

PICARD, M., a German savant, 1574-1620.

PICART, STEPHEN, a French engraver, 1631-1721. His son, BERNARD, a designer and engraver, author of 'Illustrations of the Religious Ceremonies of all Nations,' 1663-1733.

PICCADONI, J. B., superior-general of the order of Minors, a theologian and philoso., 1766-1829.

PICCART, M., a Germ. philologist, 1574-1620.

PICCINI, NICOLAI, was born at Bari in Naples in 1728. This composer has been regarded as the most fertile and original that the school of Naples ever produced. Like many other musicians, he was first meant to be brought up to the church, but the ruling passion frustrated all parental intentions. He studied in the conservatory of San Onofrio under Leo and Durante. In 1758 he was invited to Rome, where he brought out several operas. In Dec. 1776, he arrived at Paris, where he, in the course of a year afterwards, found himself opposed to Gluck, who about this time effected a revolution in French music. For some time the musical feuds of the admirers of the Italian and the German kept Paris in a ferment. Gluck was, however, at the termination of the war, pronounced victor. At the breaking out of the French Revolution, he returned to Naples, but the ministry there having forbidden him to appear in public, he remained almost a close prisoner in his own apartments. In 1799 he returned to Paris, when the Emperor Napoleon appointed him inspector in the National Conservatory of Music, which situation he held till the time of his death, which took place in 1801. [J.M.]

PICCINI, JOSEPH, eldest son of the preceding, known as a dramatic writer, 1758-1826.

PICCOLOMINI. See PIUS II.

PICCOLOMINI, CARDINAL, the name by which JAMES AMMANATI is best known, a famous name in the history of Italy, 1422-1479.

PICCOLOMINI, ALESSANDRO, archbishop of Patras and coadjutor of Sienna, known as a philologist, 1508-1578. FRANCESCO, a relation of the preceding, known as a learned writer, 1520-1604.

PICCOLOMINI, ALPHONSO, duke de Montemariano, an Italian adventurer who ravaged the states of the church, and was hung 1591.

PICCOLOMINI, OCTAVIA, an Austrian general of the same family as the preceding, 1599-1656.

PICHAT, M., a French dramatist, 1786-1828.

PICHEGRU, CHARLES, was born in 1761, of parents in a humble rank of life, in Franche Comté. He was educated for the army at the Military College of Brienne, where he was monitor to Napoleon Buonaparte. The Revolution found him in the rank of adjutant; and he rose rapidly during the campaigns of 1792 and 1793. At the end of that year he obtained the chief command of the army of the Rhine, which was then disorganized by a series of reverses. Pichegru restored discipline and spirit; gained the victory of Haguenau, Dec. 23, 1793, and drove the allies before him into the Dutch territory. The severity of that winter made the passage of the frozen rivers practicable, and in January, 1794, Pichegru invaded and conquered Holland. He captured not only towns and fortresses, but also some of the Dutch fleet, which was frozen up in the Texel. Pichegru sent his cavalry over the ice; and the strange spectacle was presented of ships being attacked and taken by horse soldiers. Pichegru was favourable to the restoration of the Bourbons, and entered into a secret negotiation with their emissaries for this purpose. The French Directory suspected him, and recalled him from his command. He took part in the unsuccessful attempts at reaction in Paris in 1797, and was exiled to Guiana. He escaped thence to England, where he was well received. In 1804 he came secretly to Paris with other royalists; but he was arrested by Buonaparte's police and thrown into prison. He was found dead, in his bed there, on the morning of the 6th April, 1805. The Imperialists said that he had committed suicide; the Royalists, that he had been murdered. There may be too much cause to suspect that Pichegru came foully by his death; but we believe Napoleon's assertion at St. Helena, that he, at least, was personally free from guilt in the matter. [E.S.C.]

PICHLER, CAROLINE, one of the most prolific novelists and dramatic wrs. of Germany, 1769-1843.

PICHLER, G., a Germ. theologian, died 1736.

PICHON, J., a French missionary, 1683-1751.

PICHON, T., a French writer, 1700-1781.

PICHON, T. J., a Fr. theologian, 1731-1812.

PICKEN, ANDREW, a Scottish novelist and miscellaneous wr., born at Paisley 1788, died 1833.

PICPAPE, N. J. P. DE, a Fr. Jesuit, 1731-93.

PICTET, BENEDICT, professor of theology at Geneva, author of a History of the Twelfth and Thirteenth Centuries, 1655-1724. His relation, JOHN LOUIS, an astronomer, 1739-1781.

PICTET, MARK AUGUSTUS, a naturalist and philosopher, president of the Society for the Advancement of the Arts, at Geneva, 1752-1825. His brother, CHARLES PICTET DE ROCHEMONT, a political negotiator, agriculturist, and miscellaneous writer, 1755-1824.

PICTON, SIR THOMAS, a gallant officer, descended from an old family of Pembrokeshire, entered the army as ensign in 1771, and, after serving in the West Indies, rose to the rank of colonel, and became governor of Trinidad in 1797. His next services were at the capture of Flushing, of which also he was appointed governor in 1809. He afterwards distinguished himself in the Peninsular war, at Badajoz, Vittoria, Ciudad Rodrigo, and other great actions. Killed at Waterloo 1815.

PICUS, MIRANDULUS. See MIRANDOLA.

PIDOUX, J., physician of Henry III., d. 1610.

PIERCE, EDWARD, a famous painter of altar-pieces, ceilings, and architecture, died about 1715.

PIERQUIN, J., a French priest, died 1742.

PIERRE, CORNELIUS DE LAPIDE, a learned Jesuit, an. of commentaries on the Bible, d. 1637.

PIERRE, J. B., a French painter, 1714-1789.

PIERRES, P. D., a French printer, 1741-1808.

PIERSON, C., a Dutch painter, 1631-1714.

PIERSON, J., a philologist, 1731-1759.

PIETERS, B., a Flemish marine painter, 1614-1652. JOHN, his brother, same profes., b. 1625.

PIETERS, G., a Dutch painter, born 1580.

PIETRE, S., a French physician, di

PIETRI, P. DA., an Italian painter,

PIETRO, M. DI, an Ital. cardinal,

PIGALLE, J. B., an Italian sculpt

PIGANIOL-DE-LA-FORCE, J. French literateur and geographer, 167

PIGAULT-LEBRUN, G. C. ANTO tile novelist and dramatic writer, 1753

PIGHIUS, ALBERT, a Dutch ma and Roman Catholic controversialist, 1490, died 1542. His nephew, STEPH a learned antiquarian, 1520-1604.

PIGNA, GIAMBATTISTA, a learned torian of the house of Este, 1529-1575

PIGNATELLI, F., a Neapolitan st 1732, capt.-general of the Two Sicilies general of the kingdom of Naples 1806

PIGNONE, S., an Italian painter,

PIGNORIA, L., an Ital. antiquary,

PIGNOTTI, LORENZO, professor philosophy at Pisa, distinguished as a and the most celebr. of Ital. fabulists,

PIGRAY, PETER, a French surgeon

PILATUS, LEONTIUS, a monk of C at the revival of letters in Europe, 14

PILES, ROGER DE, a Fr. art-writer,

PILKINGTON, JAMES, a learned late, created bishop of Durham by Eliz the Marian persecution, 1520-1575.

PILKINGTON, LETITIA, a lady of traction, born in Dublin 1712, and ma Rev. Samuel Pilkington. She wrote se some poems, and her own 'Memoirs. separated from her husband in con irregular conduct, and was supported s contributions obtained for her through of Cibber. Died 1750.

PILLET, C. M., a Fr. biographer, d

PILON, F., an Irish actor, 1750-17

PILON, G., a French sculptor, died

PILPAY, an Indian fabulist, Bramin cillor of state to one of the rajahs, s lived 2,000 years B.C. His fables were into French by Galland in 1704, and b Dubois in 1826.

PIMENOFF, a Russian sculptor, di

PINA, RUY DE, a Portug. historian

PINART, M., a French Orientalist,

PINAS, J., a Dutch painter, 1597-1

PINDAR, the greatest of the Greek was born, according to the best aut Cynocephalæ, a village of Bœotia, betw and Thespia, B.C. 518, and died B.C completing his eightieth year. As is t most of the celebrated authors of an few particulars respecting his life have mitted to us, and even these are derive ancient biographies of uncertain au valua. According to one of these, he of Daiphantus and Cleidice, and was the time of the celebration of the Py (August or September), the latter fa rived from one of his own fragments to have been twice married, and to h son and two daughters. His family, w descent from Cadmus, ranked among in Thebes, and enjoyed a hereditary skill in music, especially for flute-pl fession which, at that time, was held

ɔtian capital. The youthful poet, ily talent had descended, at first to that branch of poetry which d to the accompaniment of the ther, who had observed in him the etical genius, sent him to Athens, e tuition of Lasus of Hermione, he Athenian school of dithyram- ceived that instruction in the art sary to enable him to attain dis- at Athens, he likewise availed ɪtructions of Agathocles and Apol- ning to Thebes in his twentieth profited by the instructions and s and Corinna of Tanagra, two that time enjoyed great celebrity ith both of whom he afterwards cessfully for the musical prize. ed his career as a composer of e early age of twenty, and his re- tended to all parts of the Hellenic ductions of his muse were eagerly rent states and princes to com- kable events; the tyrants and reece paid homage to his superior free states vied with each other in s the great lyric poet of his age. and Opus conferred upon him the g him a public guest; the inhabi- ployed him to compose for them a , to the exclusion of two celebrated ; and by the order of the priestess ceived a portion of the banquet of Pindar manifests in his works a feeling, and entertaining a pro- or the gods, rejects those forms of nds which ascribes to them the orality of mortals. He dedicated Great Mother near his own house rected statues to Jupiter-Ammon, he market-place. Extraordinary id to him after his death. The d to him a statue of brass, repre- a diadem and a lyre, and a book nees; while the Lacedæmonians, Thebes, spared his house and e same mark of veneration was n to his memory by Alexander. tion of his works have come down these, with a single exception, all lass, the Epinician or triumphal rating respectively the victories ur national games of Greece, the an, Nemean, and Isthmian. Be- wrote dithyrambs, hymns to the es, drinking songs, mimic dancing aidens, and panegyrics on princes, we possess numerous fragments. Pindar as a poet must be formed n odes alone, though it is evident ny of the ancient writers, and par- ce, that he was equally celebrated nents of poetry. The subjects d for his muse do not appear, at e well fitted for sublime poetry; f the poet, summoning to its aid thology of the oldest times, and bits of the heroes and demigods, t of his panegyric with a fascina- tion which seems really genuine. 'He is chiefly remarkable for the gigantic boldness of his conceptions and the daring sublimity of his metaphors, which stamp him the Æschylus of lyric poetry. The flights of his imagination are not, however, like those of the great tragedian, mingled with the intensity of human passion, which, while they carry us beyond ourselves, still come home to the heart. He has the light without the heat, his splendours dazzle, but do not warm us. There is little of human feeling in his works.' [G.F.]

PINDEMONTE, Ippolito, Count, an Italian poet, biographer, and miscellan. wr., 1753-1828.

PINE, John, a highly talented English engraver, appointed Blue Mantle in Heralds College, and engraver of the royal signets, 1690-1756. His son, Robert Edge Pine, a portrait and historical painter, died 1790.

PINEAU, G. Du, a French lawyer, 1573-1644.

PINEAU, S., a French surgeon, 1550-1619.

PINEDA, J. De, a Sp. theologian, 1557-1637.

PINEL, Le P., a French priest of the oratory, known as a controversial writer, and for his visionary enthusiasm, died before 1777.

PINEL, Philip, a celebrated physician of Paris, distinguished for his treatment of the insane, and his valuable works on the subject, 1742-1826.

PINELLI, Gianvincenzo, a great collector of books and manuscripts, and patron of literature, born at Naples, of Genoese descent, 1535; died 1601. Maffeo, sometimes confounded with the preceding, also a learned bibliopole, and friend of Morelli, flourished at Venice, 1736-1785.

PINELO, Antonio De Leon, a laborious writer on Spanish America, born in Peru 17th ct.

PINET, Antohny Du, lord of Noroy, a miscell. writer and defender of protestantism, 16th ct.

PINGERON, J. C., a French writer, died 1795.

PINGRE, A. G., a Fr. astronomer, 1711-1796.

PINI, E., an Italian naturalist, died 1825.

PINKERTON, John, a native of Edinburgh, dist. as a poet, antiquarian, and geogr., 1758-1826.

PINKNEY, William, an eloquent lawyer and statesman of America, distinguished as a political negotiator for the state of Maryland, and as a member of the senate, 1765-1822. His son, Edward Coate, a naval officer, known to literature as a poet, 1802-1828.

PINSON, ——, a French surgeon, famous as a modeller of anatomical subjects in wax, 1745-1828.

PINSON, or PYNSON, Richard, an early English printer, who was originally servant to Caxton, and introduced the Roman letter into this country, died about 1530.

PINSSON, F., a Fr. jurisconsult, 1612-1691.

PINTO, F. M., a Portuguese traveller, 16th ct.

PINTO, H., a Portuguese divine, died 1584.

PINTO, Isaac, a Portug. economist, died 1787.

PINTURRICHIO, Bernardino, a famous Italian painter, scholar of Perugius, and associate in the labours of Raphael, 1454-1513.

PINZI, J. A., an Ital. numismatist, 1713-1769.

PINZON, Alonzo, Vincent Yanez, and Martin, three brothers, Spaniards, who had commands in Columbus' first voyage, and by whose exertions mainly it was that a sufficient number of men were induced to risk their lives on the perilous enterprise. Vincent Yanez was the most distinguished of the brothers; he made several voyages, on the most important of which he sailed in December 1499, and discovered Brazil, and the river Amazon, three months before Cabral took possession of South America for the crown of Portugal. [J.B.]

PIOMBO. See SEBASTIANO.

PIOZZI, ESTHER LYNCH, a distinguished name in the literary circle of Dr. Johnson, was the daughter of John Salusbury, Esq., of Bodvel in Carnarvonshire, where she was born 1739. In 1763 she married Mr. Thrale, a brewer, and member of parliament for Southwark, and this gentleman having made the acquaintance of Dr. Johnson, the latter became a constant visitor at their house, at Streatham, in Surrey. In 1784 Mrs. Thrale, after a three years' widowhood, married Gabriel Piozzi, an Italian music-master, with whom she went abroad; this match cost her the friendship of the great moralist, who had been greatly opposed to it. In 1786 she published 'Anecdotes of Dr. Johnson during the Last Twenty Years of his Life,' and in 1788 her correspondence with him. Her other literary productions consist of poems and fugitive pieces of a miscellaneous description; the chief of them is her poetical story, entitled 'The Three Warnings.' She returned to England after the death of Piozzi, and died at Clifton, near Bristol, 1821.

PIPELET, F., a French surgeon, 1722-1792.

PIPER, CHARLES, Count, councillor of state, and minister to Chas. XII. of Sweden, 1646-1716.

PIPER, FRANCIS LE, an English painter, of Walloon descent, died about 1740.

PIPPI. See ROMANO.

PIPPING, H., a Germ. theologian, 1670-1722.

PIRANESI, GIAMBATTISTA, Cavaliere, was born at Rome in 1707; he studied some time in Venice as an architect, but settled in Rome, and henceforth devoted himself to archæology, and etching the various ruins and monuments of Rome, in which he was assisted by his son, the CAV. FRANCESCO PIRANESI; and together they have produced the most extraordinary and interesting work, as a whole, that we possess on the magnificence of the ancient Romans. Yet it must always be borne in mind that the archæological was secondary to the artistic element in their admirable etchings, and much is supplied by enthusiasm and imagination, as well as what has been afforded by the actual monument; but the existing ruins as they were, are powerfully and faithfully given, and even the ornamental fragments have their pictorial truth, if not their exact proportions or details. The elder Piranesi died at Rome in 1778; the son at Paris in 1810, he was born at Rome in 1750. The son completed what the father commenced: the early editions are the most valued; a complete collection is very rare, as all the monuments or series were published separately, and was worth, before the publication of the new Paris reprint, between three and four hundred pounds. The new edition in 29 volumes, atlas folio, published at Paris, 1835-37, is worth about £70; it contains plates by some other artists besides the Piranesi, and some modern as well as ancient monuments. [R.N.W.]

PIRES, THOMAS, a Portuguese ambassador to China,—the first European who ever went there in that capacity; the date of his mission 1517.

PIRINGER, B., a Germ. engraver

PIRON, AIME, a French apothe
as a poet, 1640-1727. His son, A dramatic author, and man of wit, 16

PIROT, E., a French theologian,

PIRRO, R., a Sicilian historian, 1

PISAN, C. DE, an Italian poetess

PISANI, N., a Venetian admiral,
in the third war between the V Genoese, from 1350 to 1354, when captive with all his fleet by Paganino released at the conclusion of peace in obscurity. VICTOR, son or nephe ceding, obtained a victory over th Antium in 1378, and was beaten by 1379. After three months' imprisonm he was restored to his command, and whole Genoese fleet at Chioggia. D

PISANO, the surname of several artists of Pisa, very important in the
of art in Italy. GIUNTA PISANO, o GIUSTINO of Pisa, is the earliest k painter, and a crucifixion painted church of Santa Maria degli Angeli, a the year 1236, is still preserved; it in impasto and absolutely great as compared with anything we know period in Italy. Giunta was anterio This shows how little reliance is to local and partial histories, especially duals are made heroes of. This pict a fac-simile has been published by t painter, Ramboux, in his 'Outlines f illustrating the Old Christian Art in that so far from Cimabue being the fa painting, he was scarcely equal to Gi inferior in style of drawing. If an have the credit of reviving painting i belong to Giunta Pisano, for anythin yet, to the contrary; he is said to with the Greeks about 1210. Ther ously an influx of Greek artists into Venetian capture of Constantinople
we know of no Greek works equal to t by Giunta. There are several other preserved, and the progress of the art very slow, even down to the time of withstanding the great impulse give works of Giotto. Giunta was not n sari. NICCOLA PISANO was equally as sculptor and architect, and must rank in the former art that Giunta do He distinguished himself as early as logna, were he executed the celebrate Domenico. Niccola was also a gr
he executed the church of the Frari was the pioneer of the Renaissanc sculpture and in architecture. He GIOVANNI PISANO, the son and ass cola, and likewise one of the greate sculptors and architects of Italy, di 1320, and was placed in the same t father in the Campo Santo. ANI was another early artist of Pisa, but tury later than Giunta; he was a architect, and the friend of Giotto, a senior. Andrea was born about 128 works still extant by Andrea 'th of the Baptistery of St. John (see G

most important. These two gates are still pert; the exact date of their execution is disputed,
ether they were finished in 1330, or only com-nced in that year. The reliefs are from the life John the Baptist, and the general design of the e is said to have been made by Giotto; but otto's share, if any, must have been more that of architect than the sculptor, though even defin-
the panels and indicating the subjects; he can rcely have had more to do with the design than
s, or his name would have been more intimately ociated with them. The work appears to have en modelled by Andrea and his son Nino, and e castings commenced by some Venetian artists 1330, and the complete gates to have been nished and gilded in 1339, with the exception of me decorations of the architrave, which were dded many years afterwards by Vittorio, the son
f Lorenzo Ghiberti, in order to make them harmonize with the other two sets of gates executed by his father. The gates of Andrea were originally in the centre of the Baptistery, opposite to the cathedral, but were afterwards removed to the side,
to give place to the more beautiful work of Ghiberti, in the year 1424. Andrea was made citizen of Florence, and died there in 1345; he was buried in the cathedral Santa Maria del Fiore. All three sets of gates have been well engraved in outline by Lasinio, Le tre Porte del Battisterio di Firenze.
Florence, 1823.—(Vasari, Vite de Pittori, &c.
Ed. Flor., 1846, seq.; Cicognara, Storia della Scultura; Rumohr, Italienische Forschungen; Rosini, Storia della Pittura Italiana.) [R.N.W.]

PISANSKI, G. C., a Ger. philologist, 1725-90.

PISISTRATUS, a citizen of Athens who raised himself to the sovereign authority in the time of Solon, to whom he was related, B.C. 560. Compelled to retire from the city by the conspiracy of Megacles and Lycurgus, he returned soon after by effecting a compromise, but was obliged to retire again, and suffer an exile of eleven years, which he spent in making preparations to recover his authority. In the eleventh year he reappeared at the head of an army and regained his power, which he retained till his death, B.C. 527. He was a beneficent ruler, and did much to promote the rise of Greek literature. We owe to him the poems of Homer in their present form, Pisistratus having collected them, as they were scattered in detached parts throughout Greece, and digested them into order.

PISSAREF, A., a Russian poet, 1801-1828.

PISSELEU, ANNE DE. See ESTAMPES.

PISTORIUS, JOHN, a Ger. controversialist, son of Lutheran divine of the same name, 1546-1608.

PITCAIRNE, ARCHIBALD, an eminent physician, born and educated at Edinburgh, and eventually settled there after holding a professorship at Leyden. He founded his medical system upon his knowledge of mathematics, and wrote several medical works in support of it. Among his more medical writings may be mentioned a vindication of the claims of Harvey, 1652-1713.

PITHOIS, C., a French writer, died 1676.

PITHON, PETER, a French magistrate, profoundly learned as a jurisconsult and philologist,
the first to publish the laws of the Visigoths.
He is represented by De Thou as one of the first men of his age, as well for probity, candour, and learning as for the extent of his learning, the soundness of his judgment, and his political wisdom; born at Troyes 1539, died 1596. His brother, FRANCIS, also a jurisconsult, 1543-1621.

PITISCUS, BARTHOLOMEW, a German mathe-matician and astronomer, 1561-1613. His nephew, SAMUEL, a learned philologist, 1637-1717.

PITOT, HENRY, a French mathematician, tactician, and engineer, especially of canals, 1695-1771.

PITROU, R., a French engineer, 1684-1750.

PITS, JOHN, a native of Southampton, who went to France, and becoming a catholic was protected by the cardinal of Lorraine, known as a theologian and biographer, died 1616.

PITT, CHRISTOPHER, an English clergyman,
author of miscellaneous poems, and a translation
of Virgil, Vida's Art of Poetry, &c., 1699-1748.

PITT, THOMAS, the founder of the family of the great earl of Chatham, was born in Dorset-shire 1653, and towards the end of the century became governor of Fort St. George, in the East Indies. He made a large fortune, chiefly owing to his possession of a diamond, by which he cleared considerably more than £100,000. In 1716 he was appointed governor of Jamaica. He sat in four parliaments for Old Sarum and Thirsk, and died 1726. His eldest son, ROBERT PITT, father of William, earl of Chatham, d. 1727. See CHATHAM.

PITT, WILLIAM, the second son of the great Lord Chatham, was born at Hayes in Kent, on the 28th of May, in the year 1759. He was educated at home under private tuition until at the age of fourteen he entered at Cambridge. His biographers are profuse in their testimonies to his precоcious capacity and readiness in acquiring knowledge. He was indeed saturated with tuition of all kinds, and taught from his earliest youth by his haughty father to consider himself the hope of the country. He thus acquired at the age when young men are just ridding themselves of boyish shyness an austere self-possession, which imparted to everything he did an air of wisdom and authority. He never knew the nature of diffidence, and the easy assurance with which he took whatever duty or office presented itself, is supposed, not without good reason, to have deceived
the world as to the extent of his capacity. In January, 1781, he was returned to parliament for Appleby, and at once threw himself into the business of the session with the confidence of an old debater. He boldly adopted the projects of reform, then rising into shape in Britain side by side with the discontents in France, and in 1782 brought on his motion for a reform in the representation of the people. On the accession of Lord Shelburne's administration in July, he was made chancellor of the exchequer, and this invitation to retire from the party who were deemed utopian theorists, showed that a well-founded reliance was placed in his ambition, overcoming his reforming propensities. It was in the December of 1783 that King George dismissed
the coalition ministry, and placing young Pitt at the head of the cabinet, conducted with his able championship that battle in which the crown defeated the political aristocracy. Among the statesmen of the day, Dundas, afterwards his right hand man, had the sagacity to see beforehand that he would be victorious, and to sacrifice other prospects for a participation in his fortune. Once established in power, he ruled through seventeen of the most eventful years of European history. When his reign began he had not quite abandoned his old reforming views, and being well versed in the newly promulgated philosophy of Adam Smith, he was partial to the principle of free trade. But the French revolution drove him back from all progressive projects, and the frightened country submitted to a sort of ministerial and parliamentary despotism. The great conflict in which the young minister of a constitutional country measured his strength with the young military despot of France, is matter of history familiar to all. That Pitt, although perhaps his powers have been somewhat exaggerated by panegyrists, showed great resources cannot be denied. His readiness in debate and promptness in comprehending business have seldom been equalled. What chiefly surprises people of the present day in the history of his career, is the vast amount of dissipation, and especially of drinking, with which his great labours were diversified; but perhaps his frailties have, like his abilities, been exaggerated. It was said of him that he never was truly young, that he never had the freshness, naturalness, and openness of youth; it is certain that he grew old before his time, and he died of a broken and exhausted constitution, on the 23d of January, 1806. [J.H.B.]

PITTACUS, one of the seven sages of Greece, was a native of Mitylene, in the isle of Lesbos, where he was born about B.C. 650. He was invested with the sovereign power by the people of Athens, and voluntarily abdicated after re-establishing the authority of the laws. Died abt. 570 B.C.

PITTERI, J. M., a Venetian engraver, 1703-87.

PITTIS, T., an English divine, died 1687.

PITTON, J. S., a Fr. historian, about 1620-90.

PITTONI, J. B., a Venet. painter, 1687-1767.

PITTS, WILLIAM, an English artist, 1790-1840.

PIUS I., pope and saint of Rome, is supposed to have commenced his pontificate, or rather bishoprick, about 152 or 153, and to have died 157. The date of his reign, however, as given by other authorities, is from 127 to 142. He was succeeded by Anicetus. PIUS II. (ÆNEAS SYLVIUS PICCOLOMINI), born 1405, succeeded Calixtus III. 1458, died 1464. He was a great theologian, diplomatist, canonist, historian, orator, and, in fact, a pontiff univerally accomplished. He made great efforts to organize a crusade against the Ottomans. PIUS III. (ANTONIO TODESCHINI), enjoyed a pontificate of twenty-five days, 1503. PIUS IV. (GIOV. ANGELO MEDICI, or MEDICHINO, of Milan), succeeded Paul IV. 1559, died 1565. In his reign the council of Trent finished its sittings, which lasted from 1545 to 1563. PIUS V. (MICHELE GHISLERI), born of an obscure family in Piedmont 1504, succeeded the preceding 1566, he died 1572. In his reign, the bull In Cœna Domini was published, which claims privileges for the clergy irreconcilable with the civil authority; he was succeeded by Gregory XIII., and canonized by Clement XI. in 1713. PIUS VI. and PIUS VII. (following articles.) PIUS VIII. (FRANCESCO XAVERIO CASTIGLIONI), born near Ancona 1761, suc. Leo XII. 1829, and d. after reigning twenty months 1830. His successor was Gregory XVI.

PIUS VI., pope of Rome, by name GIOVANNI ANGELO BRASCHI, descended from a noble family, was born at Cesena 1717, and succeeded Clement XIV., better known as Ganganelli, 15th February, 1775. The first five years of his reign were occupied with public works and economical projects —among others the draining of the Pontine marshes, which helped to embarrass his finances and impoverish the state. In 1780 his political troubles commenced by the accession of Joseph to the power of the empress Queen Maria Theresa, the new emperor being bent on separating the church from the papal jurisdiction. This he did by suppressing a great number of monasteries, forbidding any intercourse between the remainder and Rome, and taking upon himself the nomination of bishops—even of those in Italy. The agitation, intrigues, and social troubles consequent on these proceedings, kept the pope fully occupied till the French revolution; and then, the invasion of Italy by the French occasioned him still greater difficulties. In 1791 Avignon was united to France, the pope pretended to a neutrality which he did not observe; heavy contributions were imposed on him; Ferrara, Romagna, and the Bolognese, were incorporated with the newly-formed Cisalpine republic; the price of peace, in fine, was the revocation of the papal edicts launched against the Jansenists, and the acknowledgment of the civil constitution of the French clergy. Some disorders in Rome between the French and Italians, in course of which the French general Duphot was shot, led to the expedition of Berthier, who arrived in Rome on the 10th of February, 1798, and on the 15th proclaimed it a republic. The Vatican was now occupied by the French troops, the apartment in which the pope sat plundered before his eyes, and even the ring stolen from his finger. He was then taken prisoner, and being carried to France, died there in August, 1799. [E.R.]

PIUS VII., successor of the preceding, by name GREGORIO LUIGI BARNABA CHIARAMONTI, also of noble descent, and a native of Cesena, was born 1740. He became a cardinal in 1785, and in that character propitiated the favour of the French at the period of his predecessor's humiliation. On the fall of Pius VI. the papacy was taken under the protection of the coalesced powers, and just about the time of his death the combined troops of Austria, Russia, and Naples, had succeeded in extinguishing the Roman republic. Cardinal Chiaramonti was elected pope, and took the name of Pius VII., at Venice, on the 15th of March, 1800; at the same time he appointed Cardinal Consalvi his secretary. The power of the French revolution was now grasped by the hands of a master spirit, and instead of destroying the papacy, Napoleon was resolved on moulding it to his purposes by whatever force might be necessary. This great man knew that a nation could not subsist without a religion, and that the genius of the French demanded it rather as an institution than an internal life. By the concordat of 1801, he restored catholicism in France, and bound Pius VII. to recognize the independence of the French church. In 1804 the pope was induced to meet the emperor at Paris, hoping, perhaps, to deter him from his purpose of extending the same principles of independence to Germany and Italy. In this effort Pius VII. had the mortification to fail, and as he still resisted the policy of the emperor, the

1808 and 1809, united all the states of h to the French empire, and on being nicated, arrested the pope himself, and rried him prisoner to Fontainbleau.
the 25th of January, 1813, the pope
concordat granting all that Napoleon
, but retracted again, when the French were expelled from Germany. He now i and awaited the issue of events, and ed to his capital on the 24th of May,
the coalition of the protestant states,
house of Austria, against Buonaparte.
ow resumed his functions as papal secre-
a people reduced to servitude under o were the mere tools of Austria, and a conclave at Rome, who governed by a mere terror and corruption—and withghtest regard for the privileges and pros-he papal subjects. In 1817 Pius VII.
e concordat of 1801, and concluded a with the French crown, one effect of the restoration of Avignon. This year, mmenced the persecution of the secret
f patriots, known as the Carbonari, but e deterred by the revolutions of 1820 and ain, Naples, and Piedmont; the patriots
ne time being soothed by the friendly of Gonsalvi. Affairs were in this fever-hen the aged pope died, as the result of t, on the 20th of August, 1823. His was Leo XII. [E.R.]

I, G. F., an Italian savant, 1689-1764.

ART, an Eng. dramatist, d. about 1720.

ATUS, a king of Caria, in Asia Minor,
n as the father of Mausoleus and Artise names are familiar to history. He in the 4th century B.C.

RO, FRANCISCO, the conqueror of Peru, egitimate son of a Spanish colonel of ina peasant girl of Estremadura. He was ruxillo about 1571. Neglected by his e was suffered to grow up in ignorance
ss. But he had a strong frame and a
; and, stirred by the marvellous tales
h Spain was filled about the newly-disorld beyond the Atlantic, Pizarro left
r Hispaniola, and served for many years rilous and painful expeditions which boa, Pedrarias, and others, led into the d to the western coast of the American

Pizarro was fifty years old before he he means of undertaking his great enter-st the Peruvian empire, the wealth and of which had long been rumoured among
h settlements on the isthmus of Darien, no European had previously dared to formidable were the reports of its power, rific were the hardships of the voyage
narch, which were to be overcome before r of Peru could be reached. Pizarro's iate in his enterprise was Diego Almagro, f fortune like himself. The first attempt eru was made in 1524, but produced eyond the discovery of some islands and he coast of the Pacific, though the suf-
the adventurers were extreme. Pizarro in for Panama in 1526; and succeeded ng part of the Peruvian territory, and he wealthy city of Tumbez. Nothing but the most heroic constancy on the part of Pizarro could have overcome the toils and sufferings which he and his little band experienced. On one occasion he and a few followers were detained for several months on an almost barren island. Worn down with famine, cold, and disease, many of the Spaniards wished to abandon the disastrous enterprise and return to Panama. Pizarro assembled them, and traced with his sword a line on the sand from east to west; then turning towards the south, he said, 'Comrades, on that side are toil, hunger, nakedness, the drenching storm, battle, and death. On this side are ease and safety; but on that side lies Peru with its wealth; on this side is Panama and its poverty. Choose, each man, what best becomes a brave Castilian. For my part, I go to the south.' Saying this, Pizarro stepped across the line, and thirteen of his band followed. At the head of this scanty but determined remnant, Pizarro persevered; and the arrival of succour soon enabled him to leave the scene of suffering and trial, and to gain ocular proof of the value of the great prize which he aimed at. In 1528, Pizarro sailed to Spain, and there sought and obtained from Charles V. ample authority and rank for conducting the conquest of the great South American empire, the existence and results of which he was now able to demonstrate. But it was left to the adventurers themselves to provide the means of conquest; and when Pizarro, in January, 1531, sailed from Panama, on his third and last expedition, he had only 180 men under his command, 27 of whom had horses. Some reinforcements reached him after he had landed on the coast near Peru; but the whole force, with which he ultimately advanced into the heart of that empire, did not exceed 110 foot soldiers, 67 cavalry, and two small pieces of artillery called falconets. With this force (aided, however, largely by fraud) Pizarro overthrew the dominion of the Peruvian Incas, which extended over 35 degrees of latitude, over many millions of an orderly, industrious, civilized, and wealthy population, and which was supported by large armies of well disciplined and veteran soldiers. Pizarro, after a march of great difficulty across the mountain chain of the Andes, reached the city of Caxamalca, near which the Peruvian Inca, or sovereign, Atahualpa, was encamped with numerous forces. Pizarro persuaded Atahualpa to visit the Spanish camp, and then suddenly attacked the Peruvians who attended their monarch, and after a frightful massacre succeeded in making the Inca his prisoner. The submission of part of the empire was now easily effected, as the Peruvians obeyed implicitly the commands which their captive monarch issued at the Spaniards' dictation. After immense quantities of gold had been extorted from the natives as a ransom for their sovereign, Pizarro brought him to trial under a charge of exciting insurrection against the Spaniards, and put him to death. Pizarro then set up another member of the Peruvian family as Inca, and marched upon Cuzco, the capital of the empire. The Spaniards now encountered frequent and obstinate resistance from the natives; but the terror of the European fire-arms, and of the cavalry, told strongly in favour of the invaders; though consummate generalship and indomitable bravery were also required. Pizarro's skill was ever ready in each emergency, and his courage was a quality in which the Spanish soldier was never deficient. Unhappily, he was equally signalized by insatiable avarice, remorseless cruelty, and habits of brutal license and outrage. Cuzco was taken by the Spaniards; and a desperate attempt, which the Indians made a few years afterwards to recapture it, was ultimately repulsed, though not till after the European power in Peru had been brought to the very brink of destruction. Feuds and civil war soon broke out among the conquerors: and Almagro, Pizarro's old comrade, was put to death, after being defeated in a pitched battle which he and his partizans fought against Pizarro's adherents. Pizarro, who now bore the title of marquess, ruled Peru for some time with almost royal power. He had founded the city of Lima as the new capital of Peru, and he devoted himself to its adornment, to planting European settlements in various parts of the provinces, to sending out expeditions of discovery beyond the frontier, and to working the mines, with which the conquered regions abounded. The lot of the natives under him was miserable; and though he lavished wealth and land on his own favourite followers, he treated the other Spaniards, especially those who had followed Almagro, with harshness and contempt. A conspiracy was at last formed against him by some of the surviving friends of that chief. They suddenly attacked Pizarro in his palace on the 26th June, 1541, and killed him after a desperate resistance. [E.S.C.]

PIZZI, J., an Italian writer, 1719-1790.

PLAAT, Andr. H. J. Vander, a famous Dutch engineer and hydraulic mechanician, 1761-1819.

PLACE, Cl. De La, a French priest, 17th ct.

PLACE, Francis, a native of Durham, dist. for his etchings of landscapes, &c., died 1728.

PLACE, Francis, well known as a politician, was born in humble circumstances 1772, and began his public career as secretary to the Constitutional Association, which numbered Hardy and Horne Tooke among its members. He afterwards participated in the agitation for every great measure of reform, and especially in that for the abolition of the corn laws. He was also a great promoter of inventions and the industrial arts. Died 1854.

PLACE, J. De La, a Fr. protestant, 1596-1665.

PLACE, Peter De La, in Latin Platianus, or Platea, a French jurisconsult, historian, and magistrate, born about 1520, killed at the massacre of St. Bartholomew 1572.

PLACE, P. A. De La, a French novelist and dramatic writ., once editor of the Mercury, 1707-93.

PLACENTINUS, or PLACENTIUS, Peter, author of a Latin poem, entitled 'Pugna Porcorum,' in 360 verses, every word of which begins with a P, died about 1548.

PLACETTE, J. De La, a Fr. protes., 1639-1718.

PLACIDIA, daughter of Theodosius the Great, born at Constantinople about 388, became, in second nuptials, the wife of Constantius, a general of Honorius. Her son by him became emperor of the West under the title of Valentinian III., but the government was really administered by the empress-mother Placidia. Died at Rome 450.

PLANCHE, R. De La, a Fr. historian, 16th ct.

PLANCHER, Urbain, a learned Benedictine of St. Maur, au. of a history of Burgundy, d. 1750.

PLANCIUS, P., a Flem. prot

PLANCUS, Lucius, a Ro consul, supposed founder of Ly

PLANCY, W., a French Hell

PLANER, J. J., a German bo

PLANK, T. J., a German his

PLANQUE, F., a French phy

PLANT, J. T., a German wri

PLANTA, Joseph, minister formed church in London, librari Museum, and historian of the deracy, 1744-1827.

PLARTIN, C., a French prin

PLATEN, D. F. De, a Pruss.

PLATER, F., a physician of

PLATIERE, Imbert De La, known as the marshal de Bourdi

PLATINA, the commonly rece tolomeo De Sacchi, an Ital. h

PLATNER, John Zachary, gical writer and professor at L His son, Ernest, a physician, m physician, 1744-1818.

[Plato—From an Ancient

PLATO, born at Athens or B.C.; died in his eightieth year. name in Speculative Philosophy stands to the whole world of T spere in Modern Times; not neither unapproached, but posse lengeable and scarcely explicabl is very wonderful—the catholic p of this illustrious man, the entire ledge and sympathy, and of cou his intuitions. M. Cousin has him as an Eclectic; falsely, if h would indicate a philosopher w roaming through all by-gone found a piece here and a piece fused them cunningly, so that solitary Thinker might feel tha no part in him: but, with truth degree, if he desired to claim Plato a range so vast, a power deep and soar so high, that, what existent, and that have flourishe partially, he saw completely, and off their contentions, and adjust dences into one grand Orb. Th al view we can take of him, tends directly to- such an estimate. Greece—and the preced- ed subsequent World as well—was divided be- two opposing inclinations, that evolved two e camps; the one searching after Unity —the other finding in Phenomena the secret ings. PLATO, grasped both, with all the of his powerful and perfectly balanced he comprehended both sides of the medal of Athirst, at every moment of his life, and ry movement of his mind, for intercourse hat Absolute Good, which is the Universal ver, and for whose sake all things are,—he t sympathy as thorough, with every discur- endency of the Intellect, rejoicing in its ies and distinctions, loving Art and Politics, Human Interests and Laws, no less than the mundane philosopher of them all. Turn hase of the Mind of Plato towards Modern e, there is no feature of our ever shifting ognomy—not an event amid the buzz, and ng around us—on which he would not have some welcome light: carry him to Egypt e land of Menu—there too, he would have felt ne, only aloft, because nearer the centre of ral Life, than those already absorbed, emo- ss Eremites. Notice his Theodicee. On the one MATTER, the slave of Necessity, and itself t Order; on the other, GOD, Intelligence, Freedom, transforming and organizing for his rude Substance—incited by his Eternal ess: the Idea of Good labouring ever more rge through multiplying forms into clearer earer expression: hence that march ever on- hence, also, the possibility of Wisdom and ophy. From the extreme beginnings of ht, what School which has ascended among ysteries, ever elaborated a fairer Synthesis? not merely the profoundity, but this very sness of Plato, which renders the due com- sion of him, arduous. A System, one can at ne survey; but a noble and a full grown is in variety as well as reach, a type of the prehensible Universe: didactic Thinkers, o great as ARISTOTLE, may by dint of ear- ss be gone round and round; but what for- s adequate for a SHAKSPERE, or a GOETHE? Genius, instinct with Poetry as with Know- with which Science is not higher than Art, hich permits no single Faculty to be exclu- an be defined only by its unexhausted In- over the unfolding of the World, and there- elongs essentially to the category of the In- sible. Nevertheless the student must be atively warned against those ordinary com- s of ordinary interpreters of Plato. No man rote more clearly. The Truths he utters, are hard to realize; but the Expression is trans- t as a mountain brook: no marvel though has been held in this country obscure, see- that a similar charge is laid, and moder- approved, against a writer of a much more ed order, but in distinctness and precision not ior to old Euclid himself,—IMMANUEL KANT! ems too, that Plato is a Mystic, and veils, or defaces Truth, through the excesses of his gination. Plato is as real as his immortal ter: he is not a Mystic, unless SOCRATES was Imagination, he has to overflowing. BEAUTY hovers ever over him, and immortal fragrance is shed on the fluttering of her wings. The music of his periods reminds one of the murmuring of the Bees on Hymmetus: But Plato's sense of Beauty, only led him nearer to the Centre and Cause of Existence; and his Imagination—unlike fashionable freaks of Fancy—was the purest and loftiest phase of the REASON: it helped him to the discernment of pure Truth, because liker than any other Faculty in the Finite Mind, to the Creative Thought which preluded the birth of these myriads of gorgeous Worlds.——In proceeding to give an account of Plato's writings, we desire to acknowledge our obligations to the sketch by MR. MAURICE. Unless, in one or two points, at which we may detect the presence of the general Theory of the accomplished Writer, that sketch quite surpasses in its method and sympathy every other known to us:—on behalf of SCHLEIERMACHER, an exception might indeed be entered; but we cannot be detained by AST or SOCHER. Taught by SOCRATES, it could in no wise fail, that Plato, should discern, equally with his Master, that the first step in Philosophy, is to persuade men to ascertain that they know what they talk of—that they really comprehend the significance of the propositions on whose behalf they are prepared to contend. No form or vehicle for teaching could so well subserve this purpose as the Dialogue: it was the written representative of the unforgotten way-side interrogatories of Socrates; and in the hands of Plato—who, as we have said, held Reality as firmly as he held Speculation—the Dialogue was no fiction, but an actual ascent, through the obstructions of Individual Character and Virtues, up towards unseen and manifold Truths, lying as a substratum underneath the most vague and confused Opinion. How superbly, in this respect, each dialogue unwinds! Never to discourage, far less to countenance the faintest element of Doubt, but to awaken the Conscience, and show Mankind that, superior to shadow-land, there is Reality and Light;—for this, and no lesser purpose, Plato followed his immortal Master, and constructed and exemplified that unrivalled Dialectic. In the first (speaking according to Method, not to Time) class of the Platonic Dialogues, we find accordingly, an earnest effort to establish the cardinal Truth, that even beneath Fantasy there is Substance; that beneath whatever end, has been seriously pursued as a true end by Humanity, there is something, which if disentangled from the adventitious, would appear adequate as a purpose to arrest the attention of a healthful mind. While fusing in this way the Cyrenaic, Cynic, and Megaric Schools, —i.e. divesting them of their speciality and exaggeration, Plato, once and again, demonstrates that the main error betokened by incomplete systems, is not the mere incompleteness of such assertions as—'Pleasure is the Good'—'Self-denial is the Good'—'Being is the Good;' but that it lies in the carelessness, often amounting to moral inaptitude for all Inquiry, which hinders men from distinguishing between the reality inhering in the proposition they maintain, and its simple accidents. And his invariable inference is, that the mental condition adequate to Inquiry, is indeed a high moral attainment; for that he only who governs himself, who has subjected himself to continuous discipline, and can restrain his lower Nature, will ever be capable of that highest exercise of the Faculties which conducts to Truth. It may be asserted with all justice—that, which, ages afterwards, BACON accomplished for Physical Investigations, by his masterly exposition of the misleading Idolæ, Plato in the course of his Dialogues has thoroughly accomplished, in a way not less masterly, for the wider and more arduous sphere of Moral and Social Inquiry. Men have long practically acknowledged the authority of the dicta of Bacon: unhappily they are as yet little skilled in the precepts of the more ancient Organon.—In the second class of the Platonic Dialogues, we are led to a more difficult order of contemplations;—our Inquirer now passing to the Ante-Socratic Philosophers, and discoursing of Xenophanes, Parmenides, Heraclitus. It is singular that extremes almost always meet:—Xenophanes and Heraclitus, or—still farther down—Protagoras, no sympathy can bind them, and yet we can trace a closest resemblance. Did not Xenophanes simply inculcate, that, of BEING however real, Man can know nothing? And Protagoras, holding by the flux of Heraclitus, only went to say, that, immersed amid notions, and subject to temperament and circumstance, each Man is reduced to frame a Universe for himself. Plato confronted, while, in one sense, accepting both; and during the polemic that ensues, we find gradually coming out into prominent relief, that chief peculiarity of what we may term his Metaphysics, viz.: the DOCTRINE of IDEAS. Most true, with Xenophanes, that BEING, or the Parmenidean ONE, is not representible or expressible, by the floating confused notions which occupy the sensual understanding: nevertheless, is not the existence of these very notions—these efforts, however imperfect, of the Understanding, to express it,—proof that there is in Being a reality to be expressed; nay that attributes belong to it, in so far answering to these notions? So also with Protagoras; it is very certain that men practically differ as to the Actions and Forms, entitled to rank under the Categories of Justice, Goodness, and Beauty. but is there not inherent in all men, conviction of the existence of a very Just, a very Good, a very Beautiful,—else, whence sprung those imperfect notions, and what upholds them? Thus far, it is evident that Plato merely asserts the reality of what in modern nomenclature we term Absolute Truths; but thereupon the question arises, what are these, and whence come they? How does the Mind reach them? Can knowledge reposing on mere Negations, or on the Contingent, ever take on the character of the Absolute? Many of our Modern Philosophies have remained satisfied with asserting the existence of Absolute Truths, and offering an enumeration of them. KANT, it will be recollected, went farther—he found the Origin of the characteristics of Universality and Necessity, in Laws or Conditions of the Thinking Organism: that element of our Judgments, he said, is absolute, which—irrespective of their subject-matter—depends on the mind's own essential structure: —absolutism, with him has thus a purely subjective origin. The immortal Greek adventured beyond both. Too scientific to remain with mere enumerations; neither was he arreste

at the boundary of mere subjective k considered that Absolute Truths or duct us towards the mist-enshrouded TOLOGY—directly connecting the
with the INFINITE. The general c markable conception, is the follow things that exist, there are pure fo types, imperfectly discerned by ou sensual understanding; but in the which alone, Knowledge, as distin Opinion, consists. This Form, or Idea, is a Thing's very Essence: it reality belonging to it. Far from b or conclusion framed by the Mind, it dependent of the perceiving mind; an so, whenever true Knowledge is att
therefore, is not a system-builder;
attainment reaches no higher than t
endeavour, through discipline, throu
may see what is. Neither, howev substantial archetypal Forms, in the pendent. Every Idea depends on so rior to it, and the root, consummat mony of all, is in the Idea of that Perfect Being, to whom, as Thoug long; and in whose proper Eternit can be thought of as Eternal. Assu not to defend this Platonic system h
we fear, have the few words permitt to offer more than a vague hint o student, however, ponder well, on ledge must have meant, as conceive how lofty the aim of his Dialectic
objects, and how worthy the energies o
most gifted speculative Genius wh impress upon the Earth! Nay, m our reader has made himself acqua History, with its various proposals
thorny problem as to Knowledge, l on what these have offered, in relation our Human Spirit demands—and say all, has recognized the conditions of or—down even to this later day—satisfying these, better than Plato's?- chief class of the Dialogues, we hav say anything adequate. Having e nature of Knowledge and the way
Plato proceeds to search after U sphere of Inquiry—in reference to and Nature. Of Plato's Physics that puzzling and wonderful Time
to speak:—let us just glance at hi
results in social speculation, as se Republic;—earnestly recommending reader, the study of the work itself, recent translation by Messrs. Vaug of Cambridge. The dialogue op dramatically. But as soon as the defined, the question is mooted wh something eternal, or the mere Cre
—that is, whether Society has a principle of Unity, independent of What then is Justice in a State?
the first two books, there cannot b
Justice—a private Justice and a the bond which unites man to his other, is the bond which bestows o
its proper degree of coherence.

take up the picture of an actual Society, and critise its arrangements. Nowhere is Plato less a mere speculator than in this part of the Republic. So far from being an Utopian, he starts with the premise that every selfishness exists, and every evil result of it: and his practical question is, under what conditions Society may nevertheless cohere? Would that the ensuing discussion had been accepted as a lesson, by all Time! Not concerning himself with outward or police regulations for the repression of evil, Plato inquires, what are the Principles of life in any possible Society, and how they may best be developed? And his extensive treatment of this momentous subject has caused the Republic sometimes to be accounted a formal Essay on Education. Classes are named as essential to all living Societies—the Magistracy representing the idea of Wisdom—Guardians representing the idea of Fortitude—and the Masses, subsisting through temperance of desire, self-restraining and submitting. Underneath all which, lies the fundamental conception of Justice, that, by the assertion of whose Supremacy, he preluded the whole. There are parts of this superb dialogue so far reaching, that the conflicts and consequent morals of Modern Civilization can hardly as yet find appreciation for them. We refer especially to what has been termed Plato's Communism and his views of the ultimate relation of the Sexes. Concerning Problems, whose practical solution lies in the Future, it is wisest not to pronounce over absolutely: suffice it to refer only with indignation to the uses made of his doctrines here, to disparage his great name.—Again referring to the Dialogue itself, we must close this brief notice. The wisdom of Plato has taught and nourished the most learned and the greatest of past times: there is no healthier exercise for the earnest man now, than the study of his works. Nay there are errors all around us—errors in practical and speculative Politics, errors in speculative Religion—having their roots deep in the imperfect portions of our Modern Civilization, which can find nowhere a surer corrective.—The best edition of the works of this immortal Greek, is the recent one by Stallbaum. [J.P.N.]

PLATO, a Greek poet, 5th century B.C.

PLATOFF, or PLATOW, COUNT, a famous hetman of the Cossacks, distinguished against the Turks in Moldavia, and during the French invasion of 1812, born about 1763, died 1818.

PLATON, BEFFSCHIN, a Russian prelate, and distinguished theological writer, 1737-1812.

PLAUTUS, TITUS MACCIUS, regarded as the father of Latin comedy, is supposed to have been of mean parentage, and was born in Umbria about 227 or 224 B.C. About twenty-one of his plays are still extant, the vast number attributed to him having been reduced within that limit by the critic Varro. These have been frequently translated into Italian, French, German, and English, and Lessing has devoted an essay to the life and writings of Plautus. Died B.C. 184.

PLAYFAIR, JOHN, Professor, first of Mathematics, and then of Natural Philosophy in the University of Edinburgh; born 10th March, 1749, at Manse of Benvie, Forfarshire; died at Edinburgh, 19th July, 1819. Mr. Playfair, the son of a Scottish clergyman, was destined for the Church; and indeed he occupied the living of Liff and Benvie, for a few years after the death of his father in 1773; but his scientific and literary tastes, and the power he could bring to the illustration of whatever scientific subject arrested his attention, quickly embarked him on a different and very distinguished career. His bent towards Science, manifested itself quite early in life; for, previous to the date just mentioned, he had stood, although a young man, competitor for several Chairs in our Scottish Universities: in his earliest attempt in Marischal College Aberdeen, he was defeated only by the veterans Trail and Hamilton. From the manse of Benvie, he passed, after a short interval of connection with Mr. Ferguson of Raith, to the joint professorship (in company with Dr. Adam Ferguson) of Mathematics in Edinburgh; and from that year—1785—he devoted himself, with remarkable success, to the advancement and adornment of all leading Inquiries concerning the Laws of Nature. Were proof needed of Playfair's unresting activity in the path of his affections, surely that is ample which the pages of the Edinburgh Review and of the Edinburgh Philosophical Transactions, will, to posterity, always afford. But activity was not his chief characteristic. With the instinct of a Mind placed above the Inquiry of its time, and therefore descrying its headlands, or the points at which it was passing farthest into the unknown, he seldom thought or wrote, unless on those questions on whose solution in either way, depended the shape and course of some opening and future science. To Playfair, Scotland owes its introduction to the arduous works of Laplace; it was he who first publicly explained the value and criticised the methods of great National Surveys; he was the exponent of the labours of Maskelyne, in determining the density of our globe; earliest he broke ground on the subject of Imaginary quantities, and renewed discussion on Porisms; he led the way in Modern Geology by his masterly Illustrations of the Huttonian Theory of the Earth; and he left as a model for Scientific Histories, that exquisite, although unfinished 'Dissertation on the Progress of Mathematical and Physical Science,' which prefaces the recent Editions of the Encyclopædia Britannica. Playfair was distinguished by yet higher attributes. No man ever excelled him in the power of effective exposition; and this is equivalent to asserting that he had that appreciation of Method, which appertains only to minds of the highest order, for it involves an almost instinctive power of separating between the important and the unimportant, and seizing the features of that Harmony, which underlies all phenomena. An intuition, we say; for the gift seems inexplicable, unless as an expression more or less distinct, of that correlation between Mind and the external Universe, which LEIBNITZ designated as a Pre-established Harmony. But even these excellencies, great and rare as they are, do not in our estimation equal another—viz.: the exquisite temper and wholeness of the Man. The memory of Playfair has yet scarcely faded amid the best circles of Edinburgh; and affection for him, is, with many, as an heir-loom or favourite tradition that will descend. He was an example, in all things, of what culture—apart from mere attainment—can make a Man. The finest passage of the Roman Orator in his Archias, or the well-known lines of OVID:—

——— ingenuas didicisse fideliter artes, Emollit mores, nec sinit esse feros;

when laid beside practical life and actual character, seem oftener a satire than a laudation; but Playfair might have recited them and never blushed. Mild and manly, liberal generous and sedate, the best of the rising minds of his time thronged around him, and drew strength and fair resolve from the symmetrical nature they contemplated. It is a good thing to advance science by original discovery; but infinitely greater that scientific thought should advance and emancipate the Man. Our Scottish Metropolis was at that period rarely fortunate. Beside Playfair, Dugald Stewart taught,—a man of corresponding equality and command of temper, of singular openness and moral reach. Others resembled them; for, in virtue of their power of assimilation, two Minds so distinguished, could not stand alone. Nor must we omit from the list, Professor John Millar of Glasgow—author of the Historical View of the English Government. It is not too much, to say that by giving tone and expansion to the hearts and intellects around them, and growing up under their care, these remarkable persons have exercised most important influence on the recent progress of Britain, and thus on the destinies of the world. May Scotland never present herself under another garb! We have certainly no ambition to ejaculate,—

Roma! Roma! Roma!
Non è più come era prima! [J.P.N.]

PLAYFAIR, WILLIAM, brother of the preceding, an ingenious inventor and author, 1759-1823.

PLAYFORD, J., a writer on music, 1613-1693.

PLEE, A., a French botanist, died 1825.

PEYEL, J., an Austrian pianist, 1757-1833.

PLINY, the Elder, (Caius Plinius Secundus,) a distinguished writer on natural history and botany, was born A.D. 23, most probably at Novocomum, the modern Como (though Verona disputes with it the honour of being his birth-place). He died in A.D. 79. Inferior in grasp of intellect, but ranking only second to Aristotle as a natural historian, the name of Pliny shines out through the mist of antiquity with particular lustre. In his youth he served in the army, and in his more mature years held some important appointments in the state. Possessing an extraordinary aptitude for collecting information, and endowed with an amazing love for study, his whole life was devoted to the prosecution of scientific pursuits. Rising before day-break, the early part of the morning was employed by him as his time for transacting business. The rest of the day was spent in study, and even during his meals, while taking his bath, or while on a journey, he had a reader attending him, to read from some favourite author. He took notes from every work he read, for he used to say, 'There was no book so bad but what might afford something valuable to be derived from it.' His writings were numerous, but the only one that has reached our times is his famous 'Natural History.' This great work is a perfect mine of observations; though unfortunately the true and the fabulous are mixed up in nearly equal proportions. It contains, he says himself, extracts from no fewer than 2,000 volumes, from authors of all kinds, travellers, historians, philosophers, philosophers, and physicians. part of it to the natural history of ani the four books which treat of them, he an immense number of facts, such known and believed at that time. rangement he adopts is according to importance. The part which treats occupies a much larger space; ten bo ing the history of plants, and five, derived from them. It is unfortunatel now to recognize many of the plants scribed; but his merits as a botanist or not to be judged of by comparing hi with ours, but by recollecting the age lived, and the effects which his works keeping alive the knowledge of nature dark ages which succeeded him. His remarkable. During a tremendous Mount Vesuvius, Pliny, who had the mand of the fleet, wishing to save the tants of the country, in the neighbour volcano, and, at the same time, anxious in person the awful phenomenon, sailed of terror, and was unfortunately suffoc noxious fumes. It is generally believe was the same eruption of Vesuvius th Herculaneum.

[Pliny the Younger—From an Ancient

PLINY, the Younger, a nephew a son of the preceding, distinguished a historian, and statesman, was born at or 62. His mother, Plinia, was a sis the Elder, and he remained under the latter till his eighteenth year, when of Vesuvius took place, which proved protector. He began his career as a vocate the year following, and in the r jan held a government in Bithynia. his death is uncertain.

PLOT, ROBERT, a native of Kent 'The Natural History of Oxford sh shires,' 1640-1696.

PLOTINUS, the most famous te new Platonic school, was born at t about A.D. 204. The original bent of his was to speculation, and he had prosecuted studies under Ammonius Saccas, at Alexan- for eleven years, when, in his thirty-ninth he joined the expedition of Gordian against arthians, as a means of enabling him to study ilosophy of the East. At the emperor's death nd his way back to Antioch, and afterwards o Rome, where he taught for six-and-twenty with great popularity, and where he gradually ped his system and composed many books, were corrected and arranged by his pupil yry. He died in Campania in A.D. 274. yry divided his master's 54 books into six ads, or sections of nine. The metaphysics of us are obscure in their subtlety, though Plato s acknowledged guide and pattern. He held order to perfect knowledge, the subject and must be united, that the intelligent agent e thing understood—the apprehending and prehended, must not be in separation; the having everything spiritual within itself. stress was laid by him upon pure intuition, as e one of its gleams even the absolute and un- ioned might be discovered. Out of the spirit eloped the soul, which is brought into contact the sensuous world. Plotinus had learned icism from Ammonius, but he added to ysticism peculiar to himself, while he at- ed to clothe Paganism in the garb of a philo- al theism. Probably towards the end of his is transcendental visions and extacies were sult of a diseased organization, which had reduced and emaciated by continued absti- . His system acquired great popularity in sub- nt years, and sometimes opposed Christianity ften modified it. Creuzer's edition of Plo- in 3 vols. 4to was printed at the Oxford rsity press in 1835, and the Ænneads ap- d in a Latin translation by Marsilius Ficinus, nce, 1492. [J.E.]

OUCQUET, G., a Ger. metaphys., 1716-90.

OWDEN, C., an English Jesuit, 1743-1821.

OWDEN, EDMUND, a Catholic lawyer, au- f 'Commentaries and Reports,' 1517-1584.

OWDEN, FRANCIS, an Irish barrister, known historian and miscellaneous writer, d. 1829.

UCHE, NOEL A., a professor of rhetoric at s, distinguished as a naturalist and man of , and for his opposition to the bull 'Uni- us.' He is author of 'Spectacle de la Nature,' 'Histoire du Ciel, Idées des Poètes, des ophes et de Moise,' 2 vols., 'La Mécanique ngues,' and some lesser works, 1688-1761.

UKENET, L., an Eng. botanist, 1642-1710.

UMIER, C., a French botanist, 1646-1706.

UMPTREE, JAMES, a Church of England er, known as a miscellaneous wr., 1770-1832.

UNKET, OLIVER, a Roman Catholic pre- ecuted on a false charge of treason, 1681.

UNKET, WILLIAM CONYNGHAM, Lord, was n of the Rev. Thomas Plunket, pastor of a terian congregation, Enniskillen, Ireland. as born there in 1761; and after practising uccess as a barrister, became a member of ish parliament, under the patronage of Lord ermont. He soon distinguished himself in op- on to the government, and especially in re- g the legislative union, notwithstanding which he appeared for the crown on the prosecution of the patriot, Emmett, and addressed the jury with inhuman earnestness, in order to dissociate himself, it is said, from the failing fortunes of those who were once his friends. Promotion followed as a matter of course. In 1803 he became solicitor-general for Ireland, and two years later attorney-general, from which time his rising fortunes were associated with those of Grenville and Fox in the government. In 1806-7 he was a member of the Whig cabinet with Lord Grenville and the late Earl Grey, and for many years afterwards was attached to the political interests of the former. The discontent which pervaded the country at the period of the Manchester massacre, and, in fact, to the end of the Castlereagh government in 1822, found no sympathy in the bosom of Lord Plunket, who earned the gratitude of the Tories by his oratorical services in the extenuation of their errors, and the defence of their policy. As the first law officer of the Irish government during the viceroyalty of Lord Wellesley, in the time of Canning, he shared in their general unpopularity, but somewhat later he acquired great credit by promoting the act of catholic emancipation. In 1827 he was raised to the peerage, and from that time to 1830 was chief justice of the Common Pleas in Ireland. After the retirement of Wellington, Lord Plunket had no further share in the legislation of the country, but remained chancellor of Ireland under the Whigs for many subsequent years, being succeeded in that office by Lord Campbell. His public life ended in 1841, and he died at the advanced age of eighty-nine in January, 1854. [E.R.]

PLUQUÉT, FRANCIS ANDREW ADRIAN, a learned French abbé, author of a 'Dictionary of Heresies,' 'Essay on Luxury,' and 'The Classical Books of the Chinese,' 1716-1790.

[Plutarch—From an Ancient Gem.]

PLUTARCH (PLUTARCHUS), was a native of Chaeronea, a city of Bœotia. The time of his birth is uncertain. From the few facts which he has recorded of himself, we learn that he was studying philosophy under Ammonius, at Delphi, when the Emperor Nero made his progress through Greece in the twelfth year of his reign, A.D. 66. His family was one of some importance in Chaeronea, and members of it had held the highest civic offices in their native city. Of the events of his life very little is known. It appears from his writings that he visited Italy and Rome, perhaps more than once; and that he delivered lectures in his vernacular language on philosophy, in the imperial city, during the reign of Domitian, which were attended by most of those who pretended to be employed in the study of philosophy. It is probable that the substance of these lectures was afterwards embodied in his moral writings. At a late period in life he began to read the Latin authors, having, as he states, during his residence in Italy, been prevented from acquiring a knowledge of the language by the circumstance of 'having so many commissions to execute, and so many people coming to him to receive his instructions in philosophy.' The latter part of his life was spent in honour and comfort in his native city, where he passed through various magisterial offices, and enjoyed the honour and emoluments of a priesthood. He had four sons and a daughter. The time and circumstances of his death are unknown; but his intellectual attainments and character have been transmitted to us in his works. The great work, which has immortalized the name of Plutarch, is his 'Parallel Lives,' which contains the biography of forty-six distinguished Greeks and Romans. The Lives are arranged in pairs, each pair containing the life of a Greek and a Roman, followed by a comparative estimate of the two. In a few cases the comparative estimate is omitted or lost. Besides these there are four other biographies which were written by Plutarch, and a life of Homer, which is sometimes attributed to him. Fifteen other biographies have been lost. Few of the ancient writers have attained so extensive celebrity as Plutarch. His 'Parallel Lives' have delighted and instructed every successive generation since they were given to the world; and are equally acceptable to people of every age and class. As materials for history they have been found not altogether trustworthy; but the chief object of the author was to delineate character as exhibited by the events of a man's life, whether these were important or trifling, and without a strict regard to the order in which they occurred. His other writings, which amount to upwards of sixty, are comprehended under the title of 'Moralia,' or 'Ethical Works;' though some of these are of an historical or anecdotical character. In all his writings a moral end is apparent. 'A kind, humane disposition, and a love of everything that is ennobling and excellent, pervade his writings, and give the reader the same kind of pleasure that he has in the company of an esteemed friend, whose singleness of heart appears in everything that he says or does.' [G.F.]

POCHARD, J., a French theologian, 1715-1786.

POCOCK, Edward, son of a minister of the Church of England, bearing the same name, was born at Oxford 1604, died 1691. He is greatly distinguished as an Oriental scholar, and for his learning as a theologian. His eldest son, Edward, published, in 1671, the 'Life of Hai Ebn Yokdan,' translated into English by Ockley; and his son, Thomas, a translation from Menasseh Ben Israel 'On the Term of Life,' 1699.

POCOCK, Sir G., a brave admiral, 1706-1762.

POCOCK, Isaac, a native of Bristol, first known as an historical painter, and afterwards a prolific writer for the stage, 1782-1835.

POCOCKE, Richard, a native of South... ton, who became bishop of Ossory and Meath is known as the writer of travels, 1704-1765.

PODESTA, J. B., an Italian Orientalist, 1...

POELENBURG, Cornelius, a Dutch ... scape painter, employed by Charles I., 1586-...

POERNER, C. G., a Ger. chemist, 1732-1...

POGGI, S. M., an Ital. dramatist, 1685-1...

POGGIANI, J., an Italian writer, 1522-1...

POGGIO-BRACCIOLINI, a philologist ... historian, one of the first promoters of ... literature, 1380-1459.

POHL, J. C., a German physician and ... on vampyres, 1706-1780. J. Emmanuel, ... a physician and botanist, 1746-1800.

POHL, J. E., an Austrian botanist, 1784-...

POILLY, Francis, a French engraver, ... 1693. Nicholas, his brother and pupil, ... 1696. J. Baptist, son of Nicholas, died ... Francois, brother of J. Baptist, died 1723.

POINSINET, A., a French dramatist, 1735-...

POINSINET-DE-SIRRY, Louis, a Fren... dramatic wr., translator, and antiquar., 1733-18...

POINTER, J., an English historian, last cent.

POIRET, Peter, one of the greatest mystic... writers produced in the protestant church, was born at Mentz, where his father was a sword-maker, ... 1646, and became pastor of Anweil, in the duch... of Deux-Ponts, 1672. He was a master of the Latin, Greek, and Hebrew languages, but having no taste for a merely scholastic divinity, he studied the philosophy of Descartes, and during the first years that he retained his pastoral charge, published a work on Cartesian principles, entitled 'Cogitationes Rationalia de Deo, Anima, et Mal...' which produced a considerable sensation, and was attacked by Bayle. In 1676, the conquest of Louis XIV. occasioned Poiret's retreat to Hamburgh, where he became acquainted with Madame Bourignon, and through her experiences, in the first place, with the grounds of the mystic philosophy, the further study of which led him to point out the defects of the philosophy of Descartes, whose admirers have applied to his criticisms the fable of the viper and the file. He published a digest of the mystic philosophy, including the experience of Madame Bourignon, wrought into a system, under the title of 'De Œconomiâ Divinâ, or universal system of nature. The principle of it is abstraction, or the preference of a pretended illumination to reason; the same in essence as the quietism of Molinos, the annihilation of the Hindu philosophy, and the divine vision of Boehmen. In all these cases we are presented with a vast fabric of assumption, demonstrating the existence of a super-sensual wisdom, as manifested to the consent sceptical age in some rare examples of clairvoyance, the physical preparation being nearly the same, though produced by different means. From Hamburgh Poiret removed to Rheinsberg, in the neighbourhood of Leyden, where he died. A complete list of his works would be ... without a description of them, for which ... not space. The curious may consult the Catalogue raisonné, in the Memoirs of J. P. Nic... lished at Paris 1727-1745.

POIREY, F., a French theologian, 1...

, G., a learned ecclesiastic, 1724-1803.
, J. B., a Fr. geographer, 1761-1831.
, N. J., a Fr. theologian, died 1710.
. See POMPADOUR.
, RAIMOND, a French actor and dra-
r, died 1690. His son, PAUL, an exe actor, 1658-1735. PHILIP, son of or and dramatic author, 1682-1743.
br. of Philip, a comic actor, d. 1753.
, D. S., a French analyst, 1781-1840.
NIER, PETER ISAAC, a physician
one of the first to read chemical lec-
s, and to devise the means of procurter from the sea, 1720-1798.
N, J., a Fr. astronomer, 1742-1807.
S, DIANA OF. See DIANA.
S, P. DE, a Fr. theologian, died 1205.
N., a French naturalist, 1719-1786.
PETER, a French ecclesiastic, known
r and philosophical observer, 1715.
DE, a French Orientalist, 1714-1782.
O, C., a Spanish painter, 17th cent.
, P., a doge of Venice, 1130-1148.
EGINALD, the famous cardinal and in the reign of Queen Mary, was a of Lord Montacute, cousin of Henry s born at Stourton castle, in Stafford-and after completing his studies in and Italian universities, appeared at Henry VIII. in 1525. In 1529 he a to avoid any share in the discussion divorce, but when Henry had resolved
e question to the foreign universities,
r step caused his selection of Pole to n in that city. Instead of yielding,
y returned home, and in 1531 refused oprie of York, which was offered him of compliance. The king having dis-in anger, he consulted his safety by ingdom, and rejoined the company of shed men he had known at Padua and e literary circle in which he moved was raffa, Sadolet, Gilberto, Fregoso, archlerno, Bembo, and Contarini. These nbraced the doctrine of Justification, social meetings discussed the means
g the papacy—their great principle serve the unity of the church under vernment. In Italy, during the reign III., Reginald Pole rose to great dis-d, on the accession of Paul III. in aised to the cardinalate, as were his mentioned. On the death of Paul, in almost determined to put the triple head. His place in English history nder the date 1553, that of the acces-en Mary, who at once invited him to nd gave him the place of Cranmer, leposed, as archbishop of Canterbury.
n London, dignified as papal legate, in 1554, and was received by Mary in her husband, Philip II. of Spain, at ross. On this occasion, as we read in ndence of Bullinger, he addressed the the salutation of the Virgin—'Hail f grace,' &c. He advocated moderate the council, as may be supposed from disposition and his inclination to pro-ions. After his death, we find Paul IV. complaining that England might have been retained with ease had Cardinal Pole been supported in his measures. In 1556, Pole was created chancellor of both universities, Oxford and Cambridge, having previously been ordained priest, and inaugurated into his archbishopric—the latter after the burning of Cranmer, which took place in March of that year. It is curious that Cardinal Pole survived the queen only a few hours. The circumstance is thus satirically alluded to in a letter addressed to Bullinger by E. Sandys,—'We yesterday received a letter from England, in which the death of Mary, the accession of Elizabeth, and the decease of Cardinal Pole is confirmed. That good cardinal, that he might not raise any disturbance, or impede the progress of the gospel, departed this life the day after his friend, Queen Mary, (17th November, 1558.) Such was the love and harmony between them, that not even death itself could separate them. We have nothing, therefore, to fear from Pole, for dead men do not bite.'—(Letters from the archives of Zurich, published by the Parker Society.) Some allowance must be made for the asperity of party, for no one can doubt the sincerity, humanity, and learning of Cardinal Pole. Ranke shows that he injured himself in Italy by boldly stating the doctrines of the Gospel at the council of Trent in 1545. [E.R.]

POLEMBERG. See POELENBURG.

POLEMO, three distinguished Greeks:—1. A philosophical teacher, who had for his disciples Zeno and Arcesilas, and who differed but little from Aristotle, died B.C. 270. 2. A geographical and historical writer, surnamed Periegetes, about 200 B.C. 3. A native of Laodicea, one of the most celeb. rhetoricians at the beginning of the 2d cent.

POLEMO, the first of the name king of Pontus, under the triumvirate of Mark Antony, died 1. The second, his son and successor, was recognized king by Caligula 39, and deposed by Nero 65.

POLENI, J., a Venetian antiquar., 1683-1761.

POLHEM, CHRISTOPHER, Count, a Swedish engineer, member of the Academy at Stockholm, and contributor to its transactions on subjects of commercial economy and mechanics. The great works over which he presided are the docks at Carlscrona and the Trolhetta canal. The celebrated Swedenborg was his coadjutor, 1661-1751.

POLI, G. S., an Italian physiologist, 1746-1825.

POLI, M., an Italian chemist, 1662-1714.

POLIER, A. L. H. DE, a Fr. Orient., 1741-95.

POLIGNAC, JULES, Prince De, whose name, as the minister of Charles X., king of France, has acquired an European interest from the revolution of 1830, was descended from an ancient family, which suffered with the other noblesse of France by the establishment of the Republic in 1792. He became known to the political world as a party to George's conspiracy against Napoleon in 1804, and was rewarded with the title of prince by the pope of Rome for his devotion to the church after the restoration of Louis XVIII. From 1823 to 1829 he resided in London as ambassador, and then returned to head the administration which provoked the revolution of July. After a short imprisonment and exile, he was allowed to reside in France. Died in the sixty-fourth year of his age, 1847.

POLIGNAC, MELCHIOR DE, archbishop of Anch, and cardinal, was born at Languedoc 1661.

He received the purple on going to Rome as a diplomatist. Died 1741.

POLIGNAC, YOLANDE MARTINE GABRIELLE DE POLASTRON, Duchesse De, a favourite of the queen Marie Antoinette, and gouvernante of the royal children, 1749-1793.

POLITIAN, or POLIZIANO, ANGELO, an Italian scholar who became tutor to the children of Lorenzo de Medici, and was appointed by him canon of Florence. He wrote a 'History of the Conspiracy of the Pazzi,' and edited a collection of Greek epigrams, 1454-1494.

POLK, J., an American lawyer and statesman, b. 1795, elected president of the U.S. in 1844, d. 1849.

POLLAJUOLO, ANTONIO, a painter, sculptor, engraver, and goldsmith of Florence, 1426-1498.

POLLEXFEN, SIR HENRY, an eminent lawyer and member of parliament, acted as counsel for the seven bishops in 1688, and was knighted after the revolution, and appointed chief justice of the Common Pleas; died 1692.

POLLICH, J. A., a Ger. naturalist, 1740-1780.

POLLINI, C., an Italian botanist, 1783-1833.

POLLINI, J., an Italian historian, 16th cent.

POLLIO, CAIUS ASINIUS, a Roman consul, and friend of Augustus, most celebrated as the patron of letters, and for the protection he afforded to Virgil and Horace; died in the year 3, aged eighty.

POLLIO, TREBELLIUS, a wr. of Roman history, only fragments of whose works remain, about 300.

[Birth-place of Robert Pollok.]

POLLOK, ROBERT, was born in 1798, in Renfrewshire, where his father was a small farmer. After having worked for some years on the farm, he determined on becoming a preacher; and, adding a little Latin to the elementary education he had previously received, he entered, at the age of nineteen, on a five years' course of study in the university of Glasgow. Afterwards, while he was a student of theology, he published two or three little prose tales of a religious cast; and then, also, he was working up many of his poetical fragments into his 'Course of Time.' This energetic and ambitious poem appeared in the spring of 1827, and speedily obtained a popularity which it is not likely soon to lose. Its deeply religious character recommended it to serious persons; and it was admired by critics for the many flashes of original genius, which light up the crude and unwieldy design, and atone for the narrow range of thought and kno

well as for the stiff pomposity that pe diction. There are in it a few passages strikingly and most poetically imagin
some which are beautifully touching.
did not long survive to enjoy his fame, o
cute his profession, to which he was adm preacher in the United Secession Ch
soon after the publication of his poem already shown symptoms of consumption, became more decided; friends, gained for genius, furnished him with assistance f
Italy; but he was able to travel no fa
Southampton, where he died in Septem
before completing his twenty-ninth year

POLLUX, JULIUS, two Greek writ times confounded together,—the earlie marian and sophist, born in Egypt about the later, an historian of the 4th century

POLO, MARCO, was the son of a merchant, Niccolo Polo, and was born year 1250. Some months before his father Niccolo, and uncle Maffio, resolve the experiment of opening a trade with t princes who had lately established ther
the East of Europe. For this pur sailed for Constantinople with a valuabl goods, which they disposed of to great a and investing the proceeds in rich jew crossed the Black Sea, and travelling on the Volga, placed these at the service tar prince there. He rewarded them w the value of the jewels; and as they satisfied with their gains they now t return home. This they could not co consequence of the breaking out of a wa
two princes whose territories lay on th
They accordingly travelled round the no
the Caspian, and reached Bokhara Here they remained three years; and w induced to accompany a Persian embas
Grand Khan, Kublai, who then held hi ficent court at Kemenfu, in Chinese Tar received them into favour, and promote honour. This wise prince, like others o held the liberal maxim, which has recei own day much favour among statesmen forms of faith which are professed by gr bers of persons should have encourage support. Accordingly, in prosecution o pose he commissioned one of his gran
the two Poli, on an embassy to the l Christians, requesting his holiness to wise men to instruct his people in the re arts of the Western world. The Tartar died by the way; but the Poli pur journey in safety, exhibiting the Khan's seal upon a golden tablet, which he them as a passport. In 1269, having years by the way, they reached Acre, after arrived in Venice. Marco was proaching manhood, and his mother h in giving him birth, his father's ties to city were less binding. Accordingly, i two brothers started on their return to of Kublai, taking young Marco with bearing letters from Pope Gregory reached Tai-yuen-foo in safety, where was then residing. Young Marco wa

ighest favour, and was employed on rtant missions both in China proper, nd the adjoining countries. He held ears the high office of governor of the n-tchoo-foo, in S.E. China. He thus portunities which no European has ever of becoming acquainted with the d its institutions. Polo's travels were ne regarded as of no value, but his n relating what he himself saw, has time to time in later years confirmed in ble manner. The best edition of his aid to be that by Count Baldelli, 4 vols. ice, 1827. It contains a map of Africa, 1351, and another with the routes fol- he Poli in Asia marked upon it. The nd Chinese maps which Polo brought hought to have suggested to the Portu- passage by the Cape. The three Poli seventeen years in China; Kublai re- them depart, till at length his grand- igning in Persia, sent ambassadors to o ask in marriage a young princess of royal. It was found impossible for her by land, and Marco having just returned age to India, and represented the safety iage, the Khan reluctantly consented to of the ambassador, to let the Poli con- by sea to Persia, with the young prin- ed to be their master's bride. A fleet of as prepared, the Poli were loaded with mpowered to act as the Khan's am- at the European courts, and entreated after they had visited their friends. ached Ormuz in eighteen months—and Venetians arrived in their native city in an absence of 24 years. They found forgotten of all their old friends and ces, but a display of their enormous a great feast which they gave, speedily greater accession of new friends than to be quite convenient. Marco was his return taken prisoner in a sea-fight Genoese, in which he commanded a e was carried to Genoa, and detained ; but treated with great kindness so s history became known. He sent to his papers, and employed his leisure in s notes into shape. On his return, he d a settled and respectable life, and died ld age. His father lived till 1316, and nd family by a young wife. [J.B.]

IELE, Richard, a minister of Truro, l, known as an antiquarian, biographer, and poet. His Histories of Devon and re highly esteemed; 1759-1838.

ENUS, a Greek author, 2d century.

IUS, a celebrated Greek historian, who tinguished himself in public affairs dur- ars of the Achæan league, born about died 122.

IUS of Cos, a medical writer, pupil and of Hippocrates, 5th century B.C.

CARP, St., one of the most illustrious nt of the Christian fathers, burnt alive secution under Marcus Aurelius, 167.

CLES, a Greek sculptor, 4th century B.C. culptor of the name, flour. abt. 170 B.C.

CLETUS, a Greek sculptor. 5th ct. B.C.

POLYCRATES, a tyrant of Samos, put to death by Orontes, time of Cambyses, 6th century B.C.

POLYCRATES, bishop of Ephesus, 2d century.

POLYDORUS, Virgilius, an Italian historical writer, who was sent to England by Alexander VI., to collect the tax called Peter's pence, and obtained a living in the Church of England. His works are a 'Collection of Proverbs,' a Treatise on Prodigies, and particularly a History of England. He was a friend of Erasmus, and flourished about 1470-1555.

POLYGNOTUS of Thasos, the earliest recorded painter of Greece, who has attained great fame, appears to have been settled at Athens about 463 B.C., whither he had accompanied Cimon after his conquest of Thasos. With Polygnotus painting was fully developed in all the essential principles of art, though his style might still want the delicacies of execution which distinguished the period of refinement about the time of Alexander the Great. The first portrait on record is the picture of Elpinice, the sister of Cimon, and his own mistress, which Polygnotus introduced in the 'Rape of Cassandra,' painted by him, in the 'Poecile' at Athens, a celebrated portico illustrated with the history of the Athenians, and where the philosophers and others used to meet and gossip. Polygnotus seems to have been a complete painter, though established quite a generation before the execution of the Elgin marbles; his style was, however, doubtless, somewhat similar to the style of those great works, ideal or generic. There is a memorable passage in the Poetics of Aristotle, speaking in the very highest terms of this great painter. Aristotle says, comparing him with two of his contemporaries :—'Dionysius paints men as they are, Pauson worse, and Polygnotus better than they are.' Many other Greek writers speak of him in the highest terms. Lucian enumerates him among the four greatest colourists of the Greeks, these being Polygnotus, Euphranor, Apelles, and Aëtion. The greatest works of Polygnotus were the two extensive series of pictures (tempera paintings) executed on the two principal sides of the Lesche, or public hall at Delphi, attached to the Temple of Apollo, as a convenient place of meeting for the various Greeks from every part, who were in the habit of visiting Delphi, for the sake of consulting the oracle there, which was the most famous of all the Greek oracles. These pictures, executed most probably on panels of larch, and inserted into the walls, represented on one side, the war of Troy, and, on the other, the Descent of Ulysses into Hades to consult the Soul of Tiresias. Popular and general subjects which were necessarily interesting to Greeks of every race, and thus the most appropriate subjects for the decoration of so purely a national building. They were known as the 'Iliad' and 'Odyssey' of Polygnotus, though he had consulted all other traditions, as well as Homer, in their composition. The popularity of these works was so great that the Amphictyonic Council (the deputies from the Greek cities who met every spring at Delphi) voted Polygnotus public hospitality throughout Greece, that is, including all cities in league, and in these towns, should the business of Polygnotus ever call him, he was entitled to be maintained at the expense of the municipality. So great an honour has been conferred apparently only on one man since,

Apollodorus, the grammarian. Some similar attention, though in this case doubtless purely personal, seems to have been paid to Albrecht Dürer, in his journey in the Netherlands, in 1520-21; he speaks in every case of being entertained by the Nurnberg Consul in the several great towns he visited. Great as the art of Polygnotus was, it does not seem to have approached that dramatic truth of representation which distinguishes the works of Raphael, or many less considerable of the moderns. His art was representative almost as much as imitative, its object seems to have been chiefly ethic; objects and events are indicated rather than absolutely presented, but, of course, this is more strictly true of the accessories; a house for instance, or a wall, represented a city; a man throwing down the stones of the wall, the destruction of the city; a tent, an encampment; the striking or taking down a tent, a departure; a ship, a fleet; a few captives, a conquest; a few warriors, an army; and a few dead bodies, a victory. The ultimate value of works of this class depends upon the merit of the execution; perfectly treated they may be made perhaps more impressive than an actual dramatic representation, as the very nature of the treatment compels the mind to reflection, one of the highest objects of all high art.—(Böttiger, Ideen zur Archaeologie der Mablerei; Wornum, Epochs of Painting Characterized.) [R.N.W.]

POLYHISTOR. See ALEXANDER, SOLINUS.

POMBAL, SEBASTIAN JOSEPH CARVALHO-MELHO, Marquis De, an arbitrary Portuguese statesman, 1699-1782.

POMERIUS, J., a moralist, 5th century.

POMET, PETER, a French chemist, 1658-1699.

POMEY, FRANCIS, a French Jesuit, 1618-1673.

POMFRET, JOHN, whose poetical works are now seldom read, was born in Bedfordshire 1667, and became rector of Malden, in that county. He published a volume of poems in 1699, the most popular of them being his 'Choice,' a picture of happiness founded on affluence and tranquillity. Some additional compositions were published after his death. That event was the consequence of an attack of small-pox, while awaiting in London his institution to a richer living in 1703.

POMIS, D. DE, a Jewish writer, 1525-1587.

POMPADOUR, JEANNE ANTOINETTE POISSON, Marquise De, a mistress of Louis XV., in whose favour she succeeded Madame de Chateauroux, 1744. She was then twenty-two years of age, and was created Marchioness the year following, with a pension of 240,000 francs. She was a woman of boundless extravagance, but gave great encouragement to arts and literature, did much to promote the establishment of the porcelain manufacture, and the military school, and aided powerfully in the suppression of the Jesuits, died 1764.

POMPEI, G., an Italian poet, 1731-1788.

POMPEY, CNEIUS, surnamed 'The Great,' son of Pompeius Strabo, a Roman general, was born 106 B.C. He distinguished himself against the enemies of the Roman senate, both within the state and without, and at last fell in the struggle against Cæsar for absolute power. The events which mark his career are briefly these. Like his father, under whom he commenced his military career, serving against Marius, Pompey ranged himself with the aristocratic party of the republic. He was in his twenty-third year only when he raised three complete legions, 60,000 men, at his own expense, and took the field in behalf of [illegible] —at that juncture returning from his expedition against Mithridates. By his twenty-sixth year Pompey had defeated the remains of the Marian party in Cisalpine Gaul, Sicily, and Africa, and on his return to Rome, B.C. 83, was hailed Magnus—the great—by Sylla; his audacious perseverance also procuring for him the honours of a triumph. On the death of Sylla in B.C. 78, Pompey was sent proconsul to Spain, where the plebeian war was continued by Sertorius, and after a four years' ardnous struggle, he remained master of the field, his opponent having been betrayed and assassinated. He returned to Italy in time to give the finishing blow to the similar victories of Crassus, and in B.C. 70 Pompey and Crassus were elected consuls. In possession of this office he restored the tribunitial power, and afterwards disbanded his army, remaining at Rome as a private citizen. In the beginning of the year B.C. 67, he was entrusted with extraordinary powers, in order to destroy the lawless bands and the piratical adventurers who infested the coasts of the Mediterranean, and having effected this, he was made absolute dictator in the East, and superseded Lucullus in the command against Mithridates. The latter was completely routed in B.C. 66, and soon after Pompey becoming master of Asia Minor, pursued his conquests through Syria and Palestine as far as the Red Sea. For these services he obtained a third magnificent triumph at Rome, and in B.C. 60 joined Cæsar and Crassus in the triumvirate, the former of whom gave him his daughter Julia in marriage. Succeeding events caused Pompey to draw closer to the senatorial party, and with him, as the representative of the patrician republic, went Cato, the hereditary enemy of the ambition of Cæsar. In B.C. 54 Julia died, in the year following Crassus was slain in Asia, and now the hostility between Cæsar and Pompey rapidly developed itself. The former having applied for the consulship refused to present himself in Rome as a private citizen, and a decree of the senate declared him a public enemy unless he resigned his command. Instead of doing so Cæsar crossed the Rubicon with his troops in 49, and Pompey, accompanied by Cato, Cicero and the other nobles of Rome, fell back upon Greece, where the great battle of Pharsalia decided his fate. Pompey was advised to seek an asylum in Egypt, then ruled by a sovereign he had protected, Ptolemy XII. He was received with pretended friendship, but treacherously murdered as soon as he had stepped ashore, B.C. 48, and his head being cut off, it was sent to Cæsar, who turned away from it and could not restrain his tears. Pompey fell, and with him the republic of Rome, for want of the art of government: the brilliance of his early victories carried him to power, but the remembrance of his greatness in the field was a poor compensation for the anarchy that prevailed at Rome. [E.R.]

POMPEY, CNEIUS, son of the preceding, endeavoured to carry on the war against Cæsar. He was defeated at Munda, and soon after killed, B.C. 45.

POMPEY, SEXTUS, younger son of Pompey the Great, continued the war after the defeat at ıe subjugation of Spain by Cæsar.

master of Corsica, Sicily, Sar-
, and rendered himself formidable nder against the second triumvirigth defeated and taken prisoner,
tus, by order of Antony, B.C. 35.
, JOHN JAMES LE FRANC, Mar-scholar and poet, whose works moral discourses, odes in imita-many pieces opposed to the new 1784. His br., J. GEORGES, a on incredulity, 1715-1790.
I, PIETRO, a famous Italian argued that the immortality of proved by any natural reasons,
on revelation, 1462-1524.
LÆTUS, JULIUS, the Latinized
Italian antiquary, 1425-1497.
SEXTUS, a Roman jurist, 2d ct.
See BELLIEVRE.
POMPONE, SIMON ARNAULD,
, statesman and diplo., 1618-99.
ESCO, an Italian writer, 17th ct.
an astronomer, born about 1767,
yne as astronomer-royal, 1831,

XI, PRINCE JOSEPH, nephew of born 1763, distinguished himself oscziusko, the Polish patriot, be-war to the provincial govern-t Warsaw in 1806. In 1809 he nd duchy against the army of 813 he was named marshal of battle of Leipzig, and displayed llantry in covering the retreat of was drowned in the Elster while effect his own escape two days October.
XI, STANISLAUS, Count De,
ans Augustus, king of Poland,
ovia, and a companion-in-arms
lourished 1678-1762.
XI, STANISLAUS AUGUSTUS,
g. See STANISLAUS AUGUSTUS.
XI, PRINCE STANISLAUS, a Count Stanislaus, distinguished ts and letters, of which he was tector; born at Warsaw, 1754, 1832.
L., a Polish poet, died 1742.
of Toulouse, reigned 1037-1060.
of Tripoli, reigned 1112-1137.
E, a Fr. literateur, 1683-1733.
Fr. astronomer, 1761-1835.
SIR FREDERICK CAVENDISH,
arl of Besborough, and distinlry officer, was born 1783. He as cornet in 1800, and became a gallant bearing in the penin-
as present at the battles of Talaniera, Salamanca, and Vittoria,
a brilliant career on the field of 37.
GEORGE, younger son of John
r of the Irish House of Commons, er and statesman, 1755-1817.
SIR WILLIAM, a British cavalry killed at Waterloo after a brilul charge against the Fr., 1815.

PONTANUS, J., a Bohem. savant, 1542-1626.
PONTANUS, J. ISAAC, a Danish philologist and histor. of the city of Amsterdam, 1571-1639.
PONTANUS, the common name of J. JOVIEN PONTANO, one of the most elegant and fertile Latin writers of the 15th century, distinguished as a poet and historian, 1426-1503.
PONTAS, J., a French casuist, 1638-1728.
PONTE, L. DE, a Spanish ascetic writer, known to Fr. literature as DUPONT, 1554-1624.
PONTIANUS, a pope of Rome, 230-235.
PONTIUS, an ecclesiastical writer, 3d century.
PONTIUS, the Latinized form of PAUL DUPONT, an engraver of Antwerp, born 1596.
PONTIUS, CONSTANTINE, a learned Spanish divine, died in prison while awaiting his execution as a protestant, 1559.
PONTOPPIDDAN, ERIC ERICSON, a Danish prelate, known as a theologian and Latin poet, 1616-1678. ERIC, his grandnephew, a prelate and antiquary, 1698-1764. J. LOUIS, brother of the latter, a theologian, died 1799.
PONTORNO, JACOPO, whose proper name was CARRUCCI, an eminent Ital. painter, 1493-1558.
PONTOUX, C. DE, a Fr. writer, 1530-1579.
PONZ, ANTHONY, a Span. painter, 1725-1792.
PONZIO, PAUL, an Italian sculptor, 16th cent.
POOL, H., a Dutch poet, 1689-1733.
POOL, J. VAN, a Dutch portrait painter, 1666-1745. His wife, RACHEL, daughter of Ruysch the anatomist, also a painter, 1664-1750.
POOL, M., a Dutch engraver, born 1670.
POOL, or POOLE, MATTHEW, author of a work highly valued by theological students, entitled 'Synopsis Criticorum,' was a presbyterian divine, born at York 1624. He was ejected from his living when the act of uniformity was enforced in 1662, and in 1666 made himself obnoxious to another large party by attacking the Roman Church. After this occurrence he retired to Amsterdam, where he died 1679.
POPE, ALEXANDER, was born in May, 1688, in London. His father was a linen-draper in Lombard Street, and, having spent his youth at Lisbon, had embraced the Roman Catholic faith, which his son, in an easy way, retained as it was taught to him. Pope inherited bodily feebleness from both parents: his father was deformed, and his mother gave him his headaches and his Jacobitism. He was a very sickly child, and hardly less so in manhood: he never grew to be taller than about four feet; and his deformity and weakness of limbs were so great that, for many years before his death, he could not dress or undress himself. In these circumstances Pope gathered his scanty education, and wrote poems which placed his name first in the brilliant literature of his time; nor was he prevented by his infirmities from taking, in aristocratic society, the place which, in that age of patronage, was won by his literary celebrity and secured by the agreeableness of manner he had when his temper was not chafed. The poetic endowments of Pope were very fine; and there occur in his works short passages that are among the gems of our poetry, and felicitous images and turns of expression that have become household words. In fact no poet furnishes so many brief quotations as he does; a distinction which he owes in part to the epigrammatic pointedness of his diction, and to the singular skill of his versification. But many of the striking lines and phrases which thus come into the mouths of every one, are either cold in feeling or positively unpoetical in matter: they are apt expressions of worldly shrewdness, not effusions of imaginative susceptibility. His rhythm, too, which in its way is perfect, has a mannerism and a monotonous smoothness, which make it more than doubtful whether, even in his favourite ten-syllable rhymes, he deserves to be held as having really improved on the manly and varied melodies of Dryden. The steadiness, likewise, with which he adhered to the themes and forms that had become fashionable under the guidance of that celebrated poet, made it impossible for Pope's real and unquestionable genuis to develop itself freely; and his principal poems are, both by the nature of their subjects and by the cautious and dissertative character of their tone, so very uncongenial to the poetical taste of our century, that it is not wonderful his writings should now be neglected and his place in the file of our poets degraded below his due. Yet, though the fact is little noticed, it was not without efforts in another direction, that Pope resolved to write for the drawing-room instead of the world; it was not till he had exercised his youthful fancy on higher topics and in worthier forms, that he contented himself with gaining celebrity as an admirable writer of didactic and familiar verse, and as one of the very best of all poetical satirists.—His education, ill begun at home by a Jesuit, was continued with little more success at school; where, till the age of twelve, he learned hardly more than to admire Ogilby's clumsy translation of the Iliad, and Sandys' polished version of Ovid. The remainder of his youth was spent at Benfield, in Windsor Forest, where his father, having retired from business, had purchased a house and a few acres of land. Here the young poet was left to educate himself. He never became an accurate scholar, even in Greek, Latin, or French, which were his only studies beyond English literature; but the sickly boy devoured books eagerly, acquired much literary knowledge, and wrote verses which his father encouraged and corrected. The 'Ode to Solitude,' printed among his works, dates from his twelfth year; before he was fifteen he had, likewise, made his translations of the first book of Statius, and of Ovid's Epistle of Sappho; and at this time, also, by producing his 'Imitations of English Poets,' he showed some love for those old masters whom afterwards he so unwisely neglected. Now, likewise, he wrote a comedy, of which we know nothing; a tragedy on the story of Saint Genevieve; and an epic poem called 'Alexander,' which is described as having been an imitation of the Odyssey, and was preserved by him till, in the height of his fame, his friend Atterbury made him burn it. An inclination to linger in the purer fields of poetry was indicated also, though accompanied by little originality of invention or strength of poetic feeling, in the works by which he first introduced himself to the public. These were the 'Pastorals,' printed in 1709, (when the writer was in his twenty-first year), but written a good while before, and already admired in manuscript by persons of rank to whom he had become known. They were received with great applause. In the 'Essay on Criticism,' which appeared in 1711, he stepped at once into that dissertative school of which his chief efforts were always made. The 'Essay,' with all its weakn ciples and barrenness of poetical elem only a wonderful production for a boy equal, in many points, to anything he s wrote. His celebrity was effectually deservedly secured in 1712, by the fir his 'Rape of the Lock.' When, in sixth year, he republished this poetic i tion of fashionable trifles, with the ad supernatural machinery, he had given guage a mock-heroic poem, superior

[The residence of Pope.]

'Lutrin' and to everything else of the s interval between these two versions of appeared 'The Messiah,' 'The Temp (founded on Chaucer), the 'Ode on S Day,' and 'Windsor Forest,' (probably w earlier). The poems which have now have more of the essence of poetry t Pope's later works.—During a second tending through more than a dozen yea employments were prompted by the securing a livelihood. His father, af political panic, had refused to invest hi any way, and had lived on the capital, already nearly exhausted; and all Pop had as yet gained him scarcely £150. dertook his Translation of the Iliad, whi him for more than five years, and, p subscription (from 1715 to 1720), prod author more than £5,000. It was re an admiration which will readily be yi readers who can forget the original. duced a quarrel with Addison, from w Pope, closely allied both by opinion ship with Swift and the Tories, always at distance. Pope's poor edition of Shakesp lished in 1725; and his Odyssey, of w books were translated by himself, appe year and the next, adding considerably fortune he had made by its predecesso now hotly engaged in those squabbl small authors of his day, which embitt rest of his life. In 1727, in three 'Miscellanies,' partly written by Swift he declared open war on his enemies by 'On the Art of Sinking in Poetry.' himself took the crowning step of his

, by issuing his tremendous satire 'The Dun-'—In 1715, when the Iliad had secured for him prospect of independence, he became the pos-or of the villa at Twickenham, which became ous as his residence for the last thirty years of life. Here his father died soon, and his mother e years afterwards. Both were keenly regretted heir son, whose affection for his family and for w friends was as strong as the jealousy and ability which continually entangled him in rels out of doors. From this pleasant retreat, r the publication of the Dunciad, he fired off a l many squibs on his critics; and, among other s, he altered his great satire, dethroning its nal hero, Theobald, (who had edited Shaks-e better than he had), and putting Colley Cib-n his place. But the principal employment of e years was the composition of a new series of ts, in which he emulated the half-prosaic ry of Horace's epistles with great success; e he took a more ambitious flight in ethical itations, for which he was philosophically very ly qualified, though he gave much grace and etness to the expression of his crude opinions. poems of this group embrace, besides some or pieces, the 'Essay on Man,' setting forth, r Bolingbroke, a theory of optimism, the con-ences of which he certainly did not understand; 'Epistle on Taste,' which landed him, for the t time, in squabbles with the great; the 'Imita-ns of Horace,' with translations from the same et; and the 'Universal Prayer,' published in 38. In 1737 he published selections from his Correspondence,' containing letters, many of which very elegant but very artificial pieces of prose iting. He was engaged to the last in his war th the dunces; for he contributed to Arbuthnot's nderfully witty 'Memoirs of Martinus Scrib-us,' which appeared in 1741. His frail body, hich had held out longer than might have been pected, was quite unable to support him into old e. Asthma and the beginnings of dropsy warned m, for several months, that the end was at hand. e set himself to meet the catastrophe with calm eerfulness, and died in May, 1744, some days after aving completed his fifty-sixth year. [W.S.]

POPE, Sir Thomas, a Roman Catholic states-man, and friend of Sir Thomas More, born in Ox-fordshire 1508, fnd. Trinity College 1554, d. 1558.

POPE, Walter, an English physician, known as a novelist and miscellaneous writer, died 1714.

POPHAM, Sir Home Riggs, a naval officer, born in Ireland 1762, most celebrated for his ex-pedition against Buenos Ayres, for which he was reprimanded after a trial, the charge being that he had acted without sufficient authority. He was afterwards commander-in-chief on the Jamaica station, and died 1820.

POPHAM, Sir J., an Eng. judge, 1531-1607.

POPPÆA, a Roman empress, wife of Nero, who took her from her second husband, Otho, 62. Killed by a kick from Nero when pregnant, 65.

PORBUS, Peter, a Dutch painter, born about 1510, died 1583. His son, Francis, a portrait painter of rare excellence, 1540-1580. Francis, 'the Younger,' son of the latter, and possessor of his genius, 1570-1622.

PORCARI, Stefano, a gentleman of Rome, executed for conspiracy against Nicholas V., 1453.

PORCQ, J. C., a French theologian, 1636-1722.

PORDENONE, the common name, taken from his birth-place, of Giov. Antonio Licinio Regillo, a Venetian painter, 1483-1540. Bernardino, who bears the same surname, a relation and pupil of the preceding, 16th century. Giulio, one of his nephews, also a scholar of his, 1500-1561. J. Antonio, brother of the latter, died 1576.

POREE, Charles, a French Jesuit and rhetorician, 1675-1741. His brother, C. Gabriel, a canonist, 1685-1770.

PORLIER, Juan Diaz, surnamed Il Marquesito, a Spanish general, born at Carthagena, in South America, about 1775, hung for conspiring against Ferdinand VII., after attempting to restore the constitution, 1815.

PORPHYRY, one of the Neoplatonists, and early opponents of Christianity, was born A.D. 233, probably in a Tyrian colony, settled in Batanea. His original name was Malchus, the Shemitic term for a king, but Longinus, his master, gave him the appellation of Porphyry, in allusion to the purple vestments of royal persons. He studied under Origen and under Longinus in his youth, but at thirty years of age attached himself, at Rome, to Plotinus, whose works he arranged and corrected. Leaving Rome, where his thoughts had often reverted to suicide as the speediest means of freeing his spirit from its present prison-house, he went to Sicily, where he wrote his attack on Christianity. He seems to have returned to Rome, and he died about the year 304. Porphyry was a man of great abilities and erudition, and his elegant style contributed in no small degree to the popularity of the Plotinian philosophy (Plotinus). His asceticism may be found in his treatise 'On Abstinence,' and the strange but not uncommon union of superstition and scepticism may be seen in his doctrine of demons, in his ascription of the power of miracles to Plotinus, and in his record of a special extacy enjoyed by him in his sixty-eighth year, in which he was privileged to gaze upon the unveiled Divinity. He laboured to find discrepancies in the Scriptures, and he made a special assault upon the authenticity of the book of Daniel. The history of the gospels was also subjected to similar treatment. His 15 books against Christianity were ordered to be destroyed by the emperor Theodosus, so that we are only acquainted with their nature and contents through the replies made to them by such writers as Eusebius and Jerome. Besides his philosophical and antichristian works, Porphyry wrote commentaries on Homer, and treatises on a great variety of miscellaneous subjects. [J.E.]

PORPORA, Nicolo, born at Naples in 1689, was the celebrated pupil of the no less celebrated Alessandro Scarlatti. In early life he left home and composed and brought out operas with great success in Vienna, Venice, Dresden, and several other continental cities. In 1773 Porpora was engaged as composer and director of the operas established in opposition to Handel, but in spite of all the science, talent, and industry which he brought to the task he had undertaken, the London public heard his compositions with an indifference which, it is said, 'amounted almost to contempt.' Porpora, therefore, quitted England in disgust and returned to Italy, where he became one of the principal masters in the Conservatory at Venice. He late in life retired to Naples, where he died in great poverty at the age of 82. Porpora was particularly fortunate as a singing master, and amongst his most celebrated pupils were Farinelli, Mingotte, and Caffarelli, besides many other dramatic vocalists. [J.M.]

PORPORATI, A., an Ital. engraver, 1741-1816.

PORQUET, P. C. F., a French poet, 1728-1796.

PORSENNA, a king of Etruria, 6th cent. B.C.

PORSON, RICHARD, an eminent scholar and critic, professor of Greek in the university of Cambridge, was born at East Raston, in Norfolk, where his father was parish clerk, 1759. He became professor in 1793, and two years later commenced the Greek editions on which his reputation rests, by the publication of Euripides. Died in the office of librarian to the London Institution, 1808.

PORTA, BACCIO DELLA, better known as Fra Bartholomeo di San Marco, an Italian painter, friend and scholar of Raphael, 1469-1517.

PORTA, GIAMBATTISTA, an Italian of noble family, dist. as a natural philosopher, 1540-1615.

PORTA, JAMES DELLA, an Italian sculptor and architect, died about the end of the 16th century. His nephew, WILLIAM, a sculptor, same age. J. BAPTISTE, his relation and pupil, 1542-1597. THOMAS, br. of the latter, dates unknown.

PORTA, JOSEPH, called Porta del Salvati, a painter of the Florentine school, about 1520-1570.

PORTA, or PORTIUS, SIMON, an Italian philosopher, pupil of Pomponazzi, 1496-1554. Another SIMON PORTIUS, published Greek lexicons, 17th century.

PORTAL, A., a French physician, 1742-1832.

PORTAL, P., a French accoucheur, died 1703.

PORTALIS, JEAN E. MARIE, councillor of state and minister of religion under Napoleon, 1746-1807.

PORTE, ABBE J. DE LA, a French compiler, author of 'Esprit de l'Encyclopédie,' 1713-1779. His nephew, SEBASTIAN, deputy to the assembly, the convention, and the council of 500, died 1823.

PORTE, A. DE LA, a Fr. statesman, 1737-92.

PORTE, M. DE LA, a French writer, 1530-71.

PORTE, P. DE LA, a valet in the service of Anne of Austria and Louis XIV., author of 'Memoirs of the Reigns of Louis XIII. and Louis XIV.,' 1603-1680.

PORTE-DU-THEIL, FRANCIS JOHN GABRIEL DE LA, an antiquarian and Hellenist, 1742-1815.

PORTER, ANNA MARIA, a popular novelist, was the daughter of a military officer, who died soon after her birth. She resided in the neighbourhood of London with her mother and sister, and died at Bristol while making a tour for the re-establishment of her health in 1832. Her works are 'Artless Tales,' written before she was twelve years old, 1793-1795, 'Walsh Colville,' 1797, 'Octavia,' 1798, 'The Lake of Killarney,' 1804, 'A Sailor's Friendship and a Soldier's Love,' 1805, 'The Hungarian Brothers,' 1807, 'Don Sebastian,' 1809, 'Ballads and Poems,' 1811, 'Recluse of Norway,' 1814, 'The Village of Mariendorpt,' 'The Fall of St. Magdalen,' 'Tales of Piety,' 'The Knight of St. John,' 'Tales Round a Winter's Hearth,' and some others.

PORTER, JANE, elder sister of the preceding, was born 1776, and commenced her literary career in 1803, by publishing her first novel, 'Thaddeus of Warsaw.' This interesting fiction became highly popular, and Miss Porter ever after [illegible] celebrity it brought her. The principal works are 'The Scottish Chiefs,' 'The P[illegible] side,' 'Duke Christian of Luneberg,' '[illegible] a Winter's Hearth,' (to which the sisters in common), 'The Field of Forty Fo[illegible] 'Sir Seaward's Diary.' She went to with her brother, Sir R. K. Porter, a was left companionless by his death in 1 generally at Bristol. Died 1850.

PORTER, SIR ROBERT KERR, br[illegible] popular novelists, and himself distinguished artist, author, and diplomatist, was b[illegible] ham in 1780. After exhibiting some hi[illegible] tures in London he went to Russia as p[illegible] emperor, and while there married a [illegible] Prince Scherbatoff. On leaving Russ[illegible] the army, and was with Sir John M[illegible] battle of Corunna, receiving the honou[illegible] hood in 1813. From 1817 to 1820 he [illegible] ling in the East, and in 1826 was appo[illegible] at Venezuela, where he resided till 184[illegible] obtained leave of absence with the [illegible] visiting St. Petersburg and London, [illegible] the former city, of apoplexy, 1842. H[illegible] 'Travelling Sketches in Russia an[illegible] 'Letters from Portugal and Spain,' '[illegible] of the Russian Campagin,' and his[illegible] Georgia, Persia, Armenia, and ancient[illegible]

PORTER, F., an Irish theologian, [illegible]

PORTER, GEORGE RICHARDSON, economist, 1793-1852.

PORTES, P. DES, a French poet, [illegible]

PORTEUS, BEILBEY, successively Chester and London, was born at Y[illegible] and raised to those secs respectively 1787. He was a man of great lite[illegible] His principal work is a 'Life of [illegible] Staker,' an edition of which, with th[illegible] ductions of his pen, was edited by his[illegible] late Dr. Hodgson, dean of Carlisle a[illegible] St. George's, Hanover Square. Died [illegible]

PORTUS, FRANCIS, an eminent It[illegible] and classical critic, 1511-1581. His son[illegible] a distinguished Hellenist, died 1610.

PORY, JOHN, an English travell[illegible] lator of Leo Africanus, sec. to the colo[illegible] nia from 1619 to 1621; time of his dea[illegible]

PORZIO, L. A., an Ital. physician [illegible]

POSADAS, F., a Span. theologian [illegible]

POSIDONIUS, a Stoic philosopher [illegible] at Rhodes in the time of Mithridates [illegible] B.C., and to whom Plutarch was in[illegible] materials of some of his Lives, espe[illegible] Marius, with whom Posidonius was [illegible] Another POSIDONIUS flourished a[illegible] about 260 B.C. He was a famous ast[illegible] well versed in the physical sciences.

POSSELT, E. H., a Ger. historian [illegible]

POSSEVIN, ANTHONY, a learned [illegible] and diplomatist, 1534-1611. His bro[illegible] TIST, a man of letters, 1520-1549, [illegible] their nephew, a physician and Latin [illegible]

POSSIDIUS, ST., an African pre[illegible]

POSSIDONIUS. See POSIDONI[illegible]

POST, F., a Dutch painter, absen[illegible]

POSTEL, WILLIAM, a remarka[illegible] acknowledged to be one of the most [illegible] his age, was born in Normandy 1[illegible]

East to collect curious MSS. by Francis his return was appointed professor of ics and languages. He was banished ce through the influence of the queen of nd died in a monastery 1581.

UMUS, AULUS, a Roman dictator, h Virginius, B.C. 496. See POSTUMUS.

ETHWAYT, MALACHI, a member of arian Society, and writer on commercial ied 1767.

MUS, MARCUS CASSIANUS LATINIUS, general and governor of that province, proclaimed emper. in 257, massacred 267.

IO, a Platonic philosopher, 3d century.

IKIN, GREGORY ALEXANDROVITSCH, prince and field-marshal, was born at of a noble family in 1736. He entered when young, and possessing great per- antages attracted the notice of the em- harine, with whom he became a special

He greatly distinguished himself by es over the Turks, especially by his con- the Crimea, 1783, and of the cities of Otchakow, and Kilianova, 1787-1790. cesses, and the favour of the empress, him with despotic authority in the Rus- re. He died of an epidemic distemper e conquest of Jassy, 1791.

NGER, or POTTINGER, JOHN, a bar- t, and miscellaneous writer, 1647-1733.

NZANO, F., an Italian poet, died 1599.

RAT, MARQUIS DE, one of the secret French diplomacy during the revolution, 1740, and was one of the state prisoners from the Bastile in 1789. Died 1808.

IER, R. J., a French jurist, 1699-1772.

R, C., a French comedian, 1775-1838.

CKI, CLAUDIA, wife of Count Bernard remarkable for her personal sacrifices in ise of benevolence, especially during the ruggle of 1830-3; born in Posen 1802, tile at Geneva, worn out with grief, 1836.

CKI, COUNT IGNATIUS, grand marshal nia before the destruction of Poland, and patriot of Kosciusko, was born 1751. In took refuge in Saxony, and published a tract upon the establishment and fall of titution,—returning, however, to share in struggle for independence. He then passed ne in the prisons of St. Petersburg and and died at Vienna 1809.

CKI, COUNT JOHN, a Polish ambassador terest of Russia, author of a 'History of itive Russians,' &c., 1769-1815.

CKI, COUNT STANISLAUS, minister of and public instruction for the grand duchy aw, known as a publicist, 1757-1821.

OCKI, COUNT STANISLAUS FELICIE, a obleman, in the Russian service, 1750-1805.

OCKI, V., a Polish poet, 17th century.

T, J., a German chemist, 1692-1777.

T, PERCIVAL, a surgeon of London, author valuable professional works, 1713-1788.

TER, BARNABAS, an English prelate, born al about 1579, died 1642. CHRISTOPHER, hew, an eminent divine and partizan of I., born about 1591, died 1646.

TER, F., a learned divine, 1594-1678.

TER, JOHN, author of the well-known 'Antiquities of Greece,' was a son of Thomas Potter, a linen-draper of Wakefield, where he was born about 1674. He died archbishop of Canterbury 1747. He published the first volume of his 'Antiquitates,' and a beautiful edition of Lycophronis Alexandra, before reaching his twenty-fourth year, in 1697. His theological works were published in 3 vols. at Oxford 1753.

POTTER, PAUL, a Dutch painter, 1625-1654.

POTTER, ROBERT, a famous Greek scholar and translator of the Church of England, 1721-1804.

POUCHET, F. A., a Fr. theologian, 1666-1723.

POUCHET, L. E., a Fr. economist, 1748-1809.

POUGENS, MARIE CHAPLER JOSEPH DE, a distinguished painter, and philological and archæological savant, 1755-1833.

POUGET, B., an Italian cardinal, 1280-1351.

POULAT, J. B., a French poet, died 1705.

POULLE, LOUIS, a Fr. preacher, 1702-1781.

POUPART, FR., a Fr. anatomist, 1661-1709.

POUPET, C. DE, a Fr. statesman, 1470-1529.

POUQUEVILLE, F. C. H. L., a celebrated French traveller and historian, 1770-1838.

POURCHOT, E., a Fr. philosopher, 1651-1734.

POUSCHKINE, ALEX., a popular novelist, poet, and historian of Russia, born at St. Petersburg 1799, killed in a duel 1837.

POUSSIN, NICOLAS, was born at Andelys in Normandy, about June 19, 1594, of a noble family of Soissons. He learnt painting under Quintin Varin of his native place; then, when only eighteen years old, tried his fortune in Paris, and in 1624, in his thirtieth year, settled in Rome, where, with the exception of a visit paid to France in 1640-2, he dwelt the remainder of his life. He died there, Nov. 19, 1665. Poussin, though by birth a Frenchman, must almost be accounted among the painters of Italy; his style is peculiar, 'no works of any modern,' says Sir Joshua Reynolds, 'have so much of the air of antique painting as those of Poussin.' His pictures have been compared with coloured bas-reliefs, a term not inexpressive of his style. His peculiar leaning to this sculpturesque treatment may in some measure be explained by his close intimacy with his friend Du Quesnoy, the sculptor, known as Fiammingo; they lived in the same house together at Rome. His colouring, compared with his drawing, is inferior and mannered, which is somewhat remarkable, considering that he studied in the school of Domenichino at Rome, whom he considered to be the best painter of his time. 'The Seven Sacraments,' painted twice by Poussin, are among his most celebrated works, and both sets are now in England, one at Belvoir Castle, the other in the Bridgewater Gallery, London. His works are very numerous; the prints that have been engraved after his principal pictures only, amount to upwards of two hundred. Some of his best works are in the British National Gallery, as the 'Bacchanalian Festival,' No. 42, finely engraved by Doo, which constitutes an excellent exponent of his style, with all his merits and peculiarities in perfection. He was a skilful landscape painter also, indeed one of the ablest of the landscape painters of Italy, though the greater fame in this department of his younger brother-in-law, GASPAR DUGHET, who took the name of POUSSIN, has eclipsed the reputation of Nicolas. GASPAR POUSSIN was born of French parents in Rome, in 1613, and died there in 1675; like Claude he was exclusively an Italian painter. The National Gallery possesses also some of the finest works of this artist. The sombre character of his landscapes is in some measure due to the dark grounds on which he painted.—(Bellori, Vita di Nicolo Pussino, &c., Rome, 1672. Wornum, Descriptive and Historical Catalogue of the National Gallery, &c.) [R.N.W.]

POUTEAU, Cl., a French surgeon, 1725-1775.

POWELL, David, a famous Welch antiquarian and minister of the church, about 1552-1590. His son, Gabriel, cel. as a controversialist, 1575-1611.

POWELL, E., a popish divine, executed 1540.

POWELL, G., an English actor, died 1714.

POWELL, G., a Welch scholar, 1561-1620.

POWELL, Sir John, an eminent lawyer and judge, dist. at the trial of the seven bishops, d. 1696.

POWELL, W., an English actor, died 1769.

POWELL, W. S., a learned divine, 1717-1775.

POWER, Tyrone, was the son of an Irish gentleman, of the county of Waterford, and was born 1795. His mother was left a widow in his infancy, and removed to Glamorganshire in South Wales, near the town of Cardiff, where there was a theatre. Here Power first appeared as Romeo; the next notice we have of him is his attempting Orlando at Monmouth, after which he returned to the maternal retreat. On his return, some time after, to the stage, he began to discover his unsuitability for tragedy, and went into the comic line, and tried his juvenile strength in Mercutio, Benedict, Charles Surface, and Belcover; occasionally, however, we find him doing pathetic parts, such as Alonzo, at Newport in the Isle of Wight. At Margate also he served alternately under both muses; but, on the Kentish circuit generally, appears principally to have adhered to Thalia, though at Newcastle-upon-Tyne we find Melpomene again in the ascendant; and at Dublin he actually made his debût as Romeo, to which he added Jeremy Diddler. In 1818 Mr. Power retired from the stage, probably disgusted with its difficulties; but in 1821 we find him making a new essay at the Olympic and Astley's theatres, which latter he quitted for the Lyceum, where he appeared on 2d July, 1822, as Robert Haythorn, in 'The Turnpike Gate.' In 1823 he was appointed manager of the Olympic, and soon after was granted an appearance at Drury Lane, but produced no effect. Next year, at the Adelphi theatre, Mr. Power was enabled to make a stand in a new part called Valmondi, and to achieve a triumph as Paddy O'Halloran, in a neglected Irish farce. It was with great unwillingness that he undertook the part, which, nevertheless, proved the stepping-stone to his fortune. He soon found it to his advantage to devote his abilities exclusively to the delineation of Irish characters. As an Hibernian representative Mr. Power enjoyed a rich brogue, a smart and vivacious air, a whimsical leer that lighted up the jokes that came trippingly from his tongue, and a voice for singing in which he could indulge in the broadest patois. These qualities he exhibited in 'The Irish Tutor,' in Murtoch Delany, Phelim O'Flanningan, Rory O'More, Pierce O'Hara, O'Plenipo, and a host of other characters, written expressly for him. His triumphs were witnessed within the walls of the three London theatres, Old Drury, Covent Garden, and the Haymarket. In 1840 Mr. Power migrated for America, whence he never returned. After a most profitable career, notwithstanding ill health, he embarked in the steam-ship 'The President,' which sailed from New York 11th March, 1841. It had 123 souls on board. On the 12th a great storm occurred, which raged for two days and three nights. Whether, as suspected, the vessel foundered while beating between Nantucket shoals and George's Bank, remains unknown. Nothing more was ever heard of that fatal bark and its numerous tenants:—

'There is no ray
By which her doom we may explore;
We only know she sailed away,
Was seen, but never heard of more.' [J.A.H.]

POWNALL, Thomas, a distinguished antiquarian, and statesman, 1722-1805.

POYET, B., a French architect, 1742-1824.

POYET, W., chancellor of France, 1474-1548.

POYNET, or PONET, John, successively bishop of Rochester and Winchester, 1516-1556.

POYNINGS, Sir Edward, a statesman of the reigns of Henry VII. and Henry VIII.

POYNTER, W., a theological writer, died 1827.

POZZETT, P., an Italian savant, 1769-1816.

POZZI, J. B., an Italian painter, 16th century.

POZZI, J. H., an Italian poet, 1697-1752.

POZZI, Stefano, a clever Italian painter, 1708-1768. His brother, Joseph, a painter, died 1765.

POZZO, Andrea, an Italian Jesuit, dist. as a painter, architect, and writer on art, 1642-1709.

POZZO, C. Del, an archæologist, died 1657.

POZZO, Count J. Del, an architect, b. 1718.

POZZO-DI-BORGO, Charles Andreas, Count, a native of Corsica, distinguished as a statesman in the interest of the 'Holy Alliance,' was born in Corsica, 1764, and first became conspicuous as a partizan of the English in the time of Paoli. When Corsica was incorporated with France, Pozzo-di-Borgo became a political employé of other governments, and contributed his services—especially as a general and ambassador in the Russian service—to the overthrow of Napoleon. He was a man of great political ability and foresight. After the fall of Napoleon, from 1814 to 1830, he acted as Russian ambassador at Paris, and since then he was living about two years ambassador in London. Died in Paris, 1842.

PRADES, J. M. De, a Fr. theologian, 1720-82.

PRADIER, James, a distinguished French sculptor, 1792-1852.

PRADO, B. De, a Spanish painter, died 1593.

PRADO, J., a Spanish commentator, 1547-90.

PRADON, N., a French poet, 1632-1698.

PRADT, Abbe Dominique De, distinguished as a political writer and diplomatist, was born in Auvergne 1759, became a deputy of the ecclesiastical order to the estates-general 1789, having previously published the first of his political pamphlets, entitled 'Antidote to the Congress of Rastatt.' After urging a coalition of Europe against the French republic he became a Bonapartist, and assisted at Napoleon's coronation as king of Italy. After the fall of Napoleon he became an adherent of the Bourbons. Died 1837.

PRAM, C., a Danish poet, 1756-1821.

PRASLIN, Cæsar Gabriel De Choiseul,

Duc De, a statesman and peer of France, cousin of the Duc de Choiseul, 1712-1785.

PRAT, A. Du, a French cardinal, 1465-1535.

PRATILLI, F. M., an Ital. antiquary, d. 1770.

PRATO, J. De, an Ital. philologist, died 1782.

PRATT, Charles, earl of Camden, chancellor under the Rockingham administration, 1714-1794.

PRATT, Sir C., a peninsular officer, 1771-1839.

PRATT, S. J., a novelist, 1749-1814.

PRAXILLA, a Greek poetess, 5th century B.C.

PRAXITELES, a famous Grecian sculptor, author of works in bronze and marble, 4th cent. B.C.

PRAXITELES, a disting. carver, 1st cent. B.C.

PRAY, G., an historian of Hungary, 1723-1801.

PREISSNITZ, Vincent, a celebrated Prussian, discoverer of the water cure, 1799-1851.

PREMONTVAL, Peter Le Guay De, a French writer and mathematician, 1716-1767.

PRESTET, J., a Fr. mathematician, died 1690.

PRESTON, John, a learned puritan of the Church of England, author of a 'Treatise on the Covenant,' 1587-1628.

PRESTON, T., a dramatic writer, died 1598.

PRESTON, W., a Scotch writer, 1742-1818.

PRETI, M., an Italian painter, 1613-1699.

PREVOST, Cl., a Fr. theologian, 1693-1752.

PREVOST, I. B., a Genev. natural., 1755-1819.

PREVOST, P., a French painter, 1764-1823.

PREVOST, P., a French literateur, 1751-1839.

PREVOST D'EXILES, Anthony Francis, laneous writer and novelist, translator of Harlowe and Sir C. Grandison, 1697-1763.

PREVOST D'EXMES, Francis Le, a French and dramatic author, 1729-1793.

PREVOST DE LAJANNES, M., a French e and prof. of jurisprudence, 1696-1749.

PREVOST-SAINT-LUCIEN, R. H., a French public law, 1740-1808.

PRICE, John, a native of London, who went ce and became superintendent of the o the grand duke, and professor of Greek author of Scripture and Classical Com-, 1600-1676.

PRICE, Sir John, an eminent antiquarian, a Defence of British History in answer us, died about 1553.

PRICE, Dr. Richard, a native of Glamorgan- attained eminence as a dissenting minis- ancial and political writer, 1723-1791.

PRICHARD, James Cawles, well known for 'Researches into the Physical History of Mankind,' was born in Herefordshire, 1786. From 1810 to 1845 he was in practice at Bristol as a physician, and then removed to London on receiving an appointment as commissioner on lunacy. Died 1848.

PRICHARD, R., a Welch divine, died 1644.

PRIDEAUX, John, D.D., bishop of Worcester, was born at Stoward, Devonshire, 17th September, 1578. His father not being in circumstances to afford him the advantages of a liberal education, he was indebted to the liberality of a Christian lady in the parish, who sent him to a grammar school, where he acquired an elementary knowledge of the Latin and Greek languages. Having an unquenchable thirst for learning, he travelled on foot to Oxford, and supported himself by some menial services in Exeter college, his time being divided between the servile offices of the kitchen, and the study of elegant literature.—A person of such energy and devotion to the pursuit of knowledge could not but rise to distinction, and accordingly his great eminence procured his election as a member, till in due course he became rector, of the college. In 1615, he was appointed regius professor of divinity, with which office was then associated that of canon of Christ church, and afterwards he filled the high and more influential station of vice-chancellor for a series of years. His last and highest step in the ladder of preferment was his consecration to the see of Worcester in December, 1641. Amid all this dignity of station, however, he was not exempt from trouble, for his devoted loyalty to the cause of Charles I. exposed him to many hardships, and ultimately reduced him to such poverty that he was obliged to sell his library for the maintenance of himself and family. He was a man of mild, amiable, and unassuming manners, of great piety and such profound and extensive learning, that he was called by his contemporaries 'the Pillar of orthodoxy.' But he was withal the merest child as to knowledge of the world, and so regardless of pecuniary matters, that he involved his family in great difficulties by his imprudence or carelessness about money. He died at Bredon in Worcestershire, 30th July, 1650, leaving to his children no legacy but 'God's blessing and a father's prayers,' as he expressed it in his will. [R.J.]

PRIDEAUX, Humphrey, D.D., a divine of as great celebrity as the preceding, was born at Padstow in Cornwall in 1648. He began his education at Westminster school, from which he was sent to Oxford. He distinguished himself at that university by his scholastic acquirements; and it was during his residence there that he became author, by the publication of the 'Marmora Oxoniensa,' or the ancient inscriptions from the Arundelian marbles, a work which procured him the patronage of the lord chancellor Finch, afterwards earl of Nottingham, through whom he was appointed a prebend, and afterwards dean of Norwich cathedral. Having become disabled through constitutional infirmity from discharging the public duties of the ministry, he was obliged, under a conscientious sense of duty, to resign his offices in the church, and devote himself entirely to the cultivation of sacred literature. His 'Connection of the Old and New Testament with the History of the Jews and Neighbouring Nations,' and his 'Life of Mahomet,' have long been held in high repute, and obtained an extensive circulation. He died November, 1724. [R.J.]

PRIESTLEY, Joseph, was born at Fieldhead, near Leeds, in 1733, where his father was a woollen cloth manufacturer. From the poverty of his parents he obtained only a medium education; but he became a dissenting preacher, and continued in this vocation with various degrees of success till 1767, when he settled in a chapel at Leeds, and commenced his great literary and chemical career. In perusing the works of this remarkable man it is impossible to fail being struck with his intense love of truth. In his scientific note-books he registers every fact as it appeared to his senses; in his political and theological writings he fearlessly states his opinions as they are brought out by his cross-examination of his own thoughts and meditations, and that liberty of independent thought which he claims for himself, he determinedly demands for others. In his scientific career his object was uniformly to question nature by every possible experimental investigation, and to state his results as he obtained them. He laid the basis of the chemistry of the gases, and of those modes of investigation in the pneumatic branch of the science which are still pursued. He discovered a great variety of facts in this department of the science. To him we are indebted for the knowledge of oxygen, binoxide of nitrogen, sulphurous acid, fluosilicic acid, muriatic acid, ammonia, carburetted hydrogen, and carbonic oxide. England has produced few men endowed with greater versatility of talent than Priestley. Whether we view him as a pneumatic chemist, a theologian, an electrician, a historian, a politician, his writings bear the impress of an original mind, uncontrolled by any tendency to follow in beaten tracks, but constantly panting for new fields of investigation. It will ever remain a stain upon the name of England that this noble-minded man, this honour to humanity, should have been compelled by persecution, on account of his religion and politics, to flee his native country. He died in America in the year 1804. [R.D.T.]

PRIEZAC, D. De, a Fr. juriscons., 1590-1662.

PRILESZKY, J. B., a learned Hungarian Jesuit and hagiographer, born 1709.

PRIMATICIO, or LE PRIMATICE, F., an Italian architect and painter, 1490-1570.

PRIMEROSE, Gilbert, a Scottish divine, chaplain to James I., and minister of the French church in London, author of 'Jacob's Vow,' and other theological works, died 1642. His son, James, a physician and medical wr., d. abt. 1660.

PRINCE, J., a biographical writer, 1643-1723.

PRINCE DE BEAUMONT, Madame Le, a French lady, settled as a teacher in England, author of several works, died 1780. Her brother, John Baptist Le Prince, a painter, 1733-1781.

PRINGLE, Sir John, a Scottish physician, eminent as a natural philosopher and professional writer, born 1707, president of the Royal Society 1772, died 1782.

PRINGLE, Thomas, a Scottish poet and miscellaneous writer, was born at Blacklaw, Teviotdale, 1789. He began life as a clerk,, and having attracted the notice of Scott as a magazine writer, soon after adopted literature as a profession, and endeavoured to establish a newspaper at Edinburgh. Failing in this, he emigrated to the Cape of Good Hope, and, returning to England in 1826, became secretary to the Anti-Slavery Society. He was afterwards known as editor of the popular annual, 'Friendship's Offering,' and in 1834 published his 'African Sketches,' followed by his 'Narrative of a Residence in South Africa.' Died 1834.

PRINSEP, James, an Asiatic antiquarian, secretary to the Asiatic Society of Calcutta, 1800-40.

PRIOLO, B., a French historian, 1602-1667.

PRIOR, Matthew, whose period of authorship was contemporary with the last years of Dryden and the earliest stage of Pope, was a pleasing poet, possessing little vigour or originality, but remarkable for his skill in versification, and his gay and easy grace of imagery and diction. His occasional epigrams and his lively but indecent tales, are his best productions; though there is merit, also, in his semi-metaphysical poem 'Alma, or the Pro the Soul,' and in his attempt at religious p 'Solomon.' His poems were only the rec of a man actively engaged in public life. 1664, he was the son of a joiner in Londo cident having directed the attention of Lor to the boy's studious habits, education was for him; and, on leaving Oxford, he distin himself, under the government of King Wil a dexterous diplomatist in several foreign n Deserting his political party, like so many higher rank in that slippery time, he share latter part of his life, the vicissitudes and of the Tories. He lived till 1721.

PRIOR, T., an Irish economist, 1679-17

PRISCIAN, a famous Roman gram master of a school at Constantinople, 4th

PRISCILLIAN, a Spanish heresiarch fourth century. The errors which misled been imported by one Marcus from Egypt cillian had both wealth and influence, so conversion gave eclat to the novel here not a few were seduced by his eloquence ample. After long contests, the matter was for judgment before a council at Sarag 380, and the most prominent of the sect communicated. That Priscillian might sacred shield thrown over him, he was mad sect bishop of Avila. By a rescript of the party was condemned and banished, the decree was afterwards recalled. Under G successor, Maximus, the Priscillianist lead bishops were summoned to Bourdeaux Priscillian himself appealed to the emperor, business was committed to Evodius, a mi state. The spiritual offence was brought civil tribunal, and at Treves, in 385, Priscil put to the rack, and induced to make fessions, not only of error, but of hideous im At length he was executed, and the sword secution fell upon his adherents, who flouri a season in spite of the cruelties to whi were subjected. The heresy of Priscillia strange mixture of Gnostic and Manich surdities, combined with allegorical interp and mystical rhapsodies. Sabellianism, denial of a personal distinction in the Godh a further characteristic of the system. were also severe ascetics, and necessarily their opinions of the origin and essence of and, therefore, the accusation of their inde lasciviousness and unnatural lusts seems a tion of their opponents. But they held morality in reference to the obligation of truth, and resorted to dissimulation in the and defence of their dogmas.

PRITCHARD, H., an English actress,

PRITZ, J. G., a German divine, 1662-1

PROBUS, Marcus Aurelius Vale native of Pannonia, who served in the army, and became emperor after the death tus 276. He distinguished himself by se tories over the barbarians in Gaul, and wa by his mutinous soldiers 282.

PROBUS, M. V., a Latin grammarian,

PROCACCINI, Andrea, a pupil of C ratti, painter to the king of Spain, 1667-1

PROCACCINI, Ercole, an historical of Bologna, born 1520, died about 1591.

sons were his pupils:—CAMILLO, one of the first artists of that age, 1546-1626. GIULIO CESARE, a fine imitator of Correggio, 1548-1626. CARLO ANTONIO, celebrated for his landscapes, fruits, and flowers, dates unknown. The son of the latter, called ERCOLE THE YOUNGER, studied under his uncle, Giulio Cesare, and painted flowers with great skill, 1596-1676.

PROCIDA, GIOVANNI DI, a native of Palermo, chief of the conspiracy against the French known as the 'Sicilian Vespers,' about 1225-1302.

PROCLUS, born at Byzantium 412 A.C.; died at Athens 485. Esteemed by some the most powerful thinker of the Alexandrian School—an opinion in which we cannot concur. His works, however, are very numerous: an excellent edition of many of them, we owe to M. Cousin.

PROCLUS, patriarch of Constantinople, d. 447.

PROCOPE-COUTEAU, the received name of M. COLTELLI, a French physician and dramatic writer, 1684-1753.

PROCOPIUS, a martyr and saint, 4th century.

PROCOPIUS, a Greek theologian, 5th century.

PROCOPIUS, a Greek historian, 6th century.

PROCOPIUS, DEMETRIUS, a Greek writer, author of an account of the learned Greeks of ancient times, last century.

PROCOPOWITSCH, FEOPHAN, called the Russian Chrysostom, an archbishop of Novogorod, 1681-1736.

PRODICUS OF CEOS, afterwards settled in ATHENS; where, in the times of Socrates, he professed Wisdom, and taught like the other Sophists. His success, in one sense, was great; for he accumulated a large fortune — having adapted his terms to all classes of purchasers;—the poor man had his lesson for one drachma, while the rich were charged fifty drachmas a-head. Prodicus also, fell under the lash of Aristophanes; and it is understood that, for the crime of Atheism, he was condemned to the fate of Socrates;—most strange association!—Respecting Prodicus himself, there is a certain dispute: the general rumour from Antiquity being, that his life was not a pure one, and that the money acquired by the teaching of Virtue, was dissipated by Pleasure. Mr. Grote, the accomplished historian, has recently questioned this, on grounds, some of which appear of weight, but do not, as a whole, carry full conviction. To Prodicus, it is true, we owe that famous apologue —the Choice of Hercules. It is not safe, however, to infer from any abstract teaching concerning Virtue, the character of the Teacher: it is rather the character of the Teacher that gives value to the Teaching; insomuch, that even an imperfect teaching, provided it presents the sincerity of its source, will ever contain more to instruct and elevate, than extremest purism, which is only —words or prudery. Neither must the inculcation of abstention from what is called worldly pleasure, or of asceticism, in any form, be confounded with the Teaching of VIRTUE. True virtue consists in the influence of habits on the Soul; and its chief characteristic is, the purpose for which either knowledge or habits are striven for. The celebrated sneer of Gibbon—That the virtues of the clergy are more dangerous to society than their vices—strikes deeper perhaps than that acute philosopher thought. Certainly the Asceticism in his eye, was the efficient cloak of all practical vice: but who can misinterpret even the sincere asceticism, and almost unparalleled devotion of the JESUIT; or discern in it, aught other than the sacrifice of his own being—just as he would sacrifice the whole world—to an immoral and most hazardous lust of Dominion?—The question now started is vastly more important, than in its bearing on the personal character of PRODICUS. It involves, the entire problem regarding the position of the 'SOPHISTS;' a class of Teachers in Athens, of which Prodicus may be taken as a supreme instance. That these Teachers formed no School is unquestionable; and it was only the sheerest folly, and a gross libel on the Athenian people, through which, they were ever imagined, banded, by malice prepense, to unfold and make popular an 'Art of Lying.' The persons so called, had little connection with each other, taught varying and often opposing doctrines, and assuredly they believed—in a sense—what they taught.—Let us look more minutely at the phenomenon.—And first, as to the so-called 'Art of Lying.' On nothing does greater confusion of thought exist in society, than with respect to the import of the phrase—'Speaking Truth.' It is the meanest who in any age choose to distribute what they know to be false;—even although it has become a question of strange casuistry, how far the false in Fact, may be Truth in principle and reality. Truth-speaking is not synonymous with the utterance of our existing convictions: it involves inextricably, the far profounder question,—with what impartiality, under what solicitudes of conscience, have these convictions been acquired? And this again touches on the still deeper Inquiry—In what spirit, and for what purpose may the Soul of Man present itself—as a recipient—before the great Universe? Suppose, for instance, that Truth or Knowledge is sought, merely as an arm whereby to accomplish some specific external purpose, is there much reason to believe that either will be attained in their purity? If Virtue is sought, so that it subserve Power; and Knowledge, so that it enable its possessor to acquire social or professional standing, is it likely that the quest for either will be successful? Are the conditions of any actual country or phase of civilization, so full and absolute, that the Mind in its search for Truth, may safely say, that it desires, and will receive nothing except what can be turned to account, under these conditions? Now the so-called Sophists or public Teachers of Athens, publicly avowed the purpose of enabling young men to obtain power in the State. This, was the coveted prize—the profession prepared for;—and in subservience to this end, and to no other, they taught. One thing only, could follow: the effort after knowledge became a struggle for effect; the pursuit of truth, the culture of Rhetoric; contests of words, obscured the importance of things: and Conscience is like the unsunned snow;—let a breath touch it, and its virgin whiteness disappears. —But, if this state of things was fatal to the discernment of TRUTH, much more certainly, did it render growth in WISDOM, impossible. Wisdom is the property of harmony and nobility of Soul; and no more the result of Knowledge per se, than of the exercise of the meanest mechanical employment. The assertion may seem harsh, if not paradoxical; but ask History—nay, circumspice. Does knowledge emancipate? Are special acquirements, coveted for special ends, the very slightest guarantee against a poorness of sentiment and heart, of which one finds the exact congener among the rudest and most illiterate?—In this direction, it would appear, lay the error of the popular Teachers of Athens; and—with whatever individual exceptions — where have ever lived any extensive class of Teachers, who, at these Sophists are entitled to cast a stone? The pure and large Mind of SOCRATES perceived the destructive error; and against it, his life was a protest.—'Make yourself virtuous and noble,' was his cry, 'and your uses will come'! A message so terrible and overturning, that it has never been delivered in any age even in part, without ruin to the Prophet. In Athens it led to Death: but in Athens it was heard, and permitted to initiate a Revolution. In that great Democracy, the Prophet had to contend with Men, but not with Institutions; therefore, although he fell, he succeeded. (Article SOCRATES). [J.P.N.]

PRODICUS, a heretic of the 2d century.

PROKOPHIEV, IVAN PROKOPHIEVITSCH, a famous Russian sculptor, 1758-1828.

PRONY, GASPARD C. F. MARIE, Baron De, a learned engineer, physician, and mathematician, professor at the polytechnic school, 1755-1839.

PROPERTIUS, SEXTUS AURELIUS, a Latin poet, of the age of Ovid and Virgil, who shared with them the friendship of Mæcenas, d. about 12.

PROSPER, ST., a learned theologian and historian of the 5th century, known for his opposition to the Pelagians. He was a native of Aquitaine, and survived Augustine, to whom he wrote in 427. Another PROSPER, who lived about the same time, was a native of Africa, and wrote on the call of the Gentiles. A third, called PROSPER PITO, was a poet and chronicler, and lived in Gaul towards the end of the 4th century. His works are often confounded with those of St. Prosper.

PROTAGORAS; one of the most celebrated of those Teachers of Athens, called Sophists. We have spoken of them under the article PRODICUS. In its chief features, the philosophy of Protagoras, resembled that of Locke. He denied the Absolute; and his maxim was that Man, or each Man, is the measure of all Truth.

PROTOGENES, a Greek painter, 336 B.C.

PROUDHON, J. B. V., a Fr. jurist, 1758-1838.

PROVENZALE, MARCELLO, an artist in mosaic, cel. for his portrait of Paul V., 1575-1639.

PROYART, L. B., a Fr. histor., abt. 1743-1808.

PRUDENTIUS, AURELIUS, a Christian, and native of Spain, author of valuable poems, b. 348.

PRUDHOMME, L., a Fr. journalist, au. of 'The Errors and Crimes of the Revolution,' 1752-1830.

PRUDHON, P. P., a Fr. painter, 1760-1823.

PRYCE, WILLIAM, a physician and mineralogist, author of a Cornish Vocabulary and Grammar, last century.

PRYNNE, WILLIAM, famous in the history of English puritanism, was born of a good family at Swanswick, in Somersetshire, 1600, and became a barrister at law, and member of Lincoln's Inn at the time when Dr. Preston, a celebrated puritan divine, was lecturer there. It was the period when the illegal operations of the Star Chamber, and the courts of high commission had redu to a despotism equal to that of Franc manners of the age were a scandal to good morals. Marshall, Manton, Calam and other preachers in London, kep spirit of earnest piety and love of fre
soon after produced the commonwe
the mere sight of Burton, as Neale rem sermon against oppression. Prynne, person of sour temper and austere p
markable for his indefatigable applicati begun to write in 1627, and in 1632 he p
'Histriomastix,' a tedious work of m thousand pages, full of learning and cur
tions, and written against plays, mask
and especially against women-actors.
sages in this work were supposed to against the queen, who had acted in performed at Somerset House; and t
of the book was certainly, like most ot age, anything but refined and com
The real cause of offence in the eyes of Laud, who originated the prosecuti Prynne, was, of course, far other than t matter, namely, the opposition of Pry entire party to the Arminian system an diction of the bishops. The informati both the aspersions of the author queen and the lords of the council, for in the diversions of the age, and his con of 'factious persons.' The cause was the Star Chamber, and the conde Prynne was a matter of course. After ing he was sentenced to have his book
the common hangman, to be degrade bar, and turned out of the society of Li to be degraded at Oxford, to stand t pillory, at Westminster and Cheapsi lose one of his ears at each place, to p £5,000, and then to be imprisoned for must have been a moderate sentence of some of the lords of the council, for Dorset addressed their prisoner in thes
'Mr. Prynne, I declare you to be a sch in the church, a sedition-sower in th wealth, a wolf in sheep's clothing; i omnium malorum nequissimus. I shal £10,000, which is more than he yet less than he deserves. I will n at liberty, no more than a plagued ma dog, who, though he can't bite will foa far from being a social soul that he i tional soul. He is fit to live in dens beasts of prey as wolves and tigers li therefore, I condemn him to perpetual ment; and for corporal punishment I him branded in the forehead, slit in th
have his ears chopped off.' The sentenc cuted, and the general raid against non caused many to seek refuge in Holland Prynne, though in prison, wrote ano entitled 'News from Ipswich' against of Laud, (see LAUD), and being conde to another fine of £5,000, and to lose t
der of his ears, had the very stumps and was branded on both cheeks in th of indignant thousands, on the 30th of
In this last sentence Burton the famou
and Bastwick the physician, were include

and the former was accompanied on his road to prison by a vast concourse of the populace. In 1640 Prynne was chosen member of the long parliament for Newport, and was then released by order of the House of Commons, together with his fellow-sufferers, and they entered London in the midst of a triumphant procession which met them some miles from town. The House of Commons likewise voted them money in compensation, which they never got, in consequence of the disturbed state of the times. The cruel punishment these men had undergone excited the spirit of the nation, and prepared it for the change of government, yet Prynne was no party to those measures, and when Colonel Pride took possession of the house, he was among the excluded members; he also published a 'Memento' against the trial of the king, for which he was imprisoned by the parliament. His subsequent history is that of an enemy of Cromwell, and having joined in the restoration of Charles II., he was appointed chief keeper of the records in the Tower, and died in that office at his chambers in Lincoln's Inn, 1669. Wood calculates that he wrote a sheet of MS. for every day of his lifetime after reaching man's estate. 'His custom was, when he studied, to put on a long quilted cap, which came an inch over his eyes, serving as an umbrella to defend them from too much light; and seldom eating a dinner, would every three hours or more be munching a roll of bread, and now and then refresh his exhausted spirits with ale. To this (says the editor of Neale) Butler seems to allude in his address to his muse:—

> 'Thou that with ale or viler liquors
> Didst inspire Withers, Prynne, or Vicars,
> And teach them, though it were in spite
> Of nature and their stars, to write.'

His works amount to forty volumes, folio and quarto. The most valuable, and a very useful performance, is his 'Collection of Records' in four large volumes. [E.R.]

PRZEMYSLAS, a king of Poland, who seized the crown on the death of Lesko VI. 1295, and was assassinated 1296.

PRZIPCOVIUS, Samuel, a Polish statesman and zealot of the Socinians, b. abt. 1592, d. 1670.

PSALMANAZAR, George, generally regarded as the assumed name of a singular character, known to the literary world in the time of Dr. Johnson, who at one period associated with him. He is supposed to have been born in France about 1679. He was the principal author of the 'Universal History,' and wrote a volume of Scriptural maya, a version of the Psalms, and his own Memoirs. Died 1763.

PSAMMENITUS, the last Egyptian king named by Herodotus, succ. his father, Amasis, B.C. 525, deposed by Cambyses after a reign of six months.

PSAMMIS, a king of Egypt, 599-594 B.C.

PSAMMETICHUS, a king of Egypt, who reigned fifty-four years, during fifteen of which he was compelled to divide his power with eleven other sovereigns. He reigned alone from 652 to 614 B.C., and was succeeded by his son, Necho. Another Psammetichus reigned 400-397 B.C. A king of Corinth, of the same name, reigned 585-582 B.C., after whose time the republican form of government was established.

PSAMMUS, a king of Egypt, 819-810 B.C.

PSAMMUTHIS, a king of Egypt, 380-379 B.C.

PSAUME, N., a French theologian, 1518-1575.

PSELLUS, Michael Constantine, a Greek physician, known as a classical commentator and mathematician, about 1105. Another Psellus, called Michael the Elder, wrote a work, 'De Operatione Dæmonum,' in the 9th century.

PSINACHES, a king of Egypt, who is said to have reigned from 1021 to 1013 B.C.

PSUSENNES, the first of the name, king of Egypt, 1077-1037 B.C. The second, 1013-979 B.C.

PSYCHRISTUS, a physician of the 5th cent.

PTOLEMY (Soter) I., king of Egypt, natural son of Philip of Macedon, and an officer of Alexander the Great, succeeded to the government of Egypt on the death of the latter B.C. 324. He took the title of king 307, and raised the new capital of Egypt to the highest importance as the centre of commerce and learning. The museum and library founded by him gave birth to the famous Alexandrian school. Died B.C. 283. Ptolemy (Philadelphus) II., eldest son of the preceding by Berenice, began to reign in conjunction with his father 285, and became sole king 283. His reign fully sustained the reputation of the former, especially by his generous patronage of letters, one example of which is the Septuagint version of the Hebrew Scriptures, which he caused to be executed. Died B.C. 247. Ptolemy (Euergetes) III., son and successor of the preceding, continued his policy, and carried his victorious arms into Syria, Cilicia, and the whole country to the shore of the Euphrates. He restored the idols and much of the wealth ravished by Cambyses, and died, after a short reign, B.C. 222 or 221. Ptolemy (Philopator) IV., son and successor of the preceding, whom he was suspected of having murdered, was a cruel and debauched character. He was named Philopator (lover of his father), ironically. He caused his wife, Arsinoe, who was also his sister, to be put to death, and sustained a furious war with Antiochus the Great, whom he defeated near Gaza. Died B.C. 205. Ptolemy (Epiphanes) V., son of the preceding, was born B.C. 210, became king 205, and was poisoned by his courtiers 180. He brought the Romans into Egypt by appealing to them for protection against Antiochus the Great. He left three children—Ptolemy Philometor, Ptolemy Physcon, and Cleopatra, who was successively the wife of her two brothers. Ptolemy (Philometor) VI., son of the preceding and Cleopatra of Syria, was born B.C. 186, commenced his reign at the age of five years 181, protected by his mother. He was defeated by Antiochus, and compelled to admit his brother to a share in the government 171. Died of his wounds, fighting against Alexander Balas in Syria, 146. Ptolemy (Euergetes) VII., brother of Philometor, became guardian of the young king, Ptolemy Eupator, and the year after superseded him on the throne by espousing the queen mother, Cleopatra, 145. He then killed Eupator, and continued his reign, stained with debaucheries and cruelty, till 117 or 116 B.C. Ptolemy (Soter) VIII., son of the preceding and Cleopatra, succeeded 116, and sustained a war against his mother, who preferred her other son, Ptolemy IX., till 106. After the death of Cleopatra and the expulsion of Ptolemy IX., who had usurped the throne

in 88, he assumed the sovereign authority, and died 81 B.C. He left the crown to his daughter, Berenice, called also Cleopatra. PTOLEMY (ALEXANDER) IX., second son of Ptolemy VII. and Cleopatra, usurped the kingdom a short time during the reign of the preceding, and was dethroned, after murdering his mother Cleopatra, 88. PTOLEMY (ALEXANDER) X., son of the preceding, succeeded Ptolemy VIII. 81, under the patronage of the Romans in the time of Sylla. He married Berenice Cleopatra, whom he caused to be assassinated, for which he was himself massacred after a reign of nineteen days. PTOLEMY (AULETES) XI., a natural son of Ptolemy VIII., was the only descendant of this line of princes after the tragedy just mentioned. He assumed the royal authority 81 B.C., but was not acknowledged king till 59. In 58 he was obliged to fly from Alexandria, and was in Rome, soliciting assistance to re-establish himself, till 55. He was then restored by Gabinius, the governor of Syria and lieutenant-general of Pompey, and died 52. PTOLEMY (DIONYSIUS) XII., eldest son of the preceding, succeeded to the throne conjointly with his sister, Cleopatra, under the protection of Pompey, 52. He became a partizan of Cæsar in the civil wars, and after the battle of Pharsalia caused Pompey to be assassinated, who sought refuge in his states, 48. Aspiring to be sole king, he then took arms against Cæsar, who had decided that Cleopatra should continue to reign with him, and was drowned in the Nile while flying from the field of battle, B.C. 47. PTOLEMY XIII., younger brother of the preceding, was eleven years of age when Cleopatra was left sole mistress of Egypt by his death. She was compelled to marry him by Cæsar, and he reigned with her till his death, 44 or 43 B.C. PTOLEMY (CÆSARION) XIV., an illegitimate son of Cæsar and Cleopatra, obtained the title of king from the Roman triumvirs, B.C. 42. He was killed by order of Augustus at the age of eighteen, B.C. 30.

PTOLEMY, two kings of Macedonia:—the first, surnamed Alorites, a natural son of Amnyntas II., usurped the throne to the prejudice of his brother, Perdiccas, B.C. 371, and was dethroned by Pelopidas 368. The second, surnamed Craunus, eldest son of Ptolemy Soter and Euridice, succeeded B.C. 284, and was killed in battle with the Gauls 280.

PTOLEMY APION, king of Cyrene, and all the Libyan dependencies of Egypt, was a son of Ptolemy VII. and his mistress Irene, and succeeded 117 or 116 B.C. by the will of his father. He died B.C. 96, and bequeathed his estates to the Romans, who declined the bargain for a time, and gave the people their liberty.

PTOLEMY PHILADELPHIUS, a son of Antony and Cleopatra, was made king of Syria, Phœnicia, and Cilicia, by his father B.C. 32. He never reigned, however, but lived at the court of Juba, king of Numidia, having first graced the triumph of Augustus together with his brother, Alexander, and his sister Cleopatra.

PTOLEMY, king of Cyprus, a natural son of Ptolemy VIII., succeeded to the sovereignty of that island at the death of his father B.C. 81. The Romans having resolved to reduce his kingdom to a province, he was poisoned B.C. 58.

PTOLEMY, king of Mauritania, son of Juba II. and Cleopatra, daughter of Mark Antony and of the last Cleopatra of Egypt, began to or 20 B.C. Killed by order of Caligula A.

PTOLEMY, one of the petty sovere reigned in Syria after the fall of the Seleuci ceeded his father, Menneus, probably priest, 86 B.C. After the conquest of Mi
the Great, he was protected by Pompey, about 21 B.C. He was succeeded by Lysanias, at whose death the Lebanon so was given to Cleopatra.

PTOLEMY, an Egyptian priest and flourished in the reign of Augustus.

PTOLEMY, CLAUDIUS, one of the m tinguished men of Science of Antiquity:
during the first half of the second centu
his works on Astronomy and Geograp tinued authorities and text-books for hundred years. In consequence of the cl nection between Ptolemy and Hipparchu discoveries he reported, and whose labours
tinued, it is difficult to detect Ptolemy' deservings: but Delambre has evidently injustice from a desire to exalt Hipparch larger portion of the Planetary theory, as represented by the scheme of Epicycles, is tionably due to him; and his great wo Almagest, or Syntax, is the only complet
matic work on Astronomy which the ancie produced. As a geographer, Ptolemy is guished from Strabo: the work of the confined to descriptive geography; while Ptolemy is mathematical. A very edition of it has recently appeared in G
The Astronomical and Chronological Ptolemy, along with the Commentaries o were edited and published along with translation, in six handsome quarto volu
the Abbé Halma.

PTOLEMY OF LUCCA, the ecclesiastic assumed by BARTOLOMEO FIADONI, an 14th century.

PUBITSKA, F., a Bohemian hist., 172

PUBLICOLA, PUBLIUS VALERIUS,
of Collatinus as consul and founder of th republic, 509 B.C., died 501.

PUBLIUS SYRIUS, a Latin poet or d
of whose writings some fragments, or m
tences, are preserved in the works of Sen was a native of Syria, and went to Rom condition of a slave about 50 B.C.

PUCCI, F., an Italian theologian, died

PUCELLE, R., a French lawyer, 1635

PUCELLE. See JOAN OF ARC.

PUFFENDORF, SAMUEL, a historian and naturalist, was born at Chemnitz in in the year 1632. He was educated a for the protestant ministry, but the be mind was in another direction. Throug strumentality of his elder brother he en diplomatic service of Sweden. In the his duty he was detained at Copenhagen rupture between Sweden and Denmark, said to have been during this period
leisure that he turned from the practic theory of diplomacy and international
In the year 1660 he published his wel
'Elementa Jurisprudentiæ Universali
twelve years afterwards, the still bette
'De Jure Naturæ et Gentium.' He wr tablet to his memory may be seen, with the following inscription, said to be from the pen of Dryden:—'Here lies Henry Purcell, Esq., who left this life, and is gone to that blessed place, where only his own harmony can be exceeded. Obiit. 21mo die Novembris, Anno ætatis suæ 37mo Annoq. Domini 1695.' [J.M.]

PURCHAS, SAMUEL, a native of Essex, editor of a collection of voyages and travels, abt. 1577-1628.

PURE, M. DE, a French writer, 1634-1680.

PURI, D., a Swiss philanthropist, 1709-1786.

PURI, J. P., a Swiss traveller, last century.

PURVER, ANTHONY, a poor rustic of Hampshire, who mastered the Hebrew, Greek, and Latin languages, and executed an English version of the Scriptures, which was printed at the cost of Dr. Fothergill. While engaged in these studies he settled at Andover as a schoolmaster, and finally became a preacher among the quakers. Born about 1702, died 1777.

PUSCHKIN, A. S., a Russian poet, 1799-1837.

PUSSORT, H., a French jurist, 1615-1697.

PUTTEN, HENRY VAN DER, called in Latin Ericius Puteanus, and in French Dupuy, a learned Dutch writer and poet, 1574-1646.

PUTTENHAM, GEORGE, an Oxford scholar, kn. as a poet in the age of Elizabeth, d. abt. 1600.

PUTTER, J. S., a Germ. publicist, 1725-1807.

PUY, A. J. DU, a Fr. statesman, 1753-1832.

PUY, H. DU. See PUTTEN.

PUY, LOUIS DU, a Fr. literateur, 1709-1795.

PUY, PIERRE, DU, a learned French antiquarian, historian, and theologian, 1582-1651.

PUY-SEGUR, JAMES DE CHASTENET, Viscount De, a French officer, who was at thirty battles and a hundred and twenty sieges without ever receiving a wound. He was born in 1600, and is author of Memoirs relating to the period, 1617 to 1658; died 1682. His son, JAMES FRANCIS, commander-in-chief in the French Netherlands and marshal of France, author of 'The Art of War,' 1655-1743. The son of the latter, FRANCIS MAXIMUS DE CHASTENET, Marquis de Puysegur, a lieutenant-general, and writer on church property and the military art in China, 1716-1782. His second son, ANTHONY HYACINTHE ANNE DE CHASTENET DE PUYSEGUR, better known as the Count de Chastenet, a navigator and archæologist, 1752-1802. P. L. DE CHASTENET, Comte De Puysegur, son of the marshal, an officer and minister of war, 1727-1807. J. AUGUSTUS, brother of the latter, a distinguished prelate and deputy of the estates-general, 1740-1803. ARMAND MARIE JAMES, son of the minister of war, camp-marshal and physician, famous for his zeal in the propagation of animal magnetism, 1782-1825.

PUZOS, N., a French accoucheur, 1686-1753.

PUY, or PYE, H. J., a native of London, successor of Wharton as poet-laureate, 1745-1813.

PYLE, THOMAS, a minister of the Church of England, known as a Scripture commentator, and partizan of Hoadley in the Bangorian controversy, 1674-1756.

PYM, JOHN, member for Tavistock in all the parliaments of Charles I., and leader of the House of Commons during the struggle preceding the parliamentary wars, was born in Somersetshire, 1584, and educated at Oxford. He was the orator of the day, and such was his popularity, that he was called 'King Pym.' The events whi his career fill a considerable space in Eng tory. In 1626-1628 he was among th managed the impeachment of the duke o ingham and Dr. Manwaring—the latter for mon on the regal prerogative, in which he that the consent of parliament was not n for the levying of taxes, and that the Div require implicit obedience to the king. Pym and his party came into close rela with the Scotch Covenanters. When t parliament met, 3d November, 1640, he ha them on the grievances of the nation, wh immediately took into consideration instea king's speech; thus he was the Mirabea English Tennis Court. About a week aft he made a more studied and more impetu course on grievances, and impeached the Strafford not only of crimes against the st of immoralities; he was also one of the m of his trial, as, in short, he was always at t of the public business, and knew more of mentary matters than any man living. In ary, 1641, he spoke against Archbishop L occasion of his impeachment, and after th tion of that prelate he became chairman committee appointed by the House of C during the recess, which lasted from 9th Se to 20th October, by which committee the s authority was in some measure exercised next great event, beginning of 1642, was peachment of the five members, Hollis, H Hampden, PYM, and Strode, who were de by the king for treasonable practices, a tected by the city; on this occasion the k London, apprehensive of his personal Pym, therefore, saw the commencement final struggle between Charles I. and his ment, but he died before any decisive ad had been obtained, on the 8th of Decembe about a month after he had been appoint tenant of the ordnance. It was reported the royalists that the cause of his death w bus pediculosus; and in order to dispr calumny his body was exposed for several the public gaze; afterwards, it was attende grave in Westminster Abbey by most of t and commons in parliament. Shortly be death Pym published a 'Vindication' of h duct. After alluding to the divisions f by the bishops, and their encouragement malignants, he adds:—'For these reasons my opinion for abolishing their functions, conceive may as well be done as the dissolu monasteries, monks, and friars, was in King the Eighth's time:' he concludes with d that he was not the author of the present tions; with acknowledging the king for hi sovereign; and with the honest convicti when he was persecuted as a traitor merely service of his country, no man could blame taking care of his own safety by flying fo to the protection of parliament, who were to make his cause their own. The purita shall attended Pym's deathbed, and in the sermon which he preached before par passed the highest eulogium on the strict r piety, and serenity of the departed patr statesman. It is admitted that Pym was on first to urge the necessity of appealing to the sword. On the restoration of Charles II., Pym's body was dug up in Henry the Seventh's chapel, with those of about twenty others, including the gallant Admiral Blake, the mother of Cromwell, and his daughter Mrs. Claypole, and transferred to the neighbouring churchyard. He is said to have left several children, and his lady, who died in 1620, is reported to have been a highly accomplished woman. [E.R.]

PYNAKKER, A., a Dutch painter, 1621-1673.

PYNSON, RICHARD. See PINSON.

PYRA, J. E., a German poet, 1715-1744.

PYRRHO, born at ELIS, where he lived about the year 340 B.C. Plato was then dead: disputations had arisen in the ACADEMY, which had not had the fortune to obtain a second master: ARISTOTLE attacked it on all sides; and philosophy was in confusion. In the midst of these quarrels, the remarkable person we have named arose, and proclaimed as the dogma of his Philosophy and his rule of Life—'I know nothing about it and abstain.' Of a man who wrote nothing, and whose character must be gathered from scraps preserved by auditors, it is impossible to speak with decision; but to his power over his contemporaries, and, therefore, to his genius, the singular embalmment of his name bears ample testimony. Great mistakes have prevailed regarding the doctrines of Pyrrho:—notable Greeks had never so little common sense, as a personage like what he is vulgarly imagined to have been:—the stories about his doubting the evidence of his senses, and wilfully butting against any post or rock in his way, are simply absurd—even more so than those similar myths, once prevalent regarding our shrewd and sagacious compatriot DAVID HUME! We shall learn the nature of Pyrrho's scepticism, through reflection on his position. The scheme he propounded, or rather the resource to which he fled, was simply a tertium quid, in reference to AFFIRMATIVE and NEGATIVE systems, prevailing in his time. Now what were these? Nothing but the very conflict waging in philosophy around ourselves—the conflict, viz., between Idealism and Sensualism—between doctrines of the Absolute, and of the dependence of the Mind for all its functions, on the shows and events of external Nature. There are two Schools, said Pyrrho,—whose systems, viewed from their different points of sight, appear equally probable; and the relation of the strength of the arguments sustaining them seems to be—par. Is it not most likely then, that the problem sought to be resolved, is really insoluble by the human faculties and therefore, that the true position, of the sage, is one of Indifference? In the principle of a Scepticism of this sort, there is certainly nothing ridiculous: it involves little more than we find in the Antinomies of KANT: assuredly it has firmer ground, than thousands of popular dogmatisms on either side. There is no reason whatever to suppose that Pyrrho's doctrines went beyond this:—he never denied subjective certainty, or sought to weaken the evidence of consciousness.—One caution to the student may be repeated:—he ought in no case to credit the follies, attributed to these Speculative Greeks; for, if eminently speculative, they were, in their quality of natural Artists, eminently clear and practical also. There is a maxim of Coleridge's, which should, in no attempt at interpretation, be at any time lost sight of: —'Never suppose that you understand a man's Ignorance, until you are sure that you are not ignorant of his Understanding.' [J.P.N.]

[Pyrrhus—From an Antique Bust.]

PYRRHUS, son of Æcides, and king of Epirus, one of the most illustrious generals of antiquity, was born about 318 B.C., and was left an orphan in childhood under the protection of Glaucias, king of Illyria. He was placed on the throne of his ancestors by force of arms when about twelve years of age, and reigned peacefully five years, when advantage was taken of his absence to transfer the crown to his great uncle, Neoptolemus. After serving in the army of Alexander the Great, and greatly distinguishing himself at the battle of Ipsus, B.C. 301, Pyrrhus recovered his dominions, which he shared with his rival, and then caused the latter to be put to death. He next contended with the Romans for possession of the dominions of Alexander the Great, and became master of Macedon. Among his principal battles was that of 279 B.C. against the Roman consuls Sulpicius and Decius. He was killed, gallantly fighting, at the siege of Argos, B.C. 272. The life of Pyrrhus is one of the most interesting written by Plutarch. [E.R.]

PYTHAGORAS lived, according to the chronology of CLINTON, about 570 B.C. CICERO tells us, he settled in Magna Græcia, in the fourth year of TARQUINIUS SUPERBUS, or when ROME had begun to rise—between 520 and 530 B.C.:—One of the most august Forms of which we can descry any outline, through these long twenty-four centuries; nor, if we reflect, how thickly the mists have settled around all acts and Actors of that far past, can it be wonderful, that, as if his Shadow only, is now to be discerned.—Before attempting to lay down on a modern canvas, even a space for that Shadow, we must consent to a few principles of applicable historic criticism. And, foremost of all, it is imperative that we disconnect not only with Reality or Fact, but also with the pretensions, and therefore with the reputation of this memorable Teacher, every shred of the marvellous that so soon got fastened to his name. Not merely the story of the golden thigh—a myth of the vulgarest kind, and valuable only as evidence that such myths spring up and endure,—but also those manifold traditions concerning his supernatural instruction; for assuredly in the tales of his initiation in the cave of the Cretan Jupiter, or that his system of morals flowed direct from inspired lips at Delphi, there is nothing beyond incidents of travel occurring to one who thirsted for all knowledge; and disfigured through the slavish veneration of disciples, who, instead of being fed by his genius, succumbed to his authority, and slid insensibly into such modes as those, of rendering reason for their ultimate formula and final appeal—the αυτος εφη.—Next, and with equal decision, we reject as binding on Pythagoras, the logical schemes constructed by his followers, even so early as the times of Philolaus. The schools founded on the name of an illustrious Master, never retain his genius; and as in default of power of Insight, and the difficult power of Thought, there remains the easy exercise of Logic, it uniformly befals—as already we have required to assert—that the letter of the original teaching becomes substituted for its spirit; symbols and figures of speech at first simple and catholic, are adduced in defence of mere dogmas and phantasms; and—worst of all—effective and living Morals, touching on the practical relations of Man with Society and God, are displaced by arid Theory. This is the process by which, in the words of a remarkable writer of our own day, WISDOM, is dried for sale and exportation; and has not its pestilence followed the steps of all mighty Instructors, whose feet have ever touched the soil of our World? Let us not charge to Pythagoras, that doctrine which defines the Physical World by the number five,—the Vegetable by the number six,—the Animal by seven,—Human Life by eight,—Ultramundane Life by nine,—and the Divine Life by the Δεκας, or TEN! The Mind that has left so great a remembrance, and which fills that imposing portion of the sphere of Antiquity, did not gain its influence over the working Manhood by its time, through the concoction or preaching of enigmas like these!—Lastly: we must not approach these ancient philosophies, or undertake their interpretation, as if they were inherently mysterious, or different in kind, from the aspirations of great and sincere Thinkers of our own day:—The concealed lore of Egyptian priests, the secrets at Eleusis or Samothrace, were neither knowledge nor philosophies, but presumption and pretence, founded on the abuse of both. Greatness in Antiquity, is like Greatness now,—its foremost affection being for the simplicity of Truth; and to the right apprehension of what that Greatness was, there is no path save one. The Ingenuous alone can understand the Ingenuous:—The worthy Seeker, will ever carry along with him, faith in Greatness and reverence for it; but this conviction, also,—that, to whatever extent careful criticism of the influences and circumstances, within which an Ancient Teacher lived, does not enable us to translate his thoughts into the universal language of the Heart and Reason of Humanity, to that same extent must he be held as severed from the Present, and therefore effaced from its Past.—Under such dim but guiding lights, let us, as best we may, and with rapid crayon, sketch the features of the Crotonian sta sage. And FIRST,—as to the po which Pythagoras started. He cou starting point except the fundamental Ionian School, which, in an enlarged fundamental Idea of all Greek philo beneath the endless forms and singula

outward things, there is some grea Principle,—just as the unfathomed and ing ocean, rests underneath the billow
each other across its surface, and die i the shore. Now the Ionians, or the phy sought this principle in a common p ment; and, on the ground of imperfect or ruder experiments, one imagine forms of substance could be traced to tions of Water; another to modificati and a third laid it down that Fire is t substance or Force. This form of conception, must be taken as our firs statement of that problem, which st Chemical Analysts: it is the glory of that he struck out a new mode of grand search, and laid the foundati Physical Sciences, which look not for e
relations, and, through these, for ultim indicating primal Forces. The most and inventive Mathematician of that found in NUMBERS, the expression of
of Quantity, and in GEOMETRY, an could evolve the relations of Form. It foolish to pretend, that he proceeded reduction of phenomena within such but the idea of a possible science in th took strong hold of his masculine i Greek imagination; and he embodied tion, in the dogma of his School. Thes were deepened, and his conception of ter of the Universe vastly enlarged, must consider either a most fortunat
a capital discovery. Struck, as could a Samian, by that unsurpassed music,
floated around him from infancy, in th Lyrics, and great Epics of Troy, he se discerned that HARMONY was repre
NUMBER; and hence the second funda lief of his Philosophy, that Harmony t and one of the first principles of Thin
not be said, that in the expression o deep, an Inquirer, even sagacious as must always have avoided fantastic and mystical forms; but then his n correct at their root, and his faith a practical one: he looked at the schem around him, no longer as perplexing mighty order and a solemn music, and wonder and adoration! Should the st a tangible and veritable Image of m sophy, he must not go to Philolaus, or Critics, but to the writings of JOHN K too, spoke strangely in his youth; but t about relation and harmony, conducte end to a στασις, ει σοι—to Laws whi
the epoch of Newton, and raised him lasting Name.—The sage and Lawgive stands, however, towards the ancient world alike, in a second aspect—one him on a platform quite above any w ere Speculative Physics. First, or at least clearly in the Greek world, he felt and as- the indestructible personality of the Human and that the ground of its Existence, is its l State. Children laugh at the doctrine of Metempsychosis; but observe what it really ies, and the august verities it includes. It is vernent, in the first place, of the indepen- e of the EGO, or of the SOUL, not merely of unding and changing accidents, but of its nt and apparent Life,—an idea, which, in its stic proportions can take possession of no , without making it great. Pythagoras, ed none of these proportions. The soul is ured by its moral conditions, and its fates orms correspond with these. If it has done its duty in its existing state, if it has been ht and elevated by experience, Death is the towards some loftier form and more ex- ed sphere: if, on the contrary, in the conflict ght and wrong, it has done the wrong, and ed to be a slave of passion, what fate is pos- but descent, and the shape of grovelling ures? Be it remembered, this metempsychosis ir earliest practical representation of the no- of Immortality; nor is there a truer account here, at so primal an age, of Man's Moral re- n with the Gods. The history of the Soul, ed, is supposed confined to this Earth; and efore, the modes of Terrestrial Life, are taken fully presenting that History. No sublime elation announcing a purely spiritual Exis- e, had descended to illumine Pythagoras: and lds beyond this, were not then imagined;—he w not that the lights of the midnight Vault nighty Orbs, stretching upward and upward, y through serene Ether, and—through every ety of circumstance and condition — merg- into the Infinite. Surely it is no slight our, and was enough to uphold his con- ce that knowledge came to him from a her Source, that the mind of that illustrious ek, reached so deep an insight, and could sus- so large a belief.—Realize now and combine two foregoing conditions,—those warm and r speculations concerning the Harmony of the vers, and that profound conviction of Man's large destinies, and the paramount import of his Moral Nature;—could a great Soul possessed by both, remain in inaction, or be satisfied with mere speculative teaching? Pythagoras, appears to have added that highest attribute of Humanity—WISDOM, or the power practically to understand Mankind, and therefore to influence our Human Fates. Hence, his memorable effort in Magna Græcia to found a new Moral Commonwealth—the first and the best Utopia, of which we have any record; the excellence of its aim flowing from the character and principles of its Founder, and its sagacity demonstrated by its great success. Ignorance and external circumstance eventually prevailed to crush it; but many ages elapsed, ere the fame of the great confederacy of Crotona, faded in Greece. We know little that is certain, of the positive laws of that Confederacy; but its foundation was this,—as Harmony is the rule of Universal Nature, and the cause of its Stability, so must it be the rule of all Human Societies, which fulfil their object and may reach permanence. It is not easy to refuse assent to such a conception; neither can one overlook that while it involves the germ of all Utopias, framed from that time until now—it expresses also, that which, as it becomes realized, constitutes the history of Civilization. It is probable that Pythagoras, like his successors, hoped too much from mere laws and external conditions of Order, and trusted too little to that inner and unseen order, which ordains that the ultimate sum of the World, shall be worked out by the efforts, and even through the imperfections of the Individual;—nevertheless, his august Name must stand far up in that bright roll of Worthies, who have practically held by Reason, and not despaired of Humanity.—Let the great Shade, have all honour. [J.F.N.]

PYTHEAS, a celebrated mathematician, astronomer, and geographer, born in the Greek colony of Marseilles, then called Massillia, in the time of Alexander the Great. He is famous for his voyages of discovery, which are said to have extended as far as Iceland.

PYTHODORIS, a queen of Pontus, wife of Polemon I., and queen regent during the minority of her son, Polemon II., beginning of the Christian era.

Q

UADE, M. F., a Prus. philologist, 1682-1757.

UADRATUS, a bishop of Athens, known as of the early apologists for Christianity, 2d ct.

UADRIO, FRANCIS XAVIER, a learned Italian uit, author of a 'History of Poetry,' 1695-1756.

UAGLIATI, PAOLO, the earliest dramatist introduced music on the stage at Rome, 1606.

UAGLIO, G., an Italian painter, cel. abt. 1693.

UAGLIO, LORENZO, a native of Italy, who mpanied his father to Vienna, and was edu- ted and practised there as an architect, 1730- 04. His son, GIOVANNI MARIA, and his ne- hews, GUILIO and GUISEPPE, were distinguished scene painters, and flourished from about 1750- 1800. DOMINICO, the son of Guiseppe, called the Canaletto of Germany, 1786-1837.

QUAINI, FRANCISCO, an Ital. painter, 1611- 81. His son, LUIGI, a pupil of Guercino, 1643-1717.

QUANZ, J. J., a Germ. musician, 1697-1773.

QUARENGHI, G., an Ital. painter, 1744-1817.

QUARIN, J., an Austrian physician, 1733-1814.

QUARLES, FRAN., an Engl. poet, 1592-1614.

QUARREY, J. H., an ascetic writer, 1580-1656.

QUATREMAIRE, J. R., a Benedictine of the congregation of St. Maur, kn. as a critic, 1611-71.

QUATROMANNI, SERTORIUS, a miscellaneous Italian writer and classical translator, 1551-1606.

QUELLINUS, E., an em. Flem. painter, 1607-78. JOHN ERASMUS, his son and pupil, 1630-1715.

QUENSEL, CONRAD, a Swedish mathematician, 1676-1732. A relation of his, of the same names, author of 'The Swedish Flora,' 1768-1806.

QUERENGHI, ANTONIO, a learned Italian, author of Italian and Latin poems, 1546-1633.

QUERINI, ANGELO MARIA, a famous Italian cardinal and man of letters, 1680-1759.

QUERLON, ANNE GABRIEL MEUSNIER DE, a French scholar, editor, and journalist, 1702-1780.

QUERNO, C., a Neapolitan poet, died 1528.

QUERSTEDT, J. A., a Ger. divine, 1617-1688.

QUER Y MARTINEZ, JOSEPH, a Spanish physician, au. of 'The Flora of Spain,' 1695-1764.

QUESADA, DON, a Spanish general and royalist, murdered by the populace in 1836.

QUESNAY, FRANÇOIS, sometimes called the father of the school of French economists, was born in the village of Ecquevilli in 1694. He was of peasant origin, and raised himself to notice by his acquirements as a physician. He was attracted from his obscure retreat to Paris, where he came under the notice of the potent Pompadour, whose patronage of the philosophical physician was one of the best acts of her life. He published some professional works, but his book on the most advantageous method of governing mankind, published in 1768, is the achievement with which his name has been chiefly connected. At the root of his opinions lay a view long influential from its plausibility, that as the means of human subsistence, clothing, and generally the necessaries of life come from the earth, agriculture must be considered the only productive kind of industry, all others being secondary, as they merely modify what it brings into existence. He inferred from this that the peasantry class ought to be encouraged, to the neglect, or even the prejudice of others. His works have strikingly illustrated the view, that in such matters good is done by earnestly pushing opinions, however extravagant, since it was from Quesnay's teaching that the internal free trade in agricultural produce promoted by Turgot, and the abolition of the feudal exactions, were derived. He died in December, 1774. [J.H.B.]

QUESNEL, ABBE, a Fr. controversialist, last c.

QUESNEL, BARON, one of Napoleon's generals, born 1775, found drowned in the Seine 1815.

QUESNEL, PASQUIER, a famous theologian of the Jansenist party, born at Paris 1634, died at Amsterdam, where he had taken refuge, 1719.

QUESNOI, F. DU, a Flem. sculptor, 1592-1646.

QUETIF, J., a French bibliographer, 1618-98.

QUEVEDO Y VILLEGAS, FRANCISCO GOMEZ DE, a Spanish politician, best known as a poet and satirist, born at Madrid 1580, died 1645.

QUEVEDO, P., a Spanish prelate, died 1818.

QUICK, JOHN, an Eng. comedian, 1748-1831.

QUICK, JOHN, a nonconf. divine, 1636-1706.

QUIEN DE LA NEUFVILLE, JAMES LE, a French historian of Portugal, appointed director of the posts in French Flanders, 1647-1728.

QUIGNONEZ, FRANCISCO DE, an eminent Spanish cardinal and liturgical writer, died 1540.

QUILLET, C., a French poet, 1602-1661.

QUILLOT, C., a French quietist, 17th century.

QUIN, JAMES, a celebrated actor, was the son of an Irish barrister. He was born in London 1693, but educated in Dublin. His mother, unfortunately, turning out to be a bigamist, poor Quin was treated as illegitimate, and inherited nothing of his father's fortune. In 1715, with his prospects thus blighted, and his education unfinished, he sought and obtained an engagement at Drury Lane, which he quitted in 1717 for the theatre in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, acquiring there great reputation in the stately characters of tragedy; such as Cato, Coriolanus, and Z... the stronger parts in comedy, among w... Sir John Brute, Volpone, Falstaff. Sub... acting at Covent Garden, and in 1735 ... Lane, under Fleetwood, he received hig... than any actor had previously command... pre-eminence he retained until the app... Garrick, of whom he could not conceal ... and though he consented to act with the ... former in 1747 at Covent Garden, yet ... was so little favourable to his own posi... it is evident he gradually prepared for hi... tirement. Quin was one of the adm... patrons of Thomson, the poet of 'The ... and, while unknown to him, spontaneo... sented him with one hundred pounds ... him from an arrest; and after the poet's ... peared in his tragedy of 'Coriolanus,' an... prologue written by Lord Lyttelton, ... occasion the actor is said to have displ... common sensibility. He closed his caree... in the character of Falstaff, which he ... for the benefit of his friend Ryan. His ... in this part was very great, and there ... doubt from the accounts we have of it, th... a masterly and intellectual performance. ... at Bath, where he had resided for many ... 1766. His monument in Bath cathedral ... epitaph written by Garrick, in a spirit of ... tion highly honourable to both actors.

QUINAULT, PHILIP, a celebrated ... and opera writer, 1635-1688.

QUINAULT-DUFRESNE, ABRAHAM ... a celebrated French actor, 1695-1767. ... JEANNE FRANCOISE, an actress and liter... of Voltaire, died 1783. JEAN BAPTIST ... of both the preceding, and an actor, di... Some others of the family were also disti... on the stage.

QUINCY, C. SEVIN, Marquis De, a ... officer and historian, flourished about 166...

QUINCY, JOHN, an English physi... medical writer, died in London 1723.

QUINETTE, M., a Fr. politician, died ...

QUINQUARBOREUS. See CINQ-A...

QUINTILLIANUS, MARCUS FABIUS, ... teacher of eloquence in the reign of Galb... successors, was born about 42, probably of ... ish family settled in Rome. The younger P... one of his pupils, and in the reign of Dom... was intrusted with the education of tw... emperor's grand-nephews. His work 'De ... tione Oratoria,' is one of the most valuable ... antiquity. It has been translated into En... Guthrie and Patsall. Date of his death u...

QUINTILLUS, MARCUS AURELIUS CL... a Roman emp., who reigned seventeen day...

QUINTINIE, JOHN DE LA, a celebrat... on horticulture, and director-general to t... gardens at Versailles, 1626-1688.

QUINTUS CURTIUS RUFUS, a L... torian, supposed to have flourished in the ...

QUINTUS SMYRNÆUS, called also ... CALABER, a Greek poet of the 5th centu...

QUINZANO, or QUINTIANUS, ... monly received name of J. F. CONTI, ... Stoa, an Italian poet and philologist, 148...

QUIRINI, A. M., an Ital. cardinal, 1...

QUIRINO, P., a Venetian traveller, 1...

ROGA, J., a Spanish Jesuit, 1707-1784.
ROS, A., a Spanish missionary, died 1622.
ROS, H. B., a Spanish canonist, last cent.
ROS, H. B., PEDRO FERNANDEZ DE, a ted Spanish navigator, d. at Panama 1614.
ROS, T., a Spanish missionary, 1599-1662.

QUISTORP, JOHN, a German minister and Lutheran professor of divinity, 1584-1648. His son, of the same name, also a divine and professor, 1624-1669.

QUITA, DOMINGOS DAS REIS, a Portuguese poet, cele. for his elegies and pastorals, 1728-1770.

R

ANUS MAURUS, was born of French s at Mayence in A.D. 776. On the complet- his early studies at Fulda in Hesse, he was made a deacon in 801, and he betook himself r the following year to enjoy the tuition of nous Alcuin. It is also apparent from his s that he had in his youth made a pilgrim- Palestine. In his twenty-fifth year he be- ead of the convent school at Fulda, where his ful teaching drew around him many pupils, t a few of the nobility intrusted him with ucation of their sons. In 822 he was conse- abbot, but he still directed the seminary, supplied many able teachers for the Frankish erman churches. On a complaint of the s that his absorption in literary pursuits red the discharge of his more active conven- ities, he retired in 842, after a presidency of years. He was, however, drawn out of voluntary seclusion in 847, on being made shop of Mayence. In this situation he was poser and persecutor of Gottschalk, in con- ce of his doctrine of predestination. Ra- died in A.D. 856. His influence was great the churches in the diffusion of practical and he had several illustrious disciples. His on and general attainments were respectable e age in which he lived, and as a lecturer, tructed his scholars in general literature ence as well as theology. He wrote com- es on all the canonical books and many of ryphal ones, and left behind him numerous , sermons, and letters. A collected edi- he most of his works was published at 1627, in 6 folios. [J.E.]

UT, PETER, a French protestant minister, . His son, JOHN PAUL, a protestant nd deputy to the constituent assembly nvention, author of numerous political 3-1793. JAMES ANTHONY, brother of lso a minister and deputy, 1744-1808. ther, RABAUT DUPUIS, known only n, died 1808.

ALPHONSE, a French journalist, his- iographical writer, 1786-1830.

IS, FRANÇOIS, is, of all humourists, the ly original, and the most remarkable wit and humour; but he is also the ulously audacious, and for many the most difficult to be understood. ditionally attributed to him many t of which are nothing more than jokes, or sayings profane or licen- from his writings. The facts which rd to his life, few as they are, suf- wonder how it was, that he not stake and the scaffold, but was a the hour of his death.—He was ents, about 1483, at Chinon in Touraine; and the time he spent in a conventual school at Angers, is said to have been put to profit in no way, unless by making him intimate with his school-fellow Du Bellay, who was afterwards a cardinal, and his zealous patron and protector. He next became a friar in a convent of the Cordeliers; and there he was a hard student, but is said to have been both dissolute and satirical. At all events, he eloped, studied medicine at Montpellier, took a doctor's degree, practised as a physician, lectured with success, and published, besides other works, translations from Hippocrates and Galen. While he was going through this stage in his history, the patrons he had gained obtained permission for him to transfer himself to the order of the Benedictines. He attended Cardinal Du Bellay when he was sent as ambassador to Rome in 1536; and on his return to France his patron procured for him a prebend, and the curacy of the village of Meudon, near Paris. He is believed to have died in 1553, and to have then been about seventy years old.—His famous romance appeared in successive fragments: it is a characteristic specimen of his oddities, that the second book, being published in 1533, preceded the first by two years; and the third book was printed in 1546. When it had proceeded thus far, remonstrances from the clergy induced Francis I. to have it read to him: he pronounced it harmless; and the author continued to be protected by Henry II. The fourth book, in which the attacks on the church, and sneers at religion itself, became yet bolder, appeared only in 1552; and it was not till 1564 that the publication was completed by the whole of the fifth book. The romance commonly goes by the name of its earliest parts:—'The Inestimable Life of the Great Gargantua, Father of Pantagruel, a Book Full of Pantagruelism.' Gargantua is a royal giant: the heroes of most of the adventures are Pantagruel, his son and successor, a good easy king; and his favourite Panurge, the quintessence of buffoonery, sarcasm, and knavery. It is not easy to discover anything which Rabelais either believed or respected; and his satire, with all its enigmatical coverings, tells terribly both on civil and on ecclesiastical governments. But there is in it a large fund of good sense; and the humour and fun, with all their depravity, are often irresistibly comic. [W.S.]

RABENER, T. W., a Ger. moralist, 1714-1771.

RABUS, PETER, a Dutch critic, 1660-1702.

RABUTIN, ROGER, Count De Bussy, a French wit and satirist, time of Louis XIV., 1618-1693.

RACAN, HONORAT DE BUEIL, Marquis, a disting. poet and disciple of Malherbe, 1589-1670.

RACHEL, the younger daughter of Laban, and wife of Jacob. She was the mother of Joseph and Benjamin, and died at the birth of the latter.

RACINE, BONAVENTURE, a learned French priest and ecclesiastical historian, 1708-1755.

RACINE, JEAN, contests with his immediate predecessor, Corneille, the glory of being the greatest among the French Tragic Dramatists. Submitting implicitly to the code of laws laid down by the critics of his time, he did much towards making the Regular or Classical School of the Drama acceptable and permanent, by imparting to his tragedies all the perfection which it is possible to conceive genius as giving to works constructed on so narrow a model. His grace and melody of diction are exquisite; and his refined tenderness of feeling, often melting into profound pathos, breaks out through all the barriers imposed by the unities, and the simple plots, and the monotony of the rhymed Alexandrine verses.—Racine was born in 1639, at La Ferté-Milon, in Picardy, where his father was a tax-collector. The most important part of his education was received in the school of the Port-Royalists, whose earnest piety and severe morality received no discredit either from the writings or from the conduct of their pupil. In his twenty-first year he celebrated the marriage of Louis XIV., in a poem which gained him the favour of the king, exhibited not long afterwards by a pension, and followed by many other benefactions. He began his dramatic career in 1663; but his first two tragedies, though not unsuccessful, really deserved the poor opinion expressed of them by Corneille, of whom they were little more than imitations. Racine's fine genius shone out with all its brightness in 1667, when 'Andromaque' was played; and for ten years more he continued to produce, almost annually, plays, constituting a series of masterpieces, and exhibiting so little inequality that critical opinions are still divided as to their comparative merit. The first of these was the highly-finished comedy, 'Les Plaideurs;' but the success of this piece did not tempt the poet to diverge again from the tragic drama. 'Britannicus' appeared in 1669, and was followed by 'Bérénice' (in which Racine measured lances with Corneille), 'Bajazet,' 'Mithridates,' the very skilfully constructed 'Iphigénie,' and 'Phèdre,' the work in which the dramatist's power in painting the tenderness and fire of love is most strikingly displayed. In 1677, when the 'Phèdre' came on the stage, Racine and Boileau received honorary appointments as historiographers royal. The dramatist seems to have meditated making the office real; and he is said to have been deterred from publishing histories by a rebuke, which some of his memoranda drew on him when they were communicated by his patroness, Madame de Maintenon, to the king. At all events he ceased, for twelve years, to write dramas, and never again wrote for the public stage. Some would have it that he was disgusted by the critical warfare which had been kindled by his latest plays; others assert him to have been influenced by the religious impressions which, beyond doubt, now acted on him more and more strongly. He made a happy marriage, superintended carefully the instruction of his children, and was much engaged in serious studies. He wrote a short 'History of Port-Royal.' In 1689 'Esther,' the first, and much the weaker, of his two sacred dramas, was played by the young ladies of St. Cyr. In 1699, the clerical directors of that school having prohibited stage-playing to the pupils, he sent 'Athalie' to the press, and had the mortification to find that it was too devout and taste of the public. If no work written except plays, and if ther writers but those of France, the as true which Voltaire makes as to t
—that it comes nearer to perfectio literary work which ever issued fr
man. It was the last effort of its a He died from abscess of the live
but with placid resignation, in 16

RACINE, LOUIS, son of the p
guished as a poet and miscellaneou

RACLE, L., a French engineer,

RADAGAISUS, leader of one hosts by which Italy was invaded of the 5th cent. Beheaded by St

RADCLIFFE, ANN, a once p
whose maiden name was Ward, w
don, 1764, and at the age of twen to William Radcliffe, a graduate wards proprietor and editor of th nicle. The fashion of her roma seded by that of the new school, be ter Scott, but they must always principal of their class. Her great scription of scenes of terror, the s or unseen danger, and the excite
Her first performance was 'The Ca Dumblaine,' followed by 'The S
'The Romance of the Forest,' '
Udolpho,' and 'The Italian.' Sh
'Travels through Holland and a in 1793. Died 1823.

RADCLIFFE, JOHN, founde
library of medical and philosop Oxford, was an English physicia field 1650. He took his diplo having settled in London, became cian to the princess Anne of De also occasionally employed by W
by Anne when she succeeded hi
was not in great favour with eith died in 1714, leaving £40,000 for mentioned.

RADEGONDA, a princess of
became the wife of Clothaire, monastery of St. Croix, founded

RADEMAKER, two Dutch pa flourished 1672-1711. ABRAHA

RADER, M., a Jesuit of Tyrol

RADET, STEPHEN, one of Na
by whom Pius VII. was escorte prisoner in 1809, 1762-1825.

RAEBURN, SIR HENRY, a esteemed second only to Sir Tho
a portrait painter, was born at Edinburgh, 1756. He became Edinburgh Academy of Painting,
IV. visited his northern capital
the honour of knighthood, and pointment of first portrait pain Scotland. Died 1823.

RÆMOND, F. DE, a Fr. hist

RAFFAELLE. See RAPHA

RAFFENEL, C. D., a French

RAFFLES, SIR THOMAS S
guished as an administrator, t turalist, was the son of Benjami
in the West India trade, and w

Jamaica, 1781. He gradually rose from the position of a clerk in the India House to that of lieutenant-governor, first of Java, and afterwards of Fort Marlborough in Sumatra. In 1819 he established the British settlement and free port of Singapore, and founded a college there for the encouragement of Anglo-Chinese and Malay literature. His principal work is a 'History of Java,' but he sent home to England valuable collections of objects in natural history, and on his return founded the Zoological Society, of which he was first president. Died 1826.

RAGGI, A., an Italian sculptor, 1624-1686.

RAGHIB PACHA, MOHAMMED, grand vizier of the Ottomans, a diplomatist and writer, 1702-67.

RAGOTZKI, the name of several princes of Transylvania:—1. GEORGE, whose name is sometimes spelt Rococzi, an ally of the Swedes during the thirty years' war, 1630-1648. 2. GEORGE the Younger, joined the Swedes against Poland 1659, died fighting against the Turks 1669. 3. FRANCIS, author of a liturgy used throughout Hungary, died 1676. 4. FRANCIS LEOPOLD, the most famous of the family, conspired with Louis XIV. to deliver the Hungarians from the yoke of Austria, and was declared protector of Hungary in 1704. Being defeated by the peace of 1713, he renounced his own estates, and retired to Turkey; 1676-1735.

RAGUENET, FRANCIS, a French writer on miscellaneous subjects, au. of a 'History of Oliver Cromwell,' and a 'Life of Turenne,' 1660-1722.

RAGUET, G. B., a French writer, 1668-1748.

RAGUSA, J., a Sicilian Jesuit, born 1665.

RAHN, JOHN HENRY, a name common to three natives of Zurich:—1. A voluminous writer of Swiss history, 1646-1708. 2. A physician, 1709-1786. 3. A physician, 1749-1782.

RAHN, J. H. G., a Prussian jurist, 1766-1807.

RAIEVSKI, A., a Russian historian, 1813.

RAIKES, ROBERT, the founder of Sunday schools in England, was a native of Gloucester, where he was born in 1735. He succeeded his father as proprietor of the Gloucester Journal, a paper in extensive circulation. He was a man of great piety, and, besides attendance on the ordinary duties of public worship, was long in the habit of frequenting early morning prayers every week-day at the Cathedral. As might be expected from a person of such devout and eminently Christian character, he was distinguished for his benevolent support of every scheme and institution which was directed to ameliorate the condition or advance the interests of humanity. To him belongs preeminently the high distinction of originating Sunday schools; and the idea of those institutions was first suggested to his mind by witnessing the painful spectacle of youthful profligacy and dissipation, which the streets of Gloucester as well as other large towns in England, exhibited on the Lord's day. At that time, it had long been a subject of complaint among farmers and others that they suffered more from the depredations of juvenile delinquents on that day, than on all the other days of the week together. The lower classes universally allowed their children to roam at large on the highways and the fields, where they came in such numbers that the country people were obliged to remain at home to watch their property. Mr. Raikes himself was unexpectedly led to witness a similar scene, for having occasion, early one morning, to go to a plebeian part of the town of Gloucester, where was a large pin manufactory, he was greatly shocked by multitudes of poor children running wild and riotous in the streets, and swearing such horrid oaths, as afforded sad evidence of the ignorance and depravity that prevailed amongst the class to which they belonged. He resolved on making some attempt to reclaim them from this state of moral degradation, which seemed so extensively prevalent, and to give those wretched little creatures the benefits of, not only a secular, but a moral and religious education. After revolving the subject long and anxiously in his mind, he at length prepared to reduce his scheme to practice. Having engaged the services of four women, accustomed to teach poor children, at the rate of one shilling a-day, and who were to receive and instruct as many as he should bring every Sunday, he began the operations of his school. But there were more difficulties lying in the way than he imagined, chiefly from the backwardness of the poor, and their indifference to send their children. A beginning, however, was made with a few, others soon followed, and the schools began to prosper. Reading, being marched to church under the care of their teachers, and after church, the repetition of the catechism for an hour, constituted the regular routine he established. 'With regard to the rules to be observed, all the children were required to come to school as clean as possible. Many were at first deterred, because they wanted decent clothing, but this was not to be supplied. Although without shoes or in a ragged coat, all were welcome,—the only condition being clean hands, a clean face, and the hair combed.' Numbers pressed to the schools, the children varying from six years old to twelve or fourteen. Little rewards were distributed amongst the younger, and good places were procured for the older children, and both of these produced the effect of exciting emulation. Such was the scheme which this Christian philanthropist devised for the moral and religious improvement of the poor; and it soon drew general attention in England, from the beneficial results it produced. Similar institutions were ere long commenced in most of the large towns of England. A Sunday School Association was formed for the benefit of the poor children in the metropolis, and Mr. Raikes in consequence of his zeal and merits, was enrolled an honorary member. A far higher honour awaited this benevolent gentleman, in its being publicly certified after a long series of years, that not one of the scholars at his institution in Gloucester, had ever been either in the city or the county prisons. Mr. Raikes died in 1811. [R.J.]

RAIMBACH, ABRAHAM, a native of London, celebrated for his line engravings of Sir David Wilkie's pictures, 1776-1843.

RAIMOND, J. H., a Fr. architect, 1742-1811.

RAIMOND, ST., the third general of the Dominicans, known as an ascetic writer, 1175-1275.

RAIMONDI, GIAMBATTISTA, a great Oriental scholar, born at Cremona, in Italy, 1540. He founded an Oriental press, under the patronage of the cardinal Medici, at Florence, and put all the Oriental books in order at Rome. From these circumstances, the college of the Propaganda took its rise. His Arabian Grammar was pub. in 1610.

RAIMONDI, Marc A., a friend of Raphael, and fndr. of the It. school of engrav., 1488-1546.

RAINBOW, E., an English prelate, 1608-1684.

RAINE, M., a distinguished scholar, 1760-1810.

RAINOLDS. J., a learned Eng. div., 1549-1607.

RAITCH, J., a Servian historian, 1726-1801.

RAJALIN, T., a Finnish admiral, 1673-1741.

RAKOUBAH, or RAGUBAH, peischwah or prince regent of the Mahrattas, distinguished in the events which agitated the Mahratta kingdom in 1772 and 1782. Died in obscurity.

RALEGH, Carew, son of the great historical character noticed below, was born in the Tower of London 1604, and made several fruitless efforts to regain the forfeited estates of his father. He received a pension of £400 a-year, however, and in 1659 became governor of Jersey, by favour of General Monk. He wrote a vindication of his father. Died 1666. His cousin, Walter Ralegh, became chaplain to Charles I., and was stabbed by his gaoler 1646.

[Birth-place of Ralegh.]

RALEGH, Sir Walter, born A.D. 1552, was the most remarkable man of that remarkable period, which is commonly called the Elizabethan age. He was of an ancient Devonshire family, and was educated at Oxford and the Temple. He then served for some years as a volunteer under Coligni and Condé, in France, and afterwards under the prince of Orange in the Netherlands. In 1579 he first displayed that zeal for maritime discovery and colonization, which is the most brilliant feature in his character. He joined an expedition to America, which was designed to found a colony in Newfoundland, but was beaten back by a superior Spanish force. He then served in Ireland, and highly distinguished himself against the Irish rebels and their Spanish auxiliaries. In 1582 he appeared at Elizabeth's court, and was very graciously received. His reputation for soldiership, his learning, which was varied and profound, his eloquence and ready wit, and the personal advantages and accomplishments, in which he was pre-eminent, all combined in raising him high in his sovereign's favour. In 1583 he accompanied his half-brother, Sir Humphrey Gilbert, in another voyage to North America, which proved most calamitous, and in which Gilbert perished. Ralegh still persevered in his schemes for extending England's dominions beyond the Atlantic, and in 1585 he sent out anoth which discovered Virginia. He wa
most trusted and most trustworthy heroes of England, who defended against the Spanish Armada. In 1 in the expedition against Portugal and Norris. The young earl of E with the troops employed on this oc was in a quarrel between him and the operations of the forces, that jealousy between those two origina time afterwards Ralegh fell under beth's displeasure on account of passages between him and Miss whom he subsequently married.
prisoned for a time, but was soon
gradually recovered the queen's fav
he organized and led an expeditio and South America, in the hope Eldorado, the golden land, in the which all of that age firmly belie
we who have witnessed the discover California, deride that belief as wholly unfounded. Ralegh sailed t
the neighbouring districts; he explore noco for 400 miles from its mouth;
an account of his voyage and the explored by him, which is remarkab
quence and graphic beauty of style plays. During the latter years of E Ralegh joined Cecil in intriguing a and he had the evil gratification of rival's ruin and death, little thinkin himself to experience the retribution fate. James I. on his accession, at Ralegh with favour; but Cecil, wh late queen's reign overthrown Esse aid, was now determined to put
and the king's mind was soon poisen Walter. Deprived of his dignities appointments, Ralegh seems to ha
the schemes of other disaffected me
the line of succession to the crown;
on which he was tried and convicte
being a traitor in the pay of Spain, and unfounded. He was sentenced his property was confiscated; but Ja close prisoner in the Tower for twel
ing which time he wrote his great w tory of the World.' In 1615 James and permitted him to sail on an Guiana. This enterprise proved disa Ralegh's return home he was arreste
resolved to put him to death under th of treason that had been passed on There can be no doubt that James w to commit this disgraceful act by hi
the favour of the Spanish court, wh forgotten the services that Ralegh England against Spain, and now cla
for the blood of the English hero was beheaded on the 28th October sixty-sixth year of his age. The va genius of this great man is almost
He was an excellent classical schi
read in metaphysics and divinity, generally conversant with the lite
own and other modern countries, writings are eloquent and vigorous author of several poems, small in length, but at in beauty. He was eminent in the mechan- l arts; and was the originator of many impor- t improvements in ship-building. He was a ing navigator and explorer of new countries; l he was unwearied in his zeal for extending commerce, and for creating the colonial power Englland. He was a sage, as well as a bold ptain by sea and by land; he was a skilful hough not always a successful) politician; and was pre-eminent in all personal accomplish- nts and courtly graces. He was also a liberal romoter of intellectual energy and eminence in thers; and he was the patron and personal riend of many of the most distinguished writers who adorned that bright epoch of English liter- ature. [E.S.C.]

RALPH, JAMES, a native of Philadelphia, known as a political and historical writer and poet, came to this country in 1725, died at Chiswick 1762.

RAMAZZINI, BERNARDO, an Italian physician, dist. as a poet and professional writer, 1633-1714.

RAMBERG, J. H., an engraver, last century.

RAMBOUILLET, a branch of the Angennes family, distinguished by the names of—JAMES, a favourite statesman of Francis I., died 1562. CHARLES, son of James, better known as the cardinal de Rambouillet, author of Memoirs, 1530-1587. CHARLES, grandson of James, and Marquis de Rambouillet, camp-marshal and ambassador, 1577-1652.

RAMBURES, DAVID DE, commander-in-chief of the French archery, distinguished by his military services, and killed at the battle of Agincourt, 1415.

RAMEAU, JEAN PHILIPPE, was born at Dijon in 1683. After having become acquainted with the rudiments of music, he composed a musical entertainment, which was received with great applause when it was performed at Avignon. He then received the situation of organist of the cathedral church of Clermont in Auvergne, where he commenced his investigations into the principles of music. His fame as a theorist chiefly depends upon his work 'Demonstrations of the Principles of Harmony,' which was published at Paris in 1750. From the principles enunciated in this work his countrymen style Rameau 'The Newton of Harmony.' About this period he was called to Paris, where he was appointed director of the opera. The king of France conferred upon this eminent theorist the ribbon of the order of St. Michel, and raised him to the rank of nobility. Rameau died in the year 1764. Besides his very numerous theoretical works he composed many operas, ballets, serenatas, concertos, songs, &c., &c. [J.M.]

RAMEL, PETER, a member of the French assembly, and general of brigade, killed at the age of thirty in the campaign of the Rhine, 1761. His brother, JOHN PETER, a distinguished general of the empire, was born in 1770, and assassinated after the second restoration in 1815.

RAMELLI, A., a French engineer, 1531-1590.

RAMESSES, or RAMSES, a name common to seven Egyptian kings, who reigned from the 17th to the 13th century B.C. Ramesses V. is supposed to be the same as Sesostris.

RAMEY, C., a French sculptor, 1754-1838.

RAMLER, C. W., a German poet, 1725-1798.

RAMMOHUN ROY, RAJAH, a philosopher and reformer of British India, was born at Bordouan in the province of Bengal, 1774, or between that and 1780. He belonged to the Brahmin caste, of the class esteemed for their learning and purity of blood, and seems to have devoted himself when quite young to the study of the sacred literature of the Hindoos. His endeavour was to discover the pure theism of the primitive revelation, and to separate it from the corruptions of the priesthood, and though great hopes were entertained of him by Christian missionaries, there can be no doubt that he regarded some parts of their system as equally idolatrous with the changes that had taken place in the religion of the Hindoos. He adopted the philosophy and the pure morality of the precepts of the Saviour, but accepting no system of faith that was proffered to him, he applied himself to the study of the Hebrew Scriptures in the same independent spirit that he had examined the Vedas of his own country. Rammohun Roy, however, was not a speculative believer, but a practical reformer, and in political sentiments a republican. He had risen from the position of clerk in the office of the tax-collector of Rungpore to that of dewan, or chief native superintendent of the revenue, the highest office that a Hindoo could hold under the British government. In this official situation he acquired such a fortune as enabled him to rank with the zemindars, or proprietors, and applying himself to administrative as well as religious reform, he eventually effected a change in the English jurisprudence of Bengal. Circumstances led to his residence at Calcutta, where he became a political writer and journalist in his native language, and boldly adopted revolutionary principles, at the same time not forgetting the reserve of a statesman. In 1830 he was created rajah by the great Mogul, and sent on a mission to England for the settlement of his claims against the East India Company. He effected this object with great diplomatic skill, and while here he took an enthusiastic interest in the progress of the reform agitation, and the hopes it held out for the better government of India. He was claimed at this time as a convert to Christianity, and though generally considered a Unitarian, he usually attended the services of the Established Church. His Christianity, it should be remembered, was based on a profound acquaintance with the metaphysics of the Hindoos, and on his researches into the primitive theism; and though an ingenious countryman of our own, Thomas Maurice, had long since endeavoured to show the similarity between the Christian Trinity and the triad of Brahma, Vishnou, and Shiva, there are few orthodox Calvinists who would be disposed to agree with him. Rammohun Roy did not survive his acquaintance with European manners long enough to master the whole of this problem, but being attacked by sudden illness at Bristol, expired there on the 27th of September, 1833. As his biographer in the Gentleman's Magazine observes:—'When it is considered that Rammohun Roy was in a great degree self-taught, the extent of his acquirements must be admitted to have been remarkable. He was a thorough master of the Sanscrit language and of the Arabic; he was an exceedingly good Persian scholar, and quoted the Persian poets liberally, appropriately, and gracefully; and of course, he well understood the Hindoo and Bengali tongues. He had read a great deal of English literature, chiefly historical; and he wrote in our language with grammatical accuracy and ability. . . . . He was a quick and keen observer of character, and in the ordinary course of life discreet and prudent.' It may be added that his superiority to the native Hindoos generally, his vast knowledge, his independence of habit, and his well-known patriotism, gained for him the highest consideration in his own country. [E.R.]

RAMOND DE CARBONNIERES, Louis François Elizabeth, a Fr. naturalist, 1755-1827.

RAMOS, H., a Sp. mathematician, 1738-1801.

RAMSAY, Allan, with the exception of Burns, the most thoroughly national of the Scottish poets, was born in 1685, at Leadhills in Lanarkshire. His father was in the employment of Lord Hopetoun at the lead mines, and is said to have been descended from a branch of family of the earls of Dalhousie, a circumstance of which the poet was naturally vain, and which shines out in his works in the form of respect and attachment to the claims of 'gude bluid,' and gentle ancestry. His father died early, and his mother marrying again, he was sent to Edinburgh, and bound apprentice to a wigmaker, then a profession of a higher grade than in our times. Ramsay continued to pursue this humble avocation for several years after his apprenticeship was finished. In 1712, his first poetical production appeared, being an address 'To the most happy Members of the Easy Club,' Auld Reekie being then and long after, noted for its commercial clubs and associations. In 1716, he published an edition of James the First's poem of 'Christ's Kirk on the Green,' having added a second canto himself, and in two years after, a third. He now abandoned his original profession, and commenced business as a bookseller in Edinburgh, a more congenial and fitting occupation for the poet and literary man. In 1720, he published himself, a collection of his poems, by subscription, and by which he is said to have realized four hundred guineas, a very large sum considering the times, and which establishes the early and wide popularity which he had acquired. The most of the pieces in this collection had been issued by Ramsay as they were written, in sheets at a penny a-piece, and the good folks of Edinburgh had come to look upon them as a luxury, quite as necessary as 'caller haddies' or strong ale. Allan issued the first volume of his well-known 'Tea Table Miscellany' in 1724, and three more volumes at short intervals afterwards; about the same time he published 'The Evergreen, a collection of Scots poems, wrote by the Ingenious before 1600,' The magnum opus of this ancient writer made its appearance in 1725, 'The Gentle Shepherd,' the finest dramatic pastoral ever published. In a soft and gentle sweetness of expression, and in a rich exhibition of old Scottish manners and habits, interspersed with dramatic touches of nature and character, no Scottish poem has maintained a more permanent or a higher place in the national mind and affections.—Some of the higher class poems of Burns can alone compete with it in this respect. In 1730 he published his 'Thirty Fables,' in which the story of 'The Monk and the Miller's Wife,' though somewhat broad in style, and previously told by Dunbar, greatly increased his reputation as a poet and painter of national manners. He now appears to have withdrawn from the labours of composition, and to have given himself up to the enjoyment of the select literary society of the metropolis, eminent men of his time and country, by whom his conversation and talents were highly appreciated. He erected a house for himself on the north side of the Castle Hill, which is still we believe in existence, and where he died in 1758, at the advanced tence, and where he died in 1758, at the advanced age of seventy-two, full of years and honour. [T. D.]

RAMSAY, Allan, son of the preceding, distinguished as a painter and writer on art, 1709-84.

RAMSAY, Andrew Michael, better known as the Chevalier Ramsay, was born at Ayr in 1686, and educated at Edinburgh. He was converted to the Roman Catholic faith by Fenelon in 1710, and rose to distinction under his patronage as governor to the duke of Chateau Thierry, and the preceptor to the children of the Pretender, called there James III., and, returning to Scotland, was admitted into the family of the duke of Argyll. He died at St. Germain-En-Loire, the retreat of the Stuarts, 1743. His principal works are a 'Life of Fenelon,' 'The Voyages of Cyrus,' 'Discourse upon Epic Poetry,' a 'History of Marshal Turenne,' and a 'Discourse on Freemasonry,' of which he was in France, he was grand chancellor. He wrote in the French language with remarkable purity.

RAMSAY, David, an American physician, historian, member of congress, distinguished as an historian, born 1749, shot by a maniac 1815.

RAMSAY, J., a Scottish divine, 1733-1789.

RAMSDEN, Jesse, a native of Yorkshire, celebrated as an optician and instrument maker, 1735-1800.

RAMUS, or LA RAMEE, Peter, a celebrated French philosopher, mathematician, grammarian, 1572.

RAMUSIO, or RAMNUSIO, G. B., a Venetian traveller, geographer, and historian, 1483-1557.

RANCE, Armand John Le Bouthillier de, an ascetic writer, most celebrated as the reformer of the monks of La Trappe, 1626-1700.

RANCHIN, F., a French physician, 1560-1641.

RANCHIN, Henry, author of a metrical version of the Psalms in French, published 1697.

RANCK, ——, a Spanish painter, last century.

RANCONET, Aimer De, a famous antiquarian, and master of Roman jurisprudence, d. 1575.

RANCONNIER, J., a French missionary in Paraguay, author of Letters, published 1636.

RANDALL, J., an English divine, died 1666.

RANDOLPH, Thomas, an English dramatic poet, au. of the 'Muses' Looking-Glass,' 1668.

RANDOLPH, Thomas, a minister of the Church of England, born at Canterbury, 1701, vice-chancellor of Oxford 1707, Margaret professor of divinity 1768, died 1780. His son, John, his father was recorder, 1701, vice-chancellor of Oxford 1759, archdeacon of Oxford 1760. He was several theological works. His son, John, bishop of Oxford, 1749, was successively bishop of Oxford, Bath and London, and a dist. Greek scholar; died 1813.

RANDOLPH, Sir Thomas, born in Kent, distinguished as ambassador to France, Flanders and Scotland, in the reign of Elizabeth. He was author of Letters, which have appeared in various collections, and of an account of his Embassy to Russia, inserted in Hakluyt's Voyages. D.

, Marie Elizabeth De, a reli- better known as the venerable th, 1592-1649.
IN, RENNEQUIN, or SWALM ntor of a famous hydraulic engine, achine of Marly, 1644-1708.
Josias, Count De, a French mar- ed in the German and Flemish wars, ief instrument by whom the pro- was established in Denmark. Died where he had been confined by Henry, of the same family, an 5-1598.
RODOLPH, son of Richard, duke ucceeded Robert, duke of France, f king, 923; died 936.
uke of Lorraine, 1328-1346.
hdeacon of Poitiers, 12th century.
Caen, a French historian, 11th ct.
ABER, a Fr. chronicler, 11th cent.
ee Rollo.
a French painter, 1667-1734.
Santi or Sanzio, was born at Contrada del Monte, April 6, 1483. iovanni Santi, gave him his first his art, and after the death of his placed by his uncles, in 1494, with , the most celebrated painter of the l, and then engaged on some frescoes Cambio at Perugia. In October, removed to Florence, and appears to is city his head-quarters until he Rome in 1508; with the exception s passed at Perugia, in 1505, and a at Bologna the following year, he ıtly at Florence. The works exe- during this period are said to be in manner, those executed previously, Perugino manner, of which the the Virgin,' now in the Vatican, alizio,' or 'Marriage of the Virgin,' t Milan, are fine examples; of his ntine manner, 'The Entombment,' e Gallery at Rome, is the best ex- t. Catherine' in the National Gallery manner. During his stay in Flo- made the acquaintance of Fra Bar- that of Francia at Bologna, from he had every opportunity of improv- dependent of the enlarged views he ned by moving from a provincial nportant a city as Florence, then to Rome as a school of painting. chapel alone was a school of art, aphael had with other masters the studying the world-renowned car- langelo and Leonardo da Vinci, in the Council Hall. With such op- could not but enlarge his manner, ngly soon find in Rome a very much ent of form, than even in the best of works, though the first of his great Vatican is in his Florentine style. vited to Rome by Julius II. through n Bramante, and he was already the beginning of September, 1508; paid his third visit to Rome in the ncidence which was doubtless of con- ıtage to Raphael, the younger man, the rivalry of Michelangelo being an invaluable stimulus to him. The first fresco of the Vatican stanze or dwelling rooms, was the Theology or 'Dispute on the Sacrament' as it is called: this was completed in 1509. In the same room called the Stanza della Segnatura, are the frescoes of 'Poetry,' 'Philosophy,' the celebrated 'School of Athens,' and 'Jurisprudence,' all completed in 1511; his third or Roman style commences with the 'School of Athens.' In the second chamber, known as the Stanza dell' Eliodoro, are, the 'Expulsion of Heliodorus from the temple of Jerusalem,' his grandest work, the 'Mass of Bolsena,' the 'Attila,' and 'St. Peter delivered from Prison,' all finished in 1514, the two former in 1512 during the pontificate of Julius. The third chamber, finished in 1517, called the Stanza dell' Incendio, was painted almost wholly by Raphael's scholars; the great works of the Vatican stanze, for which those chambers are so renowned, are comprised in those of the first two chambers mentioned. The fourth, really the first on entering, called the Stanza di Costantino, was nearly entirely executed under the direction of Giulio Romano after Raphael's death. It is worthy of remark, that the ceiling of the Sistine chapel by Michelangelo and the most celebrated frescoes of the Stanze, those painted by Raphael himself, were executed simultaneously between 1508 and 1512, and during the pontificate of Julius, no real lover of art himself, and who little suspected the almost inexhaustible source of wealth which his simple undertakings were destined to prove to his country in after generations. The slow progress of the Vatican frescoes after the painting of the second chamber, was owing to the numerous commissions Raphael received from Leo X., who succeeded Julius, besides many from other art patrons in Rome and elsewhere. Raphael executed, between 1512 and 1520, besides numerous Madonnas, holy families, portraits, &c., the following great works and masterpieces;—the St. Cecilia, at Bologna; the Madonna di San Sisto, at Dresden; the Spasimo, at Madrid; the Cartoons, at Hampton Court (1515-16); the frescoes of the Farnesina (1518), and his last and most celebrated oil picture 'The Transfiguration.' In addition to these labours, from 1515 he had the chief charge of the building of the new Basilica of St. Peter; he was appointed capoarchitetto on the 1st of August of that year, by Leo X. This unrivalled painter died at Rome on his birth-day, April 6, 1520, aged exactly thirty-seven years; and after lying in state, with his own picture of the Transfiguration at his head, he was buried with great pomp in the church of Santa Maria ad Martyres, the ancient Pantheon, commonly called in Rome the Rotonda. The inscription on his tomb, written by his friend the Cardinal Bembo, and, therefore, deserving of all reliance, concludes with the following lines:—

[Residence of Raphael.]

Vixit An. xxxvii., Integer Integros.
Quo die natus est, eo esse Desiit
VIII. Id. Aprilis, MDXX.

He lived exactly thirty-seven years: he died on the same day of the year that he was born, April 6, which in 1520 happening to fall on Good Friday, led to the popular error that Raphael was born also on Good Friday, 1483, which fell in that year on the 28th of March; should such have actually been the case, and the inscription of the cardinal be wrong, the 28th March must be substituted for April 6, mentioned above as his birth-day. Raphael is said to have left property to the amount of about 16,000 ducats, a very large sum in those days when money had nearly ten times its present value. He bequeathed his painting materials, works of art, &c., to his two favourite pupils, Gianfrancesco Penni, and Giulio Romano, on condition that they should complete his unfinished works. Raphael was never married, but is said to have been engaged to Maria Bibiena, the niece of the Cardinal Bibiena, who, however, died before him. He was of a slight build, sallow in complexion, with brown eyes, and about five feet eight inches high. His tomb was opened in 1833 and the skeleton found entire with all the teeth perfect; a mould was taken from his skull. His numerous school was completely dispersed after the sack of Rome in 1527, but Giulio Romano revived it in some measure at Mantua. Besides the above mentioned painters, Pierino del Vaga, Polidoro da Caravaggio, and Benvenuto Tisio, commonly called Garofalo, were among his most distinguished scholars; the last has been not inappropriately styled the miniature Raphael. It is matter of common regret that Raphael was removed so prematurely, as is assumed, from the world, many concluding that it is beyond our power to realize the perfection to which he might have carried his art had he been longer spared to prosecute it; this is, however, less than doubtful. Raphael if not too successful to improve, was far too much occupied ever to have had the remotest chance of surpassing his previous great works; the later frescoes of the Vatican were neglected, and besides the important charge of St. Peter's from 1515, he was appointed at the close of the following year superintendent of antiquities, and of the excavations of Rome. He trusted almost entirely to assistants in his latter paintings: the cartoons at Hampton Court are perfect exponents of his later executions, and it would have been impossible for him to have returned to a more elaborate style: neither was it desirable. The rivalry of Sebastiano del Piombo, ardently encouraged by Michelangelo, appears to have given a transitory impulse to renewed efforts at executory skill, but with no real advantage to his own characteristic style. Though more elaborate in composition and more highly finished, the 'Transfiguration' is not equal for simple sublimity and grandeur to the[re] San Sisto,' executed some years bef[ore] did not escape the pernicious any [re]good influence of Michelangelo, wh[ich] admirably adapted to his own char[ac]jects, but very inappropriate to Raph[ael] sequences were injurious. In the S[pa]cendio we already find a loose slo[ven] design, heavy and vulgar, exhibiting ethics, sentiment being sacrificed to art, to approach Raphael's, must co[st] thing more than vigorous limbs. Rap[hael] works are unrivalled, but it is not sidering all the circumstances, that have equalled them again in his day much less have surpassed them. As soars above that of all his competitor ing Michelangelo himself; and not that in individual qualities he was several, he is universally acclaimed painters, and chiefly for those loft[y] qualities of his works which all can describe. In all his works the treat[ment] ordinate to the conception. He has approached in propriety of invention or expression; and is almost without the natural simplicity and grandeur for moral force in allegory and histo[ry] for fidelity in portrait unsurpassed, limity and grandeur of conception Michelangelo alone. The prints af[ter] works, including drawings amounting nearly 900, are extremely numer[ous] known: from Marc Antonio downwa[rds] has perhaps been better rendered. H[is] are likewise many and voluminous French, German, and in English: on the great work of Passavant, Rafa[el] und sein Vater Giovanni Santi, Lei[p] the largest and most complete in [its] There are besides:—Vasari, Vite de[i] in which the notice of the Florentine Raccolta Artistica, 1852, is very comp[lete] Vita inedita di Raffaello da Urbino [il] note da Angelo Comolli, Rome, 1790; no Raffaello Sanzio aus Urbino, by D[r] Rome 1822; Rehberg, Rafael Sanzi[o] München, 1824; Quatremere de Qui[n]cy de la vie et des Ouvrages de Raphael Longhena, Istoria della vita e delle ope[re] Sanzio, &c., del Sig. Quartremere de Milan, 1829; Pungileoni, Elogio St[orico] faello Santi da Urbino, Urbino, 182[3] yers, Appendice a l'ouvrage intitul[é] la vie et Des ouvrages de Raphae[l] 1853; and in English Duppa, Life Sanzio, London, 1816. Raphael is s[o] sented in the National Gallery, notwit[h]standing we have a specimen of each of his three The Vision of a Knight, St. Cathe[rine] portrait of Julius II. The fragme[nt] belonging to a second and inferior by Francis I., is not by the hand of R[a]phael. the magnificent cartoons at Hampt[on] these cannot be too highly valued, d[o] adequate idea of the exquisite sen[se] pervades the majority of his grea[t] pieces. The cartoons, however, at H[ampton] are of such commanding grandeur

they have been almost intuitively admitted now for three centuries as the inalienable type for apostolic representation. [R.N.W.]

RAPHELENG, or REPHELENGIUS, the commonly received name of FRANCIS RANTENGHIEN, a learned Orientalist of French Flanders, 1539-1597. His son, FRANCIS, author of Latin poems and notes upon Seneca, published 1587.

RAPIN, N., a French poet, died 1608.

RAPIN, R., a learned Jesuit, 1621-1687.

RAPIN-THOYRAS, PAUL DE, best known as the author of an English history, was a nephew of the celebrated Pelisson, and son of James Rapin Sieur de Thoyras, descended from a noble family of Savoy. He was born in 1661, and came to England on the revocation of the edict of Nantes in 1685. He subsequently entered into the service of the prince of Orange, and was with him in the Irish wars. On the death of that prince he retired to Wesel, in the duchy of Cleves, where he composed his history. He is considered an impartial and well-informed historian. Died 1725.

RAPP, JOHN, a general and peer of France, was born at Colmar, in Alsace, 1772; and was successively aide-de-camp to Desaix and Buonaparte during the consulate. He was employed by the latter in the subjugation of Switzerland, and greatly distinguished himself at the battle of Austerlitz, and the defence of Dantzic. He finally attached himself to the Bourbons, and died 1821.

RASCAS, P. A., a Fr. antiquarian, 1567-1620.

RASCHE, J. C., a Ger. numismatist, 1733-1805.

RASCHI. By this name is known SOLOMON BEN JARCHI, one of the most learned rabbins of the Israelitish wanderers, who is said to have been born at Troyes in Champagne, 1040, and to have died there 1105. Other places have claimed the honour of his birth, and his surname is variously spelt, as Isaaki, Isarchi, Jarhi, Racca, Raschi, and Raski. He was remarkable for the precocity of his talents and the largeness of his mind: this, as well as his adventurous disposition, may be surmised from the fact that he commenced, when about thirty years of age, the extensive programme of his travels, intended to embrace every known country in the world, in order to collect materials for the history of his scattered people. In pursuit of this object he visited his brethren in Italy, Egypt, Greece, Asia Minor, Palestine, Armenia, Persia, Tartary, Muscovy, and Germany; he was dissuaded from using his materials, however, by Maimonides, who considered the design impolitic at that time. He settled at Troyes, therefore, and devoted his acquirements to biblical commentaries and rabbinical learning. Dr. Clarke says, Raschi 'wrote a commentary on the whole Bible so completely obscure in many places, as to require a very large comment to make it intelligible.' On the other hand, it must be admitted that the metaphysics and philosophy of the rabbis is little understood, and though much obscurity may be expected in a mass of writing on traditional and speculative knowledge, it is undeniable that the Jewish learning abounds in marks of genius and in profoundly philosophical reflections. Raschi was buried at Troyes, but when the Jews were driven out of France they carried his remains with them and reinterred them at Prague. [E.R.]

RASCHID. See HAROUN-AL-RASCHID.

RASCHID-EDDIN, a Persian historian, physician, and vizier to the sultan Ghazan-Khan, 13th c.

RASES, an Arabian historian of Spain, 9th ct.

RASORI, J., an Italian physician, 1766-1837.

RASPE, R. E., a Ger. antiquarian, 1737-1794.

RASTALL, JOHN, an early English printer, author of several curious and learned works, and brother-in-law of Sir Thomas More, died 1536. His son, WILLIAM, a judge, died 1565.

RATCLIFF, R., an English dramatist, d. 1553.

RATCLIFFE, THOMAS, earl of Sussex, known as a statesman and ambassador, died 1583.

RATRAMN, a French theologian, 9th century.

RATSCHKY, J. F., a German poet, 1757-1810.

RATTE, S. H. DE, a Fr. astronom., 1722-1805.

RAU, CHRISTIAN, otherwise Ravis, Ravius, or Rave, a Prussian Orientalist, 1603-1677.

RAU, J. E., a Prussian theologian, 1695-1770.

RAU, J. J., a German Hebraist, died 1745.

RAU, J. J., a German anatomist, 1668-1719.

RAU, SEBALD, professor of Oriental languages at Utrecht, 1724-1818. SEBALD FOULQUES JEAN, his son, a poet and Orientalist, 1765-1807.

RAULIN, J., a French preacher, 1443-1514.

RAULIN, J., a French physician, 1708-1784.

RAUWOLF, L., a German botanist, died 1596.

RAUZZINI, VENAUZIO, an excellent musician, and esteemed the greatest pianist of his time, was a native of Rome. In early life he went to Vienna, and afterwards to Munich, were he resided for several years. In 1774 he was engaged as one of the principal singers at the opera in London. After some time he retired to Bath, where he for many years managed the concerts. He composed several operas and a great variety of detached compositions, which were highly popular. He was long classed amongst the first scientific musicians who had made this country their home. Amongst his pupils may be mentioned Madame Mara, Mrs. Billington, and Messrs. Braham and Incledon. Rauzzini, who was universally esteemed and beloved in private life, died in 1810, aged 62 years. [J.M.]

RAVAILLAC, FRANCIS, the assassin of Henry IV. of France, was a Roman Catholic fanatic of singular character, born at Angouleme 1578, or 1579. His naturally gloomy temperament was deepened by a lawsuit, followed by an imprisonment for debt, in the course of which he is said to have been haunted by visions, and acquired such a morbid nervousness, that the very name of a Huguenot would excite him to fury. It is not without a certain risk that one expresses any belief in reports of this nature except as symptoms of disease, but it is impossible to overlook the historical evidence bearing on the circumstances alluded to. The king himself also had a presentiment of his fate, and repeatedly gave expression to it; even the courtiers for some time before the event were in a state of preternatural excitement. The design of Ravaillac, meantime, was the secret of his own bosom, and he took advantage of the queen's coronation, on the 14th of May, 1610, to put it in execution. Henry IV. was proceeding in his carriage along the Rue de la Ferronerie when some obstruction occurred, and Ravaillac stepping on the wheel, struck his noble victim through the window; he stabbed the king twice through the heart, and death was instantaneous. The assassin made no attempt to escape, but stood still with the bloody knife in his hand, and would have been cut down by one of the gentlemen, but the duke d'Epernon interposed, and he was arrested. Application of torture failed to wring any confession from him implicating others, and he was torn to pieces by horses in the Place de Grève, on the 27th of the same month. The moral complicity of the catholic league in this tragedy cannot be doubted; the fanaticism of the enemies of Henry IV. put the knife in Ravaillac's hand by a much surer method than that of bargain and sale. The death of Henry was followed by the regency of Marie de Medici. [E.R.]

RAVENET, Simon Francis, a French engraver, 1706-1774. His son, Simon, an engraver, born about 1755.

RAVENNA, M. Da, an Ital. engraver, 16th ct.

RAVENNE, J. De, a scholar of Petrarch, and one of the restorers of letters in Italy, 1350-1420.

RAVENSCROFT, Thomas, a composer and publisher of music, famous for his Psalm tunes and works known to musical antiquaries, 17th ct.

RAVESTEYN, John Van, a Dutch portrait painter, born about 1580. His son, Arnold, born at the Hague in 1615, was also a portrait painter, and in 1661 was chosen chief of the Society of Arts in his native place. Nicholas, of the same family, a painter of history, 1661-1750.

RAVIS, or RAVIUS. See Rau.

RAVISIUS-TEXTOR, whose proper name was J. Tixier De Ravisi, professor of rhetoric at the college of Navarre, 1480-1524.

RAWENDY, Ahmed, an Arabian savant, author of a new doctrine of metempsychosis, died 905.

RAWLET, J., an English painter, 1642-1686.

RAWLEY, W., an English divine, who acted as chaplain and secretary to Lord Bacon, 1588-1667.

RAWLINSON, Christopher, a famous master of Saxon and northern literature, 1677-1733.

RAWLINSON, Sir Thomas, mayor of London in 1706, when he repaired and beautified Guildhall, 1647-1724. His eldest son, Thomas, a remarkable collector of books and MSS., the supposed original of Addison's Tom Folio, died 1725. Richard, a fourth son of Sir Thomas, an eminent antiquarian, died at Islington 1755.

RAWSON, Sir W., an English oculist, d. 1829.

RAY, Rev. John, a very celebrated botanist and zoologist, was born at Black Hetley, in Essex, in 1628. He died in 1705. Few events in Ray's life were striking or remarkable. His father filled the humble station of a blacksmith, but was able to give his son a good classical education. At the age of sixteen he went to the university of Cambridge, and in 1660 was ordained both deacon and priest at the same time. He held a fellowship in Trinity College for a number of years; but, in 1662, he was deprived of this by his scruples in conforming to the celebrated Bartholomew Act. During his residence at Cambridge, he had acted as tutor to many gentlemen of high rank, amongst whom especially was the son of Sir Francis Willoughby. Upon his being forced to leave the university, he travelled with his pupil through various parts of England, and on the continent, and on his return took up his abode for the most part at his friend's house, Middleton Hall, in Warwickshire. Mr. Willoughby was an ardent student of natural history, and Ray, whose name had already become famous as a botanist, assisted him in [illegible] His kind patron and friend died in [illegible] prime of life, leaving two infant sons confided to the care of Ray, appointing his executors, and leaving him an ann[illegible] a-year. He soon afterwards married, settled in his native village. The books published on botany are numerous; and edition of the 'Synopsis Methodica Stirpi[illegible] nicorum,' has been said by an eminent [illegible] be of all the systematical and practical [illegible] country, the most perfect that ever cam[illegible] observation. His method of classifying a natural one, distributing them accor[illegible] number of their cotyledons, and has basis of that system, which is now, und[illegible] of Jussieuan, universally received by [illegible] the present day. He is termed by [illegible] greatest botanist in the memory of ma[illegible] Sir James Edward Smith, he is said most accurate in observation, the most pl[illegible] in contemplation, and the most faithful [illegible] tion, amongst all the botanists of our o[illegible] haps any other time.' As a zoologist, also very high. Up to his time natur[illegible] satisfied with Aristotle's classification o[illegible] kingdom. Ray, however, conscious of and daring to think for himself, invent[illegible] founded on the structure of the Hea[illegible] declares Ray to be the first true system animal kingdom, and both he and Lin[illegible] themselves deeply indebted to his labou[illegible] succeeding systematic arrangements. conclude this brief notice of this justly man in the words of a learned botanist: ' acknowledge we are proud of being able our countryman, for he was in all respe[illegible] as he was great.' Plumier dedicated [illegible] plants to the memory of John Ray, unde[illegible] Jan-Raia. Linnæus changed it to Ra-[illegible] Sir J. E. Smith has more lately with [illegible] adopted the name Raiania.

RAY-DE-ST.-GEINEZ, James [illegible] French tactician, author of a military [illegible] Louis XIV., 1712-1777.

RAYMOND, several counts of Toulou[illegible] MOND I., reigned 852-865. Raymond [illegible] 918-923. Raymond III., son and s[illegible] the preceding, created duke of Aquitaine of Auvergne by Raoul, king of Franc[illegible] Raymond IV., born 1042, succeeded [illegible] William IV., in 1088, as count of Tou[illegible] of Narbonne, and marquis of Provenc[illegible] he went to Jerusalem with the first c[illegible] refused the crown proffered to him aft[illegible] ture of the city; died in Syria 1105. V., born 1134, succeeded his father 1148 Raymond VI., son of the preceding, succeeded 1194, and, being a friend o[illegible] genses, was twice excommunicated 120[illegible] and despoiled of his estates by Simon [illegible] 1218, died 1222. Raymond VII., s[illegible] mond VI., and last count of Toulous[illegible] 1197, and after struggling with his fat[illegible] recovery of his possessions, vanquished Montfort in 1224. He was so enfeebl[illegible] continual wars, however, that he subm[illegible] humiliating peace with the pope and [illegible] France in 1229. He died 1242, leaving to his only daughter, Jeanne, who had married Alphonso, count of Poitiers, brother of Louis IX.

RAYMOND, J. M., a Fr. general, dist. in the service of the native princes of India, 1755-1798.

RAYMOND, J. M., a Fr. chemist, 1756-1817.

RAYMOND, ROBERT, Lord, solicitor-general in the reign of Anne, and successively attorney-general and chief justice of the King's Bench in the reign of George I.; died 1732.

RAYMONDI. See RAIMONDI.

RAYNAL, JAMES, a French historian of Toulouse, 1723-1807. His brother, FRANCIS, a Greek scholar, 1726-1810.

RAYNAL, WILLIAM THOMAS FRANCIS, a French historian and political writer, was born at St. Geniez, in the Rouergue, 1711, and acquired an European reputation by his 'Philosophical History of the Two Indies.' He was a great partizan of the encyclopédists, and a man of remarkable benevolence. His other historical works are of less note. Died 1796.

RAYNAUD, T., a Fr. theologian, 1583-1663.

RAYNOUARD, FRANCOIS JUSTE MARIE, a French dramatic writer and philologist, 1761-1836.

RAZI, a celebrated Arabian physician, died 923.

RAZOUX, J., a French physician, 1723-1798.

RAZZI, G. A., an Italian painter, 1479-1554.

RE, PHILIP, an Italian agriculturist, 1763-1817.

READING, an English divine, 1588-1667.

REAL. See SAINT REAL.

REAL, ANDREW, a Fr. politician, 1765-1832.

REAL-DE-CURBON, GASPARD DE, a French writer 'On the Science of Government,' 1682-1752. His nephew, BALTHAZAR, an ecclesiastic and learned writer, 1701-1774.

REAL, PHILIP FRANCIS, Count, an ally of Danton during the French revolution, 1765-1834.

REALINO, B., an Italian Jesuit, 1530-1616.

REAUMUR, RENE ANTOINE FERCHAULT DE, a celebrated French physician and naturalist, was born at Rochelle, 1683, and died 1757. He has the merit of reducing thermometers to a common standard, and the thermometer of 80 degrees, invented by him in 1731, still bears his name. He was successful in several new applications of chemistry to different branches of manufacture, especially those of porcelain and steel. His principal works are 'Memoirs of his Discoveries,' 'The History of Insects,' and a 'History of the Auriferous Rivers of France.' He was also the discoverer of the turquoise mines in Languedoc.

REBENTISCH, J. FREDERICK, a German surgeon, disting. as a wr. on botany in 1804-1805.

REBOLLEDO, BERNARDINO, Count Di, a Spanish soldier, poet, and diplomatist, 1597-1677.

REBUFFI, P., a French jurist, 1487-1557.

RECCHI, N. A., a botanist of Naples, 16th ct.

RECHENBERG, ADAM, a learned theologian and philologist of Leipzig, 1642-1721.

RECHTERS, T., a Dutch painter, 1700-1768.

RECORDE, ROBERT, a native of Pembrokeshire, and one of the first mathematicians in this country to adopt the system of Copernicus, d. 1558.

REDENTRIELM, or REENTRIELM, JAMES, a Swedish antiquarian, b. at Upsala 1644, d. 1691.

REDESDALE, JOHN FREEMAN MITFORD, Baron, a distinguished lawyer and statesman, who assisted at the trial of Hardy and Horne Tooke, and finally became lord chancellor, 1748-1830.

REDI, FRANCESCO, an eminent natural philosopher, poet, and philologian of Italy, 1626-1697.

REDI, J., an Italian painter, 1665-1726.

REDING, ALOYS, Baron Von, landemann and general of the Swiss at the period of the French invasion, born 1755, repulsed the French on the plains of Morgarten, 1798, became chief of the central government, 1801, died 1818.

REDMAN, or REDMAYNE, JOHN, a dignitary and theol. of the English Church, 1499-1551.

REDOUTE, P. J., a Flemish pain., 1759-1840.

REED, ISAAC, a miscellaneous writer and dramatic critic, born in London 1742, died 1807.

REED, J., a dramatic writer, 1723-1787.

REES, ABRAHAM, D.D., whose encyclopædia is well known, was born in Montgomeryshire, 1743, and educated as a dissenting minister in the academy of Hoxton. He was teacher of mathematics at that institution from 1762 till its dissolution in 1784, and soon after taught philosophy and theology in the new college at Hackney. He was employed as editor of Chamber's Cyclopædia in the period 1776 to 1786, and some years later edited the great work known by his name in 45 volumes 4to. Dr. Rees died in 1825, having at that time been minister of the chapel in Old Jewry about forty years. Rees's Cyclopædia is still valuable as representing the state of knowledge just at the commencement of modern progress.

REEVE, CLARA, daughter of a clergyman of Ipswich, distinguished as a novelist, 1723-1808.

REEVE, JOHN, one of the most popular actors on the London stage, famous for his representation of burlesque character, was born in London, 1799, and made his first appearance at Drury Lane, in the character of 'Sylvester Daggerwood,' in 1819. The principal scene of his later performances was the Adelphi theatre in the Strand. Died 1838.

REEVES, JOHN, successively a barrister and magistrate, author of 'Thoughts on the English Government,' and of a 'History of the Law of Shipping and Navigation,' 1752-1829.

REEVES, W., an English divine, 1668-1726.

REGA, H. J., a French physician, 1690-1754.

REGGIO, F., an Italian astronomer, 1743-1804.

REGILLIANUS, QUINTUS NONIUS, a Roman emperor, elected 261, killed 263.

REGINALDUS, VALERIUS, otherwise RENAUD or REGNAULD, a Fr. Jesuit and casuist, 1540-1623.

REGIOMONTANUS. See MULLER.

REGIS, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French Jesuit and missionary to China, in the period 1708-1715. He is author of a Latin translation of the Y-King, and of a map of the country. His nephew, JOSEPH CHARLES, known as a man of letters, 1718-1777.

REGIS, J. F., a French preacher, 1597-1640.

REGIS, P., a French physician, 1656-1726.

REGIS, PIERRE SYLVAN, whose proper name was LEROY, a Cartesian philosopher, 1632-1707.

REGIUS, H. LEROY, or DUROY, a physician and Cartesian philosopher of Utrecht, 1598-1679.

REGIUS, URBAIN, or LE ROY, a learned reformer, poet, and professor of rhetoric, died 1541.

REGNARD, JEAN FRANCOIS, a comic poet, who ranks next to Moliere in French literature, and is remarkable for his adventurous life, 1647-1709.

REGNAULD, MICHAEL LOUIS STEPHEN, called 'Regnault of Saint Jean D'Angely,' a Fr. magistrate and member of the estates-general, 1760-1819.

REGNAULDIN, THOMAS, a French sculptor, and member of the Academy, died 1706.

REGNAULT, J. B., a Fr. painter, 1754-1829.

REGNAULT, N., a Fr. physician, 1683-1762.

REGNIER, CLAUDE AMBROSE, duke of Massa, a French statesman at the period of the revolution and the empire, 1746-1814.

REGNIER, E., a Fr. mechanician, 1757-1825.

REGNIER, a French Latin poet, 1589-1663.

REGNIER, M., a French satirist, 1573-1613.

REGNIER-DESMARAIS, FRANCIS SERAPHIN, a French writer, author of poems in his own language and in Latin and Italian, secretary to the Academy, and one of the most active editors of the dictionary, 1632-1713.

REGNIER-DESTOURBET, H. F., a French writer and advocate of the Jesuits, 1804-1831.

REGULUS, MARCUS ATTILIUS, a Roman general, consul B.C. 256, killed at Carthage 251.

REGULUS-SERRANUS, CAIUS ATILIUS, consul of Rome B.C. 257, obtained the naval victory of Lipari in the war with the Carthaginians.

REHFELD, C. F., a Germ. physician, 1735-94.

REHNSCHOLD, CHARLES GUSTAVUS, a distinguished senator and field-marshal of Sweden, 1651-1722.

REICHA, ANTOINE JOSEPH, a celebrated musical composer and theorist, was born at Prague in 1770, and received his education at the university of Bonn. Between the years 1794 and 1807 he lived at Hamburg, at Paris, and at Vienna, where he produced several works which were eminently successful. In 1808 he revisited Paris, when he gave a course of lectures on composition, which were well attended. His career as an operatic composer then commenced. After the death of Mehul he was appointed professor of the Conservatoire de Musique, where he instituted a new and greatly improved method of tuition, which has had great effect over all Europe in improving the study and advancing the knowledge of music. In May, 1835, he was admitted a member of the National Institute, and he died in May, 1836. [J.M.]

REICHARD, H. A. OTTOCAR, a statesman and literateur, dukedom of Gotha, 1751-18 8.

REICHARD, H. G., a German philologist, 1742-1801.

REICHARDT, CHRISTIAN, author of 'The Science of Agriculture and Gardening,' 1685-1775.

REICHARDT, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, was born at Konigsberg in Prussia, in the year 1752. This composer, whose talents developed themselves in a remarkable degree even in early infancy, studied for two years at the university of Konigsberg, under the great philosopher Emanuel Kant, and afterwards two years at the university of Leipzig. He then travelled through Germany, and on his return to Prussia he was appointed Director of Salt-works under government. Reichardt was chapel-master under three kings of Prussia, namely, Frederick the Great, and Frederick William II., and III. He was also manager of the French and German theatres, and conductor of the orchestra to the king of Westphalia, and member and correspondent of several learned societies. He composed an immense number of literary and musical works, the list of which is much too long to be given here. His musical works embrace all classes of compositions, operas, sonatas, and concertos for the harpsichord, concertos for the violin and violoncello, songs, odes, overtures, and church music, in the year 1814.

REICHENBACH, GEORGE OF, a dist of optical instruments and telescopes, 17

REICHSTADT, NAPOLEON FRAN. JOSEPH BUONAPARTE, Duc De, only so poleon and his Austrian bride, Maria Lo born at Paris, 20th March, 1811. His an event of great political importance, a leon himself announced it to the cro thronged the Tuileries with the ambitio —'C'est un roi de Rome!' Napoleon, at at the height of his power, was preparin struggle which every one foresaw must with the might of Russia, and as usual he anticipated the coalition by a sudden of the North. The young king of Rome completed his third year when the dis Moscow and Leipzig opened the gates of the allied armies, and was with his n Blois when the capital capitulated, 30t 1814. The emperor was exiled to Elba wife and son conveyed to Vienna, w young prince received the title of Duc stadt, a petty principality of Bohemia, confided to the care of the count Diet His father made vain attempts to recove sion of the child, for whose existence he a heavy price in the divorce of Josephine his second abdication in 1815, he endeav secure his succession as Napoleon II. T bons, however, were restored by the alli reigns, Maria Louisa became duchess o and mistress of Count Neipperg, and her consigned to oblivion at the court of hi father. The eyes of Europe were ofte upon the young Napoleon as he grew to n and displayed some of the rare qualities by his father; the governments of Louis and Charles X. also may be supposed to that his existence at the court of Vien perpetual menace. Whatever hopes or may have excited were set at rest by his 1832, when a rapid decline terminated h the early age of twenty-one. The duc d stadt bore a strong resemblance to Napol finely chiselled mouth and chin, the mas head, and the deep brilliancy of his eyes, markably alike; the same may be said of city for the penetration of character, general temperament. He applied hi tensely to military and historical stud especially to all that concerned the care father, but he had no real freedom at t His portrait was almost the last object exile of St. Helena gazed upon, whose l ment is an evidence how much he still the child of his ambition:—'I recomm never to forget that he was born a Frenc and never to permit himself to become a ment in the hands of the sovereigns wh the peoples of Europe. He must never in the ranks of those who combat with F in any manner annoy her. Let him a motto, "All for the French people."'

REID, THOMAS, born at Strachan in dineshire, 26th April, 1710; died in Glas October, 1795: the illustrious founde

CHOOL' in Philosophy. The events were few, but most honourable to entire tenor of his Life, that which obtrusive, but earnest, and successful Truth. Under the influence of early his thoughts naturally turned towards nd the profession of the Church;
ted the studies needful to that end College, Aberdeen. But about this
's Treatise on Human Nature astonbled Philosophy. Until then, REID Locke, and even the startling deduc-eley did not alarm him. But Hume farther. Along with the Material banished those Spiritual conceptions
eld in greatest account; he denied,
y, and therefore the Liberty and Re-Man. The sincere Scottish Clergy-knew, that, in a Philosophy whose ere so false, the most serious error
and that, as its Logic showed no flaw, t lie in the foundations. Soon after,
great work appeared—the 'Inquiry
n Mind on the Principles of Common vigorous protest on behalf of our ciousness, which determined the long urse of Scottish Philosophy. Pre-ublication of this work, Reid had left 1752) for the Chair of Moral Philo-Alma Mater; but the reputation
y the 'Inquiry,' procured his transla-e important sphere;—he was chosen ucceed Adam Smith in the corresr in the University of Glasgow. In 8, he published his Essays on the In- ulties, and the Active Powers. Philocently obtained the classic edition
WILLIAM HAMILTON. — We shall nctly as possible the characteristics
orm. The first fallacy in the system his successors, at which he struck, rine of Perception. The problem, does the Mind reach the external always been held fundamental in
And a favourite mode of conceiving ertain Images or Ideas, intermediate and matter—representing the latter, sible by the former—constitute the en these two contrasted substances
he case, said BERKELEY, we do not er or the External World at all; and,
, we perceive and can know nothing
The various forms and modifications
rous and purely fantastic conception been scientifically arranged and ex-Sir William Hamilton; who has that Reid's solution of the vexed
e only tenable one. Perception, said representation, but a presentation.
each it, from Sensation, through any world—the cause of the sensation—
he mind along with the sensation
th the same evidence. The root or all our knowledge is thus essentially
-the Intuition is as immediate as the gives rise to it. (Article LEIBNITZ).
simple solution, which is but the as-fact—attested to be such by Consci-
d dispersed the perplexities of preceding Thinkers, and ought to have prevented the rise of many of the ambitious and baseless schemes in which Germany has since then been unhappily so fertile.—Reid's next point, touched the rationale of our JUDGMENTS. According to Locke, a Judgment is the mere comparison of terms or ideas furnished by simple apprehension:—we receive ideas, said that Philosopher, altogether from Sensation; the Mind compares these Ideas; and, from this comparison, results knowledge or judgments. Reid overthrew this doctrine also. Judgments, he said, are not mere abstract terms; neither mere statements of the identity or discordance of abstract terms. They come from analyses of concrete notions by the Mind, acting according to its own inherent Laws, and under the sway of principles, belonging to its constitution, and of which none of its operations are independent. This doctrine of Judgment, led our Inquirer, inevitably, to a farther and yet higher question, viz.: What are those Laws? What those Fundamental Principles of the Reason? Reid replies, by a summary of First Truths, or Truths of Common Sense; and next by an analysis of the Faculties. Very few persons will now be disposed to say, that in the details or phraseology of these replies, Reid's system is unimpeachable. The name Faculty, was perhaps unfortunate, and no scientific, precise, or exhaustive method, guided his research after First Truths;—he merely enumerates a few principles, which he says are evident to Common Sense. Nevertheless, the solution offered is correct in the main; and it is not an exaggeration, that it overturned Sensationalism in this country. He carried with him the same method into Moral Investigations, re-establishing on surest foundations, the Personality and Liberty of Man.—It is of moment that a correct apprehension be obtained of the exact place occupied by Reid and the Scottish School generally, in the history of later Mental Philosophy. That he stands among the foremost of that class of Thinkers who have contended with Scepticism in all its forms, and Sensationalism under whatever modification, does not require to be reasserted: the really important question is, what is the relationship of Reid's system to those of other Modern Leaders, who, in so far as his main object is concerned, have made common cause with him? Among the great men, whose general aim was identical with Reid's, we easily distinguish two—DES CARTES and KANT: let us fix, then, the relations between Cartesianism, our Scottish Reform, and the Critical Philosophy. Now, it is not to be doubted that the foundation—the starting point of unquestionable certainty—is—in all these systems—the same: neither is the glory of having first descried that Common Sense Foundation, to be withheld from the illustrious Frenchman. Previous to the labours of Des Cartes, the metaphysicians of Modern Europe, had discerned no absolute starting point; their schemes usually reposed on some abstract and often fanciful postulate; nor can more forcible illustration be given of the merit of Des Cartes' achievement, than the subsequent aberrations of SPINOZA. The foundation, whose claims and sufficiency are so fully vindicated in the Treatise on Method and the Meditations, is simply this:— it is a First Truth—possessed of an Absolute Certainty, from which the certainty belonging to all other Truth is derived—that I, a Thinking Subject, exist. This EGO, then, being our first or primary sphere of observation and scrutiny;—what find we there? And in establishing this foundation and putting this question, Des Cartes spread out the entire domain of Psychology. Sciences are built up slowly; and psychological observation is peculiarly difficult: Des Cartes did not advance far with the superstructure; he left hints merely and separate truths; and he often erred. The earliest subsequent progress may most justly be attributed to REID, for Locke, with all his acuteness, was not a sound Psychologist,—he started from a Theory regarding the Origin of our Ideas. Consciousness, said Reid, which assures us of the existence and personality of the Thinking Subject, declares in a manner equally imperative, the phenomena and attributes of that Subject. It tells in the first place, of certain Faculties, or modes of action—demanding faith for the operations of these Faculties. And it declares secondly, the existence of certain absolute principles or beliefs, from which in none of its actions, the Ego can shake itself free: principles which, when mixed up with the subject-matter of sensations, give rise to equally imperative contingent truths. As already indicated, Reid was rather a sound Thinker than possessed of the Scientific Spirit. Although therefore he discovered the foregoing Truths, and fully appreciated and unfolded their importance, he penetrated no farther. He descried fundamental facts in Psychology, but he never entertained an idea that Psychology—any more than any other branch of Inquiry—cannot be elevated into a Science, if attention be confined to examination of its separate fundamental Facts. That loftier question was beyond him—What is the Organic Structure of the Intellect of which these facts are products or phenomena? In other words,—In what way are principles possible, which are not evolved by our faculties, but rather govern them, seeing that no faculty can construct any notion which does not pre-suppose these principles? And again,—How comes it, that knowledge relative to the nature and action of the Faculties of an Individual Mind, can ever assume to be Absolute? It is into this arduous Sphere of pure Science that KANT boldly entered, and where his triumphs have been won. His arrangement or classification of the Mind's Modes of Energy (Faculties) is simpler and better discriminated than Reid's; he has traced the absolutism of First Truths to the fact, that à priori or constitutent Laws, govern the Mind's action in every Mode of its Energy; and he has exhausted the list of such Truths, by detecting these à priori Laws.—Such, the relationship among these remarkable Thinkers. It has been signally unfortunate for the progress of Philosophy in Scotland, that we have not been disposed to regard our countryman as a contributor merely. Not satisfied with recognizing his immense merits, we have supposed that he sounded all the depths of Psychologic knowledge;—thus wilfully shutting up our sympathies from the memorable advances achieved since his time. Of late years, indeed, we have been growing sensible of our mistake. [J.P.N.]

REIFESTEIN, JOHN FREDERIC
cameo painter and improver of the ar
REIFFENBERG, FRANCIS D
Jesuit, historian, theol., and Latin po
REIGNY, L. A. B., a French write REIL, J. C., a Germ. physiologist, REIMAR, or REIMARIUS, HERM
a philologist and naturalist, professo
phy at Hamburg, 1694-1748. Hi
HENRY, a physician and naturalist, REIMMANN, JAMES FREDERIC
savant, author of a 'History of Logic
REINA, F., a French writer, 1770
REINBECK, J. G., a German th philosophical disciple of Wolf, 1682-1 REINECCIUS, C., a theologian
editor of a Bible in four languages, 1 REINECCIUS, REINIER, an ant disciple of Melanchthon, one of the historical studies in Germany, 1541-1
REINEGGS, J., a German travell
REINER, W. L., a German painte REINESIUS, THOMAS, a learn and archæologist of Gotha, 1587-166
REINHARD, F. VOLKMAR, a prot
gian and moralist of Sulzbach, 1753-REINHART, C. F., Count, a diplo ber of the Institute, and peer of Franc REINHOLD, C. LEO, a Ger. philo
first to enforce the doctrines of Kan
REINHOLD, ERASMUS, a Germa
and professor of mathematics, 151 son, of the same name, who was wrote on geometry, and on a new st peared in Cassiopeia, 1575.
REISER, A., a German theologia
REISKE, JOHN JAMES, an emine and Arabic scholar of Saxony, 171 wife, ERNESTINA CHRISTINA, was Greek scholar, and aided her husba labours, 1735-1798.
REITZ, FREDERICK WOLFGAN
philologist and editor of some classic REITZ, JOHN FREDERICK, a le gist, 1695-1778. His brother, G. O editor, 1702-1769.
RELAND, A., a Dutch Orientalis RELTAN, RICHARD, a Church of ister, naturalist, and classical editor,
REMARD, C., a French bibliopol
REMBERSUS, one of the first Christianity in Denmark, d. abp. of H
REMBRANDT, GERRITZ, common
BRANDT VAN RHYN, was born in hi on the banks of the Rhine between Kowkerk, near Leyden, June 15, 160
the pupil of Jacob Van Swanenbur
he remained three years; he studi
Pieter Lastman at Amsterdam, and J Haarlem. He settled at Amsterdam appears to have died there, according July 19, 1664, but no register of been yet discovered. Rembrandt w tinguished as an etcher and a paint ings amount to nearly 400: they 1628 to 1661. The chief characteris is forcible light and shade. He is w in the National Gallery; and his been more direct upon the British s

ers than that of any other master.—(Immerzeel, Aanteekeningen op de Lofredd op Rembrandt, so De Levens en Werken der Hollandsche en Vlaamsche Kunstschilders, &c., 1843; Bartsch, Le Peintre graveur; Burnet, Rembrandt and his Works, 1848.) [R.N.W.]

REMER, J. A., a Germ. historian, 1736-1804.

REMI, or REMIGIUS, the name of two saints the Roman calendar:—1. An apostle of the Franks who baptized Clovis, and became archbishop of Rheims, died 533. 2. An archbishop of Rheims, who was of Gaulish origin, and wrote against Godeschalcus, presided at the council of Valence 855, died 875. A third of the name, called REMI, or REMIGIUS OF AUXERRE, was a Benedictine monk and commentator, died 980.

REMI, A., a French poet, 1600-1646.

REMI, J. H., a French jurist, 1738-1782.

REMONDI, BALTHASAR M., a Venetian bishop of Zante, disting. as an Orientalist, 1698-1777.

REMUSAT, CLAIRE ELIZABETH JEANNE, Countess De, lady of the palace to the empress Josephine, authoress of an Essay on Female Education, 1780-1821.

REMUSAT, JEAN PIERRE ABEL, professor of the Chinese and Tartar languages at the college of France, author of a Chinese Grammar, and some valuable translations, 1788-1832.

REMUSAT, P. F. DE, a Fr. writer. 1755-1803.

RENANUS. See RHENANUS.

RENARD, J. A., a French architect, 1744-73.

RENAU D'ELISAGARAY, BERNARD, a famous naval engineer and architect, an. of 'Theorie de la Manœuvre des Vaisseaux,' 1652-1719.

RENAUD, the first of the name, count of Burgundy, reigned 1027-1057; the second, succeeded 1087, died in the Holy Land, 1097; the third, succeeded 1126, died, and was succeeded by his daughter, Beatrix, 1148.

RENAUD, the first of the name, count of Bar, reigned 1105-1149, and sustained a long struggle with the emperor Henry V. The second, succeeded his brother, Hugh, 1155, died 1170.

RENAUD, L., a French preacher, 1690-1771.

RENAUD, or REGNAULD. See REGINALDUS.

RENAUDIE, GODFREY DE BAPAY, Seigneur De La, a party to the conspiracy of Amboise, 1560.

RENAUDOT, THEOPHRASTUS, a physician and biographer, founder of the 'Gazette de France,' 1584-1653. The 'Gazette' was continued by his two sons, ISAAC and EUSEBIUS. EUSEBIUS, his grandson, was a learned Orientalist and ecclesiastical historian, 1656-1720.

RENAULT, A. C., a young woman, executed at Paris for attempting the life of Robespierre, 1794.

RENAZZI, P. M., an Italian jurist, 1747-1808.

RENE OF ANJOU, the last of his dynasty who sat on the throne of Naples, and the father of Margaret of Anjou, wife of Henry VI., king of England, was born at the castle of Angers in 1409, and succeeded his brother as duke of Anjou and count of Provençe, 1434. He had previously become duke of Lorraine by his marriage with Isabella, the heiress of that state, and had suffered a long captivity, and been deprived of the succession by his competitor, Anthony, count of Vaudemont. He was still the prisoner of that polite gentleman when he succeeded to the duchies of Anjou and Provençe in 1434, and when the death of Joan II. of Naples in 1435, gave him a claim to the Two Sicilies. These events, and the warlike employment they promised to René, were a sufficient inducement for Anthony to rid his hands of him, and the heir of Naples and Sicily was permitted to fight his way to the throne. The succession was disputed by Alfonso of Arragon, who took Naples in 1442, and chased René back to Provençe. But the conquests of the English had also deprived him of his whole heritage in France, and René found himself a titular king of some of the fairest portions of the earth, and duke of Anjou, Maine, and Bar, without a province under his own command. Such was his position when the duke of Suffolk negotiated the marriage of René's daughter with Henry VI., and it is thus alluded to in the taunts put in the mouth of York by Shakspeare:—

> 'Thy father bears the type of king of Naples,
> Of both the Sicils and Jerusalem;
> Yet not so wealthy as an English yeoman.
> Hath that poor monarch taught thee to insult?'

Margaret, however, if poor, was a finely accomplished woman, and possessed the heroic spirit of many others of her sex in that age; her father, René, also was distinguished by many of the qualities of a good and wise king, whose lot was cast in evil times; and he was called 'the good King René' by his subjects of Provençe. Anjou and Maine were restored to him by the treaty with Henry VI., but Louis XI., in 1473, deprived him of the former, and attached it definitively to the French crown. It was according to the necessity and the spirit of the times, for the European monarchies were then absorbing the old feudal lordships and petty sovereignties into themselves, and forming the national monarchies, such as France became in the next century under Louis XIV. René died at Aix in Provençe, 1470, and so lately as 1823 a marble statue was erected to him in that city. He was the last count of Provençe, that portion of his hereditary dominions having been annexed to France at his death. [E.R.]

RENE II., duke of Lorraine, born 1451, succeeded to the duchy in right of his mother, daughter of René of Anjou, 1493, died 1508.

RENEE OF FRANCE, duchess of Ferrara, second daughter of Louis XII., was born 1510. In 1528 she married Hercules II., duke of Ferrara, and was distinguished for her love of letters, and her friendship for Calvin and the protestants. Died 1575.

RENNEL, MAJOR, an East Indian officer, and distinguished geographical writer, 1742-1830.

RENNELL, THOMAS, dean of Winchester, and son-in-law of Sir William Blackstone, regarded as one of the most accomplished men of his age, author of Sermons, 1753-1840. His son, of the same name, born at Winchester 1787, became in 1811 editor of the 'British Critic,' and published about the same time his 'Animadversions on the Unitarian Version of the New Testament;' d. 1824.

RENNEVILLE, CONSTANTINE DE, author of a 'History of the Bastile,' in which he had been confined on a charge of treason; born at Caen 1650, died in England 1724.

RENNEVILLE, SOPHIE, a French lady, author of works on education, 1771-1822.

RENNIE, JOHN, a distinguished civil engineer, and the first perhaps who in the execution of machinery carefully distributed and accurately calculated the strains of the different parts, so that these were justly proportioned, a feature which up to a very recent period was a peculiar characteristic of British machinery. He was born at Phantassie in Haddingtonshire, 7th June, 1761. His father was a farmer, celebrated for his skill and desire to improve agriculture. As early as 1780, on being asked at what season he began ploughing, answered that he ploughed at all seasons! John Rennie acquired the rudiments of education at the school of Phantassie and afterwards at Dunbar, where, on the promotion of the master, he, for a short time, conducted the school. He early displayed a love of nature, and an aptitude for mechanical contrivance, and the use of tools. He worked as a mechanic for some years under Andrew Meikle, a millwright of the district, under whose superintendence he assisted in the erection of some mills in Haddingtonshire, and went as far as Dundee to erect one on his own account. The opportunity presented itself, and Rennie took advantage of it, to attend the courses of lectures on mechanical philosophy and chemistry, by Robison and Black, in Edinburgh college. Prepared thus with what books and professors could teach, he entered the world; and it may be said, that during all the course of his useful life, he was adding to his stock of knowledge, or seeking the means of improving his practice by observing the operations and effects of his own works, as well as of those which had been executed by other engineers. About 1781, or when in his twenty-first year, feeling himself qualified to practise the profession of civil engineering on a greater scale than Scotland then afforded field for, he set out for London. On his way he spent some months with Watt at Soho. Soon after he was established in London, Bolton and Watt employed Rennie in the construction of two steam engines, and the machinery connected with them, at the Albion Flour Mills. All the wheel work was of cast iron instead of wood, which had been always previously used in such machinery. The works were finished in 1789, and obtained Watt's highest commendation. Rennie continued to the last to be employed in the construction of steam engines and other machinery, and, at the same time, he was almost constantly engaged in designing or superintending those public works which have given him so just a claim to celebrity. Rennie designed and executed innumerable bridges, but his masterpieces are Waterloo bridge, the Southwark cast iron bridge, and New London bridge, the execution of which latter was left to his sons to complete. His great engineering genius was displayed besides in numerous canals for navigation successfully carried out under his direction; in the extensive drainage schemes for the Lincolnshire fens, which he planned and executed; in the magnificent London, and East and West India docks; the Hull docks, where he constructed the first dredging machine used in this country. But the catalogue of his works cannot be recited here. He was indefatigable in business, and personally directed minutest details. He was a man of noble presence, of somewhat austere temper, and not very social habits. Chantrey, who made a bust of him, said of it that it was his (Chantrey's) Jupiter. Until within a few years of his death he enjoyed excellent health. He died October 16, 1821, at the early age of sixty-one, leaving many magnificent designs to be executed by his two elder sons, GEORGE and JOHN, the latter now Sir John Rennie; he was buried in St. Paul's Cathedral. [L.D.B.]

RENNIGER, or RHANGER, MICHAEL, a native of Hampshire, chaplain to Queen Elizabeth, author of Latin poems, 1529-1609.

RENOU, A., a French painter, 1731-1806.

RENTI, GASTON JEAN BAPTISTE, a French nobleman, remarkable for his ascetic devotion to religion, and for his charities, 1611-1649.

RENZI, A., an Italian writer, 1780-1823.

REPNIN, NICHOLAS WASILIEWITSCH, Prince, a celebrated Russian diplomatist, 1731-1801.

REPTON, HUMPHREY, a private gentleman dist. as a wr. on landscape gardening, 1752-1818.

REQUENO Y VIVES, VINCENT, a Spanish Jesuit, numismatist, and archæologist, 1743-1811.

REQUIER, J. B., a French writer, 1715-1795.

RESENIUS, JOHN PAUL, a learned divine, son of a Lutheran clergyman of Denmark, 1561-1638. His grandson, PETER JOHN, professor of moral philosophy and jurisprud. at Copenhagen, 1625-88.

RESTAUT, P., a Fr. grammarian, 1696-1764.

RESTIF-DE-LA-BRETONNE, N. E., a fertile and cynical French novelist, 1731-1806.

RESTOUT, JOHN, a French painter, director of the Academy, 1692-1768. His son, J. BERNARD, a painter and member of the Academy, died 1796.

RESTY, J. A., a Latin poet, 1755-1814.

RETZ, GILLES DE SAVAL, Seigneur De, a French marshal, born 1396, distinguished himself in the wars with the English, and acquired a disgraceful celebrity by his cruelties and infamous debaucheries: hung and burnt 1440.

RETZ, or RAIZ, ALBERT DE GONDI, Marshal De, a native of Florence, who came to France with Catharine de Medici, and was rewarded with the barony of Retz and a marshal's baton, 1522-1601. His brother, PIERRE, Cardinal De Retz, advanced by favour of Catharine, 1533-1616. Their grandnephew is the subject of the following article.

RETZ, JEAN FRANCOIS PAUL DE GONDI, Cardinal De, the hero of the civil wars of the Fronde in the minority of Louis XIV., was the son of Philip Emanuel de Gondi, general of the French Galleys, and was born at Montmirail, 1614. He was educated by St. Vincent de Paul, and destined for the church, but turned out a licentious and turbulent character in his youth, and preferred entering into the intrigues of the court and heading the popular party opposed to Mazarin and Condé. The only sincere parties in the cabal, for it hardly possesses the dignity of a war, though it was marked by all the suffering one, was the distressed people, who became mere tools of ambition and faction. The popular manifestations provoked by De Retz were similar to those which marked the commencement of the French revolution; and the year 1649 was signalized by the resort to arms and the erection of barricades. The court was obliged to leave Paris till De Retz was purchased by a cardinal's hat, which he was nominated by the king in 1651. He was then arrested, during the lull which followed by Mazarin, and remained a prisoner from 1652 to 1654, when he escaped to Spain, and going from that country to Rome, engaged in the intrigues

In 1661, the death of Mazarin return to France and make his king; he resigned, however, the pric which he had held since the le, and received the abbey of St.
' it. The remainder of his life ar contrast with the part we have andoned his magnificent manner questered the greater part of his yment of his debts, amounting to ion and a-half sterling; twice it d to renounce the purple, which have purchased too dearly. He universally esteemed, in 1679,
s' which are highly valued for
', and for the sketches of charac-
ey are replete. [E.R.]
J., a Swed. botanist, 1747-1821.
JOHN, one of the most eminent prof. of Greek and Hebrew at Wit-cher of Melanchthon, 1455-1522.
DE, a Fr. traveller, 1780-1810.
P., a Ger. philologist, 1691-1754.
N., a German jurisconsult and r of some compilations and Latin
2. His brother, ELIAS, an antiian, 1555-1612.
., a Germ. philologist, 1750-1837.
a Russian historian, last century.
, a Dutch painter, 1650-1718.
JOHN EVERHARD, one of the risconsults ever produced in Holt Haarlem, 1763, and perished at tim of a conspiracy in 1816. He authors of the new criminal code tries.
French painter, 1684-1751.
WILLEY, a pupil of Sir W. Chamarchitect and antiquary, d. 1799.
E-LEPAUX, LOUIS MARIE,
nber of the constituent assembly,
nd the directory, 1753-1824.
F. G., a Fr. antiquary, 1753-1828.
a Dutch savant, 1586-1658.
JEAN BAPTISTE, successively de-ates-general, the convention, and f the French republic, in which laced by Sieyes, 1746-1816.
rench chemist, died 1645.
BAPTISTE, an eminent musical
al years director of the orchestra
Napoleon, 1734-1810.
, a German savant, 1635-1714.
t, a Flemish painter, died 1678.
DE, a Spanish Hebraist, 16th cent.
C. R., a Fr. geometr., 1656-1728.
., a nonconf. div., abt. 1600-1670.
OHN LOUIS EBENEZER, a French
tesman, 1771-1814. His brother,
, an economist, 1762-1814.
E., an Engl. prelate, 1595-1676.
SIR JOSHUA, considered the nglish school of painting as regards acteristics, was born at Plympton where his father was rector, July vas intended for the medical pro-induced by the perusal of Richard-Painting, &c., to take up painting
. A handsome edition of these essays was in 1773 dedicated to Sir Joshua by Richardson's son, comprising — The Theory of Painting, Essay on the Art of Criticism, and The Science of a Connoisseur. Reynolds' first master was Hudson the portrait painter, with whom he was placed in 1741. He first set up as a portrait painter at Devonport, but in 1746 settled in London in St. Martin's Lane. In 1749 he accompanied Commodore Keppel in the Centurion to the Mediterranean, and remained altogether about three years in Italy. He commenced business again in London in 1752, and soon became the most prominent painter of the capital. In 1768, when the Royal Academy was established, Reynolds was unanimously elected president at the first meeting of the members, December 14, of that year, and he was knighted by George III. in consequence. In 1784 he succeeded Allan Ramsay as principal painter in ordinary to the king; and after an unrivalled career as a portrait painter, died at his house in Leicester Square, February 23, 1792. He was buried with great pomp in St. Paul's Cathedral, where a fine statue by Flaxman is placed immediately below the dome, in honour of his memory. His large fortune, about £80,000, was inherited by his niece, Miss Palmer, who became afterwards marchioness of Thomond. His collection of works of art sold for nearly £17,000. Sir Joshua Reynolds, notwithstanding his careless and feeble drawing, was indisputably a great painter; some of his portraits are among the first masterpieces of the art, whether as simple portraits, or as fancy pieces, as for instance, 'Lord Heathfield' in the National Gallery, of the former class, and 'Mrs. Siddons as the Tragic Muse,' at Dulwich, of the latter. His pictures are necessarily very numerous, their chief excellence is their natural grace, fulness of expression, substantial character, and frequently a charming richness of colour and light and shade. His eulogium cannot be better expressed than in the words of Burke:—'He was the first Englishman who added the praise of the elegant arts to the other glories of his country;' 'The loss of no man of his time can be felt with more sincere, general, and unmixed sorrow.' Sir Joshua has bequeathed to posterity besides his paintings, fifteen elegant and valuable 'Discourses,' of which a magnificent edition edited by John Burnet, was published by James Carpenter in 1842. There is a full life of Reynolds by Northcote, two vols. 8vo, London, 1819. [R.N.W.]

REYRAC, FRANCIS PHILIP DELAURENS DE, a French ecclesiastic and poet, 1734-1782.

REYS, ANTHONY DAS, a Portuguese divine, known as a poet and biographer, 1690-1738.

REZZANO, F., an Italian poet, 1731-1780.

REZZONICO, ANTHONY JOSEPH, Count Della Torre, an Ital. critic, and gov. of Parma, 1709-85.

RHAY, T., a French controversialist, 1603-71.

RHAZES, an Arabian physician, died 932.

RHEINEK, C., a German composer, 1748-96.

RHENANUS, BEATUS, a learned critic, and one of the restorers of letters in Germany, 1485-1547.

RHENFERD, J., a Ger. Orientalist, 1654-1712.

RHESE, J. D., a Welch philologist, 1534-1609.

RHETICUS, G. J., a Swiss astron., 1514-1576.

RHIANUS, a Greek grammarian, B.C. 200.

RHIGAS, a modern Greek poet, and martyr of patriotism, was born in Thessaly about 1753.

Having organized a secret society to achieve the independence of Greece, he was arrested by the Austrian government, and, a rescue being feared, was drowned in the Danube, May, 1798. His poems are said to be full of inspiration, besides which he commenced a Greek journal, and translated several French works.

RHO, J., an Italian ascetic, 1590-1662.

RHODE, J. G., a Germ. Orientalist, died 1827.

RHODES, ALEXANDER DE, a Fr. Jesuit, dist. as a missionary to the East, from 1618 to 1660.

RHODES, J., a Danish savant, 1587-1659.

RHODIGINUS, CŒLIUS, a learned Italian, called by Scaliger, who was a pupil of his, the Varro of his age. His proper name was LODOVICO CELIO RICCHERI, 1450-1525.

RHODOMAN, L., a Germ. savant, 1546-1606.

RHUNKEN, or RUHNEKEN, DAVID, an eminent critic and professor at Leyden, 1723-98.

RHYNE, W. F., a Dutch naturalist, 17th cent.

RHYZELIUS, ANDREW, a Swedish antiquarian, chaplain to Charles XII., bp. of Lincoping, and member of the Upsala Academy, 1677-1755.

RIBALTA, FRANCISO, a Spanish painter, 1551-1628. JUAN, his son and pupil, 1597-1628.

RIBAS, JOSEPH DE, a Neapolitan general, employed in the service of Russia, and one of the negotiators of the peace of Jassi; born about 1735.

RIBAS-Y-CARASQUILLAS, F. DE, a Spanish Dominican, and adversary of the Jesuits, 1612-87.

RIBERA, ANASTASIUS PANTALEON DE, a Span. poet and wit, time of Philip IV., 1580-1629.

RIBERA. See SPAGNOLETTO.

RIBES, ANNE ARNAUD DE, a French colonel of engineers, distinguished in Spain in the wars of the French republic and of the empire, 1731-1811.

RIBIER, W., a French historian and deputy to the estates-general, 1575-1663.

RIBIT, J., a French Hellenist, 16th century.

RIBOUTTE, F. L., a Fr. dramat., 1770-1834.

RICARD, D., a French translator, 1741-1803.

RICARDO, DAVID, a merchant of London, of Dutch descent, famous for his writings on finance and the statistics of public economy, was born 1772, and first appeared as an author during the discussion connected with the Bullion Committee in 1810. His great work 'On the Principles of Political Economy and Taxation,' was published in 1817. In 1819, he became member of parliament for Portarlington. Died 1823.

RICART, or RYCAUT, SIR PAUL, an English traveller, historian, and diplomatist, died 1700.

RICCATI, VINCENT DE, an Italian mathematician and engineer, 1707-1775. His brother, JOURDAIN, a musician, 1709-1790.

RICCHERI. See RHODIGINUS.

RICCI, ANTONIO, an Italian painter, surnamed Barbalunga, taught by Domenichino, 1600-1649.

RICCI, C., an Italian painter, 1580-1620.

RICCI, J. B., an Italian painter, 1545-1620.

RICCI, LORENZO, the last general of the Jesuits, born at Florence, 1703, died in the castle of St. Angelo, 1775. His nephew, SCIPIO, an Italian prelate, imprisoned for his attachment to the protestant doctrines, 1741-1810.

RICCI, M., a Romish missionary, 1552-1610.

RICCI, M. A., an Italian cardinal, 1619-1682.

RICCI, SEBASTIANO, an Italian painter, who executed in this country the staircase at Montague House, 1660-1734. MARCO, his nephew and pupil, born 1676, died at Venice 1730.

RICCIARELLI. See VOLTERRA.

RICCIO, B., an Italian painter, 16th cent.

RICCIO, DOMENICO, generally called Fiorentino, an Italian painter, 1494-1567. H... FELIX, called Brusasorci the Younger, 155... BAPTISTA, the brother of the latter, and C... his sister, were also painters.

RICCIOLI, GIOVANI BATISTA, a learned Jesuit and astronomer, 1578-1671.

RICCOBONI, LUIGI, called Lelio, an ... Italian dramatist and comic actor, born at ... about 1674, died 1753. His first wife, H... VIRGINIA BALETTI, was also an actr... authoress, 1686-1771. Their son, ANTONIO ... CESCO, was an actor, dramatic writer, and ... mist, 1707-1772. The wife of the latter, ... JEANNE LABORAS DE MEZIERES, a Fren... was disting. as an actress and novelist, 171...

RICH, CLAUDIUS JAMES, the distin... traveller and Orientalist, was born in 178... Dijon, in Burgundy, and was brought to E... in his infancy, and educated at Bristol. He ... so remarkable for his skill in the Eastern la... that he obtained an appointment in the Ea... Company's service as early as 1803, when ... seventeenth year. In 1807 he resided wit... James Macintosh, at Bombay, and marri... daughter. His researches in Babylonia dat... 1811 to 1820, and he died prematurely at ... in 1821. His Oriental antiquities and MSS. ... purchased by parliament for the British M... His memoirs were published by his wido... went through a second edition in 1839.

RICH, PENELOPE DEVEREUX, Lady of ... Robert Rich, was a daughter of the old ... Essex, and the affianced bride of Sir Philip ... She is the Stella of his exquisitely beautiful ... verses, and is admitted to have been the ... woman of her age. The love story of 'Astr... and 'Stella,' is one of the most painful ro... of real life. It has been illustrated by the gr... pen of Mrs. Jameson among others.

RICHARD I., king of England, surn... Cœur de Lion, the 'Lion-hearted,' was the ... son of Henry II. and Eleanor of Guien... had been divorced by Louis VII. of France. ... was born at Oxford in 1157, and succeeded t... throne by the death of his father in 1189; ... previously displayed so haughty and rebell... spirit, that it had contributed to lay the ag... in his grave. Remorse for his past mis... was instantly followed by preparations ... crusade in Palestine, which had been res... during Henry's lifetime, in consequence ... progress in arms of the renowned Saladin. ... the 1st of July, 1190, Richard met Philip ... gustus of France in the plain of Vezelay, ... agreed upon the terms of a mutual exp... he was then accompanied from Marseilles by ... English barons, and the kings rejoined ... at Messina, the appointed rendezvous of the ... armies. Here the romantic episode of Rich... expedition against Cyprus, and his marriage ... Berengaria took place. In the middle of ... these interesting proceedings ended in the ... of the armament before St. Jean d'Acre, then ... for two years past besieged by the crusa...

ror Frederic. The English monarch came popular among the knights, ding part in the operations of the tress surrendered, notwithstanding aladin to raise the siege on the 12th
soon afterwards Philip Augustus ance, pretending sickness, but really the supremacy of Richard, and far m in feats of arms. Richard now St. Jean D'Acre at the head of nd defeated Saladin in a general
the road towards Ascalon. This crusaders in possession of the prinong the sea-coast, and furnished operations that Richard was enabled rd to the capture of Jerusalem.
ong the Christian forces prevented
ment of this design, and Richard, perfidy of his brother, John, and e, concluded a truce with Saladin, or Europe on the 9th of October,
e had already been spread far and ongs of the troubadours, and the pilgrims. Armed with a heavy never hesitated to rush single-he midst of the enemy, and such rded of him as would be incredible
ot well attested by eye-witnesses.
e home he was shipwrecked near e coast of Italy, and, disguising grim, he endeavoured to reach Eng-Germany. When near Vienna, his was discovered, and Leopold, duke used him to be arrested both in brother-in-law, the king of Cyprus, empt that Richard had shown for
. On his captivity becoming known,

Dürnsteigen, the prison of Richard.]

cealed as long as possible, Richard by his subjects at the price of
, and arrived in London on the 20th
. His contemptible brother, John, nnivance with Philip to usurp the hat monarch advised him of Richith the laconic warning to 'take
, for the devil had broke loose.'
ver, generously forgave him, and wned again at Winchester, crossed to chastise Philip. Hostilities were interrupted by a truce, and being resumed again a second truce was agreed upon, both which events occurred within the three years, 1196-1199. In the last-mentioned year Richard was preparing to return to England, when Vidomar, the count of Limoges, discovered a treasure, part of which he sent to Richard as his feudal superior. The latter claimed the whole. Avariciousness could be no part of such a character, but it should be considered that he had been at great costs in his recent wars, and his conscience may have told him that his subjects had paid a far higher ransom for him than he was worth as their sovereign. Provoked at the refusal of the Limousan, Cœur de Lion invested the castle of Chaluz, and haughtily refusing all overtures, threatened to hang the whole garrison as soon as he had taken the place. While reconnoitering this stronghold, he was shot in the shoulder with an arrow by a cross-bow-man, named Bertrand de Gourdon. The wound proved mortal, and Richard expired in the tenth year of his reign, on the 16th April, 1199. The garrison in the meanwhile had been defeated, and the king displayed his usual magnanimity by ordering that Gourdon should be set at liberty. On the contrary, the hapless man was flayed alive and then hung, by order of Marchadee, the leader of the Brabantine soldiers in Richard's army. The fame of Richard Cœur de Lion has been no less widely spread in the East than in his own country, and his daring passed into a proverb among the Saracens. He had qualities also that must have made him a great king, in every sense of the word, had he outlived his martial enthusiasm, or had war been pursued for political ends in those times as in later ages. [E.R.]

RICHARD II., eldest son of Edward the black prince, and of Jane, daughter of Edmund, earl of Kent, was born at Bourdeaux 1366, and succeeded his grandfather, Edward III., 1377. He was called to govern in difficult times, when the nobles were turbulent and powerful, and the commons were just acquiring a knowledge of the power they might possibly exercise: his minority also was disturbed by the continuance of the French wars of his grandfather. At that time the modern principles of taxation were not understood, and disaffection was provoked by the exactions necessary for the public service. A priest, named John Ball, became the orator of the multitude, and the people rushed to arms under Wat Tyler, a poor man, whose daughter had been outraged by the indecent conduct of the collector of the poll-tax. This was in 1381, when the king was only fifteen years of age. Tyler, who lived at Dartford, in Kent, collected a body of 100,000 insurgents under his banner, and having pitched his camp at Blackheath, made a disastrous descent upon the metropolis. The promises of the government caused the greater part of this force to disband, and their leader was stabbed in Smithfield while conferring with the king, by Walworth, mayor of London. Assassination under such circumstances was a dangerous experiment, but Richard at this critical moment, with great presence of mind, rode up to the insurgents, and declaring he would redress their grievances, finally persuaded them to disperse to their homes. By similar means the insurrection, which had spread from county to county, was everywhere suppressed in detail; and when all was supposed to be over the concessions were withdrawn, and commissioners being sent to all parts, supported by a large army, 1,500 of the insurgents were executed. The display of spirit by Richard on this, and a few other occasions subsequently, was mere impulse or empty vanity, unsupported by any steadfast resolve or sense of justice; and the remainder of his reign would be wholly comprehended in the history of his fall, and the assumption of power by a man of stronger will and more politic judgment, in the person of his cousin, Henry Bolingbroke, duke of Lancaster. It is the history of favouritism and weakness on the one hand, giving abundant scope to ambition and strength of resolve on the other. Richard, become the prisoner of Henry, was solemnly deposed on the 29th of September, 1399, and was either killed or starved to death in Pontefract castle at the beginning of 1400. The usurpation of the duke of Lancaster, now Henry IV., commenced the civil wars of England between the red and white roses. [E.R.]

RICHARD III., the most execrated of all English princes, was the youngest son of Richard duke of York, and was born at Fotheringay castle in Northamptonshire, 1452. He was created duke of Gloucester in 1461, on the accession of his brother, Edward IV., who claimed the throne as a descendant of Philippa, only daughter of the duke of Clarence, who was the second son of Edward III. In 1472 Richard married Ann, widow of the Lancastrian prince of Wales, and daughter of the great Warwick; the sister of that lady having previously wedded his brother Clarence. The latter prince being his elder brother, stood in the way of Richard's ambition, who fomented the intrigues which proved fatal to him; so that on the death of Edward in 1483, Richard became the natural guardian of his nephews, and was appointed legal protector of the kingdom. The elder of the boys was immediately proclaimed king as Edward V., the other was duke of York. The history of the times is only obscurely known, but the tradition of the murder of these princes in the Tower by order of Richard, is in all human probability substantially true, and a darker deed of treachery is not on record in any language. This event took place about the middle of 1483, and in January, 1484, the succession of Richard was confirmed by a servile parliament, his other rivals, the children of Clarence, having been declared illegitimate by defamation of the usurper's own mother. In about three months afterwards Richard lost his son, the prince of Wales, and within another year the daughter of Warwick followed her child to the tomb. Richard, thus made a widower, proposed to marry the Princess Elizabeth, eldest daughter of his brother Edward, who was destined for the earl of Richmond, the heir of the house of Lancaster. The latter was abroad at the time, but now hastened the preparations for his intended return to deliver England from Richard's tyranny, and in fine, landed at Milford Haven on the 7th of August, 1485. Richard took the field at the head of 15,000 men, and met Richmond at the head of 10,000, with the assurance, however, of aid from Lord Stanley, who commanded another body of 7,000. The encounter took place at Bosworth field, near Leic the 21st of August, and Stanley keeping mise at the critical moment, secured th to Richmond. Richard III. was as bra was cruel and politic. As the action gre rate he fought with the courage of a l making a last determined rush at his opp fell under the number of assailants th around him. Richmond then became ki the title of Henry VII., and having marri beth, united thereby the houses of York caster, and thus terminated the civil war short a time, passed in expectation of struggle, Richard can hardly be said reigned, yet he distinguished himself by a mark the statesman. Such acts, how never be admitted to cancel crime; the act is to avoid evil; the first possible ri independence of all wrong.

RICHARD, two dukes of Normandy ARD I., son and successor of William Lon reigned 993-996. RICHARD II., son an sor of the preceding, 996-1027. A duke gundy, reigned 877-921. A count of Ev accompanied William the Bastard in hi tion against England, reigned 1037-10 princes of Capua:—RICHARD I., succ father as count of Aversa 1059, and was with the principality of Capua by the po las II., 1062; died 1078. RICHARD II. 1091, and, being deposed by his subjects established by Roger, duke of Apulia, 1105. Lastly, a count of Rhodez, who a long reign about 1135.

RICHARD, bishop of Chichester, died

RICHARD, archbishop of Armagh, ARMACHANUS, said to have translated into Irish, and a reformer of the friars, d

RICHARD OF BURY, a learned and patron of learning, was born at Edmunds 1287. He commenced his tutor of Prince Edward, afterwards Ed became bishop of Durham in 1333, and and high treasurer of England in 1334;

RICHARD OF CIRENCESTER, a B monk of Westminster, author of works and British history, died 1401 or 1402.

RICHARD OF CORNWALL, an uncro peror of Germany, son of John, king of was born 1209, and first distinguished Palestine. He was crowned king of G Aix-la-Chapelle to the prejudice of Conra and was remarkable for the wisdom of hi tration; died 1272.

RICHARD OF ST. VICTOR, a Scott and Scripture commentator of the 12th

RICHARD, C., a Fr. mathematician,

RICHARD, C. L., a political and ec writer, author of 'Dictionnaire des Scien siastiques,' b. in Lorraine 1711, shot at

RICHARD, CLAUDE LOUIS, an ex tanist, was born in 1754. He died in grandfather was one of Bernard de Jus deners at the Jardin du Roi at Paris, and had the superintendence of Louis XVth Auteuil. Inheriting thus a love for botan sion for the study was carried to the ext parents wished him to study theology, good prospects for him in the church, aties, nor threats, could prevail upon him he line of life chalked out for him, and at last turned him out of doors at the age , with a miserable pittance to support hing daunted by this rigorous treat- young enthusiast made his way to Paris, tudied botany under Bernard de Jussieu, w years afterwards received an appoint- ceed as botanist to Cayenne and the other lonies in America. He remained there ears, and during that time made exten- ions both in botany and zoology. Arriv- nce in 1789, he found the men in power bsorbed in their own struggles for exis- attend to scientific pursuits. He had ortification to find the little money he usly accumulated gone, his health in- himself cruelly neglected. Unfortunately e these disappointments and blighted ered him misanthropical and churlish. himself up from the scientific world, and studied for himself alone. The fine he made, thus became of no avail to his n, and he was exceedingly chary even in ating to any one the results of his re- In 1795 he was appointed professor of the Ecole de Médecine. His lectures llent and well attended; and fortunately of them has been published by one of his m notes taken at the time. This work memoirs which he published in some of ific journals show that he possessed ori- s in botany, and could express them with iseness and accuracy. He had in view tion of producing a new philosophy of the style of Linnæus, as also a new y of the science, but he did not live to n to maturity. [W.B.]

RD G., a French missionary, 1764-1832.

RD J., an ecclesiastical wr., 1639-1719.

RD, J. P., a Fr. preacher, 1743-1820.

RDSON, J., an African traveller, d. 1851.

RDSON, JOHN, a learned Irish prelate, servations on the Old Testament,' d. 1654.

RDSON, JONATHAN, a distinguished ainter and writer on art, about 1665- is son and literary assistant, died 1771.

RDSON, JOSEPH, a poet, died 1803.

RDSON, SAMUEL, the son of a joiner, in Derbyshire in 1689. After passing village school, he was bound to a printer , and, after having been a few years fore- s master, set up in business for himself. red as rapidly as his good conduct and deserved, was appointed printer of the f the House of Commons, and enjoyed happiness in two successive marriages. ways fond of reading, was a voluminous ter, especially to ladies, and furnished to the booksellers. But his authorship farther than this, till he had completed year. He then agreed, on the request ublishers, to compose a series of familiar uctive letters; and, when he had worked months at his task, what he produced novel of 'Pamela, or Virtue Rewarded.' blished in 1740. It was the first novel ic life which had broke in on the unna- ances, (for Defoe had barred himself from polite patronage by his unlucky choice of subjects); and it had therefore novelty, besides its great merit in natural and minute description, to recommend it to the extraordinary popularity which it immediately attained. In 1749 it was followed by 'The History of Clarissa Harlowe,' a novel whose pathos is so profound as to be positively painful. In 'The History of Sir Charles Grandison,' published in 1753, the author aspired somewhat above the sphere of manners which he was best qualified to describe; but, in spite of this, and of the wearisome prolixity which reigns here yet more than in his other novels, this is really a fine picture of the ideal gentleman. It is to the immortal honour of Richardson that he, the earliest of our modern novelists, (unless Defoe should be ranked among them,) produced works untainted by the immorality which disgraced Fielding and his other successors. He passed his old age in comfort and fame, being only a good deal spoiled by the homage of his admirers, particularly the ladies who flocked about him. He died in 1761. [W.S.]

RICHARDSON, W., son of a Scottish minister, known as a miscellaneous writer and poet, d. 1814.

RICHARDSON, W., a learned antiquarian and minister of the Church of England, 1698-1775.

RICHE, CLAUDE ANTHONY GASPARD, a Fr. physician, distinguished as a naturalist, 1762-1797.

RICHELET, CÆSAR PETER, a Fr. writer, au. of several Dictionaries and translations, 1631-1691.

RICHELIEU, ARMAND JEAN DU PLESSIS, Cardinal, was born at Paris on the 5th of September, 1585. The family name was Plessis, but many members of it became distinguished in connection with the territorial title of Richelieu. Armand was a younger son, and was consecrated bishop of Luçon in 1607. It was a period when the possession of the great ecclesiastical dignities was not supposed in France to turn the habits of a young man of noble family from the usual licentious pursuits of his rank, but Richelieu was fonder of power than of pleasure, and he soon acquired it by ably and rigidly performing the functions of his high office. His court success is said to have commenced with a harangue which it fell to him to deliver to the young monarch, Louis XIII., and which secured the attention and approval of the queen mother, Mary of Medicis. He received his cardinal's hat in 1622, and two years afterwards became chief minister of the crown. His ministry was remarkable for the development of great systems, and the chief of them was the breaking down the territorial power of the nobility, and confirming the influence of the crown, which had long before brought the commons under subjection to a perfect despotism. His career was distinguished at once by daring and success. All who resisted him, including the highest princes of the blood, were remorselessly executed as common criminals, and thinking it necessary to his purpose, he drove his old patroness the queen dowager into exile. He broke the power of the Calvinists by besieging and taking their stronghold Rochelle. But his antipathy to them seems to have originated less in religious intolerance than in a desire to uproot those singular secular privileges which made them supreme even over the royal prerogative in the districts assigned to them. In counteracting the power of Austria, which was the second main principle of his ministry, he used for his purpose the Calvinists of the north, and the Mahommedans of the south, with thorough impartiality. He combined with his courage and great talent many ludicrous weaknesses. He died on the 4th of December, 1642. [J.H.B.]

RICHELIEU, ALPHONSO LOUIS DU PLESSIS DE, eldest brother of the statesman, known as the cardinal of Lyons, and distinguished for his charities; 1582-1653. L. F. ARMAND, his grand-nephew, a marshal of France, and member of the Academy, was born at Paris in 1696; at the age of fourteen he was married and commenced life at court, died 1788. ARMAND EMMANUEL, grandson of the latter, was born in 1766, and at the period of the emigration, 1789, took service under Suwarrow. In 1815 he returned to France, and became foreign minister. Died 1822.

RICHER, ADRIAN, a distinguished French historian, 1720-1798. His brother, FRANCIS, a jurisconsult and writer on mythology, &c., 1718-1790.

RICHER, E., a learned French divine, author of a work on ecclesiastical and political power, which gave rise to much controversy, 1560-1631.

RICHER, E., an elegant and learned French writer, author of 'La Nouvelle Jerusalem,' d. 1835.

RICHER, H., a dramatic writer, 1685-1748.

RICHER, J., a French astronomer, died 1696.

RICHERAND, BARNO, a celebrated French surgeon and writer on physiology, died 1840.

RICHMAN, G. W., a native of Livonia, prof. of natural philosophy at Petersburg, 1711-1753.

RICHMOND, CHARLES LENNOX, duke of, secretary of state and grand master of artillery, 1735-1806. His nephew, and heir of the same name, governor of Plymouth, lord-lieutenant of Sussex and governor of Canada, 1764-1812.

RICHMOND, LEGH, a minister of the Church of England, editor of a 'Selection from the Fathers of the Church,' and author of 'Annals of the Poor,' 1772-1827.

RICHTER, A. G., a Ger. surgeon, 1742-1812.

RICHTER, JEAN PAUL FRIEDRICH, was born in 1763, in the principality of Baireuth, in Franconia. His father, a Lutheran village pastor, was so poor that his son's education was carried on with much difficulty; and, dying before Jean Paul reached the university, he left his family in great distress. The youth, bent on attaining scholarship, and intending at first to be a clergyman, struggled on for a while at Leipzig, often wanting bread; and in 1783 he found his way to the press with a work (the 'Grönlandische Prozessen,') which showed him to have already opened his peculiar vein. Another of his strange sketches, 'An Extract from the Devil's Papers,' lay unpublished for several years, during which Jean Paul remained in the depths of penury. In 1793 he opened a school in the little town of Schwarzenbach, in his native province; and then also he attracted public applause for the first time, by the publication of 'The Invisible Lodge.' Thus encouraged, he devoted himself entirely to authorship, poured forth his works with rapidity, and became one of the most celebrated among the German writers of his time. He shifted his residence often till 1803, and then settled at Baireuth for the remainder of his life, which closed in 1825. Jean Paul wrote philosophical treatises, such as his 'Levana, or the Theory of Education,' and the [illegible]troduction to Æsthetics' (Vorschule der Æsthe[illegible]. But his fame rests on a kind of compositions w[illegible] are almost, yet not quite, novels or roma[illegible]. They unite narrative, description, and reflect[illegible] they pass from the wildest flights of grotesque [illegible] original humour to the depths of pathetic [illegible]derness; they contain as much of striking th[illegible] as ever was embodied in any work of fiction, [illegible] as much of poetic imagination as ever was [illegible]pressed in prose. His thinking is unsyste[illegible] but often wonderfully suggestive as well as s[illegible] and his style is entirely his own, and so eccc[illegible] that his books are not less difficult for Ger[illegible] than for foreigners. Among the works whic[illegible] his sixty volumes a few may be named:—' Hes[illegible]perus,' 'Quintus Fixlein,' 'Biographical I[illegible]sions under the Skull of a Giantess,' 'Flower, F[illegible] and Thorn-Pieces,' 'The Journey of the Regi[illegible] Chaplain Schmelzle,' 'Titan,' 'The Life of F[illegible] 'The Comet, or Nicolaus Markgraf.' [illegible]

RICHTER, OTTO FREDERICK VON, a Russian traveller and Oriental scholar, 1792-181[illegible].

RICIMER, a Roman patrician and gener[illegible], of Swedish origin, regarded as the ablest comm[illegible]der of the age. From the period of his first great [illegible]ccess against the enemies of Rome in 456, [illegible] posed and created the emperors at his will[illegible] In 472 he stormed Rome, and gave it up to th[illegible] lage and cruelty of his soldiers. He d. soon [illegible]

RICIUS, P., a learned German, 16th cent[illegible].

RICKMAN, JOHN a distinguished statis[illegible], many years assistant clerk in the House of [illegible]mons, 1771-1841.

RIDER, JOHN, an Irish prelate, 1562-16[illegible].

RIDER, WILLIAM, master of St. Paul's s[illegible], author of a 'History of England,' &c., died [illegible]

RIDGLEY, T., a nonconf. divine, 1667-1[illegible].

RIDINGER, J. E., a Germ. painter, 1695-[illegible].

RIDLEY, GLOSTER, an English divin[illegible] and theologian, best known as a dramatic write[illegible] and poet, 1702-1774. His son, JAMES, a chapl[illegible] in the army, author of 'Tales of the Genii,' d. [illegible]

RIDLEY, NICHOLAS, a martyr of the [illegible] Church during the Marian persecution, was [illegible] in Northumberland, and educated at Newcast[illegible] Tyne, at the commencement of the sixteent[illegible] tury. He was soon known for his high a[illegible] ments in theological learning, and his pro[illegible] commenced by his appointment as chaplain [illegible] archbishop of Canterbury (Cranmer) in 1537. [illegible] the accession of Edward VI. in 1547, he h[illegible] come a popular preacher of the doctrines [illegible] reformation; in September of that year he [illegible] appointed bishop of Rochester, and in 1549, [illegible] deprivation of Bonner, bishop of London. [illegible] and Cranmer worked heartily together dur[illegible] reign of Edward VI., but with this diff[illegible] that Cranmer was more willing to trim his [illegible] the current winds, and Ridley stood firmer [illegible] individual convictions. It was a long time [illegible] he gave up the doctrine of the corporal pres[illegible] the eucharist, and he never abandoned his p[illegible] ence for episcopalian distinctions, the use of [illegible] ments, and the priestly manner of adminis[illegible] the Lord's supper. Ridley tried in vain to r[illegible] cile Hooker, the bishop elect of Gloucester, t[illegible] retention of these 'rags of superstition,' and [illegible] latter underwent a long imprisonment before ar them. It is to Ridley, in short, uy other prelate, that we are in- English liturgy as it exists at pre- ne acquainted with the history of xth's reign will require to be told iculties it was formed. When the rd was declining in 1553, he in- ce to endow the public charities name; viz., Christ's Hospital, St. St. Thomas's, and Bridewell; and ath joined the party who endea- e the crown on the head of Lady Though he submitted himself to ommitted to the Tower in July, arch, 1554, was conveyed to Ox- ith Latimer and Cranmer, to be

He walked to the place of exe- iscopal robes, a striking proof of hose distinctions, and was burnt n the 16th of October, 1555, in college. He endured the torments h great courage, and as the flames e vital parts so soon in his case, l before him. His works have l by the Parker Society. [E.R.]

t THOMAS, of the same family as inguished as a civilian, died 1629. , an Italian painter, 1570-1644. , a painter and historian, 1602-60. H., a Germ. theologian, 1708-74. J. H., a Germ. diploma., 1740-85. , JOHN ELIAS, a native of Ulm is a painter of animals, 1695-1757. . A. G., a Ger. canonist, d. 1795. UNEZ, RAFAEL DEL, a Spanish ot of the revolution of 1820, born fter the restoration of Ferdinand , 1823. German agriculturist, 1739-1807.

IENZO. COLA, or NICOLA GAB- o, famous in Roman history for his the dictatorship in that capital, able parents about 1310, and was s a friend of Petrarch, and like the guished by his love of the ancient utions of Rome, and by his pro- e of antiquity. He was also a d was in the habit of addressing eir political degradation and the he nobles. His most frequent estruction of the noble monuments e, the conversion of palaces and sses by the rival factions, and the nt of the city by the popes, who vignon. His eloquent appeals bor- n the ruins, in the midst of which people, and it was always easy litical meaning to his harangues y of the times dictated. The favoured a movement which held ct of depressing the factions, and ay, 1347, Rienzo was accompanied t the head of an immense multi- hop of Orvieto, the pope's vicar, pointed the people's tribune with this character Rienzo, surrounded ilitia, re-established the adminis- , sent ambassadors to other states, , as the mediator between them and the pope, by some of the principal sovereigns of Europe. His power lasted no longer than the December of the same year, when a reaction took place, headed by the great families he had de- pressed, and Rienzo, abandoned by the people, sought refuge in Bohemia. In 1352 he was con- veyed a prisoner to Avignon, and would have been executed, but his own eloquence, the intercession of his friend Petrarch, and the death of Clement VI., saved him. Innocent VI., who succeeded Clement, found it politic to restore Rienzo to his dictatorship, but he was now hampered with re- strictions, and with the necessity of raising sup- plies of money for the pope. These circumstances, and the severities he found it necessary to exercise, alienated the city, and a popular tumult being excited, Rienzo was massacred on the 8th of Octo- ber, 1354. The popes continued to reside at Avignon till 1376, a period, in the whole of seventy years, bewailed by Petrarch as a time of barbaric devastation. [E.R.]

RIES, FERDINAND, a celebrated musician, was born at Bonn in Germany, in the year 1784. His father and grandfather were both musicians, the one having been first violinist, and the other leader of the orchestra, at Cologne. The young Ferdi- nand received his musical education from Bernhard Romberg, and from Albrechtsberger. In 1801 he removed to Munich, and afterwards to Vienna, where he became the first acknowledged pupil of Beethoven, and where he laid the foundation of his future fame as a composer. In 1805 he was drawn as a conscript for the French army, but having in early life lost the sight of one eye from small-pox he was dismissed as being disqualified to serve as a soldier. He afterwards visited Russia, where he remained till 1813, when he arrived in England and was admitted a member of the Philharmonic So- ciety, where several of his compositions were per- formed with great applause, and where he was much admired as a piano-forte player. Having acquired a well-merited independence he returned to his native town, when he produced two German operas and an oratorio 'David.' He died at Frank- fort in 1838. [J.M.]

RIETER, H., a Swiss painter, 1751-1818.

RIGAUD, HYACINTH, a celebrated painter, called the Vandyke of France, 1659-1743.

RIGAUD, STEPHEN PETER, professor of astro- nomy at Oxford, born at Richmond, 1775, d. 1839.

RIGAULT, N., a Fr. philologist, 1577-1654.

RIGHINI, V., an Italian composer, 1758-1812.

RIGHTWISE, or RITWYSE, JOHN, a classical scholar, and master of St. Paul's school, d. 1532.

RIGORD, RIGORDUS, RIGOTTUS, or RI- GOTUS, a French ecclesiastic and historian of Philip-Augustus of France, died about 1207.

RIGORD, J. P., a French antiq., 1656-1727.

RILEY, JOHN, an English painter, 1646-1691.

RINALDI, ODESICO, a learned ecclesiastical historian, born at Treviso, 1595, died 1671.

RINCON, A. DE, a Span. painter, 1446-1500.

RING, JOHN, a pupil of the two Hunters, dis- tinguished as a surgical writer, 1751-1821.

RINGELBERGIUS, JOACHIM FORTIUS, Ger- man SHERCK, a disting. Flemish philos., 16th ct.

RINGGLI, G., a Swiss painter, 1575-1635.

RINK, F. T., a German Orientalist, died 1811.

RINNANN, S., a Swiss mineralogist, 1720-92.

RINUCCINI, Ottavio, a Florentine poet, said to be the inventor of the opera, died 1621.

RIOJA, P. De, a Spanish poet, 1590-1658.

RIOLAN, Jean, a French physician of considerable celebrity, born at Paris in 1580, and died there in 1657, aged seventy-seven. He was a vigorous controversialist, and his somewhat numerous treatises were collected into 1 volume folio, in 1650. In conjunction with La Brosse he was the founder of the Royal Botanic Garden at Paris, to establish which he had obtained permission from Mary de Medicis, the mother of Louis XIII. [J.M'C.]

RIPAULT, L. M., a French savant, 1775-1823.

RIPLEY, George, or Gregory, an English alchymist and poet, time of Henry VII., d. 1490.

RIPPERDA, John William, Baron De, a military and political adventurer, who rose to great distinction in the empire of Morocco, born at Groningen, in Flanders, 1680, died at Tetuan 1737.

RIQUET, Peter Paul De, the engineer of the noble canal of Languedoc, to the execution of which he devoted the whole of his fortune, 1604-1680. This canal unites the Mediterranean with the Bay of Biscay, and the works were completed by Riquet's two sons.

RISBECK, G., a Dutch historian, 1750-1786.

RISDON, Tristram, a native of Devonshire, author of a 'Survey' of that county, 1580-1640.

RISLEY, T., a puritan divine, 1630-1716.

RITCHIE, Joseph, one of the victims of African discovery, was employed in an exploring expedition with Captain Lyon, and d. in Fezzan 1819.

RITSON, Isaac, a medical pupil, distinguished as a professional and miscellaneous wr., 1761-89.

RITSON, Joseph, an English lawyer, disting. as a literary antiquarian and editor, 1752-1803.

RITTANGELIUS, or RITHANGEL, John Stephen, professor of Oriental languages at Konigsberg, author of several books founded on his Judaical learning, died about 1652.

RITTENHOUSE, David, a celebrated American astronomer and mathematician, 1732-1796.

RITTER, J. B., a German chemist, 1762-1807.

RITTER, J. W., a Ger. philosopher, 1776-1810.

RITTERSHUYS, Conrad, a native of Brunswick, dist. as a civilian and philologist, 1560-1618. His son, Nicholas, a genealogist, 1597-1670.

RITWYSE. See Rightwise.

RIVARD, D. F., a Fr. mathemat., 1697-1778.

RIVAROL, Anthony, Count De, a French political writer, celebrated for his bons mots and his satirical spirit, b. in Languedoc 1754, d. 1801.

RIVAROLA, A., an Italian painter, 1607-1640.

RIVAULT, D., a French tactician, died 1616.

RIVAUTELLA, Antonio, a native of Piedmont, dist. as an archæologist and bibliop., 1708-53.

RIVAZ, P. J. De, a Fr. chronologist, 1711-72.

RIVE, John Joseph, a French ecclesiastic and writer on literary history, who was remarkable for his turbulence during the revolution, 1730-1792.

RIVET, A., a French Calvinist, 1572-1651.

RIVET DE LA GRANGE, Anthony, a learned Benedictine, author of a 'Literary History of France,' 1683-1740.

RIVIERE, C. F., Duc De, an emigrant noble and officer in the army of Condé, who was governor of the young duc de Bourdeaux; born 1765, condemned to death as a spy of the Bourbons, but saved by Josephine, 1804, died 1828.

RIVIERE, L., a French physician, 1589-1655.

RIVIERE, Mercier De La, a distinguished political economist, author of 'The Order, Natural and Essential, of Political Societies,' born about 1720, died 1793, or 1794.

RIVIERE, P. J. H. La. See Larivierre.

RIVIERE, Roch Lebaillif, Sieur De La, a cel. empirical physician and astrologer, died 1605.

RIVINUS, the Latinized name of Andrew Bachman, a Ger. phys. and philologist, 1600-56.

RIVINUS, Augustus Quirinus, but whose family name was Bachmann, an excellent botanist, was born at Leipzig in 1652. He died in 1723. The son of a learned father, he soon became equally distinguished himself; and filled the chair of physiology and botany at the university of his native town. He was a correspondent of John Ray's, and published a classification of plants about the same time as he did. His system was founded on the flower, on the number, regularity and irregularity, of the petals. He was the first to abandon the division of plants into trees, shrubs, and herbaceous plants, an arrangement which was still clung to by Tournefort and Ray. His controversy with the latter upon this subject, is the chief thing which has made Rivinus known to the botanists of this country; though the value of his works and his great merits as a botanist, entitled him to higher consideration than he has hitherto received at their hands. Plumier has named a genus of plants after him, Rivina. [W.B.]

RIZI, J., a Spanish painter and art-writer, 1595-1675. His brother, Francis, a painter and architect, 1608-1685.

RIZZIO, or RICCIO, David, an Italian musician and linguist, who became private secretary to Mary queen of Scots, and was murdered at Holyrood House by Lord Ruthven, and the other accomplices of Darnley, 1566. It was pretended by enemies of the queen that an improper intimacy existed between her and Rizzio, but all the probabilities are opposed to such a belief. The most recent work which throws any light on this subject is that of Miss Strickland.

ROA, M. De, a Spanish historian, died 1637.

ROBBIA, L. Della, an Ital. sculptor, 1[illegible]8.

ROBERT, earl of Annandale, father of Robert Bruce, who became king of Scotland, was related to the blood royal by his mother, Isabella of Scotland. He was the competitor of Baliol for the crown on the death of Alexander III. in 1286. Died soon after the battle of Falkirk, which was fought 22d July, 1298.

ROBERT I., king of Scotland. See Bruce.

ROBERT II. and III. See Stuart.

ROBERT, surnamed 'The Strong,' [illegible] of the stock of the Capet dynasty, died 866.

ROBERT, king of France, son of the preceding, received the crown at Soissons from the hands of the opposed to Charles the Simple 922, killed 923.

ROBERT, called 'The Devout,' king of France, shared the throne with his father, Hugh Capet, 988, succeeded him as sole king 996, died 1031.

ROBERT, emperor of Constantinople, 1216-1228.

ROBERT, emperor of Germany, 1400-1410.

ROBERT, first of the name, duke of Normandy, called 'Le Magnifique,' and 'Le Diable,' succeeded his brother, Richard III., in 1027, or 1028. Having gone on a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, he poisoned at Nicæa in Bithynia, 1035. His ral son, WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, suc-

d him. ROBERT II., surnamed 'Short ks,' son of the latter, obtained the duchy of nandy after his father's death, 1087, died, the ner of his bro. Henry, at Cardiff castle, 1134.
)BERT, called 'The Old,' duke of Burgundy, son of King Robert, was invested with the y by his brother, Henry I., 1032, and died
. ROBERT II., succeeded his father, Hughes before his death 1272, and was married to s, daughter of St. Louis, died 1305.
)BERT, count of Burgundy, reigned 1303-15.
)BERT, duke of Bar, reigned 1351-1411.
)BERT, count of Evreux, reigned 989-1037.
)BERT, the first of the name, count of Flan-second son of Baldwin V., succeeded his ew, Arnoul, 1072, died in Palestine 1093.
ERT II., son and successor of the preceding,
ly distinguished by his exploits at Jerusalem,
own of which was offered to him; died 1111.
ERT III., reigned 1305-1322.
BERT I., count of Artois, third son of Louis and brother of St. Louis. Having accom-the latter into Egypt, he was killed at the of Mansourah 1250. ROBERT II., a posthuson of the preceding, was distinguished in ond crusade, and was killed in a battle with emings near Coutrai 1302. ROBERT III., on of Robert II., born 1287, was mortally ed in a battle with the French, and died in a 1343.
ERT OF ANJOU, king of Naples, distin-
d in the struggle of the middle ages between elphs and Ghibellines, was the third son of s II., and succeeded that sovereign by a n of the pope in 1309. It is not easy to s the real principles at issue between those
, but, in general terms, the Ghibellines were ends of the ascendancy of imperial govern-and the Guelphs were identified with the te nationalities under the ascendancy of the h of Rome. Hence, the Guelph sovereigns often on the side of the popes, and were s opposed to the emperors of Germany and allies. With the crown of Naples conferred him to the prejudice of his nephew, Carobert, rt of Anjou received the remission of all the
of his father to the papal see, and, besides the lordship of several cities in Piedmont,
the alliance of the Guelph cities of Tuscany:
advantages which he offered in return being ombined resistance of Italy to the pretensions enry VII. The policy of Robert was to teme, and hold his power in reserve rather than ght a battle; and he was known to say that he r gloried in the title of poet and philosopher hich he had some claim) than in that of king.
championship of the church lasted from 1310
3-24, when the Neapolitan and Roman armies beaten, and Raimond of Cordova, who comded them, taken prisoner. Robert, however,
e interval, had acquired Genoa, and defended equisition with some show of military talent nst the Ghibellines of Lombardy, in 1318. In is other projects he was disappointed. Two mpts to conquer Sicily failed, and his only
, Charles, after being defeated in his attempts arry on the war, died in Tuscany 1328. Robert endeavoured to sustain the fortunes of his house, by marrying his daughter, Joan, to Prince Andrew, son of his nephew, Carobert, who had become king of Hungary, with what result may be seen in another article (JOAN OF NAPLES.) He died, esteemed by his own subjects, 1343. [E.R.]

ROBERT OF AUXERRE, a French monk, author of a Chronicle of that place, died 1212.

ROBERT OF GENEVA, an antipope, elected under the name of Clement VII., in opposition to Urban VI., 1378, died 1394. It was this election which commenced the famous schism of the West.

ROBERT OF GLOUCESTER, an old annalist, supposed to have been a monk, reign of Edward IV.

ROBERT OF LINCOLN, bishop of that see, and one of the most learned men of his age, died 1253.

ROBERT OF VAUGONDY, GILES, geographer to Louis XV., 1688-1766. DIDIER, his son and successor, 1723-1786.

ROBERT, F., a French geographer, 1737-1819.

ROBERT, the name of several French painters: —NICHOLAS, famous for his miniature animals and plants, 1610-1684. HUBERT, a painter of architecture and landscape, 1733-1808. LEOPOLD, a pupil of David, dist. for his groups, 1794-1835.

ROBERTI, GIOVANNI BATISTA, Count, an Italian professor and philosopher, author of metaphysical and literary works, 1719-1786.

ROBERTI, J., a learned Jesuit, 1562-1651.

ROBERTIS, DENIS DE, an Italian ecclesiastic, professor of philosophy and theology at Paris, dist. as an orator, poet, and astrologer, died 1342.

ROBERTS, B. C., an antiquar. wr., 1789-1810.

ROBERTS, EMMA, an accomplished lady, known as the friend of Miss Landon, and authoress of 'Historical and Biographical Memoirs of the Rival Houses of York and Lancaster,' 'Oriental Scenes,' &c., died at Poonah, in India, 1840.

ROBERTS, F., a puritan divine, 1609-1675.

ROBERTS, P., a Welch divine, died 1819.

ROBERTSON, JOSEPH, a minister of the Church of England, author of an 'Introduction to the Study of Polite Literature,' an 'Essay on Female Education,' and other works, 1726-1802.

ROBERTSON, S. G., a Fr. æronaut, died 1837.

ROBERTSON, THOMAS, a dignitary in the church in the reigns of Mary and Elizabeth, author of some grammatical tracts in Latin, 16th ct.

ROBERTSON, DR. WILLIAM, was born in 1721, at Borthwick, in Mid-Lothian, where his father was then the parish minister. He went through the usual education for the Church of Scotland, and in his twenty-second year became minister of the rural parish of Gladsmuir, in Haddingtonshire. He speedily displayed, in the ecclesiastical courts, that ability as a debater and orator, which afterwards, assisted by the weight of his literary reputation and his exemplary character, made him the leader of one of the two great parties in the church. In his retired manse he busied himself also with literature, associated with the men of letters who were then gathered in the Scottish capital, and in 1755-6 co-operated with Blair and Adam Smith in their attempt to establish an 'Edinburgh Review.' There, too, he wrote his first historical work, 'The History of Scotland during the Reigns of Mary and of James VI.' It was received with great favour, and appreciated by none more highly than by David Hume, between whom and Robertson there was a cordial good-will, in spite of literary rivalship and serious differences of opinion. Both in this and in his other works, Robertson shows himself an admirable story-teller, writing with remarkable animation, and in a style which, though not possessing Hume's ease, is wonderfully correct; and he was also a conscientious and successful investigator of original authorities. In the year of his first publication he removed to Edinburgh, being appointed to one of the city churches; and in 1762 he became also Principal of the University. About this time he refused a proposal from the government to take orders in England, with a view to his being made a bishop; and in 1764 he was named historiographer-royal for Scotland. His literary industry was not checked, either by his success, or by his multifarious occupations and his close attention to his pastoral duties. In 1769 he published his most masterly work, 'The History of Charles V.:' and two other productions less valuable followed; the 'History of America' in 1777, and 'An Historical Disquisition concerning Ancient India' in 1791. Of his pulpit eloquence, to which a warm tribute is paid by Dr. Erskine, his friendly colleague, though his opponent in the church courts, no specimen has been printed except one sermon. His death took place in 1793. [W.S.]

ROBERTSON, William, an Irish divine, author of 'An Attempt to Explain the words Reason, Substance, Person, Creeds, Orthodoxy, Catholic Church, Subscription, and Index Expurgatorius.' For this publication he was rewarded by the university of Glasgow with the degree of D.D., and was afterwards master of the Wolverhampton grammar school, 1705-1783.

ROBERTSON, W., a grammarian, 1650-1686.

ROBERVAL, Giles Person De, an eminent geometer, professor of mathematics in the College Royal of France, author of numerous memoirs, and party to a controversy with Descartes, 1602-1675.

ROBESPIERRE, François Joseph Maximilien Isidore, the chief actor in the French revolution, was born at Arras in 1759. His father was of English origin, by profession an advocate, and though not rich, as few could be at a provincial bar, he was sufficiently well off to pay for the education of his children. Maximilien, therefore, was sent to Paris, and educated for the same profession, at the college of Louis le Grand, where Camille Desmoulins was his fellow-student. At the outbreak of the revolution he was but thirty years of age, yet he had already acquired a literary and professional celebrity in his native province, and possessed so much of the public confidence that he was sent as a deputy to the estates-general. Like many others in that assembly whose names, in the course of the next five years, filled every mouth in Europe, Robespierre was unknown and unmarked as a man of any likelihood, and was destined to remain so until the popular applause had been exhausted by a Necker, a Lafayette, and a Mirabeau. Of all those assembled, however, he was the only man who went with a predetermined conviction, with a design as complete as his own devotion to it proved to be constant, and with a nature so impassible that his heart would never prevent him from adopting whatever means might recommend themselves to his conscience as necessary. His character was that of a man formed by study, whose sentiments were fashioned as of cold, polished steel, and whose sense of justice, if it came warm from the heart in early youth, had hardened into marble, human in its proportions, incorruptible in its nature, but statue-like in its frigid insensibility. Such was Robespierre as he played his part on the stage of public events, yet this man apparently so insensible, had a brother whom he loved, and who in return almost idolized him; a sister to whom he had given up the little independence he had inherited from his father; and all those cherished memories of a first love, to which the heart in secret clings but the more fondly, as the outward features are moulded into indifference by disappointment. To state the whole truth, the friends of Robespierre, and his political colleagues, exhibited the utmost devotion for his person, and the object of a later attachment, on his part, could never comprehend the maledictions heaped upon his memory; he was so pure, so virtuous, so gentle as she remembered him! These facts may be incomprehensible, but they are such as we find on record, and no public life can be understood if the private character and the circumstances created by it are insufficiently known. Robespierre's sense of justice, and his indifference to the means of accomplishing it, may account for his public influence, but they would leave the devoted friendship of a Lebas, a St. Just, and of a brother well acquainted with his private life inexplicable unless there were some chord in his heart that responded to it. The secret of that devotion must be sought in their knowledge of his character, and their admiration of the perfect command that Robespierre possessed over his sensibilities, and the subjugation of his whole nature to a stern logic, working by mathematical rule, and resolved to extract the symmetrical order of his dreams out of the elements around him, regardless of all human feeling. For a long time this disposition remained unknown, and few could have supposed that his studious manners and his sickly countenance concealed the real hero of the revolution. Such, however, was the fact. Robespierre was deeply read in the history of the Grecian and Roman republics, and much to his admiration for the examples set by the states and heroes of antiquity, may be mentioned Contrat Social of Rousseau. These were the models according to which he had formed his ideal of a state, and whether a Mirabeau declaimed from the tribune, or a Necker and a Roland contrived in the cabinet, he advanced stealthily, but with a certainty, towards his object. During the sittings of the estates-general, he was the observer of those who represented public opinion in that body, but said little himself; but when discussion of the constitution came on, he frequently occupied the tribune, and grew bolder in the expression of his republican sentiments as he saw them acceptable to the people. Trial by jury, enfranchisement of the slaves, the liberty of the press, the abolition of capital punishment, were among the special subjects advocated by him. It was on a question of very different import, however, that he was first recognized as the man of the people. We must here briefly review events. In May, 1789, the states-general had assembled

Versailles. In June, the third estate or commons had virtually rebelled against the crown, and being joined by some of the clergy and nobility, had assumed the title of a national assembly, against which the guards had refused to act. In July the Bastile was destroyed, the national guard enrolled under Lafayette, and the 'Rights of Man' promulgated as the basis of a constitution; the national assembly then changed its title to that of constituent assembly. In the course of the next three months the revolutionary journalism commenced, and the creation of clubs; the first of these was the Breton's Committee, which changed its name successively to French Revolution Club, Club of the Friends of the Constitution, and Jacobin's Club, so called from its meeting in the hall of a Jacobite convent; it was definitively formed on the 6th of October, 1789. Soon after it the Cordeliers, a still more violent body, agitated by Danton and Camille Desmoulins, was formed; and, in May, 1790, the Club of Feuillants, which was intended to rally the constitutionalists against the Jacobins. In one or other of these clubs all the characters who figured in the reign of terror rose to note, and most of the orators in the constituent assembly were in alliance with them. Chief of these was Mirabeau, who died suddenly in March, 1791, and with him expired the hopes of the court ever to come to an understanding with the people. Shortly after, therefore, in the month of June, the king and the royal family attempted to fly, and being arrested at Varennes, were brought back to Paris. This was Robespierre's opportunity. The people had lost their idol in Mirabeau, and were now in a state of the highest excitement and exasperation. The orator addressed the assembly in the dispassionate and well-studied periods customary with him, and demonstrated by arguments drawn from antiquity, and by quotations from the Contrat Social, that the king was responsible to the people as their chief magistrate, intrusted with certain executive functions, but himself forming no part of the national representation. From this moment Robespierre took the place up to which he had steadily advanced from the beginning, as chief of the revolutionary movement, and he now began to hint that the constitution was only a first step in the end to be achieved. Soon after, in September, 1791, that document was completed and formally accepted by the king; and, the day following, the first biennial parliament, or legislative assembly, met for business; this body was composed wholly of new members by the advice of Robespierre, who was crowned with oak leaves, and being placed in a carriage, from which the horses had been detached, was drawn through the streets by the enthusiastic people, who proclaimed him the 'real defender of their rights.' In the June previous Robespierre had been appointed public accuser at the criminal tribunal of Paris, and he retained this function till April, 1792, when he resigned it in order to devote himself to the popular cause in the Jacobin's Club. He studiously preserved himself free from all taint of violence or inconsistency, and yet acquired such influence in this body that he was named one of the new municipality after the insurrection of August, and in this capacity had to bewail the prison massacres; on this occasion he betrayed more sensibility than on any other in the course of his history. The convention met in Sept., and Robespierre, supported by an immense popularity, became one of its members, and entered upon the last eventful stages of his political journey. The first event was an accusation commenced against him by Barbaroux, who accused Robespierre of an attempt to concentrate the public authority under his own hands in the Paris municipality; this, however, ended in words. The fate of the king was then decided on by the majority of all parties. Robespierre said little, but his words were, as usual, cold and decisive; there was no rational doubt that the king must die, though he said it with regret, in order that the republic might live. The temper and policy of Robespierre was that of reason incarnate, and the lives of men, or thousands of men, were admitted into his balance of probabilities, as so many figures in a mathematical problem. The fate of the king and the other members of the royal family hardly required the acceleration given to it by his hand; the real struggle for him, as he felt conscious, was with the two great parties who would resist the dictatorship at which he was determined to arrive; these were the Girondins and the Montagnards, the former including nearly all the respectability, talent, and eloquence of France; and the latter, the atheism and immorality. Robespierre's calculation of means was admirably ingenious, but it was still such as the circumstances dictated. The most scrupulous were to be sacrificed first, by aid of those less so; the effect of which would be to throw all the odium of the terror upon the last and worst class, whom the dictator would then, in the face of the admiring world, vanquish himself; thus Robespierre the Apollo, born of France the Latona in the midst of her terrors, was to vanquish the dreaded sea monster, and institute the new Pythian games. This programme was exactly followed. The struggle with the Girondins was terminated by the proscriptions of the 31st May and 2d of June, 1793; the Dantonists, who stood next on the roster, fell with their chief on the 5th of April, 1794; and there now remained the vile faction of Hebert and Chaumete. Perhaps Robespierre had not calculated on the remains of the vanquished parties forming a coalition with these scoundrels against him; such, however, was the case when he commenced the last struggle, by calling the Jacobin leaders and proconsuls to account for their atrocities. The critical hour was the 27th of July, 1794, called, according to the Republican calendar, the 9th Thermidor. A month previous Robespierre had withdrawn from the Committee of Public Safety, and completely isolated himself from the men he had doomed to destruction; in this interval the committees of death (those of Public Safety and General Surety) had grown more insatiate of blood daily. In a speech of remarkable daring Robespierre apostrophized the men of violence, and, as he well knew, staked his life upon the issue of it in the convention. The conspiracy against him in that body instantly betrayed itself, and he proceeded to the club of Jacobins; their enthusiasm was immense, and they urged him to arrest the two committees, and march upon the convention. This he absolutely refused to do, as an act that would brand him with the name of tyrant, and the next day, repeating his visit to the national representatives, was arrested by that body in the midst of a tumultuous scene; the younger Robespierre, Lebas, St. Just, and Couthon, stood by him nobly, and became his fellow-prisoners. There might now have been a fierce struggle, but Henriot, mad with drunkenness, who should have headed the troops of the municipality, was arrested by the officers of the convention at the very moment when the prisoners were released and conveyed to the Hotel de Ville by Fleuriot, Pagan, and Coffinhal. Robespierre remained passive, and refusing to lend his sanction by word or gesture to any illegal act against the convention, was seized again by the soldiers of Barras, a small party of whom, conducted by Leonard Bourdon, forced their way into the Salle de l'Egalite. Here, it has been repeatedly said, Robespierre attempted to destroy himself, and was found with his jaw shot through; it is now proved, however, that it was the cowardly act of his enemies as they entered the room. He spoke no word and betrayed no emotion after his arrest, though he was subjected to every conceivable indignity and insult. The formalities at the bar of Fouquier Tinville soon gone through, Robespierre and his party were conveyed to the scaffold. His end is thus recorded: 'Before the knife was loosened the executioners pulled off the bandage which enveloped his face, in order to prevent the linen from deadening the blow of the axe. The agony occasioned by this drew from the wretched sufferer a cry of anguish that was heard to the opposite side of the Place de la Revolution; then followed a silence like that of the grave, interrupted, at intervals, by a dull sullen noise; the guillotine fell, and the head of Robespierre rolled into the basket. The crowd held their breath for some seconds, then burst into a loud and unanimous cheering.' It was the second day only after Robespierre had made his last desperate effort for the Republic in the National Convention, July 28th, 1794. [E.R.]

[Hall of the Jacobins.]

ROBESPIERRE, Augustin Bon Joseph, called the Younger, brother of the preceding, was born at Arras 1764, and became a deputy to the convention 1792. He was the devoted friend of his brother, and came forward to share his fate in the convention on the 8th Thermidor: the previous year he had opposed himself with great courage to the sanguinary proceedings of the proconsuls. When his brother was arrested, and Lebas had shot himself dead, Augustin threw himself from a window of the Hotel de Ville, which, however, only broke his leg. He was executed with the elder Robespierre and his colleagues the following day.

ROBESPIERRE, Charlotte, sister of the preceding, took up her abode at Paris when they became members of the convention, and had for her admirer Fouché, who was no favourite of the dictator. She was arrested on the 9th Thermidor, but soon after set at liberty and pensioned. Her 'Memoirs' contain some interesting particulars. Died at Paris 1834.

ROBILANT, Esprit Ben Nicolas De, a Sardinian officer, engineer, and mineralog., 1724-1801.

ROBIN, Jean, a French botanist, keeper of the Garden of Plants, 1550-1597. His account of the king's garden was published 1601. Vespasian, a brother of Jean, was also a botanist.

ROBINET, J. B. R., a Fr. writer, 1735-1820.

ROBINS, Benjamin, an eminent mathematician and engineer of artillery, employed by the East India Company. He wrote several works on gunnery and mathematics, and is said to have written the narrative of Anson's voyage, 1707-51.

ROBINS, J., an astronomer, died 1558.

ROBINSON, Anastasia, daughter of a portrait painter, and pupil of Dr. Crofts in music, distinguished as a vocalist and opera actor. She quitted the stage on account of her marriage to the earl of Peterborough; died 1750.

ROBINSON, Mary, a woman of great beauty, known as an actress and miscellaneous writer, was born at Bristol 1758. She was married when quite a girl to an attorney, and commenced her career on the stage under the patronage of Garrick, at Drury Lane theatre. She attracted the attention of the prince of Wales in the character of Perdita, in the 'Winter's Tale,' and became his mistress for a short time. Her chief means of support in after years was the produce of her pen as a novelist. Died 1800.

ROBINSON, Richard, archbishop of Armagh and Lord of Rokeby, b. in Yorkshire 1709, d. 1794.

ROBINSON, Robert, a nonconformist minister, born at Swaffham in Norfolk 1735, died a convert to Socinianism 1790. He wrote on the question which has again become the subject of public discussion, concerning marriage with a deceased wife's sister, a 'History of Baptism,' &c.

ROBINSON, Thomas, a minister of the Church of England, author of 'Scripture Characters,' &c., born 1749.

ROBINSON, Thomas, rector of Ousley, in Cumberland, au. of works in natural history, died 1719.

ROBISON, John, professor of natural philosophy at Edinburgh, was born at Boghall, in Stirlingshire, 1739, and died in 1805. He is chiefly remarkable as the author of a book which attracted considerable attention at the close of the century, entitled 'Proofs of a Conspiracy against all the Religions and Governments of Europe, carried on in the Secret Meetings of Free Masons, Illuminati, and Reading Societies.' This work ran through four editions in the course of a few months, but it now only creates a smile. It contains some curious particulars, however, bearing on the French revolution. Mr. Robison, when a youth, was attached to the royal navy, and was in the boat with General Wolfe when he landed on the heights of Abraham before the taking of Quebec. He is known as a writer in natural philosophy, and as a contributor to the 'Encyclopædia Britannica.' [E.R.]

ROBORTELLO, FRANCESCO, an Italian philologist, and editor of Greek classics, 1516-1567.

ROB-ROY, or Robert the Red, the popular designation of a Highland freebooter, whose real name was ROBERT MACGREGOR. He was born about 1660, and was a dealer in cattle till the rebellion of 1715, when he joined the army of the Pretender. Having lost his estates in this quarrel, he became an outlaw, and his daring adventures and somewhat chivalrous character, have made him one of the heroes of Scottish romance. He died at an advanced age, probably soon after 1733. He took the name of Campbell in consequence of the Macgregors having been outlawed in the previous century.

ROBSON, G. F., a native of Durham, dist. as a water-colour painter and draughtsman, died 1833.

ROBY, JOHN, a banker of Rochdale, known to literature by his collections of the Traditions of Lancashire, perish. in the 'Orion' steam-boat 1850.

ROCABERTI DI PERELADA, JUAN TOMASO, general of the Dominicans, distinguished as a writer in favour of the papacy, b. in Spain 1624, d. 1699.

ROCCA, A., an Italian ecclesiastic, 1545-1620.

ROCHAMBEAU, JEAN BAPTISTE DONATIEN DE VIMEUR, Count De, a French marshal, commander of the French forces sent in aid of the Americans, author of 'Memoirs,' 1725-1807. His son, DONATIEN MARIE JOSEPH, born 1750, killed at the battle of Leipzig 1813.

ROCHE, E. DE LA, a Fr. mathemat., 16th cent.

ROCHE, J. DE, a French commander, of Swiss descent, famous for his defence of the castle of Villemont against the duc de Rohan in 1621. It is remarkable that his portrait, still in possession of the family, bears a striking resemblance to that of Oliver Cromwell.

ROCHE, J. B. L. DE LA, a doctor of the Sorbonne, au. of a panegyric of St. Genevieve, d. 1780.

ROCHE, P. L. LEFEBVRE DE LA, a French clergyman and learned writer, about 1740-1806.

ROCHE, REGINA MARIA, an English novelist, au. of 'The Children of the Abbey,' &c., 1765-1845.

ROCHE, SOPHIE DE LA, a Ger. novelist, daughter of a physician named Guttermann, 1750-1807.

ROCHE-AYMOR, CHARLES ANTOINE DE LA, cardinal and archbishop of Rheims, 1692-1777.

ROCHECOTTE, F. GUYON, Count De, a royalist general, b. 1769, shot as a conspirator 1798.

ROCHE-FLAVIN, BERNARD DE LA, a French Jesuit and historian of the parliaments, 1552-1627.

ROCHEFORT, W. DE, a Fr. writer, 1731-88.

ROCHEFOUCAULD, F. DE LA, bishop of Senlis, cardinal and Rom. ambassador, 1558-1645.

ROCHEFOUCAULD, FRANCIS, Duc De La, prince of Marsillæ, a famous name in French literature, and in the troubles of the Fronde, 1613-1680. Several others of the name have been distinguished at later periods of French history, and the last duke of this house was massacred at the Abbaye prison, in September 1792.

ROCHEJAQUELEIN, HENRI DE LA, a famous chief of La Vendée, who became generalissimo at the age of twenty-two, and sustained a struggle with the republican troops for ten months with great skill and intrepidity, born 1773, killed at Nouaillé 1794.

ROCHELLE, B. LA, a Fr. actor, 1748-1807.

ROCHESTER, JOHN WILMOT, earl of, a profligate favourite and wit of the court of Charles II., born 1648, died prematurely, worn out with his debaucheries, 1680.

ROCHON, A. M. DE, a Fr. astron., 1741-1817.

ROCHON DE CHABANNES, MARC ANTONY JAMES, a French dramatic writer, 1730-1800.

ROCKINGHAM, CHARLES WATSON WENTWORTH, second marquis of, leader of a section of the Whig party, and prime minister, was born in 1730, and succeeded to the estates and dignities of his father in 1750. On the accession of George III. party feeling ran high, and was greatly aggravated by the intrigues of the sovereign with his favourite, Lord Bute. These circumstances rendered it difficult to keep a ministry together, and recourse was frequently had to politicians of very middling qualifications. Such was Lord Rockingham, a man of unostentatious integrity and sound constitutional feeling, but on the other hand, neither a great orator, nor a statesman of very brilliant parts. He became minister in July, 1765, when the Grenville ministry was turned out, during the debates on the regency bill, which had become necessary in consequence of the mental afflictions of the king. The first measure of the marquis of Rockingham was the repeal of the American stamp act, which had received the royal assent in the March previous, but he reserved to parliament the right of taxing the colonies, and proceeded quietly with some constitutional reforms, such as the prohibition of general warrants. He also encouraged trade, in the way of protection from competition, then, and till lately, the political fashion. The weakness of this ministry yielded place to that of Pitt, afterwards earl of Chatham, in June, 1766, and when the latter was succeeded by the administration of Lord North, the marquis of Rockingham went into opposition with the Whig chief. He became minister again after the fall of Lord North in March, 1782, but retired from office and from the world on the succeeding 1st of July. In this latter period Lord Rockingham appears to have been willing to sanction some measure of parliamentary reform, but it would be difficult to believe he was equal to any great emergency. A jeu d'esprit of the times runs thus:—

'Truth to tell, if one may without shocking 'em,
The nation's asleep, and the minister—Rockingham!'
[E.R.]

ROCOCLES, J. B., a Fr. historian, died 1696.

RODE, CHR. BERNARD, a German painter and engraver, 1725-1797. His brother, J. HENRY, an engraver, 1727-1759.

RODE, P., a French violinist, 1774-1833.

RODELLA, J. B., an Italian writer, 1724-94.

RODERIC, or RODERIQUE, last king of the Visigoths of Spain, killed in battle 711.

RODNEY, GEORGE BRYDGES, Lord, a famous British admiral, was son of a captain in the navy, and was born at Walton-on-Thames 1718. His principal services were the defeat of L'Etendiere's squadron, 1747; the bombardment of Havre, and the destruction of the stores intended for the invasion of England, 1759; the capture of several islands in the West Indies, 1761; the defeat of a Spanish fleet under Langara, near Cape St. Vincent, and of the French near Martinique, 1780; and the victory over De Grasse, the best remembered of his achievements, 1782. For his long continued services to the nation, Rodney was rewarded with a baronetcy, and a pension, in the whole, of £4,000 per annum. Died 1792.

RODOLPH OF HAPSBURGH, first emperor of Germany of this name, was born 1218, and succeeded his father, Albert the Wise, as count of Hapsburgh 1240. In 1273 he was elected king of the Romans. In 1278 he defeated Ottocar, king of Bohemia, which enabled him to confer Austria, Styria, and Carniola on his son, Albert; died 1291. RODOLPH II., born at Vienna 1552, was crowned king of Hungary 1572, king of Bohemia and king of the Romans 1575, and emperor on the death of his father, Maximilian II., 1576. He lost the kingdoms of Hungary and Bohemia by the revolt of his brother, Mathias, and died 1612.

RODOLPH I., king of Burgundy, shared the throne with his father, Conrad II., count of Anxerre 886, took the title of king 888, died 912. RODOLPH II., his son and successor, made himself king of Italy 922, and, on renouncing this enterprise, founded the kingdom of Arles and Burgundy 933; died 937. RODOLPH III., called the Devout, and the Do-nothing, grandson of the preceding, born 993, succeeded his father, Conrad, 994, died 1032.

RODOLPH, three dukes of Saxony:—RODOLPH I., son and successor of Albert II., reigned 1298-1356. RODOLPH II., son and suc. of Rodolph I., 1356-1370. RODOLPH III., nephew of the latter, succeeded 1388, died a prisoner in Bohemia 1418.

RODOLPH, the first of the name, count palatine, succeeded his father, Louis II., 1294, declared against Albert, duke of Austria, in favour of Adolphus of Nassau 1300, died in England 1319. The second of the name, son of the preceding, succeeded his brother, Adolphus, 1327, concluded a peace with the emperor, Louis of Bavaria, 1329, d. 1353.

RODOLPH, count of Rheinfelden and duke of Suabia, elected king of Germany 1077, killed 1080.

RODON, or DE RODON, DAVID, a French professor of philosophy and reformer, died 1664.

RODRIGUEZ, ALPHONSO, a Jesuit of Valladolid, whose work on Christian Perfection ranks high in mystic divinity, and has been translated into all the European languages, 1526-1616.

RODRIGUEZ, A. J., a theologian, 1705-1781.

RODRIGUEZ, J., a Portug. missy., 1559-1633.

RODRIGUEZ, V., a Sp. architect, 1717-1785.

RODWELL, GEORGE HERBERT, an English composer and writer, died 1851.

ROE, SIR THOMAS, a native of Essex, distinguished as a traveller and diplomatist, was born at Low-Layton about 1580, and was knighted by James I. in 1604, soon after which he was sent by Prince Henry to make discoveries in America. His public life commences in 1614, when he was sent ambassador to the Great Mogul, at whose court he continued till 1618. The remainder of his life was fully occupied with political embassies, and his parliamentary duties as member for Cirencester and for the university of Oxford; died 1644.

ROEBUCK, JOHN, a physician and experimental chemist, born at Sheffield 1718, died, a ruining himself by his projects, 1794.

ROEDERER, COUNT, a French state professor of moral science and politics, 1754-

ROEHL, L. H., a Ger. astronomer, died

ROEL, HERMANN ALEXANDER, a prot German divine and Cartesian philosopher, d

ROELAS, J. DE LAS, a Sp. painter, died

ROELAS, P. DE LAS, a Spanish painter by Titian, and regarded as the rival of 1560-1620.

ROEMER, O., a Danish astronomer, 16

ROENER, J. J., a Swiss botanist, 176

ROEPEL, C., a Dutch painter, 1679-1

ROESEL, A. J., a German painter, 17

ROESTRAETEN, P., a Dutch portrait who distinguished himself in England, 16

ROGER, the name of several Europeans —ROGER I., count of Sicily, is known to from 1058 to his death in 1101. ROGER of the preceding, became king of Sicily 11 died 1154. A cousin of the latter, ROGER of Apulia, succeeded his father, Robert G 1085, died 1111. ROGER I., count of Carc reigned 1130-1150. ROGER II., whose re greatly disturbed by quarrels with Raym count of Toulouse, 1167-1194. ROGER or GOMERY, count of Alençon, nephew of W the Conqueror, succeeded 1070, and, having panied William to England, commanded h vanced guard at the battle of Hastings, created earl of Shrewsbury, died 1094.

ROGER, or RICHARD, OF HEXHAM, a of that abbey, known as an historian, 12th ce

ROGER OF HOVEDEN. See HOVEDEN.

ROGER, A., a Dutch protestant, 17th ce

ROGER, E., a French missionary, 17th ce

ROGER, F., a French author, 1776-1842.

ROGER-MARTIN, a French mathematici physician, mem. of the council of 500, 1741-

ROGERS, B., an English composer, 17th

ROGERS, C., an antiquarian, 1711-1784.

ROGERS, D., a statesman, about 1540-15

ROGERS, G., an episco. clergyman, 1741-

ROGERS, JOHN, the first martyr of the of Queen Mary, was first known as chapl Antwerp, and afterwards as collaborateur of dale and Coverdale in effecting a translation Bible. He preached against popery at St. Cross immediately after the accession of Mar was burnt at Smithfield, February 4, 1555.

ROGERS, JOHN, rector of St. Giles's, Cr gate, and a writer against Hoadley, 1679-17

ROGERS, THOMAS, chaplain to Bancroft, b of London, author of several works, 1568-16

ROGERS, THOMAS, an episcopal clerg author of 'Providence Displayed in the C tion of King William and Queen Mary,' 1690

ROGERS, WOODS, a famous naval comma and circumnavigator of the globe, died 1732.

ROHAN, a noble French family, numbering following eminent churchmen:—ARMAND TON, cardinal and bishop of Strasburg, 1674-1 ARMAND, called the cardinal of Soubise, g nephew of the preceding, and holder of the dignities, 1717-1756. ARMAND JULE, his cardinal and archbishop of Rheims, 1695-17 LOUIS CONSTANTINE, brother of the latter, dinal and bishop of Strasburg, 1697-1779. Le

ED, Prince De Rohan, ambassador to o of Strasburg, cardinal and grand-ance, best known by the affair of the lace, 1734-1803. J. H. MERIADEC, an-Guémenée, elder brother of the inal, born 1726, rendered himself is prodigalities, and by his failure for million sterling in 1783. LOUIS USTUS, Duc De Rohan-Chabot, and
eral in the French army, born 1733,
l at the Abbaye prison 1794. LOUIS
GUSTUS, Duc De Rohan-Chabot,
, and cardinal, a descendant of the s by his mother, 1788-1833. Be-re the names distinguished in the
as follows:—
ENRY, Duc De, and prince of Leon, ost distinguished characters of his
in Brittany 1579, and first acquired the siege of Amiens under Henry the sixteenth year of his age. He f the Calvinist party on the acces-XIII., and acted a principal part in n of 1620, and all the ensuing wars.
t political writer, and has left mere highly valued by historians. Died
, received at the battle of Rheinfeld
wife, MARGARET DE BETHUNE, ully, famous for her heroic defence
ainst the Maréchal de Themines in 0. His sister, ANNE, distinguished e at the siege of Rochelle, and for ing and capacity, 1584-1646. His AMIN DE ROHAN, lord of Soubisse, lvinist leader, and died in England,
taken refuge, 1630. TANCRED, a of Duke Henry, was killed during the Fronde, in the nineteenth year 9.
LOUIS, Prince De, or Chevalier de 1635, executed for conspiracy, 1674.
, J. a Cartesian philos., 1620-1675.
, F. W., a Prussian general, 1719-96.
RT, a French jurisconsult, 16th cent.
., a Dutch painter, 1621-1682.
the supposed nephew of Charlemagne,
o of the romance of chivalry, killed
of Roncevaux 778.
count of Savoy, died 1263.
P. L., a French sculptor, 1746-1816.
DE LA PLATIERE, JEAN MARIE, franche, in the neighbourhood of
was Inspector General of manu-commerce in that city when the ition commenced, and having emr principles, became, in 1790, memyons municipality. In February, ent to Paris as deputy extraordinary, commercial interests of Lyons in the f the Constituent Assembly, and e seven months, accompanied by his wife, who is the subject of the fol-
. This period dates from the conht of the king, just before the death
to the dispersion of the assembly ptance of the new constitution, and Rolands acquainted with the rising Robespierre and the Girondins, who divided into distinct parties. They now returned home to La Platière for a short period, but in December returned to Paris: the office of inspector having been abolished, Roland had to claim a retiring pension; but he was also invited back by the patriots to take a part in the movement, for at this juncture the invasion of the emigrants was impending, and the veto of the king had brought the parliament to a stand-still. The practical philosophy, commercial knowledge, and strict simplicity of Roland, recommended him to men of all parties, and when the patriot ministry was formed in March, 1792, he was made minister of the interior. He kept his position till 13th June, when the royal veto upon the proposal to form a patriot camp around Paris, and upon the decree against the priests, provoked his celebrated letter to the king, written, however, by Madame Roland, and, as a consequence, his almost instant dismissal. This event was followed by the arrival of the Marseillaise in Paris, and the conflict at the Tuileries, on the 10th of August, when Roland was recalled, and Danton became minister of justice. The struggle between the Girondists and the municipality under the guidance of Robespierre filled up the period till the 31st May; the former party were then vanquished, and Roland was among the number who saved their lives by flight. He found an asylum with his friends at Rouen, but deliberately killed himself with his cane-sword on hearing of the execution of his wife, 15th November, 1793. His body was found by the road-side, and a paper in his pocket contained his last words, among which were these:—'Whoever thou art that findest these remains, respect them, as those of a man who consecrated his life to usefulness, and who dies as he has lived, virtuous and honest. . . . . On hearing of my wife's death I would not remain another day upon this earth so stained with crimes.' [E.R.]

ROLAND, MANON JEANNE PHILIPPON, MADAME, wife of the preceding, and herself the spirit of the Girondin party, was the daughter of a Paris engraver, and was born in that city 1754. She was the only child of nine left to the care of her father, who provided her with masters regardless of expense, and gave her a brilliant education; the best ground for which existed in her native talents, her firm spirit, her personal beauty, and her undoubted virtues. Antiquities, heraldry, philosophy, and, among other books, the Bible, made up her earliest studies; her favourite authors, however, were Plutarch, Tacitus, Montaigne, and Rousseau. She became the wife of Roland in 1779, and as her love for him was founded on his antique virtues and his philosophic spirit, she has been called 'The Heloise of the eighteenth century:' he was also twenty years her senior. She became the sharer in all his studies, aided him in editing his works, and during his two ministries acted as his secretary, and entered into all the intrigues of his party without debasing herself by their meanness. She was the angel of the cause she espoused, the soul of honour and the conscience of all who embraced it; while her boldness, her political sagacity, and her sarcastic eloquence were equally dreaded by their adversaries. After the flight of her husband, Madame Roland was arrested by order of the Paris commune, under the dictation of Marat and Robespierre, and consigned to the Abbaye prison, from which, on the 31st of October, she was removed to a more wretched abode in the Conciergerie. When sentenced, at the bar of Fouquier Tinville, she was eager to embrace her fate, and rode to the guillotine clad in white, her glossy black hair hanging down to her girdle. She declared her conviction that her husband would not survive her. On the scaffold, this noblest victim of the cause in which she suffered, apostrophized the statue of liberty, and bowing her head before it exclaimed 'Ah Liberty! what crimes are committed in thy name!' The moment before, she had asked for pen and paper 'to write the strange thoughts that were rising in her,' a request which was refused. She was executed on the 8th of November, 1793. Besides her miscellaneous works, Madame Roland left Memoirs composed during her captivity, and a last affecting composition in the Counsels of a Letter, addressed to her little girl; the former, it is suspected, have been since tampered with. [E.R.]

ROLANDER, DANIEL, a Swedish naturalist and traveller, flourished about 1720-1776.

ROLANDINO, an Ital. chronicler, 1200-1276.

ROLANDO, L., an Ital. anatomist, 1775-1831.

ROLDAN, PETER, a Span. sculptor, 1624-1700. LOUISA, his daughter and assistant, 1654-1704.

ROLLA, A., a French violinist, 1757-1837.

ROLLE, H., an English lawyer, 1589-1656.

ROLLE, M., a Fr. mathematician, 1652-1719.

ROLLI, P. A., an Italian poet, 1687-1767.

ROLLIN, CHARLES, a celebrated popular writer, historian, and Latin poet, b. at Paris 1661, d. 1741.

ROLLO, the leader of an adventurous band of Normans, who conquered the French province named after them in the 9th century, was the son of a Norwegian earl, named Ragnvald, whose father, again, was one of the petty chiefs or kings of Drontheim. This is the highest point to which his ancestry can be traced, notwithstanding the mistaken zeal of genealogists in honour of the English sovereigns descended from William the Conqueror. The circumstances which produced the expedition of Rollo, were briefly these. Harold Harfagra having, from 870 to 880, made himself master of all Norway, which had previously been divided into several petty states, caused many Norwegian chieftains to emigrate, who sought fresh homes in Iceland, the Orkneys, and the isles of Faro and Shetland, and infested the northern seas with their piratical excursions. One such was this Rolf, or Rollo, who, prohibited from ever returning to Norway by Harold, retired to the Hebrides, where many of the Norwegian nobility had taken refuge. His first attempts at the head of these adventurers were against England, but the order established by Alfred rendered his efforts fruitless. He then tried the security of the coast of France, and venturing up the Seine took Rouen, at that time called Neustria, from whence he proceeded to the siege of Paris. Charles the Simple, king of the Franks, was glad to purchase a peace by ceding the territory already conquered by Rollo, and which is supposed to have comprised that part of the ancient Neustria which corresponds to the department of the Seine Inférieure, and a portion of the department of the Eure. He also gave him his daughter, Giselle, in marriage. The bargain was concluded at St. Clair in the year 912, a Rollo, or Raoul I., as he was a was baptized by the archbishop cathedral of that city. He is s bited all the virtues of a reli liberal prince; he was also intre
and of such a noble stature tha carry him. Rollo died in 917, other accounts, in 932, and was son, William, surnamed Long-Sw

ROLLOCK, R., a Scottish divi

ROLT, RICHARD, supposed t
at Shrewsbury 1724 or 1725, a mi and historian, time of Johnson, d

ROMAGNOSI, GIAN DOME
political economist, b. at Piacenz

ROMAINE, WILLIAM, born
the county of Durham, 1714; di
religious writer and divine of Calv
After several curacies he was suc
to the Lord Mayor, 1741; lectur parishes of St. George's, Botolp Botolph's, Billingsgate, 1748; Dunstan's-in-the-West, 1749; a preacher at St. George's, Hanov and rector of St. Anne's, Bl About 1752, he was also appoi astronomy in Gresham College, b resigned in consequence of his trines of Hutchinson. His pri
'Discourses upon the Law and G
of Faith,' 'The Walk of Faith,' Faith,' 'Doctrine of the Sacr enlarged edition of Calasio's Heb and Lexicon. He acquired co larity by writing against the nat Jews, a measure then under disc ment. Died 1795.

ROMAN, JOHN HELMICH, a S
time of Ulrica Eleonora, 1694-17

ROMAN, J. J. T., a French w

ROMANA, DON PETER CARA
quis De La, a Spanish general, 17

ROMANELLI, ABBE D., a topographer of Naples, 1756-181

ROMANELLI, GIOVAN FRAN
painter, 1617-1662. His son, U

ROMANINE, G., an Italian p an imitator of Titian, 16th centur

ROMANO, EZZELINO, or Ez
Italian warrior, distinguished in t under Conrad III. 1147, died soo son, of the same name, succeede lordship, and became a distingu chief, died after 1235. The son of the same name, born 1194, wa
father, in 1215, with the princip
and greatly increased his power.
tyranny that Alexander IV., in a crusade against him, and he September 16, 1259. His brothe ruled at Treviso, was hunted d
together with all his family, by t

ROMANO, GIULIO, the name
Pippi, or rather Dé Giannuzzi, is c was born at Rome in 1499, and e himself as one of the ablest and f Raphael. He completed with Penn
the frescoes of the Stanza di C

Vatican after the death of Raphael, in 1523, and in the following year entered the service of the duke Federigo Gonzaga at Mantua, where he succeeded in establishing a considerable school; the celebrated Primaticcio who carried the Italian principles of painting into France was one of his pupils. Giulio died at Mantua, November 1, 1546, aged only forty-seven, leaving extensive works in fresco and many admirable oil paintings to justify his fame as the principal of all Raphael's scholars. He was also a distinguished architect, and may be considered perhaps the ablest of the Italian ornamental decorators. His principal frescoes are 'The Fall of the Giants,' and the 'Story of Cupid and Psyche,' in the Palazzo del Té at Mantua. A specimen of his fresco painting has been recently presented to the National Gallery by Lord Overstone; as regards oil painting, he is supposed to have had a great share in at least the under painting of the principal of the later pictures of that class by Raphael.—(Vasari, vite de Pittori, &c., Ed. Flor., 1846, seqq.; Gaye, Carteggio Inedito d' Artisti.) [R.N.W.]

ROMANOFF. See MICHÆL.

ROMANUS, a pope of Rome, 897-898.

ROMANUS I., emperor of the East, surnamed Lecapenus, was an Armenian soldier, who became the associate of Constantine X., in 919; he was dethroned by his sons, Stephen and Constantine, in 945, and died in a monastery, 948. ROMANUS II., called The Younger, succeeded his father, son of Constantine X., 959, and died of intemperance, 963. ROMANUS III., called Argyrus, became emperor by marrying the princess Zoe, 1028; he was murdered by his wife and her paramour, Michael, (Michael IV.), 1034. ROMANUS IV., surnamed Diogenes, was a condemned conspirator, who was married by Eudoxia, the widow of Constantine Ducas, and associated with her on the throne, 1068. Died, after being deposed and mutilated by Michael (Michael VII.), 1171.

ROMANZOFF, PETER ALEXANDROVITCH, Count, a Russian general, born about 1730, succeeded Prince Galitzin as commander-in-chief against the Turks, 1770. He obtained many advantages, and concluded the treaty of Kainardji, 1774. Named general of the second army directed against the Turks, he threw up his command in 1789, in consequence of his disgust with Potemkin. Died 1796. His son and successor in the title, NICHOLAS, distinguished as a diplomatist, and for the devotion of his wealth to patriotic and benevolent objects, flourished 1753-1826. MICHAEL PAUL, brother and heir of the latter, died 1838.

ROMBERG, A., a German violinist, 1767-1821.

ROMBOUTS, T., a Flemish painter, 17th cent.

ROME DE L'ISLE, JEAN BAPTISTE LOUIS, a French physician and mineralogist, 1736-1790.

ROMILLY, JOHN, a watchmaker, born at Geneva 1714, who wrote on horological subjects in the Encyclopédie, and in 1777 established the 'Journal de Paris,' died 1796. His son, JOHN EDME, a Calvinist minister, and writer in the Encyclopédie, 1739-1770.

ROMILLY, SIR SAMUEL, was born in London on 1st March, 1757. His father traded as a retail jeweller, but was descended from a French refugee family of consideration, and Romilly when subsequently taunted in parliament about the obscurity of his origin, could smile at the allusion as peculiarly inapplicable to him, were it even of importance. His education was versatile and undecided, and it was long ere it took its final professional direction, for it was first intended that he should follow his father's trade, and when this view was abandoned he was articled to an attorney. He was called to the bar in 1783. By that time he had deeply studied his profession. He was at the same time master of a vast quantity of miscellaneous knowledge which, however vaguely and irregularly acquired, was subject to the mellowing influence of his own inquiring and deeply reflective mind. From early youth he was grave, earnest, and sensitive. He perhaps never in any of his sayings or writings approached nearer to wit or fancy than an occasional dry causticity bred of contempt, as when speaking of some complaints that a bill proposed by a very formal lawyer was not drawn like an act of parliament, he said that the writer had certainly defects of style, but that of being unlike an act of parliament was not one of them. He early and almost insensibly obtained a great share of chancery practice. Ever favourable to the progress of constitutional freedom, he naturally took a deep interest in the great questions arising in the land of his fathers. Coming in contact with Mirabeau and other celebrated men of the revolution, they in their turn brought him in alliance with Lord Lansdowne and the heads of the British Whig party. He declined a seat in parliament until he was made solicitor-general by the Whig ministry of 1806. The dissolution of that ministry in a few months concluded his tenure of office, but he cut out a career to himself by remaining in parliament as a law reformer. The main objects for which he fought were the removal of irregularities in the bankruptcy law, the subjection of land like other property to the attachment of creditors, and the institution of moderate and certain for sanguinary and uncertain punishments in the penal law He was thus the practical experimenter in parliament of the jurisprudential views of Bentham, and the best testimony to their soundness is that they have now been the accepted law of the land for many years. He had married in 1798 a young lady whom he met at Bowood. His affection for her, originally very strong, deepened with advancing years, and her death in the autumn of 1818, so affected his then weakened nerves, that on the 2d of November he put an end to his own existence. [J.H.B.]

ROMNEY, G., an English painter, 1734-1802.

ROMULUS, the supposed founder and first king of Rome, 8th century B.C.

RONALDS, H., an agriculturalist, 1759-1833.

RONCAGLIA, CONSTANTINE, a learned theologian of the duchy of Lucca, 1677-1737.

RONCALLI, CAVAL. CRISTOFORO, an Italian painter, b. at Pomarance in Volterra, 1552-1626.

RONDANI, F. M., an Italian painter, 15th ct.

RONDELET, F., a Fr. architect, 1743-1829.

RONDELET, W., a Fr. naturalist, 1507-1566.

RONSARD, P. DE, a French poet, 1524-1586.

RONSIN, C. P., a Fr. dramatist, 1752-1794.

ROOKE, SIR GEORGE, a famous British admiral, was born at his father's seat, near Canterbury, 1650, and was first employed as commodore on the accession of William III. in 1689. In 1692

he was vice-admiral of the blue, and greatly distinguished himself at the battle of Cape la Hogue, on which occasion he was knighted, appointed vice-admiral of the red, and received a pension of £1,000 a-year. In 1702 he destroyed the French and Spanish fleets in Vigo Bay, and on the 22d of July, 1704, assisted at the capture of Gibraltar. Died 1709.

ROOKE, LAURENCE, prof. of anatomy at Gresham College, and mem. of the Royal Soc., 1623-62.

ROOKER, M. A., a landsc. painter, 1743-1801.

ROOS, a family of German painters:—JOHN HENRY, a pupil of Adrian de Bie, 1631-1685. THEODORE, his brother, 1638-1698. PHILIP, second son of John Henry, commonly called Rosa da Tivoli, from his long residence there, a great painter of animals and landscapes, 1655-1705. JOHN MELCHIOR, brother of the latter, 1659-1731. JOSEPH, grandson of Philip, a painter and engraver, about 1728-1790.

ROOSE, NICHOLAS, whose proper name was LIEMACKER, a painter of Ghent, 1575-1646.

ROOSE, T. G. A., a Ger. anatomist, 1771-1803.

ROPER, JOHN, professor of philosophy, and one of the most learned theologians of Oxford, d. 1534.

ROPER, WILLIAM, attorney-general in the reign of Henry VIII., and son-in-law of Sir Thomas More. A Life of More, written by him, was published in 1712. His daughter, MARGARET, was a lady of great accomplishments, and translated Eusebius into English.

ROQUE, G. A. DE LA, a learned heraldist and genealogical writer of Normandy, 1597-1686.

ROQUE, JOHN DE LA, a French writer of his voyages and travels in the East, 1661-1745. His brother, ANTHONY, a journalist, 1672-1744.

ROQUES, PETER, a French divine, 1685-1748.

[House of Salvator Rosa.]

ROSA, SALVATOR, was born near Naples, July 21, 1615. In 1635 he visited Rome and met with much success, and finally settled there, where he died, March 15, 1673. His favourite subjects were landscapes, chiefly of wild and romantic scenery, and these works he executed with consummate mastery. Many of his best pictures are in this country.—(Passeri, Vite de' Pittori, &c.—the life of Salvator by Lady Morgan is a romance.) [R.N.W.]

ROSALBA CARRIERA, MADAME, a famous Venetian portrait painter, 1675-1757.

ROSAMOND, commonly called 'Fair Rosamond,' a famous name in our legendary history, was a daughter of Walter Clifford, baron of ford, and mistress of Henry II. One of h by him became archbishop of York. The her history are not well ascertained, but said to have perished, a victim of the jeal Queen Eleanor, about 1173.

ROSAPINA, FRANCESCO, an Ital. engrav for his pictures from the old masters, 1762-

ROSCELLINUS, RUZELIN, or RUC an ecclesiastic and scholastic philosopher u tany, 11th century.

ROSCHID IBN. See AVERROES.

ROSCIUS, QUINTUS, a celebrated Roma and friend of Cicero, to whom he gave les declamation, lived about 129-62 B.C. A Roscius, proscribed by Sylla, and accused ing slain his father, was like the former a c Cicero, but little is known of him.

ROSCOE, WILLIAM, was born in 175 became an attorney in Liverpool. It was little leisure left by active business that he a his fine and tasteful scholarship, and disting himself as one of the most accomplished a gant writers of his time. He wrote pamph the slave trade and in defence of the French lution; and in 1796 his literary celebrity wa lished by his first and best historical work, Life of Lorenzo de Medici.' In 1805 a 'The Life and Pontificate of Leo X.;' an year Roscoe, who had now become a partn Liverpool banking-house, was elected to re the borough in parliament. He produced minor works, both in prose and in verse, and translated, and edited the works of Po 1816 the warm sympathy of his fellow-c was excited towards this excellent and phil pic man, by the failure of his firm. He 1831.

ROSCOE, HENRY, youngest son of the ing, was born in 1800, and called to the 1826. He wrote the Lives of Eminent Lawyers in Lardner's Cyclopædia, a Life father, and edited North's Lives; died 183

ROSCOE, W. S., eldest son of the his author of miscellaneous poems, and a tra of Klopstock's Messiah, left in M.S., 1752-

ROSCOMMON. See DILLON.

ROSE, GEORGE, a statesman and p writer, was the son of an episcopal clergy Brechin, in Angus-shire, where he was 1744. He was brought up by an uncle wh a school in London; and after serving as p the navy, became keeper of the Exchequer through the interest of the earl of Mar While in this office he superintended the tion of the Domesday Book, and compl Journals of the Lords, in 31 vols. folio. the ministry of Mr. Pitt he became presi the board of trade, and, with the exceptio retirement during the Grenville adminis retained this post till his death, in 18 wrote several valuable works on subjects co with the revenue.

ROSE, J. B., a French divine, 1716-18

ROSE, H. J., a minister of the Ch. of dist. for his learning as a theologian, 179

ROSE, SAMUEL, a lawyer, 1767-1804.

ROSE, WILLIAM, a French prelate, an partizan of the catholic league, died 1602.

ROSEL, J. A., a German painter, 1705-1759.
ROSELL, A. G., a Sp. mathematician, 1731-94.
ROSELLI, A., an Ital. jurisconsult, 1380-1466.
ROSELLINI, Ippolito, professor of Oriental languages at Bologna, and a great master of Egyptian antiquities of the school of Champollion, whom he accompanied to Egypt. After the death of the latter, he was intrusted with the publication of the great work resulting from their joint labours, entitled 'Monuments of Egypt and Arabia,' 1800-43.
ROSEN, Frederick Augustus, an eminent Oriental scholar, was born at Hanover, 1805, and became professor of Oriental languages in the university of London. Died prematurely, after he had written or edited several important works, 1837.
ROSEN, Gregory, Baron, a Russian officer, distinguished in the wars of Napoleon, 1789-1832.
ROSEN DE ROSENSTEIN, Nicholas, commonly called Dr. Rosen, a physician and professional writer, 1706-1773.
ROSENHANE, Shering, Baron De, a Swedish senator, diplomatist, and governor of Ostrogothia, 1609-1663. His descendant of the same name and title, secretary of state, and commander of the order of the Polar Star, author of Memoirs, &c., 1754-1812. Gustave, of the same family, a sonneteer, date 1680-1681.
ROSENMULLER, John George, a German critic, and professor of theology, 1736-1815. His son, Ernest Frederick Charles, a distinguished Arabic scholar, 1768-1835. John Christian, another son, professor of anatomy and surgery, and author of professional works, 1771-1820.
ROSIN, or ROSINUS, in German Roszfeld, John, a learned antiquarian, about 1550-1626.
ROSINI, C. M., a Ital. archæologist, 1749-1837.
ROSNY, A. J. N. De, a Fr. novelist, 1771-1814.
ROSS, Alexander, a Scotch poet, 1699-1784.
ROSS, Alexander, a Scottish divine, who became chaplain to Charles I. and master of the free school at Southampton, 1590-1654. Ross was a man of considerable attainments in classical learning and philosophy, and made great pretensions to knowledge of the secrets of antiquity. Butler has alludes to him:—

'There was an ancient sage philosopher,
That hath read Alexander Ross over.'

His 'View of All Religions' is the work by which he is best known.
ROSS, D., an English actor, died 1790.
ROSS, John, a learned prelate, died 1792.
ROSS, or ROUSE, John, canon of Osney, an ancient writer on the civil and ecclesiastical antiquities of Warwickshire, died at Guy's Cliff 1491.
ROSSELLI, Annibal, a friar of Calabria, author of a 'Commentary' upon Pimander, 1578.
ROSSELLI, Como, a Florentine painter, 1416-1484. Piero De Cosimo, a pupil of Como Rosselli, 1441-1484. Matthew, a pupil of Pagani and Passegnano, 1578-1650.
ROSSELLI, Como, a Florentine preacher, and writer on the art of memory, died 1578. Stephen, his relation, an historian, 1598-1664.
ROSSET, F. De, a Provençal poet, born 1570, died after 1630. Joseph, a sculptor, 1706-1786.
ROSSI, the name of several Italians distinguished in art:—Antonio, a painter of the Venetian school, master of Titian, 14th century. Antonio, a Bolognese painter, 1700-1753. Angelo, a Genoese sculptor, 1671-1715. J. Antonio, an architect of Rome, 1616-1695. Mathias, a Roman architect, 1637-1695. Murio, a painter of Naples, taught by Stanzioni and Guido, 1626-1651. Paqualino, a painter of Vicenzo, b. 1641. Properzia, a female sculptor of Bologna, b. 1495.
ROSSI, Adelaide Helen Josephine Charlotte, Countess De, Madame Cellier, a French lady, author of numerous works connected with education, 1778-1822.
ROSSI, B. De, an Italian critic, 16th century.
ROSSI, D. J. B., an Ital. Orientalist, 1742-1831.
ROSSI, Ignatius De, a Heb. scholar, 1740-1824.
ROSSI, Giovanni V., in Latin Janus Nicius Erythræus, a philologist and biographer, 1577-1647.
ROSSI, Girolamo, in Latin Rubens, a physician and historian of Ravenna, 1539-1607.
ROSSI, N., an Italian bibliopole, 1711-1785.
ROSSI, O., an Italian archæologist, 1570-1630.
ROSSI, Pellegrino, Count, a noble victim of the popular cause in Italy, was born at Carrara, in 1787, and being admitted to the profession of an advocate at Bologna, was practising at the bar in that city from 1809 till 1814. In the latter year he was obliged to fly the country, through his complicity with the false movement excited by Murat, who had deluded the patriots of Italy with a prospect of their independence, which it was out of his power to realize. Rossi, after the fall of Murat, escaped to Geneva, and there rose to such professional eminence that we find him, in 1819, professor of law; in 1820, a member of the council; and shortly after, a deputy to the diet, and an active party to the revision of the federal constitution. In 1833 he was induced to take up his residence in Paris, and, being naturalized, was appointed, in 1845, ambassador from the French court to Rome. Two series of circumstances would here require consideration in a more extended notice; the first, strictly biographical, exhibiting the formation of Rossi's political convictions in the atmosphere of the doctrinaires of the French chamber; and, the second, the state to which the abominable government of Gregory XVI. and the several factions of Italy had reduced that unhappy country. The brief facts are, that the Papal court had maintained an unremitting war against every shade of liberal opinion; the administration was wretchedly bad; no equality existed in the eye of the law; there was no statistics; an enormous public debt; education and religious instruction utterly inadequate to the needs of the people, and a censorship of the press as dark as the Inquisition of the middle ages: add to this, the rancorous opposition of the political sects, the constantly increasing persecution to which they were all alike subject, and the general perversion of the moral sense and political conscience resulting from these causes, and we have a faint outline of the state of Italy at the period of Count Rossi's mission. In the following year, 1846, Gregory XVI. died, and Pius IX. succeeded him with a disposition to grapple with the difficulties of the country, supported as he was by the French influence represented by Rossi, and with the countenance of England exhibited in the mission of Lord Minto and the famous letter of Palmerston. A general amnesty, and the progress of administrative reform, were suddenly enlivened by the revolution of Naples and Paris in February, 1848, and the impetus given in Italy drove two distinct political movements to a sudden head; that of Giovine Italia, which had been fostered by Mazzini ever since the revolution of 1831, and that which the writings of Gioberti and Balbo had ripened under the sun of Carlo Alberto in northern Italy. The latter came to issue first. Carlo Alberto, with the chivalrous blood of the house of Savoy in his veins, proclaimed the independence of Italy under one native sovereign at 'Glorious Milan,' and Rossi warned the pope that if he did not grasp this sword, it would be turned against him; the weak old man, however, proffered his services to Austria and Charles Albert as a mediator for peace, and the latter was the sacrifice. This hope being disappointed, the next effort of Rossi, who had been deprived of his employments by the French republic and become prime minister in Rome, was to form a league of the separate constitutional states, with deputies from each sitting in parliament; and as this scheme acquired form and stability it became more and more distasteful to the republican party of Mazzini, by which, also, the efforts of Carlo Alberto had been paralyzed. All through these transactions there had been great tumults and some bloodshed apart from that of the war in Sardinia, and the demand which Mazzini and Giovine Italia opposed to the plan of Rossi, was that for a national convention. In fine the deputies were appointed to meet on the 15th of November, 1848, and Rossi himself represented Bologna. Precautions had been taken against an outbreak, and the carriages of the deputies went through masses of people into the court yard of the Vatican. As that of Rossi stopped at the portico, there was a cry for help, close at hand, and in the confusion created by it, the bystanders closed round the statesman, there was a momentary scuffle, and the quick flash of a dagger was seen; for a while it was hardly known what had occurred, but it was only the corpse of Rossi that the doors were closed upon.—The flight of the pope, and the establishment of the Roman republic, afterwards put down by French bayonets, which are still held at her throat, are matters of history, and too recent, perhaps, to be righteously judged. There is a serious question also, whether Rome, considering the geography of Italy and the requirements of commerce, can ever be the seat of government for a united Italy; whether the dominion, whatever its form, of that beautiful but hapless country must not occupy two seats—Milan perhaps in the north, and Naples in the south. [E.R.]

ROSSI, Piero De, a celebrated general of the 14th cent., chief of the Guelphs in Parma, d. 1357.

ROSSI, Quirico, an Italian poet, 1696-1760.

ROSSIGNOL, J. A., a republican general, commander in La Vendée, 1759-1802.

ROSSIGNOLI, Bernardino, an Italian Jesuit, who first produced the MS. of the 'Imitation,' bearing the name of J. Gersen, died 1613.

ROSSLYN, Alexander Wedderburne, earl of, a Scottish lawyer and statesman, was born 1733, and first distinguished himself in parliament in opposition to the Grenville administration. He was successively solicitor-general 1771, attorney-general 1778, and chief justice of the Common Pleas, with the title of Lord Loughborough, 1780. From 1793 to 1801 he served with Pitt as chancellor, and then retired with the title of earl of Rosslyn. Died 1805.

ROSSLYN, James St. Clair Erskine, earl of, nephew of the preceding, and heir of his peerage, was a distinguished peninsular officer, and one of the most intimate friends of the duke of Wellington. Before succeeding to the peerage in 1805, he was many years in the House of Commons. In 1829 he became a member of privy council, and was its president under Sir Robert Peel in 1834. Died 1837.

ROSSO, Del, called by the French Maître Roux, a distinguished Florentine painter, died 1541.

ROSSO, J. Del, an Ital. architect, 1760-1831.

ROSTAN, C., a French botanist, 1774-1833.

ROSTGAARD, Frederick De, archivist to the k. of Denmark, and a great scholar, 1671-1745.

ROSTOPCHIN, Feodor, Count, a Russian statesman and general, commander at Moscow at the period of the French invasion 1812, 1763-1826.

ROSWEIDE, Heribert, a learned and voluminous wr. in ecclesiastical antiquities, 1569-1629.

ROTA, B., a Neapolitan poet, 1509-1575.

ROTA, J. B., an Italian historian, died 1786.

ROTA, M., an Italian designer, 16th century.

ROTA, M. A., a Venetian physician, 1589-1662.

ROTA, V., an Italian dramatist, 1703-1785.

ROTARI, Piero, Count, painter to the court of St. Petersburg, born at Verona 1707, died 1764.

ROTGANS, L., a Dutch poet, 1645-1710.

ROTHARIS, king of the Lombards, 636-652.

ROTHELIN, C. D'Orleans De, a Fr. [illegible] and man of letters, m. of the Academy, 1691-17[illegible]

ROTHENBOURG, Fr. Rodolph, Count Vo[illegible] a Prussian general and diplomatist, 1710-1751.

ROTHENHAMER, or ROTTENHAMER, a painter of Munich, style of Tintoret, 1564-16[illegible]

ROTHERAM, John, rector of Houghton Spring, author of an 'Apology for the Athan[illegible] Creed,' and of a much valued treatise on the 'D[illegible] trine of Justification by Faith,' died 1788.

ROTHERAM, John, an English phy[illegible] and writer on 'The Properties of Water,' d. 1787.

ROTHSCHILD, Mayer Anselm, founder of the house by which the financial operations of Europe have been controlled since the commencement of the present century, was a native of Frankfort. He was educated for the priesthood, but preferring the profession of a banker, acquired great credit and wealth at the period of Napoleon's occupation in Germany. Died 1812.

ROTHSCHILD, Nathan Mayer, [illegible] of the preceding, and agent for his father in London, came to this country in 1800, and by the extent of his loan operations acquired immense influence as a contractor in that branch of public credit. He died in 1836, and was succeeded by his eldest son, the present Baron Rothschild.

ROTROU, J. De, a Fr. dramatist, 1609-[illegible]

ROTTENHAMER. See Rothenhamer.

ROTTECT, Charles Von, a native of [illegible] successively professor of history, and professor of politics and jurisprudence, in the university of his native city, author of numerous works which [illegible] distinguished his name throughout Europe, 1775-[illegible]

ROUBANE, B. G., a Russian author, 17[illegible]

ROUBAUD, Peter Joseph Andrew, French economist and grammarian, 1730-1792.

ROUBILIAC, L. F., a French sculptor, known by several of his works in this country, 1725-1762.

ROUBIN, GILES DE, a French poet, died 1712.

ROUCHER, J. A., a French poet, 1745-1794.

ROUELLE, WM. FRANCIS, professor of chemistry to the Garden of Plants at Paris, 1703-1770. His brother, H. MARIANUS, a chemist, 1718-79.

ROUGEMONT, F., a native of Maestricht, kn. as a Chinese missionary and scholar, 1624-1676.

ROUGET DE LISLE, JOSEPH, the writer and composer of the Marseillaise, was a French officer of artillery, born at Lons-le-Saunier, among the Jura mountains, 1760. In the winter of 1791-1792 he was in garrison at Strasburg, and is said to have passed most of his leisure at the house of the mayor of that city, where his skill on the clavicord and his social qualities made him a welcome visitor. It was here the Republican Hymn was first composed and sung, at that particular juncture when the king's veto had stultified every act of the first constitutional parliament, and the country was threatened with the invasion of the emigrants and their German allies. The resemblance between this marching song and Burns's 'Scots wha hae wi' Wallace bled,' is most striking, and it would be difficult to believe that the one had not suggested the other if Lamartine had not given a somewhat romantic account of the manner of its composition, which precludes the idea. The song was just become known when the departments were preparing to obey the call of Paris for a body of 20,000 patriot troops, and the band from Marseilles were the first to chant its threatening measure as they traversed France; it afterwards made the round of Europe, and the footfall of Napoleon's troops as they scaled the Alps kept time to its wild notes. Rouget de Lisle's kind host was accompanied to the scaffold by this song, and the composer himself only escaped by the fall of Robespierre. He found no favour with succeeding governments, but carried his republican principles into private life and pursued the career of a lyrical composer and author. Died 1836. [E.R.]

ROUGNON, N. F., a Fr. physician, 1727-1790.

ROUILLE, P. J., a French Jesuit, 1681-1740.

ROUS, or ROUSE, FRANCIS, a native of Cornwall, distinguished for his zeal as a republican and member of Cromwell's privy council, 1579-1659.

ROUSE, or ROSS, JOHN. See Ross.

ROUSSEAU, J., a French painter, 1630-1693.

ROUSSEAU, JEAN BAPTISTE, a dramatic author, and the most eminent of the lyric poets, born at Paris of humble parentage 1670, died 1741.

ROUSSEAU, JEAN FRANCOIS XAVIER, of the same family as the celebrated philosopher (following article), a man of letters, and consul in Persia, 1738-1808. His son, J. B. L. XAVIER, consul at Aleppo, Bagdad, and Tripoli, 1781-1831.

ROUSSEAU, JEAN JACQUES, son of a watchmaker at Geneva, was born there on the 28th of June, 1712.—The first half of the extraordinary life of this extraordinary man, occupying thirty-three years, was spent in a succession of adventures, making the most painfully interesting part of the record he has himself bequeathed to us, a record exhibiting a hardy daring of self-inquisition, which (as he justly says) no other man ever ventured to communicate to the world. The history of this period in Rousseau's career was not only quite unproductive of literary promise, but would have appeared to forebode little or nothing either of moral worth or of intellectual achievement in any path. —After learning something in a village school, he began life as the apprentice of an engraver; and, on being harshly treated, he became addicted to idleness, lying, and stealing. At length he ran away into Savoy, and, giving hopes of his conversion to catholicism, was received into an ecclesiastical school at Turin, where he read his recantation, but refused to prosecute his education for the priesthood. Being dismissed, he became a domestic servant: in one of his places he committed a theft, and charged a waiting-maid with it; from another he was dismissed for insolent insubordination. Now, when he was in his eighteenth year, he was received by Madame De Warens, a Swiss lady, residing at Annecy, and afterwards at Chambéry. His patroness sheltered him in her house for ten years, pardoned him for two elopements, induced him to study French writers, and supported him even when he disdained to retain employments which she more than once procured for him. The shameful issue is too well known. In 1741 he walked to Paris, having in his pocket fifteen louis, and a new scheme of musical notation, which was at once condemned by the musicians. He found his way, it is not clear how, into the society of men of science and letters, such as Marivaux, Fontenelle, and Diderot; and in 1743 friends obtained a place for him as a kind of secretary or clerk to the French ambassador at Venice. There he spent nearly two years, with no apparent improvement of morality, and with as little evidence of devotion to any pursuit either profitable or honourable. His dismissal by his master, and his return to France, closed his long period of aimless wandering.—Rousseau came to Paris in 1745. Hiring a room in an obscure lodging-house, the strange man conceived a liking for the servant-maid, Thérèse Levasseur, a vulgar, unattractive, and dull young woman of twenty-four. He took her to live with him as his mistress, and married her twenty years afterwards; the attachment of the fantastic dreamer to her was only strengthened by time; and Thérèse and her mother not only preyed on his narrow means, but aggravated his suspicious temper, and were continual mischief-makers between his friends and him. Five children born to the pair were coolly deposited in the Foundling Hospital; and their father appeared to receive with profound indifference the failure of an attempt which some of his patrons made to identify and recover them. In the year of his arrival in Paris, after an unsuccessful attempt at the composition of operatic music, Rousseau found a place as a clerk in the employment of a farmer-general, whose wife had laughed at him for making love to her some years before. About 1748 Diderot and D'Alembert engaged him to write musical articles for the Encyclopédie, which, as he said himself, he executed very quickly and very ill. He had great musical genius, but is pronounced to have never acquired more than a very middling knowledge of the science. Soon afterwards, being thirty-seven years old, he made the first attempt in authorship that indicated any true vocation for the pursuit. He read in a newspaper a prize-question proposed by the Academy of Dijon:—'Has the progress of the sciences and arts contributed to the corruption or to the purification of morals?' It seemed to him as if a new world of thought had revealed itself to his mind; he dashed off a vehement denunciation of civilized life, sent it in, and obtained the prize. His indistinct visions soon began to assume shape and colour. He was, it is true, little qualified, either by knowledge of history, or by exact philosophical habits, for working out true results in the problem of social progress: but his meditations brooded eagerly over the task; his impregnable self-confidence satisfied him that he was able to perform it, and the power of passionate eloquence which lurked within, soon enabled him to impress the world marvellously with the representation he gave of his irregular conceptions. Rousseau was not great, either as a poet or as a philosopher; but he possessed, in an extraordinary degree, and with a felicitous proportion of the elements, that union of the two characters, which seems to be more powerful than anything else in commanding the sympathy and guiding the opinions of the world. In the works which he composed after the date now in question, he exercised this power with a success which no writer has ever surpassed. Meanwhile, however, he saw his way but dimly.—His musical reputation was raised by the success of his opera, 'Le Devin du Village;' and he wrote also a tragedy and three comedies, all of little worth. A second, but less successful prize-essay, 'On the Origin of Inequality among Mankind,' developed further his political speculations. He dedicated it to the magistrates of his native town, visited Geneva, was full of republican enthusiasm, and professed himself again a Calvinist. And here it is worth while to notice, that, so far as any fixed opinions can be attributed to such a mind, Rousseau was never either atheist or deist: he was a desponding sceptic, who felt himself compelled to reverence the morality of Scripture, little as he obeyed it in his life.—He had now given up his clerkship for a government appointment, which he immediately resigned in a panic; and henceforth, for a long time, his very narrow income was chiefly made up by copying music, in which his friends employed him as a delicate way of giving aid to a proud man. In 1756 he accepted the invitation of Madame D'Epinay to take up his residence on her estate, in the valley of Montmorenci, at the retired country house called L'Hermitage. There he composed some of his most brilliantly eloquent writings. His touching but very equivocal novel, 'La Nouvelle Eloise,' appeared in 1759; 'Emile,' an acute but chimerical treatise on education, published in 1762, was condemned with reason, both by the archbishop and the parliament of Paris. Immediately afterwards, the 'Contrat Social,' the most systematic exposition of his dream of social equality, was received with still more serious disapprobation by the government, and Rousseau found it wise to take refuge in Switzerland. Thence, passing secretly through Paris, he departed for England in January, 1766, on the kindly invitation, and in the company, of David Hume, who found a friendly home for him at Wootton, in Derbyshire. There he wrote the first six books of his extraordinary 'Confessions,' published after his death. If Rousseau was sane before, he certainly was not so now: his zealous and suspicious temper had become aggravated into a monomania; he treated both Hume and his Derbyshire host with ungrateful abuse, and quitted England in May, 1767. After a time of wandering through France, he was allowed to return to Paris in 1770, with a caution to shun publicity, which he took a pride in setting at defiance. His literary activity had now ceased. He mixed much in society, though he had formerly been shy to excess. But his rudeness of manners, and suspicious testiness, were worse than ever; and his despondency seemed often to pass into despair. His health was failing, and his poverty becoming severe. The marquis De Girardin offered him, as his residence, a pavilion in the beautiful grounds of his chateau of Ermenonville, near Chantilly. There, after inhabiting it for a few weeks, he died on the 3d of July, 1778. [W.S.]

[Tomb of J. J. Rousseau.]

ROUSSEAU, J. L. C., a Ger. chemist, 1724-94.
ROUSSEAU, P., a French writer, 1725-1785.
ROUSSEAU, S., an Orientalist, died 1820.
ROUSSEAU-DE-RIMOGNE, Jean Louis, a Flemish mineralogist, 1720-1788.
ROUSSEL, P., a Fr. physician, au. of 'Système Physique et Morale de la Femme,' 1742-1802.
ROUSSEL, P. J. A., a Fr. writer, 1750-1815.
ROUSSEL, W., a French savant, 1638-1717.
ROUSTAN, A. J., a theologian and controversial writer of Geneva, 1734-1808.
ROUTH, B., an Irish Jesuit, confessor to the Princess Charlotte of Lorraine, 1695-1768.
ROUX, A., a French physician, 1726-1776.
ROUYER, C. M., a French jurist, 1745-1810.
ROVERE, Della, a noble family of Savona, in the state of Genoa, two of whom were popes (Julius II. and Sixtus IV.) The other principal members are—John, nephew of Sixtus IV., and brother of Julius II., prefect of Rome 1475. Francesco Maria, son of John, duke of Urbino, and general of Julius II., in whose interest he conquered Romagna and Ferrara. He was deprived of his estates by Leo X. 1516, and recovered them on the death of that pontiff 1522, died of poison 1538. Guido, his son and successor, a debauched and cruel character, died 1574. Francesco Maria, last duke of Urbino, an accomplished writer and patron of letters, 1551-1631. F. Ubaldo, son of the latter, was a dissolute character, and died 1623.

natives of Antwerp, until his father's death in 1587, when he removed with his mother to Antwerp. After receiving some preliminary instruction from two other masters Rubens was finally placed with Otto Venius, the most celebrated master of his time at Antwerp; he remained with Venius for four years, until 1600, when he went to Italy and entered the service of Vincenzio Gonzaga, as gentleman of the chamber, and copied several pictures for that duke, both at Rome and Venice. In 1605 he was sent by the duke on a mission to Philip III. of Spain, and while at Madrid, as previously at Rome, he was much occupied in portrait painting, but it is remarkable what a contrast the delicate and elaborately finished portraits of this early period, present, when compared with the bold masterpieces of his later years. This travelling, however, from one country to another, and thus early making himself acquainted with the various schools, was evidently of infinite advantage to him: the glorious works of the Venetians seem to have made the most lasting impression on him. His return home was hastened by the illness of his mother in 1608, but he did not arrive at Antwerp until after her death.—The appointment of court painter to Albert and Isabella, in the following year, induced Rubens to give up his intention of returning to Mantua, and he decided upon settling at Antwerp. In 1610 he was married to his first wife, Isabella Brants, who died in 1626. In 1620 he visited Paris, by the invitation of Marie de Medici, and made there the sketches for his celebrated Luxembourg series of painting in honour of that princess, and her marriage with Henry IV., now in the Louvre. In 1628 he was sent by the Infanta Isabella a second time to Spain, on a diplomatic mission to Philip IV., and in the following year on a similar mission to Charles I. of England, who knighted Rubens in 1630, who appears to have presented the king with the picture of Peace and War, now in the National Gallery, on the occasion of this mission, when also Charles gave him the commission to decorate the ceiling of Whitehall palace, the pictures for which were afterwards executed in Antwerp. In 1630, also, he married his second wife, Helena Forme ful girl, in her nineteenth year only.

[House of Rubens.]

at Antwerp, May 30, 1640, possess wealth, and after one of the most careers recorded in the history of art.
was, however, only commensurate wit
'He was perhaps the greatest mast
Joshua Reynolds, 'in the mechanical p
the best workman with his tools, that e
a pencil.' His works are extremely n prints alone after him amount to abou
the majority of his pictures were chie
in large from his own sketches, and fini himself; it is a physical impossibility have executed entirely all the pictur accredited to him. His pupils we numerous, the principal were A. Vand Diepenbeck, J. Van Hoeck, F. Van
Segers, Jordaens, Snyders, and Erasm
He is still seen to the utmost advant
werp, but he is also gloriously repres Picture Gallery at Munich. His m generally considered the Descent from the cathedral at Antwerp, but now sad
there is, however, a fine old print of Vorsterman.—(Grimbergen, *Historisch
schryving van P. P. Rubens*, 1774-184
Peter Paul Rubens, his Life and Geni
R. R. Nael, edited by Mrs. James 1840.)

RUBENS. See ROSSI, GIROLAMO.

RUBINI, P., an Italian physician,

RUBYS, C. DE, a French historian,

RUCELLAI, BERNARDO, in Latin
a Florentine historian and diplomatist,
His son, GIOVANNI, a poet and ambas.,

RUCHAT, A., a French theologian,

RUDBECK, JOHN, a Swedish prela of Gustavus Adolphus, and promoter
lication of the Bible, called by his n 1636. OLOF, his son, a learned phys nist, and mechanician, 1630-1702. O
the latter, a botanist and philologist,

RUDBORNE, THOMAS, warden a
of Merton College, Oxford, died about

RUDDIMAN, THOMAS, a Scottish and critic, editor of a complete and valu
of the works of Buchanan, 1674-1757.

RUDENSCHOELD, COUNT, a Swe man, who negotiated the marriage o royal of Sweden with the sister of Prussia in 1739, and was afterwards foreign affairs and chancellor, 1698-17

RUDING, ROGERS, an English divi
'Annals of the Coinage of Great Britain,'

RUDOLPH, C. A., a Swed. natural.

RUE, CHARLES DE LA, a learned Fr
poet, and classical editor, 1643-1725.

RUE, CHARLES DE LA, a learned of the congregation of St. Maur, edito tion of Origen, which was finished by 1684-1739. The latter, VINCENT D
also a learned Benedictine, died 1762.

RUE, P. DE LA, a Dutch poet, 176

RUFFHEAD, OWEN, a miscellan
author of a 'Life of Pope,' &c., 1723-1

RUFFI, ANTHONY DE, a French historian, 1607-1689. His son, L.
known as a man of letters, 1657-1724.

RUFFINI, P., an Ital. mathemat., 1765-1822.

RUFFO, D. F., a cardinal of Naples, 1744-1827.

RUFINUS, or RUFFINAS, sometimes called by the surname TORANIUS, a celebrated Italian ecclesiastic and Scripture commentator, born at Aquileia about the middle of the 4th century. He embraced the monastic life about 371, and accompanied St. Jerome to the East; that father, however, afterwards wrote against him on account of his apology for Origen. In 410 he was condemned as a heretic by Anastasius, and soon after was driven to take refuge in Sicily by an irruption of the Visigoths, where he died either that year or the following. Besides his original works, he translated from the Greek into Latin the works of Josephus, Eusebius's Ecclesiastical History, the Recognitions of St. Clement, and the works of Basil and Gregory Nazianzen.

RUFUS, surnamed 'the Ephesian,' a Greek physician and poet of the 1st century B.C.

RUFUS, CAIUS MUSONIUS, a Stoic philosopher, distinguished at Rome in the age of Tiberius.

RUFUS, PUBLIUS RUTILIUS, consul and tribune of Rome, time of Sylla.

RUGENDAS, G. P., a Ger. painter, 1666-1742.

RUGGIERI, C., an Ital. astrologer, 16th cent.

RUGGIERI, C., an Ital. philologist, 1714-1766.

RUGGLE, G., an Eng. dramatist, 1575-1622.

RUHL, PHILIP JAMES, a member of the French convention, killed himself 1795.

RUHNKEN, D., a Greek critic, 1723-1798.

RUHS, F., a German historian, 1780-1820.

RUINART THIERRY, a Benedictine of St. Maur, distinguished as an ecclesiastical antiquarian, 1657-1709.

RUISDAEL, JACOB. This celebrated Dutch painter was born at Haarlem about 1635, and died 1681, and was originally educated for the medical profession. With whom he studied painting is not known. His landscapes are numerous, and are all distinguished for a simple natural treatment, and for secluded, rugged scenery; generally of a cold and sombre character, but executed with great accuracy and selected with a true appreciation of the picturesque, of that character generally designated the romantic; they are further distinguished for their ordinary daylight, in contradistinction to the sunny effects of Cuyp or Berghem. Ruisdael's style has much of the character of the works of Gasper Poussin and Salvator Rosa in colour and general effect, but is distinguished from the works of these great painters by a much more elaborate treatment of detail, and the chief portion of the picture by the special prominence of the foregrounds generally with Ruisdael. The peculiar scenery he represents rocky, and yet on a small scale, reminds much more of the neighbourhood of the Ardennes, than of Italy or Switzerland, both of which countries he is supposed to have visited, but very improbably; his favourite subjects are cascades. He sometimes painted marine pieces, and with great success; figures he never painted, those we find in his landscapes were introduced either by Ostade, Wouverman, A. Vandevelde, or Berghem. His brother, SOLOMON RUISDAEL, was also a good landscape painter, and being many years older than Jacob, was probably his instructor in the art; some of the pictures attributed to Jacob may belong to Solomon, as considering his moderately short life, the pictures of Ruisdael are very numerous; he also etched a few plates.—(Houbraken, Groote Schonburgh der Nederlantsche Konstschilders, &c. Amsterdam, 1721.) [R.N.W.]

RUIS-GONZALEZ, a Sp. painter, 1633-1709.

RULHIERE, CLAUDE CARLOMAN DE, a French historian, who acted as confidential secretary to the baron de Breteuil, and accompanied him in his embassage to Russia, author of historical works concerning the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, the Revolution in Russia 1762, and the Assembly of Poland, 1735-1791.

RULMAN, ANNE, a French jurist, 1583-1639.

RUMFORD. BENJAMIN THOMPSON, commonly called Count Rumford, one of those practical geniuses and indefatigable workers in the cause of humanity by whom society will be carried to a far higher perfection than we know at present, was born at Rumford in New Hampshire, now Concord, 1753. He was married to a rich widow at nineteen, and had risen to some consequence when the American revolution broke out, but being a royalist was obliged to fly, and his wife soon after died in childbed. In 1776 he brought the news of Washington's success to the English court, and for his services to the crown received an appointment in the foreign office; this, however, he abandoned in 1782 to take up arms in the colony, where he organized a troop of dragoons, and commanded them himself with the rank of colonel. At the peace in 1784 Colonel Thompson received the king's permission to enter into the service of the king of Bavaria, and not only so, but was knighted on the occasion, and had half his military pay secured to him. In this service he rose step by step till the administration of the kingdom was in his hands, and he made such use of his power and influence that the face of things was entirely changed, and the country rescued from the abyss of squalid poverty into which it was sinking. It was for these services that he received among other honours the title of count taken from his native place. In 1802 he married the widow of Lavoisier, and afterwards lived at Auteiul, near Paris, devoted to researches in natural philosophy. Died 1814. [E.R.]

RUMPH, G. E., a German botanist, 1626-1693.

RUNCIMAN, ALEXANDER, a Scottish painter of subjects from Ossian, 1736-1785.

RUNEBERG, EPHRAIM OTTO, a Swedish surveyor, mapmaker, and engineer, 1722-1770.

RUNG, P., an English biographer, 1750-1823.

RUNIUS, J., a Swedish poet, 1679-1713.

RUNJEET-SING. See SINGH.

RUNNINGTON, CHARLES, an industrious writer on law, editor of several standard works, born in Hertfordshire 1751, died 1821.

RUPERT, a Flemish abbot, 1091-1135.

RUPERT, PRINCE, otherwise Prince Robert of Bavaria, a distinguished name in the history of Charles I., was the third son of Frederic V., elector palatine of the Rhine, by the princess Elizabeth, eldest daughter of James I., king of England. He was born in 1619, and though hardly of age at the commencement of the parliamentary wars, he offered his services to his uncle, who naturalized him, and advanced him to the dignity of a peer of England, and knight of the Garter. He exhibited little prudence in his conduct of military operations, but was remarkable for his impetuous gallantry and chivalrous bearing. He was in all the principal actions with the parliamentary forces, and led the charge at the battle of Naseby: soon after which he surrendered Bristol to General Fairfax, with little show of defence. For this luckless step the king hastily dismissed him his service, and ordered him beyond seas, and Rupert had no further share in events till the disaffection of part of the English navy in 1648, of which he took the command in the interest of Charles II. With these ships he harassed the English trade, until Admiral Blake compelled him to retire from the English seas, and he lost many of them by shipwreck. He was subsequently at the French court with Charles II., and after the restoration distinguished himself as naval commander in the Dutch war against De Ruyter and Van Tromp. His successes again were rather the reward of his daring courage than good management. They were such, however, as fully sustained the reputation won by the British navy under the great admiral whose outraged ashes were now reposing in St. Margaret's churchyard. Prince Rupert retired from warlike enterprise after the second Dutch war, 1672-4, and devoted his time to scientific pursuits, which had always indeed occupied his leisure. Chemistry and the arts were his favourite studies, and the composition of the well-known 'prince's metal,' is said to have been discovered by him. Died 1682. [E.R.]

RUPPRECHT, F. C., a painter, engraver, and architect of Bavaria, 1779-1831.

RUSBROCK, or RUYSBROECK, JEAN, a celebrated mystic writer, founder and reformer of the monastery of Groendal, au. of De Nuptiis, or Spiritual Marriage, and several other works, 1294-1381.

RUSCA, E., an Italian physician, 1801-1834.

RUSCA, F. D., a French general, 1761-1813.

RUSCELLI, J., an Italian savant, died 1566.

RUSH, BENJAMIN, an American physician and writer on the yellow fever, 1745-1813.

RUSHTON, E., a catholic writer, 1572-1586.

RUSHWORTH, JOHN, secretary of Fairfax, general of the parliamentary forces, distinguished for his valuable historical compilations connected with the period, 1607-1690.

RUSSEL, A., a Scotch physician, 1726-1805.

RUSSEL, G., a divine and poet, 1728-1767.

RUSSEL, W., a miscellaneous and historical writer, born in Mid-Lothian 1746, died 1793.

RUSSELL, a noble family which has given several illustrious names to English history. The first of any note is SIR JOHN RUSSELL, speaker of the House of Commons in the reign of Henry VI., and companion-in-arms of Henry VIII. in his French wars. He was created earl of Bedford, and enriched with the lands of the abbey of Tavistock and the monastery of Woburn; died 1555. WILLIAM, fourth earl, and first duke of Bedford, was made a knight of the Bath at the coronation of Charles I., and became a member of the 'long parliament' which met in November, 1640. At the battle of Edgehill 1642, he was general of horse for the parliament, but soon after that event he retired to private life, and appeared again at the restoration, when Charles II. created him a knight of the Garter. He survived to be present at the coronation of William and Mary, who created him (1694) marquis of Tavistock and duke [illegible] died 1700. LORD WILLIAM RUSSELL [illegible] of the preceding (next article.) EDWA[illegible] of duke William, and earl of Orford, [illegible] distinguished at Cape la Hogue, [illegible] JOHN, duke of Bedford, lord-lieutenant [illegible] ambassador to France 1762-3, died 177[illegible] CIS, son of the latter, and his succe[illegible] dukedom, chiefly distinguished as a pat[illegible] culture, 1765-1802.

RUSSELL, LORD WILLIAM, second [illegible] fourth earl of Bedford, was, according [illegible] graphy written by his descendant, born [illegible] of September, 1639. His wife, the worth[illegible] tor in his fame, to whom he was marri[illegible] was a daughter of the earl of Southa[illegible] the widow of Lord Vaughan. He was n[illegible] brilliant qualifications, his temper and [illegible] to have been adapted more to domestic [illegible] public life, and a strong sense of duty ap[illegible] to have caused his memorable connecti[illegible] history of the reign of Charles II. H[illegible] ously listened to in the House of Com[illegible] he acquired as much influence there as [illegible] haps possible for one independent man [illegible] an assembly so little influenced as it t[illegible] the spirit which has usually guided the p[illegible] England. It is a question in historica[illegible] whether reliance ought to be placed on the[illegible] which show that many distinguished [illegible] the opposition were bribed by the king[illegible] but it is worthy of remark that Rus[illegible] does not appear in the list. The explo[illegible] Ryehouse plot, his trial and fate, are imp[illegible]

[The Rye House.]

ters of history. Contemporary with t[illegible] for rescuing the constitution, there wa[illegible] plot for the assassination of the king a[illegible] ther, with which certainly Russell wa[illegible] cerned, though he had some intercour[illegible] contrivers. Yet it can hardly be said [illegible] not intend to take up arms against t[illegible] power, and that his fate, presuming th[illegible] be a legitimate one, was a stretch of th[illegible] merit, in fact, consisted in, after serious [illegible] consideration, resorting to resistance as submission to a government which had invaded the constitution. And though he himself bore the penalty of the unsuccessful revolter, the country reaped the fruits of his martyrdom in the revolution. He was beheaded on the 21st July, 1683. [J.H.B.]

RUSSELL, LADY RACHEL, distinguished by her magnanimity at the trial of Lord William Russell, became his wife in 1660, and survived him forty years. She is known to literature by her much-admired 'Letters.' Died 1723.

RUSSELL, MICHAEL, bishop of Glasgow and Galloway, author of 'The Connection of Sacred and Profane Histories,' and a contributor to the Encyclopædia Metropolitana, 1781-1848.

RUSSELL, WILLIAM. See RUSSEL.

RUST, GEORGE, a learned prelate, died 1670.

RUSTICI, J. F., an Italian sculptor, died 1540.

RUTGERS, JOHN, a Dutch critic, 1589-1625.

RUTHARD, C., a Dutch painter, 17th century.

RUTHERFORD, DANIEL, a Scottish physician and professor of botany, Edinburgh, 1749-1819.

RUTHERFORD, J., a Sc. physician, 1695-1779.

RUTHERFORD, SAM., a dist. Scotch divine of the 17th ct., professor of divinity in New College, St. Andrews, auth. of several controversial works.

RUTHERFORTH, THOMAS, professor of divinity at Cambridge, author of a 'System of Natural Philosophy,' a 'Discourse on Miracles,' and other works, 1712-1771.

RUTHVEN, WILLIAM, earl of Gowrie, a Scottish nobleman, whose name is famous in history as chief of the conspiracy formed in the reign of James VI., with the view of compelling that monarch to expel the duke of Lennox and the earl of Arran from the kingdom. He perished on the scaffold in 1584. His sons, JOHN and ALEXANDER, were massacred by the armed followers of James VI., under circumstances which have never been satisfactorily cleared up, in 1600.

RUTILIUS LUPUS, a rhetorician, 1st century.

RUTILIUS NUMATIANUS, CLAUDIUS, a native of Gaul, known as a Latin poet, and præfect of Rome under Honorius, 5th century.

RUTLEDGE, JAMES, an English writer, who went to Paris and died there in prison, 1796.

RUTLEDGE, J., governor of South Carolina, and promoter of American independence, d. 1800.

RUTTY, J., an Irish physician, 1698-1775.

RUVIGNY, H. DE, a Fr. general, 1647-1720.

RUYSCH, FREDERIC, M.D., F.R.S., a famous Dutch anatomist, born at the Hague, 23d March, 1638, and died in 1731 at the great age of ninety-three. He was an ingenious and indefatigable anatomist, and having discovered a method of arresting the decay of animal bodies by the use of a peculiar kind of injection, he collected a museum which for the beauty of the preparations was one of the wonders of the world. It was sold, in 1698, to the czar Peter, and was transported to St. Petersburgh. At the age of eighty, Ruysch collected and arranged another, but the secret which he possessed died with him, and is no longer known; though it is now believed that the antiseptic element employed by him was arsenic. [J.M'C.]

RUYTER, MICHAEL, a famous Dutch admiral of the period of the English commonwealth, was born at Flushing in 1607, and having entered the navy in boyhood, became captain of a vessel as early as 1635. His first laurels were won in the West Indian seas, where he was sent to co-operate with the Portuguese in opposition to the Spaniards, with whom the rising Dutch republic was now fighting the battle of their independence. These achievements, and his operations on the coast of Barbary, date from 1641 to about 1650, and such was the courage of Ruyter that, on one occasion, he entered the roadstead of Sallée in a single ship, when the passage was disputed by five Algerine corsairs of large size. The action was witnessed by the inhabitants of the city, who placed Ruyter on a finely caparisoned horse, and conducted him in triumph through the streets, with the commanders he had defeated led in sullen captivity. In 1652, when the war broke out between the English, and Dutch republic, Ruyter was appointed to the command of a squadron, ordered to convoy home a rich fleet of merchantmen, and he succeeded in his mission, notwithstanding two days' hard fighting with Sir George Ayscough off Plymouth. In October of the same year he was joined by De Witte, and the two commanders contended with Blake and Ayscough on the Flemish coast. During the remainder of the war he fought under Van Tromp, and it is difficult to say whether the English or the Dutch most distinguished themselves in the series of battles fought in the English channel: in the action off Folkestone, Ruyter compelled Blake to fly for safety to the Thames. The war lasted two years, and in the final action, near Scheveling, Ruyter and Van Tromp were opposed to the English under Monk and Lawson: success declared for the English, and Van Tromp being killed, Ruyter withdrew the wreck of the Dutch navy to the Meuse. The Dutch republic was now reduced to sue for peace; but Ruyter found immediate employment as commander of an expedition to Barbary, and in the recapture of the Dutch establishments on the coast of Africa; besides which, in 1659, he was sent to aid the king of Denmark, and obtained two victories over the Swedish fleets. In 1665 the commercial rivalry of the two nations induced the English government, under Charles II., to declare a fresh war with Holland, and Ruyter was matched with varying success against Monk duke of Albemarle, Prince Rupert, Sir G. Ayscough, duke of York, and the earl of Sandwich. In the course of two years several great actions were fought, and then negotiations for peace were entered upon. The preliminaries, however, were foolishly and insincerely protracted, and Ruyter taking advantage of the opportunity, sailed up the Thames as far as the Medway, and not only destroyed much shipping, but spread consternation as far as London. The peace of Breda, which immediately followed, lasted from 1667 to 1672, when Charles II. wantonly provoked fresh hostilities in gratification of the French alliance; that court having been at war with Holland, and Ruyter actively engaged in it, since 1671. The first great action, between an armament of about 150 vessels on both sides, the Dutch fleet commanded by Ruyter, was fought off Solebay, on the coast of Holland, and again the English and Dutch seamen dealt terrible destruction against each other without either side obtaining a decided advantage. Peace was concluded between England and Holland in February, 1674, and Ruyter was despatched to the Mediterranean to carry on the war with the French. One object was to relieve Messina, which was occupied by French troops, and guarded by a fleet of thirty sail, under the Admiral Duquesne; the squadron of Ruyter numbered twenty-four sail, but it was reinforced previous to action by four Spanish vessels. These armaments encountered each other in desperate conflict off the eastern coast of Sicily, and Ruyter, almost at the beginning of the action, had both his legs shattered; he continued, nevertheless, to direct the battle, till there was no longer any probability of success, and then ordered a retreat into the port of Syracuse, where he died of his wounds on the 26th of April, 1676. [E.R.]

RUYVEN, Peter Van, a Dutch painter of history, taught by Jordaens, and occupies high rank among the artists of his country. Many of his historical tableaux are in the chateau of St. Loo; he was employed on the embellishments at the Hague when it was visited by William III., 1650-1718.

RUZZINI, a doge of Venice, 1732-1735.

RYCKAERT, Martin, a Flemish landscape painter, 1591-1636. David, his son and pupil, famous for his skill in the grotesque, was born 1615, and became director of the academy at Antwerp 1667, date of his death unknown.

RYCKE, J., a Flemish writer, 1587-1627.

RYCKEH, T., a Dutch philologist, 1640-1690.

RYDELIUS, Andreis, a Swedish theologian and philosopher, 1671-1738. His brother, Magnus, professor of history and theology, 1676-1712.

RYDER, Sir Dudley, a native of Yorkshire, born 1691, attorney-general 1736 to 1754, d. 1756.

RYFF, James, a Swiss surgeon, 16th century.

RYLAND, J., a baptist minister, died 1792.

RYLAND, W. Wynne, an engraver of London, born 1732, executed for forgery 1783.

RYMER, Thomas, historiographer royal, and collector of a vast mass of public documents relative to the history of England and its connection with other states, was born in Yorkshire 1638 or 1639, and received his appointment 1692. The publication of his collections was commenced in 1704, but the greater part remains in MS. at the British Museum. Died 1713.

RYSBRACH, RYSBRAECH, or RYSBRECHTS, John Michael, an eminent Flemish sculptor, 1694-1770. His brother, Peter, a painter, 165[illegible] 1716.

RYVES, Bruno, a dignitary of the Church of England, born in Dorsetshire, distinguished as an historical writer and annalist of the civil wars, died 1677. His relation, Sir Thomas Ryves, disting. civilian, advocate to Charles I., died 16[illegible]

RZEWUSKI, Wenceslas, a Polish nobleman and general, who underwent a long imprisonment in Russia for his opposition to the pretensions of that country. He was remarkable also for his extensive knowledge of literature, philosophy, and the arts, and distinguished himself as a dramatic author and poet, 1705-1779. His son, Severin, born 1745, has the reputation of being a traitor to his country, and was hung in effigy 1794.

S

SAA, Emanuel, a Portug. Jesuit, 1530-1596.

SAA DE MIRANDA, Francesco, a Portug. poet, who ranks next to Camoens, 1495-1558.

SAAD ED DEEN MOHAMMED, called Khodjah Effendi, a Turkish historian, died 1600.

SAADI, a distinguished Persian poet, whose entire works were published in the original Persian and Arabic at Calcutta, 1791. His Gulistan (Garden of Roses) was translated into English by Gladwin and Ross, and into French by Duryer, D'Aligre, and Gaudin; flourished 1195-1296.

SAADIAS GAON, a celebrated rabbin, 892-941.

SAARSFIELD, a Spanish general, 1795-1837.

SAAS, John, a French bibliographer, 1703-74.

SAAVEDRA FAXADRO, Diego De, a Span. histor. and diplomat., b. in Murcia 1584, d. 1648.

SABACON, an Ethiopian conqueror, who founded a new dynasty in Egypt, 8th cent. B.C.

SABAS, a sectarian of the 3d century.

SABATEI SEVI, a pretended Messiah of the Jews, born at Smyrna 1625, died in prison 1676.

SABATIER, A. H., a Fr. writer, 1726-1806.

SABATIER, Antoine, called Sabatier de Castres, from his birth-place, a French writer of the school of Helvetius, author of a Dictionary of Pagan Antiquity, Dictionary of Virtues and Vices, the Three Ages of Fr. Literature, &c., 1742-1817.

SABATIER, Peter, otherwise Sabathier, and Sabbathier, author of an edition of all the Latin versions of the Bible, 1682-1742.

SABATIER, R. B., a Fr. surgeon, 1732-1811.

SABBAGH, Michel, an Orientalist and poet, b. of catholic parents at St. Jean D'Acre, 1784-1816.

SABATHIER. See Sabatier.

SABBATHIER, F., a Fr. compiler, 1732-1[illegible]

SABBATI, L., an Italian botanist, last cent.

SABBATINI, two Italian painters:—Andrea Da Salerno, a pupil of Raphael, 1489-1[illegible] Lorenzino Da Bologna, died 1577.

SABBATINI, L. A., an Ital. composer, d. 1[illegible]

SABELLICUS, M. A., an Ital. hist., 1436-1[illegible]

SABELLIUS, was a presbyter of Ptolemais city in Pentapolis—a province of Lybia Cyrenaica—and lived about the middle of the third cent. Amidst the metaphysical attempts to explain the relation of the Persons in the Trinity, he struck out a peculiar system. In opposition to the prevalent Alexandrian theology, which taught the doctrine of subordination, he held that the three names in the Trinity not only referred to relations wholly co-ordinate, but that the epithets Father, Word, and Spirit, were but the designations of three separate phases or aspects of operations in which the one Divine Essence had chosen to exhibit itself. He thus denied all immanent distinctions in the Godhead. The human and personal element in Christ was, according to him, only the fleeting form of a Divine manifestation, and the Holy Ghost was merely a Divine energy in the hearts of believers. In fact, in his general doctrine of personality there is an approach to Pantheism, and the Arian heresy was its antagonistic product. The heresy of Sabellius was steadily opposed by Dionysius of Alexandria, and Arianism laid hold of several of the orthodox bishop's extreme expressions. [J.E.]

SABIN, a king of the Bulgarians, 763.

SABINA, JULIA, wife of Adrian, by whom she was compelled to take poison, and died 138.

SABINIANUS, pope of Rome, 604-606.

SABINUS, AULUS, a Roman poet, 1st century.

SABINUS, GEORGE, whose proper German name was SCHELTEN, a Latin poet, 1508-1560.

SABINUS, JULIUS, a Gaulish nobleman, who assumed the title of Cæsar during the contest between Vespasian and Vitellius, and was executed in the year 70. His two children, and his wife, Eponina, who had displayed the most unbounded devotion for him, were also put to death.

SABLIERE, ANTOINE RAMBOUILLET DE LA, a French author, died 1680. His wife, Mademoiselle Hessein, better known as MADAME DE LA SABLIERE, is distinguished by her love for the serious studies and the friendship of La Fontaine. She died 1693.

SABLIERE, C., a Fr. philologist, 1693-1786.

SABOLI, N., a Provençal poet, 1660-1724.

SABUNDE, R., a Spanish philosopher, d. 1432.

SACCHETTI, F., an Ital. novelist, 1335-1410.

SACCHETTI, G., an Ital. architect, died 1764.

SACCHI, three Italian artists:—ANDREA, a distinguished portrait painter of Rome, 1600-1661.

—, a painter and engraver of Pavia, 1616-

—— PIERO FRANCESCO, renowned for his perspective, flourished at Pavia about 1460-1526.

SACCHI, J., an Italian musician, 1726-1789.

SACCHINI, F., an Italian Jesuit, who continued Orlandino's History of his Order, 1570-1625.

SACCHINI, A. M. G., a composer, 1735-1786.

SACHEVERELL, HENRY, a notorious high churchman and demagogue of the reign of Queen Anne, was born about 1672, at Marlborough, where his father was a poor clergyman; and in 1705 became preacher at St. Saviour's, Southwark, the same time that he held the living of Cannock, in Staffordshire. The Toleration Act of 1689 had secured the free exercise of their religion to the protestant dissenters, then known under the three denominations of Presbyterians, Independents, and Baptists, but its operation was strenuously resisted by such men as Sancroft the deprived primate, and other conscientious non-jurors, including the mystic divine William Law, and the ecclesiastical historian. These were men of high principle, who held themselves aloof when the government they supposed were ruining the religion, being content to sacrifice their every hope of preferment in the cause. On the contrary, Sacheverell and his party made political capital of the general alarm, and were continually preaching abusive sermons against the Whig government and the dissenters. Sacheverell was at length brought to trial for two such discourses, in which he had abused Lord Godolphin, then high treasurer, under the scurrilous name of Volpone. We live in times when the miserable libels of a Sacheverell would only create an hour or two's amusement, but it was far otherwise then; he was seriously impeached, and being brought to trial before the peers, on the 27th of February, 1710, he occupied that high court nearly a month, and was then condemned to suspension for three years, and to have his sermons burnt by the hangman. The whole country was now inflamed with resentment; Sacheverell was escorted about by processions of horse and foot, the queen was everywhere followed by shouts for Sacheverell, and the dwelling-houses of eminent dissenters were shamefully plundered, and no one friendly to them could appear without being abused; in fine, the general election of the ensuing autumn was so much influenced by this movement, that the Godolphin ministry was overthrown. On the expiration of his sentence, Sacheverell recommenced his incendiary harangues, chiefly, perhaps, to save appearances, and he was presented by the queen, now under Tory influence, and always zealously attached to the Church of England, to the rich living of St. Andrew's, Holborn. He died in obscure retirement 1724, the last thing recorded of him being a bequest of £500 to Bishop Atterbury, his friend and representative among the prelates. [E.R.]

SACHS, HANS, a German poet, 1494-1578.

SACI, LOUIS ISAAC DE, whose proper name was LEMAISTRE, a learned Jansenist, 1612-1684.

SACKEN, BARON, a Russ. general, 1770-1837.

SACKVILLE, GEORGE, Viscount, third son of the first duke of Dorset, was born 1716, and was commander of the English and Hanoverian cavalry at the battle of Minden, 1759. Instead of bringing his troops into action when ordered, he was panic-stricken, and his pale looks and want of self-possession were marked by the other officers. He was tried by court-martial on the charge of cowardice, and not only dismissed the service, but had his name erased from the list of privy councillors. This man, however, became colonial secretary in the factious times of Lord North from 1775 to 1782, the period of the American war of independence. Died 1785. The affair of Minden is very fully discussed in the valuable history, now in course of publication, by Lord Mahon. [E.R.]

SACROBOSCO. See HOLYWOOD.

SACROVIRUS, JULIUS, the principal author and chief of the revolt of the Gauls under Tiberius, defeated at Autun by Silius, and slew himself, 21.

SACY. See SACI.

SACY, ANTOINE ISAAC SILVESTRE, Baron De, one of the most universal scholars of our age, and particularly renowned for his Oriental learning, was born at Paris 1758, and occupied the first rank as professor under every form of government in France, from 1795 to the reign of Louis Philippe. He is author of several original works, and of many highly valued translations from the Oriental languages. Died 1838.

SACY, LOUIS DE, a Fr. advocate, 1654-1724.

SADE, an illustrious Provençal family, one of whose lords is supposed to have been the husband of Petrarch's Laura. This family has given several statesmen and prelates to France since the 14th century. In recent times, two names distinguished in literature:—JAMES FRANCIS PAUL ALPHONSO, Marquis De Sade, author of Remarks on the Troubadours, and editor of an edition of Petrarch, 1705-1778. DONATIAN ALPHONSO FRANCIS, his nephew, a licentious novelist, 1740-1814.

SADEEL, A., a French Huguenot, 1534-1591.

SADELER, JOHN, a Flem. engrav., 1550-1610. RAPHAEL, his brother and pupil, 1555-1616. GILES, nephew and pupil of John, 1570-1629.

SADI. See SAADI.

SADLER, A., chaplain to Charles II., d. 1680.

SADLER, J., a political writer, 1615-1674.

SADLER, MICHÆL THOMAS, a philanthropist and member of parliament, distinguished by his exertions in favour of the poor factory children, author of 'Ireland, its Evils, and their Remedies,' and of a work against the Malthusian doctrine, entitled 'The Law of Population,' 1780-1835.

SADLER, SIR RALPH, a reformer and statesman, who acted as the principal agent of Queen Elizabeth in Scotland, and as gaoler of Mary Stuart, 1507-1587.

SADLER, W. W., a dist. æronaut. 1796-1824.

SADOC, a learned Jew, principal founder of the sect of Sadducees, 3d century B.C.

SADOLETO, JACOPO, an Italian cardinal, famous as a philosopher and man of letters, at the period of the attempted reformation in Italy (see POLE), 1477-1547. His cousin, PAOLO, a Latin poet, 1508-1572.

SAEMUND, SIGFUSSON, an Icelandic priest and historian, by whom the poems of the Edda were collected, died 1135.

SAGE. See LE SAGE.

SAGE, B. G., a French chemist, 1740-1824.

SAGE, JOHN, a Scottish prelate, 1652-1711.

SAGITTARIUS, GASPAR, whose proper name was SCHUTZE, a Saxon archæologist, 1633-1694.

SAGREDO, GIOVANNI, a Venetian historian, who was elected doge in 1675. He resigned his office because not agreeable to the people.

SAHED-IBN-ABAD, a celebrated Persian vizier, historian, and literary savant, 940-995.

SAINCTES, CLAUDE DE, a French catholic theologian, and partizan of the league, 1525-1591.

SAINT-AIGNAN, FRANCOIS DE BEAUVILLIERS, successively Count and Duke De, a French commander and statesman, remembered as a patron of learning, 1610-1687. PAUL, his son and successor in the dukedom, one of the most virtuous statesmen of the court of Louis XIV., governor of Burgundy, Anjou, and Berri, and a friend of Fenelon, 1648-1714. PAUL HIPPOLITE, brother and successor of the latter, a diplomatist and member of the Academy, 1684-1776.

SAINT-ALBAN. See SAINT-GILES.

SAINT-ALBAN, RICHARD DE BURGH DE, earl of Clanricarde, an Irish nobleman, who aided in extinguishing the rebellion of 1600, 1565-1635.

SAINT-AMAND, J., a French critic, d. 1754.

SAINT-AMANS, J. FLORIMOND BOUDON DE, a French agriculturist and botanist, 1748-1831.

SAINT-AMANT, MARK ANTONY GERARD, Sieur De, a French poet, 1594-1660.

SAINT-AMOUR, WILLIAM DE, a doctor of the Sorbonne, who wrote against the friars, d. 1272.

SAINT-ANDRE, J. B., a protestant minister and member of the French convention, 1749-1813.

SAINT-ANDRE, J. D'ALBON, Maréchal De, a famous commander of the catholic league, colleague of Guise and Montmorency, killed at the battle of Dreux, 1561.

SAINT-ANDRE, NATHANIEL, an anatomist, whose singularities of character are recorded by Nichols in his Anecdotes of Hogarth, died 1776.

SAINT-ANGE, ANGE FRANÇOIS FARIAU DE, a French poet and classical translator, 1747-1810.

SAINT-AUBIN, A., a Fr. engraver, 1736-1807.

SAINT-AUBIN, AUG. ALEXANDER D'HERBER, called, a French singer and actor, 1754-1818.

SAINT-AUBIN, C., a publicist, 1755-1820.

SAINT-AUBIN, G. C. See LEGENDRE.

SAINT-AULAIRE, FRANÇOIS JOSEPH DE BEAUPOIL, Marquis De, a Fr. poet, 1643-1742.

SAINT-CHAMOND, CLAIRE MARIE MAZARELLI, Dame De, a learned Fr. writer, 1731-1784.

SAINT-CLOST, PERROS DE, or PIERRE DE SAINT CLOUD, writer of a satirical allegory, called the Romance of Reynard, which consists of 2,000 verses, and has been translated into most European languages, 13th century.

SAINT-CONTEST, DOMINIQUE CLAUDE BARBERIE DE, a French statesman and diplomatist, 1668-1730. His son, F. DOMINIQUE, minister of state for foreign affairs in 1751, under the influence of Madame de Pompadour, 1701-1754.

SAINT-CYR, ODET JOSEPH DE VAUX DE GIRY, Abbé De, a Greek scholar, preceptor of the dauphin, son of Louis XV., died 1761.

SAINT-CYRAN, JEAN DUVERGIER DE HAURANNE, Abbé De, a Jansenist theolog., 1581-1642.

SAINTE-BEUVE, JACQUES DE, a writer [illegible] Grace and Predestination, 1613-1677.

SAINTE-CROIX, GUILLAUME EMMANUEL JOSEPH, Baron De, a learned French historian, author of 'Researches into the Mysteries of Paganism,' 'Critical Examination of the History of Alexander the Great,' and other works of [illegible] value, 1746-1809.

SAINTE-CROIX, or SANTA CROCE, PIPER DE, cardinal and papal nuncio, 1513-15[illegible]

SAINT-EVREMOND, C. MARGUERITE ST. DENIS, Seigneur De, a royalist and protégé Mazarin during the troubles of the Fronde, distinguished as an elegant writer, 1613-1703.

SAINT-FAL, S. M., a French actor, 1760-[illegible]

SAINT-FLORENTIN, L. PHELYPEAUX, C[illegible] De, son of Phelipeaux de la Vrilliere, minister various functions for more than fifty years to [illegible] XV., and a debauched character, 1705-1777.

SAINTE-FOIX, GERMAIN FRANÇOIS POU[illegible] DE, a French writer and antiquarian, 1698-1[illegible]

SAINT-GALL, THE MONK OF, an anony[illegible] Latin writer of the 9th century.

SAINT-GELAIS, OCTAVIUS DE, a poe[illegible] bishop of Angouleme, and biographer of Louis [illegible] 1466-1502. MELLIN, his natural son, an [illegible] astic, and au. of Latin and French poems, d. [illegible]

SAINT-GENIES, J. DE, a Fr. poet, 1607-[illegible]

SAINT-GENIS, A. N., a Fr. lawyer, 1741-[illegible]

SAINT-GEORGE, CHEVALIER DE, a mal[illegible] born of a negress at Guadaloupe, greatly dis[illegible] guished by his accomplishments at the Fr[illegible] court, and especially for his skill as a swordsm[illegible] He commanded a troop of horse at the begin[illegible] of the revolution, 1745-1801.

SAINT-GERAN. See GUICHE.

SAINT-GERMAIN, COUNT DE, a singul[illegible] character, some way connected with the [illegible] of last century, and equally remarkable for th[illegible] extent of his knowledge and his communicativ[illegible] with the French court, especially with Louis XV. and Madame de Pompadour. He is said to have died at Schleswig in 1784. The curious should compare with his pretensions the traditions of The Wandering Jew, which are collected together in the Chronicles of Cartophilus (so called), lately published by David Hoffman.

SAINT-GERMAIN, ROBERT, Count De, a l statesman, minister of war to Louis

ıor of Memoirs, 1708-1778.
-GERMAN, or SEINT-GERMAN,
HER, an Eng. lawyer of the 16th cent.
-GILES, otherwise Joannes Anglicus, e St. Albain, a learned theologian, and medicine to Philip Augustus, king of d about 1255.
-HILAIRE. See GEOFFROY.
E-HUBERTI, ANTOINETTE CECILIA
French opera singer, 1756-1821.
-HURUGE, MARQUIS DE, a character
ch revolution, about 1750-1810.
-HYACINTHE, HYACINTHE CORDON-er known as Themiseuil de Saint Hya-
ingenious French critic, 1684-1714.
E-HYACINTHE. See CHARRERIE.
-JOHN. See BOLINGBROKE.
-JORRI, PIERRE DUFAUR DE, in Latin
ber, a learned French Jesuit, 1540-1600.
-JOSEPH, ISIDORE, a theologian and
f the Carmelites of Italy, died 1666.
-JOSEPH, PIERRE MATHIEW DE,
Pierre Foglia, an Asiatic missionary
st, born in Naples 1617, died 1691.
-JULIEN, L. G. BAILLET, Baron De,
ieous writer, 1720-1780.
-JULIEN, PIERRE DE, a partizan of
, and historian of Burgundy, 1520-1593.
-JURE, J. B. DE, an ascetic, 1588-1657.
-JUST, ANTOINE, one of the most re-characters, all things considered, produced olutionary epoch of France, was born at he Nivernais 1768, and was only twenty-of age when the revolution had grown to eat in 1792-3. He was the son of a St. Louis, descended from a distinguished d had passed through a brilliant career nt, when he became adjutant-major in a he national guard; and in this position acquaintance of Robespierre. The f these two men is one of the most in-tudies presented by the history of those he intelligence of St. Just was as cold, glassy as that of Robespierre, his character
t, his ambition as great, his personal noral and physical, unsurpassed by any known to history, and his enthusiasm dis-
generis, for we are not only unacquainted ning resembling it, but it appears as we o contradict the word itself. Light, and dauntless, in Camille Desmoulins, cter of mind strikes us as one common to d to every cause; in St. Just, on the con-ted to the highest pitch, and star-like in ness, it is yet fixed in preternatural
, or if it ever stir, seems only to string rves as by a magnetic tension to make stronger and more resonant organ of the pirit. In cold impassive reason, the two ust and Robespierre, resemble each other, strict purity of their lives, but in this re is no comparison, and to explain St.
ust suppose the wildest enthusiasm in rd nature transfixed and bound down to urposes by the gleam of the frigid intel-the inner. His almost feminine coun-nd his perfect devotion to Robespierre, for St. Just this striking but profane appellation: the Saint John of the Messiah of the People. He surpassed his master in impassibility as the terrible events of the revolution swept by, and on the night of the September massacres slept soundly in the same chamber where Robespierre paced up and down watching, as he expressed it, 'like remorse or crime.' At this time, the name of St. Just was almost unknown to the people, but he took his place in the National Convention, which met soon afterwards, with the air of one accustomed to be heard and obeyed as an oracle. He was the mask of the spirit of Robespierre, and so perfectly devoted to him, that the ideas of the one were uttered by the voice of the other, not in slavish subjection, but with more axiomatic and unanswerable simplicity, and with a more daring application to emergencies; it was, as if the soul of Robespierre had two bodies, the one more plausible in utterance, the other sharper and more remorseless. This devotion of St. Just was entirely due to the acquiescence of his reason in the sentiments of Robespierre, and to his solemn conviction that the republic could only triumph by those ideas: he was strictly the minister of Robespierre the dictator, and he embodied the conceptions of his master in those practical measures which could alone carry him to power. The overthrow of the Gironde and the Dantonists was only a step towards the concentration of every power of the state in the committees of the convention, formed to work under one head; the struggle which he directed, in fact, was that of a republic one and indivisible, opposed to the idea of a confederation which it was impossible to form in imitation of the United States that had been the natural growth of time and circumstances. After the fall of the Girondins, the triumvirate of Robespierre, Couthon, and St. Just, was formed definitely in the committee of Salut Public, and under the dictation of this body, at the time when France was menaced with destruction, no right, whether of life or property, was allowed to be pleaded in preference to the supreme right of the nation to save itself. The inexorable logic of this argument, put in force, became the terror, and they who look upon a Robespierre and a St. Just as mere spirits of darkness, and agents of iniquity, should consider well the sorrowful nights and days which this young man of twenty-five or six must have passed when he wrote in his diary: 'It is but a small matter to quit a life like this, a state of being so miserable that the only choice left us, is to become the accomplice of crime or the helpless witness of it.' The most striking proof of his heroism was given when the Austrians, reunited to the army of Condé, had forced the lines of Weissembourg, and were advancing upon Strasburg. Sent there with Lebas, in the character of a proconsul, St. Just charged at the head of the Alsatian peasantry, hastily armed, and, with an intrepidity that astonished the soldiers, rolled back the invaders, and saved his country. In this character he was the legal autocrat of the entire district, and in the emergency the lives and properties of all were at his disposal; was he therefore merciful or cruel when he saved 'thousands of heads,' as it is confessed, by sending one scoundrel to the guillotine? In short, there is only one honest way of judging these men, and that is by the exceptional character of the times, and not as Christians, for such they were not, but as the heathen avengers of the crimes and errors of many generations of pretended Christians. St. Just, true to the last, accompanied Robespierre to the scaffold, and regarded with a disdainful air the crowd vociferating around him. He was executed on the 27th of July, 1794, or according to the republican style, on the 9th Thermidor, year 2. His poems and political writings bear witness to his literary talents. [E.R.]

SAINT-JUST, GODARD D'AUCOURT DE, a dramatic and miscellaneous writer, 1770-1826.

SAINT-LAMBERT, CHARLES FRANCIS, Marquis De, a fabulist and philosopher, 1717-1803.

SAINT-LAURENT, BARON DE, a French artillery officer in the wars of Napoleon, 1763-1832.

SAINT-LEU. See HORTENSE.

SAINT-LO, A. DE, a Fr. missionary, d. 1638.

SAINT-LOUIS. See LOUIS (IX.)

SAINT-LOUIS, See PETER OF ST. LOUIS.

SAINT-LUC, FRANÇOIS D'ESPINAY DE, a French commander, who distinguished himself against the Calvinists, and became a master of artillery under Henry IV., killed 1597. His son, TIMOLEON, ambassador to England and marshal of France, 1580-1644.

SAINT-MARC, C. H. LEFEBVRE, an editor, historian, and chronologist, 1698-1769.

SAINT-MARC, J. P. ANDREW DES ROSINS, Marquis De, a poet and dramatist, 1728-1813.

SAINT-MARCELLIN, a natural son of the celebrated Fontanes, distinguished by his valour at the battle of Borodino, in the Russian campaign of 1812, and as an opera writer, 1791-1819.

SAINT-MARS, a French officer of quality, whose name has been preserved in history in connection with that most perplexing of all secrets, 'The Man in the Iron Mask.' Vague rumours of such a prisoner were all that existed till the publication of Voltaire's Louis XIV., when for the first time they assumed due consistency. After all that has been written on the subject, it cannot be said that more is known at this hour than had been related by Voltaire, except some confirmations of the substantial accuracy of his account, and some additional traits of character, which may help to solve the riddle, if ever fresh light should be thrown upon it by the publication of hitherto unedited state documents. Briefly, the story is as follows:—Towards 1662, a state prisoner of noble stature, and the most accomplished demeanour, wearing a mask of black velvet, was consigned to the custody of Saint-Mars, at that time governor of the castle of Pignerol. In 1686, Saint-Mars was transferred to the Isle of Saint-Marguerite, in the sea of Provençe, and he took his prisoner with him: he did the same when he became governor of the Bastile in 1690. This mysterious person was uniformly treated with the highest respect by the governor, who himself waited upon him, and the same deference was shown by the marquis of Louvois on occasion of a visit previous to his removal from St. Marguerite: his mask was so constructed with steel springs that he had perfect liberty to eat and drink; he was served in the richest manner, and was accustomed to entertain himself with books and music. Before his transference to the Bastile, he seized an opportunity to scratch some intelligence on a silver plate, which he threw out near a fishi boat that he perceived moored to the shore; t fisherman, however, was unable to read, and carried the plate to Saint-Mars, who would allow him to depart until perfectly satisfied th no discovery had been made. In the end t prisoner died in the Bastile, and was buried the parish cemetery of Saint Paul, by midnig November, 1703, under the evidently feign name of Marchiali: the furniture of his room, t window casements, and every possible thing which he could have left any record, were th carefully burnt; the ceiling was pulled down a reduced to powder; finally, the Bastile record since perused, were found to contain only th obscurest allusions to him. The last state who possessed this secret was Chamillac, wh his deathbed refused to make a discovery of it though entreated by his son-in-law, the secon marquis de Feuillade, he said he had been bound by an oath. The medical attendant of th prisoner had never seen his face, but says that h informed him a few days before his death that believed he was near sixty years of age; registry of the burial, on the other hand, forty-five as the age of the pretended Marc but this again may have been designed to baffl vestigation. This strange history, it will b served, commences about the period of Maz death, and it covers the greater part of the re Louis XIV. It would be inconsistent wit limits to discuss the conjectures to which given rise—some of them sufficiently rom What surprises us is, that historians do not o how little reason would be left for the caref servation of the secret beyond the lifetime prisoner, if it could be proved he was any the persons hitherto supposed.

SAINTE-MARTHE, CHARLES FRANCIS quis De, a French fabulist and poet, 1717-1

SAINT-MARTIN, J. ANTOINE DE, col researches into the history of Armenia, 1791

SAINT-MARTIN, J. DIDIER DE, a C missionary and writer in Chinese, 1743-180

SAINT-MARTIN, LOUIS CLAUDE DE, by himself le Philosophe inconnu (which we philosopher of the unknown), was born at Am of a noble French family, 1743, and is said to commenced his metaphysical studies upon 'Art of Knowing One's Self,' written by Abbadie, a French protestant theologian. He sometimes confounded with MARTINEZ PAS LIS, who was the real founder of the sect of tinists, and the first teacher, but by no means master, of Saint-Martin. The period when two philosophical inquirers became acquainted was marked by a reaction against the scep philosophy of the encyclopedists, against w Saint-Martin launched the first and most of his writings, entitled Des Erreurs et de la V published at Lyons 1775, between which and 1778 the operations of the genuine Mar in France had become extinct. The name, ind still remained. The Chevaliers Bienfaisants, formed under the name of Philalethes, and said have embraced the doctrines of Saint-Martin Swedenborg, invited the former to take the pre dent's chair in 1784, but he refused the hon as to Swedenborg, the writer has before him

, written by a French disciple of his ly disavowing the connection, and e very Martinists, so called, with magic:—so much for the right of
to assume names, and for the sar-artine ('Girondins,' vol. i. p. 188),
osophists, disciples of the sublime Swedenborg, the Saint-Martin of tended to complete the gospel, and nanity,' &c. It is a point of some history of those times, for not only lt societies of Germany and France ong the people, but the most dis-inces were enrolled amongst them,
read in the article WEISHAUPT.
was neither faithful to one system
ut coquetted with them all, Martinez
hymy, Animal Magnetism, Sweden-cob Bœhmen, until he was cast midst of the French revolution, and e regarded himself, 'the Robinson ritualism.' He possessed vast oriand metaphysical insight, and as a gested and assimilated whatever he aste; we should not be far from the
, in pronouncing that the principles ad taken the deepest hold of his nd reason; and that much in his
may be regarded as a modern re-them, tinctured, however, by what red from Swedenborg, and by his animal magnetism. The first of mentioned above. It was followed Naturel des Rapports entre Dieu, l'Univers,' 1782, the principle of explanation of things by man, and by things. In 1790 he published Désir.' In 1792 the 'Ecce Homo,' rrect the rage at that time for mags, and to elevate the soul to sub-
es. In 1796 appeared 'Le Nouvel 1800, 'De l'Esprit des choses, ou ilosophique sur la Nature des Etres de leur Existence,' a work which denounced as 'a tissue of foolish
on the strength of an extract, twithstanding, of great philosophic 02 he ushered to the light of day 'Le
'Homme Esprit,' with these remark-
'Although the subject of this work ter clearness than my others, it is rom ordinary ideas to let me hope
ess. I have often felt while writing
t would be much as if I had played f waltzes and contre-dances on my cemetery of Mont-Martre, where to do with my bow, but really the there would neither understand my nce to it!' Besides these and other own, Saint-Martin translated into Three Principles,' and the 'Aurora,' men. The Russian statesman, Prince aid to have been his convert, but we e whether any connection exists bect and the rise of the Martinists in oscow: a very insufficient account of
be found in Pinkerton's translation of rning the state of the Greek church, vonic of Platon. Saint-Martin, like so many others of the noblesse of France, suffered by the French revolution, and being implicated in a conspiracy, owed his life to the revolution of Thermidor. Died 1803. [E.R.]

SAINT-MARTIN, MICHEL DE, a religious founder and writer, 1614-1687.

SAINT-MAURICE, ALEX. MA. ELEONOR, Prince De Montbarey, minister of war to Louis XVI. from 1776 to 1780, au. of Memoirs, 1732-96.

SAINT-MAURIS, J. DE, a French jurisconsult, statesman, and diplomatist, died 1555.

SAINT-MAURIS, PRUDENT DE, a jurisconsult and ambassador, of another family, d. 1584.

SAINT-MEARD, FRANCOIS JOURGNIAC DE, a journalist and chevalier of the order of Saint Louis, born at Bourdeaux 1745, and known at the period of the revolution as the editor of a royalist paper, entitled 'Journal de la Cour et de la Ville.' After the installation of the revolutionary leaders in the Paris Commune, by the insurrection of August 10, 1792, Saint-Meard was arrested and imprisoned in the 'Abbaye,' where he became an eye-witness of the September massacres. He has related his terrible experience in a brochure entitled, 'My Thirty-six Hours' Agony,' the thrilling interest of which carried it through above a hundred editions. After the 'terror' Saint-Meard continued to frequent the literary salons of Paris, and received the humorous title of 'President and General-in-chief of the Universal Society of Gobe-mouches.' Died 1827. [E.R.]

SAINT-MICHEL, A. DE, a Fr. wr., 1795-1827.

SAINT-MORYS, ET. BOURGEVIN-VIALART, Count De, a French general, known as a naturalist and miscellaneous writer, 1772-1817.

SAINT-NON, JEAN CLAUDE RICHARD, Abbé De, a celebrated amateur in the arts, 1727-1791.

SAINTE-PALAYE, J. B. DE LA CURNE DE, the historian of French chivalry, 1697-1781.

SAINT-PARD, otherwise P. N. Van Blotaque, a French Jesuit and religious writer, 1734-1824.

SAINT-PAVIN, DENIS SANGUIN DE, a French poet and ecclesiastic, 1600-1670.

SAINT-PERAVI, J. N. M. GUERINEAU DE, a political writer and poet, 1732-1789.

SAINT-PHILIP. See BACCALAR Y SANNA.

SAINT-PIERRE, CHARLES IRENEE CASTEL, Abbé De, a political writer and philanthropist, who was educated as an ecclesiastic, and devoted himself theoretically and practically to the public good. Among his works is a 'Project for a Perpetual Peace,' conceived at the congress of Utrecht (1713), and pronounced by the cardinal Dubois 'the dream of a good man.' He was far in advance of his age; and being excluded from the French Academy for the courageous expression of his opinions concerning the government of Louis XIV., that body took more than half a century to revise their judgment of him; at length, in 1775, his eulogium was pronounced by D'Alembert. The French are indebted to him not only for his philosophical 'dreams,' but for that expressive word bienfaisance, which he introduced into the language. [E.R.]

ST. PIERRE, EUSTACE DE, a patriotic citizen of Calais, who distinguished himself when Edward III. of England besieged that place in 1347.

SAINT-PIERRE, J. H. BERNARDIN DE, a celebrated French writer, well known in this country by his beautiful romance of 'Paul and Virginia,' was born at Havre 1737, and passed some time in the Isle of France, where the scene of his story is laid, as an engineer. He was a friend of Rousseau, and author of works making altogether twelve volumes, recommending a higher virtue than that exhibited in his own life. Died 1814.

SAINT-PRIEST, F. E. GUIGNARD, Count De, an ambassador and partizan of the Bourbons, 1735-1821. His son, G. EMMANUEL, a general who served against France, 1776-1814.

SAINT-PRIEST, or SAINT-PRET, JEAN YVES, an archivist and historian, died 1720.

SAINT-RAMBERT, GABRIEL DE, a Cartesian philosopher and friend of Rousseau, died 1720.

SAINT-REAL, CESAR VICHARD, Abbé De, a controversialist and historian, 1639-1692.

SAINT-REMY, PIERRE SURIREY DE, a French officer and writer on artillery, died 1716.

SAINT-SAPHORIN, A. F. L. DE MESTRAL DE, a diplomatist employed by the Danish court, a great connoisseur in art, 1738-1805.

SAINT-SILVESTRE, J. L. DU FAURE, Marquis De, a commander under Turenne, 1627-1719. C. F. DU FAURE, of the same family and title, an historical writer, 1752-1818. N. H. MAURICE DU FAURE, called president St. Silvestre, a magistrate and political writer, died 1811.

SAINT-SIMON, C. F. DE ROUVROY SANDRICOURT, a learned French prelate, and collector of a valuable library, 1727-1794. His brother, LOUIS DE ROUVROY, Duc De Saint-Simon, a statesman and diplomatist during the regency of the duke of Orleans, author of Memoirs of the highest value towards the history of his times, 1675-1755.

SAINT-SIMON, CLAUDE HENRI, Count De, founder of a school of social science and rational doctrine named after him, was born at Paris 1760. Member of an illustrious family which traced its origin, through the counts of Vermandois, to Charlemagne, he had the best education that his country could then afford, and one of his teachers was the great encyclopedist D'Alembert. He entered the army, according to the prevailing fashion with the young nobles, in 1777, and though he hated war, he embarked, two years later, for America, and served under Washington, thinking only of some vast social design that would be promoted by the emancipation of America. In 1783 he returned to France, and quitting the military career, he was known at the period of the revolution as a speculator, conjointly with a count de Redern, in the national domains: his object was to acquire property as a means of realizing his ideas, and he regarded the convulsions which then agitated society as nothing more than the preparatory destruction of the old order of things. During the Terror, St. Simon was arrested in mistake for another of the same name, and only recovered his liberty after the revolution of Thermidor, 27th July, 1794. His time and fortune were now devoted with apostolic enthusiasm, to what he considered his mission, and, in 1807, he gave his ideas to the world in his 'Introduction to the Scientific Labours of the Nineteenth Century.' This work was intended as a supplement to the reports demanded by Napoleon on the progress of science since 1789, and in connection with Saint-Simon's other works, may be said to contain the germ of all that is valuable in Comte's po philosophy. It declares the time arrive generalize the whole body of science with a to social progress, and lays down the principle useful labour is the proper destiny of all men. was followed in 1808 by Letters addressed t Institute; in 1810, by a 'Prospectus of a Encyclopædia;' in 1814 by the 'Re-organizat European Society;' and nearly every year, in s by some fresh development of his philoso speculations. The sum of his meaning ma expressed somewhat in these terms: as Newto reduced astronomy to a positive law when h covered gravitation, so may all the sciences speculations of men be brought, practically, positive doctrine; chemistry and the other bra of experimental philosophy come first; m physical and theological knowledge follow i order of their remoteness from demonstration social science as the most complex of all com the encyclopædia of human knowledge an perience. Newton, it is argued, laid the found of this temple of science by demonstrating th of gravitation; and Locke proved that it co carried to completion by demonstrating the fectibility of the human spirit. This, we s the fundamental conception of Saint-Simon's has become more recently of Comte's, philos it is to be regretted that, in the carrying this idea, they are both deficient in the sense that constitutes religion, and in any true, o tolerable recognition, of revealed truth; the and its doctrines are at best a kind of sp police force, easy to be dispensed with wh positive theism is reached. These works, ho are valuable political studies, they point to results at which society must arrive, an suggest a valuable method of reviewing and philosophy: to be safely used they m treated like crude ore, from which the true is only to be extracted by a severe process. Simon exhausted his resources to such a that he passed a severe winter without fu almost without food. He once attempted s but the pistol-shot only deprived him of th of one eye. He died at Paris May 19, 1825. these last words on his lips 'L'Avenir est à (the future is ours). He left a small, but d body of disciples at his death, who had for organ a periodical entitled 'Le Producteur' then leader died of a broken heart, and his being scattered by the interference of govern his successor, M. Enfantin, became an activ moter of railways and other objects of imm utility.

SAINT-SIMON, MAXIMILIAN H. botanist, tactician, and historian, 1720-179

SAINT-URSIN, M. DE, a medical physician in the French army, 1763-1818.

SAINT VINCENT. JOHN JERVIS, earl Vincent, and admiral of the British fleet, was b 1734, at Meaford in Staffordshire. He entered navy at the age of ten, under Admiral Rodney. served in 1759 in the expedition against Q and had risen to the rank of post-captain when American war broke out. He distinguished h self greatly in the course of this war, and knighted; and early in the next great war ag revolutionary France he was made an a the command of the Mediterranean specially employed in watching the , which country was in alliance with t England. The Spanish admiral sea with 27 large ships of the line, ht to action by Sir John Jervis, who ips of much inferior size and weight s glorious battle was fought off Cape lth February, 1797, and ended in the t of the Spaniards and the capture r ships. The English admiral was eerage for this victory by the title of nt, and received a pension of £3,000 00, Lord St. Vincent was placed in e channel fleet, and in 1801 he was of the admiralty, from which station ed when Pitt returned to power in t. Vincent was a stern reformer of no respect to persons, and visiting of men in rank and authority as lealt with the faults of the humblest fleet, or the meanest artizan in the gland is indebted to him not only for vices in action against the enemy, but ed discipline and spirit, which he in- very department of our navy, among as men, and for the noble example duty which he always set in his own w and brought forward into notice f Nelson, Duckworth, Strachan, arker, and many more of our best the war; and he was as firm a friend merit, as he was an unflinching foe and incompetency. Earl St. Vin- March, 1823. [E.S.C.]

NCENT, Gregory De, a French and writer on comets, 1584-1667.

NCENT, Paul De. See Paul.

ES, C., an oculist, 1667-1733.

., an Austrian painter, 1674-1705.

ELO, an Italian physician and her- died 1639.

an Italian composer, 1710-1800.

an Italian painter, 1803-1835.

otherwise SALAH-ED-DEEN, pt and Syria, one of the most en- chivalrous of Saracen princes, was tle of Tecrit, on the Tigris, of which governor in 1137. His family had rriors to the princes of Mesopotamia d Saladin was about thirty years of ccompanied his uncle, Shiracoh, in to Egypt; on whose death, in 1168, nmander of the forces. Like Me- ecent times, he possessed power and ient to render himself independent; tails of his wars, we find him master gypt in 1183, so far at least as to be opposition from the native princes. knights, however, had carried their st, and Saladin had been defeated re by Reginald De Chatillon, grand- Templars, who was now in posses- em, and in the habit of committing upon the Saracens. Saladin wisely is own authority before attacking ; and among his national improve- mentioned the foundation of colleges and the fortification of his cities, especially of Cairo. In 1187 he gave battle to the Christian army of 80,000 men on the plain of Hittin, or Tiberias, and having completely vanquished them, he slew Chatillon with his own hand, and took Guy of Lusignan, the Christian king of Jerusalem, prisoner: soon afterwards he captured the Holy City, and though he put the templars and knights hospitallers to the sword, the other Franks had the alternative of becoming slaves or paying ransom. News of these disasters arriving in Europe, produced the second crusade, in which Richard Cœur de Lion took part in alliance with Philip Augustus of France; preceded a year or two by the emperor Frederic Barbarossa, who died before their arrival, and an immense host of combatants. The key of Syria, then, as it is now, was the fortress of St. Jean D'Acre, and the siege endured two years, 1189-1191, in which interval prodigies of valour were performed on both sides; the fortress at length surrendered, and the crusade was concluded by another year's truce between Saladin and Richard, after which the latter embarked for England. Neither of these remarkable characters were destined to survive their acquaintance with each other very long. Saladin was seized with a bilious fever at Damascus, and died there at the moment he was contemplating an extensive programme of conquests, in 1193.—Christians and Saracens have vied with each other in writing panegyrics on the justice, valour, generosity, and political wisdom, of this prince, who possessed the art, not simply of acquiring power, but of devoting it to the good of his subjects. Seventeen sons and a brother survived him to share his power, and his conquests were presently divided into several states. [E.R.]

SALADIN II., great-grandson of the preceding, assassinated after a vain attempt to recover the dominion of Egypt, 1229-1261.

SALADIN, J. B. M., a Fr. politician, d. 1810.

SALARIO, A., a painter of Milan, died 1559.

SALAZAR Y MARDONES, P. De, a Spanish historian of the emperor Charles V., died 1570.

SALAZAR Y MENDOZA, P. De, a Spanish historian of that monarchy, 17th century.

SALDEN, W., a Dutch divine, died 1694.

SALE, A. De La, a French writer, 1398-1462.

SALE, George, an Oriental scholar, best known by his translation of the Koran, was born in 1680, and died in 1736. But little is known of his personal history. He contributed the cosmogony, and a small portion of the other matter to the 'Universal History,' and his MSS. in the Radcliffe Library, comprise some valuable articles from Arabic, Persian, and Turkish literature.

SALE, Sir Robert Henry, an illustrious name in the annals of Anglo-Indian warfare, was born in 1782, and entered the army as ensign in the 36th Foot 1795. He was just in time to take a subordinate part in the achievements at the close of last century, which secured that magnificent country to the British crown; his name was more distinctly marked, however, in the Burmese war of 1824-6, in the course of which he was commissioned as lieutenant-colonel. From that period till the commencement of our enterprises in Affghanistan, there was little opportunity for reaping other laurels; but events were ripening, which soon demanded the soldier's prowess, and were destined to tax the utmost resources of our commanders. These circumstances date from 1835, commencing with the mission of Alexander Burnes, the envoy of Lord Auckland, whose object was to negotiate for consolidating the government of Dost Mahomed, as a bulwark against the designs of Russia and Persia. There appears to have been much insincerity, and certainly a good deal of procrastination and timidity in these overtures, so that eventually Dost Mahomed, instead of becoming our ally threw himself into the arms of our enemies. In 1838 Sale was appointed to the command of the 1st Bengal brigade in the impending war, and his troops formed the advance throughout the whole Affghanistan campaign; finally, in September, 1840, he defeated Dost Mahomed at Purwan-Dutrah, and compelled him to surrender to Sir William M'Naghten. In 1841 the war was renewed, and Sale commanded the brigade which stormed the Khoord Cabul Pass, but was compelled to retreat upon Jellalabad, followed by the army of Akhbar Khan. Shut up in this place, Sale and his gallant troops were closely besieged from the 12th of November, 1841, to the 7th of April, 1842, on which day he made a grand attack upon the besieging army, and so completely routed it, that he captured the guns, the ammunition, and the camp. In 1845 the Sikh army, commanded by Sirdar Tej Singh, crossed the Sutlej, and Sale was now with the British forces under Sir Hugh Gough, as quartermaster-general; the two armies met in deadly conflict at the battle of Moodkee, Dec. 18, and victory being declared for the British, Gough pushed on, and, four days later, fought the decisive battle of Ferozeshah. In the first action Sir Robert Sale had his left thigh shattered by a grape shot, which proved mortal to him; he was then in the sixty-fifth year of his age. The principal works illustrating this series of events are a 'Narrative of the War in Affghanistan in 1838-9,' by Capt. H. Havelock, 2 vols., 1840; 'A Memoir of India and Affghanistan,' by J. Harlan, 1842, and 'The History of the War in Affghanistan,' by J. W. Kaye, 2 vols., 1851. A curious little work was also published, by H. T. Prinsep, in 1844, entitled 'Note on the Historical Results deducible from Recent Discoveries in Affghanistan.' We may add that our Sikh enemies are the representatives of a religious reformation preached in India by a contemporary of Luther. [E.R.]

SALERNE, F., a French naturalist, died 1760.

SALES, St. Francis De. See Francis.

SALES, Louis, Count De, brother of St. Francis, a soldier and diplomatist, famous for his defence of Savoy against the Spaniards, and of the city of Annecy against Louis XIII.; he also negotiated the treaty of Dôle, 1577-1654. Charles, his son, governor of St. Christopher, 1625-1666.

SALFI, F., a French dramatist, 1759-1832.

SALGAR, a Turcoman chief, founder of the dynasty named after him, died 1171.

SALIAN, J., a French Jesuit, 1557-1640.

SALICETI, G., an Italian physician, died 1250.

SALICETTI, Christopher, a native of Corsica, who promoted the union of that country to France, and was successively deputy to the constituent assembly, member of the convention, and the council of 500, and finally minister of war at Naples under Joseph and Murat, 1757-1809.

SALIEVI, A., an Italian compos

SALIMBEIN, Cavaliere V
Italian painter of sacred subjects, 15

SALINAS, Francis De, a Sp
and writer on musical theory, 1513-

SALIUS, Hugues De, a French antiquary, 1632-1710. His brother, tiste, a writer on the wines of Burg

SALISBURY. See Cecil, John

SALISBURY, W., a Welch lawy
lator of the liturgy into that langua

SALLE, J. A., a French Jesuit, 1

SALLE, J. B. De La, a Fren founder of a religious order, 1631-17

SALLRE, P. De La, a designer,

SALLENGRE, A. H. De, a counsellor to the prince of Orange, 1

SALLO, Denis De, a French wri
der of modern periodical criticism, 16

[Sallust—From an Antique Bu

SALLUST, (Caius Sallustius
Roman historian, was born at Amite of the Salimes, to the north-east of Though a member of a plebeian f educated for the service of the stat
upon public life during the struggl aristocracy and the democracy which subversion of Roman liberty. Abo twenty-seven he obtained the quæsto tribune of the people in B.C. 52, he part in connection with the outrages
in the murder of Claudius and the Milo, identifying himself with the p and thereby incurring the deadly nobility. Two years after the expi buneship he was expelled from the accusers on the ground of immoral
it is quite possible that his greatest o attachment to the cause of the pe judges belonged to the opposite facti degradation, he seems to have repai
camp in Gaul, and to have accompa
ing his invasion of Italy. By Cæsa was restored to his seat in the senat to the office of prætor B.C. 47, in w
he accompanied his patron to Afric conclusion of the war, was left a Numidia. While invested with t

trust he is said to have enriched himself by plundering the country placed under his charge; and the allegation is to some extent confirmed by the fact of the immense wealth which he afterwards possessed, and which he profusely expended in forming splendid gardens on the Quirinal hill. On his return from Africa Sallust withdrew from public affairs, and spent the remainder of his life in his luxurious retreat, engaged in the composition of the historical works which he left behind him. His death took place B.C. 34. His historical works consisted of—1. The Catilina, or History of the Conspiracy of Catiline in B.C. 63, of the events of which he was a spectator. 2. The Jugurtha, or History of the War maintained by the Romans against Jugurtha, king of Numidia, from B.C. 111 to 106, the materials for which he had probably collected during his residence in that country; and 3. The Historiæ, or histories, in five books, which are said to have comprised the period from the death of Sulla, B.C. 78 to B.C. 66. The first two works have come down to us entire, of the last we have only fragments; and the loss of it is the more to be regretted, as it must have contained an account of one of the most important periods of Roman history, respecting which our information is very meagre and unsatisfactory. Of Sallust's character, as a politician and historian, very contradictory opinions have been expressed both by the ancients and the moderns. As a devoted partizan of Cæsar, he was exposed to the censure of the party of Pompey; and it is therefore probable that the charge of immorality, though not unfounded, was somewhat exaggerated by party malevolence. The allegation of extortion in his province appears to rest on a firmer foundation. His philosophical introductions have been blamed as misplaced, and as containing opinions with which the writer did not sympathize, charges which must perhaps be to some extent admitted. His two works, however, must be judged as historical essays, illustrative of great political facts, and thus admitting a greater degree of latitude on the part of the writer, than would be admissible in continuous narrative. His style, though elaborate and artificial, is generally concise and perspicuous, but is occasionally marred by the use of archaic words, and by a love of brevity which is obviously the result of imitation. He is, however, entitled to the merit of being the first Roman who wrote what is now regarded as history. [G.F.]

SALLUSTIUS, a Platonist of the 4th century.

SALMANAZAR, a king of Nineveh, 8th c. B.C.

SALMASIUS. See SAUMAISE.

SALMERON, A., a Span. theologian, 1515-85.

SALMON, E. G., a Spanish statesman, d. 1832.

SALMON, F., a French priest, 1667-1736.

SALMON, J., otherwise Maigret or Macrinus, a Latin poet, teacher of the children of René of Savoy, 1490-1517. His son, CHARLES, a Latin poet, massacred on Bartholomew's day, 1572.

SALMON, NATHANAEL, a non-juring divine, known as an antiquary and extensive writer of county history, died 1742. THOMAS, his brother, a chronologist and historian, died about 1750.

SALMON, R., an Eng. mechanician, 1763-1821.

SALMON, U. P., a Fr. mineralogist, 1767-1805.

SALMON, W., a miscellaneous wr., d. abt. 1700.

SALOME, a Jewish princess, died 72.

SALOMON, J. P., a Ger. musician, 1745-1815.

SALONIUS, a French prelate, 5th century.

SALT, HENRY, a traveller and philologist, author of an 'Essay upon Hieroglyphics,' d. 1827.

SALTER, S., a learned divine, died 1773.

SALTMARSH, JOHN, an Antinomian minister, chaplain in the army under Fairfax, died 1647.

SALUTATO, L. COLUCCIO PIERIO, a Latin poet and chancellor of Florence, 1330-1400.

SALVA, F., a Spanish physician, 1747-1808.

SALVATOR ROSA. See ROSA.

SALVERTE, ANNE JOSEPH EUSEBIUS BACONNIERE, a member of the French chamber of deputies, to which he was first returned in 1828. He was a liberal in politics, and wrote an 'Historical Essay upon the Names of Men and Places,' and a work on the 'Occult Sciences.' In the latter he ascribes all the mysteries of antiquity to the knowledge possessed by the priests in natural philosophy, and, that failing them, to trickery and imposture, 1771-1839.

SALVI, N., an Italian architect, 1699-1751.

SALVI, TARQUINIO, an Italian painter, 16th cent. GIAMBATISTA, his son and pupil, 1605-85.

SALVIANI, H., an icthyologist, 1514-1572.

SALVIATI, F. ROSSI DE, an Italian painter, 1510-1563. For Salviati 'the Younger,' see PORTA.

SALVIATI, GIOVANNI, an Ital. cardinal, dist. as a great protector of arts and letters, 1490-1553.

SALVINI, A. M., a learned Italian, 1653-1729.

SAMBUCUS, JOHN, a learned Hungarian physician, antiquary, and historian, 1531-1584.

SAMERIUS, H., a German Jesuit, 1540-1610.

SAMMES, A., an English antiquary, died 1679.

SAMPSON, H., a nonconf. divine, died 1705.

SAMPSON, THOMAS, an eminent reformer and companion of the refugees at Geneva, nephew by marriage to Latimer, 1517-1589.

SAMSON, OLE JOHAN, a Danish dramatist and author of Scandinavian Tales, 1759-1796.

SAMSON, a judge of Israel, 12th century B.C.

SAMUEL, the last judge of Israel, and one of their prophets, supposed date 1132-1043 B.C.

SAMUEL, a king of Bulgaria, 971-1014.

SAMWELL, DAVID, surgeon of the Discovery when Captain Cook was murdered, died 1799.

SANADON, N. S., a French Jesuit, 1676-1733.

SANCERRE, L. DE, constable of France, distinguished in arms against the English, 1342-1402.

SANCHES, ANT. NUNEZ RIBEIRO, a Portuguese physician in the Russian army, 1699-1783.

SANCHEZ, F., a Portug. philoso., 1562-1632.

SANCHEZ, FRANCISCO, in Latin Sanctius Brocensis, a Spanish grammarian, 1523-1601.

SANCHEZ, G., a Spanish Jesuit, died 1628.

SANCHEZ, PETER ANTHONY, a learned Spanish ecclesiastic and philanthropist, 1740-1806.

SANCHEZ, T., a Spanish casuist, 1550-1610.

SANCHEZ, T. A., a bibliographer, 1732-1798.

SANCHO, IGNATIUS, a negro slave, remarkable for his attainments in polite literature, author of a 'Theory of Music,' 'Letters,' &c., 1729-1780.

SANCHONIATHON, a Phœnician historian, regarded as the most ancient writer of the heathen world, is supposed to have been a native of Berytus, but as the age to which he is referred is beyond the historical epoch, nothing certain can be related of him. Even the authenticity of the fragments attributed to him has been disputed, but it only requires an ordinary acquaintance with the understanding of those remote ages to be convinced that they are genuine remains of a very high antiquity, whether written by Sanchoniathon or any other. The history attributed to him was composed in the Phœnician language, and its materials collected from the archives of the Phœnician cities, and from the registers preserved in the Phœnician and Egyptian temples. It was translated into Greek by Philo Byblius, in the reign of Hadrian, and the existing fragments of it preserved by Eusebius amongst the citations of his 'Evangelical Preparation.' One fragment is called 'The Cosmogony,' professedly derived from Tautus, Thoth, Athothis, or Hermes. Another, and by far the larger, is called the 'Generations;' it presents many interesting points of comparison with the Mosaic Scriptures, and professes to be the real history of those times stripped of allegory. 'All these things, the son of Thabion, the first Hierophant of all among the Phœnicians, allegorized and mixed up with the occurrences and accidents of nature and the world, and delivered to the priests and prophets, the superintendents of the mysteries, and they, perceiving the rage for these allegories increase, delivered them to their successors and to foreigners; of whom one was Isiris, the inventor of the three letters, the brother of Chna, who is called 'the first Phœnician.' The third and last fragment is a few lines preserved from Sanchoniathon's history of the Serpent. The whole will be found in Cory, who suggests that Sanchoniathon's omission of any direct notice of the flood, in which he differs from all other ancient writers, may be accounted for by his determination to reject whatever was allegorical. [E.R.]

SANCROFT, WILLIAM, archbishop of Canterbury, one of the prelates sent to the Tower by James II. in 1688, for refusing to order the public reading of the king's declaration of indulgence in favour of the Catholics, 1616-1693.

SANCTIUS. See SANCHEZ.

SANCTORIUS, SAUCTORIUS, whose true name was Santori Sautorio, an Italian physician of considerable distinction, was born at Capo D'Istria, in 1561, and died at Venice in 1636, aged seventy-five. He was the founder of what is called the Statical School in Medicine, and in 1612 published a treatise entitled, Ars de Medicina Statica, in which he endeavoured to estimate the loss of weight that the body undergoes by the various excretions, particularly by insensible transpiration, to which he attached much importance. [J.M'C.]

SAND, CHRISTOPHER VAN DEN, in Latin Sandius, a German Socinian, 1644-1680.

SAND, C. L., a German student, member of a secret society, and assass. of Kotzebue, 1795-1818.

SANDBY, P., an English artist, 1732-1809.

SANDE, JOHN VAN DEN, a Dutch jurisconsult and historian, died 1638.

SANDEMAN, ROBERT, founder of the sect who took from him the denomination of Sandemanians, was a native of Perth, in Scotland, where he was born 1723. He was educated at the university of Edinburgh, and having married a daughter of the Rev. John Glass, became a follower of his opinions and an elder in one of his churches. The subject of controversy which led to the formation of this party, was a particular view of the nature of justifying faith, but they differ, also, from other communions in the matter of discipline and church fellowship, especially in the administration of the sacrament of the Holy Supper. Their fundamental tenets are Calvinistic. Sandeman died at Danbury, aged forty-eight, 1771.

SANDEN, H. DE, a Ger. physician, 1672-1728.

SANDER, ANTHONY, in Latin Sanderus, a Flemish topographer and antiquary, 1586-1664.

SANDERS, NICHOLAS, a Roman Catholic theologian and controversial writer, 1527-1580.

SANDERS, R., a miscellaneous wr., 1727-1783.

SANDERSON, ROBERT, an English antiquarian, historian of Henry V., &c., 1660-1741.

SANDERSON, ROBERT, bishop of Lincoln, distinguished for his extensive antiquarian, scholastic, and historical information, known as a casuist and polemical writer, 1587-1663.

SANDERUS. See SANDER.

SANDES. See SANDYS.

SANDFORD, SIR DANIEL KEYTE, professor of Greek at Glasgow, son of Dr. Sandford, a prelate of the Scottish Episcopal Church, died 183[illegible]

SANDFORD F., a heraldist, 1630-1693.

SANDINI, A., an Italian historian, 1692-17[illegible]

SANDIUS. See SAND.

SANDOVAL, F. P. DE, a Sp. histor., 1560-1[illegible]

SANDRART, JOACHIM VON, a native of Fr[illegible] fort, disting. as a painter and art-writer, 1606

SANDWICH. See MONTAGU.

SANDYS, or SANDES, EDWIN, a dignitar[illegible] the church, who was vice-chancellor of Cambr[illegible] on the accession of Queen Mary, and suffered d[illegible] sition and imprisonment as a partizan of [illegible] Jane Grey. In the reign of Elizabeth he was [illegible] cessively bishop of Worcester and London, [illegible] archbishop of York, and had a share in the tr[illegible] lation known as the Bishops' Bible, 1519-[illegible] SIR EDWIN, his second son, a traveller and d[illegible] matist, to whom some sacred poems have [illegible] attributed, 1561-1629. GEORGE, brother o[illegible] latter, and seventh son of the archbishop, a[illegible] veller and classical translator, 1577-1643.— [illegible] declared that English poetry owed much o[illegible] beauty to the translations of George Sandys, [illegible] was highly esteemed by his contemporaries f[illegible] learning and virtues.

SANE, A. M., a French writer, 1773-1818.

SANGALLO, GIULIANO GIAMBERTI, c[illegible] an Italian artist and architect, son of Fran[illegible] Giamberti, 1443-1517. ANTONIO, his br[illegible] employed by Alexander VI. to convert Had[illegible] mausoleum into a fortress, now the castle o[illegible] Angelo, died 1534. ANTONIO, nephew of the [illegible] ceding, and the most distinguished architect of [illegible] family, a pupil of Bramante, 1482-1546. AN[illegible] NIO BAPTISTA GOBBO, brother of the latter [illegible] translator of Vitruvius. His nephew, BASTIA[illegible] a painter, decorator, and architect, 1481-1551.

SAN-GIORGIO, BENVENUTO DA, an Ital[illegible] historian and diplomatist, 1450-1525.

SANMICHELLI, MICHELE, an Ital. architect[illegible] friend of Bramante and Michelangelo, 1484-1559.

SANNAZARO, J., an Italian poet, 1458-1530.

SAN-SEVERO, RAYMOND DE SANGRO, prince of, a Neapolitan, eminent for his mechanical inventions and as an amateur of the arts, 1710-71.

SANSON, NICHOLAS, a French geographer,

r the accuracy and number of his maps, . His three sons, NICHOLAS, WILLIAM, AN, were remarkable in the same art. JAMES, a genealogist and ecclesiastical f Abbeville, 1596-1665.

VINO, JACOPO TATTI, called, an Ital- r and architect, 1479-1570. FRAN- son, a grammarian, 1521-1586.

-CRUZ, ALVAREZ DE BASSANO, Mar- Spanish admiral, died 1587.

-CRUZ DE MARZENADO, ALVAR, e, a Spanish general, diplomatist, and . 1687, k. by the Moors at Oran, 1732.

N, L. VAN, a Dutch poet, 1746-1798.

RRE, ANTOINE JOSEPH, an actor in revolution, a brewer, of Flemish descent, t Paris 1752. He was by no means the cter sometimes represented, but well and the possessor of a large fortune, trade. His familiarity with the work- employ, and his extreme generosity ine time, he gave away nearly £12,000 eat and rice) made him popular in St. d he became commander of the battalion rter. He displayed great courage and mind at the storming of the Bastile, deserve remembrance if it were only for ct about the same time, that of saving ble Bibliothèque du Roi from destruc- mob. In May, 1792, he became com- the national guard, and on the 20th of the Marseillaise had arrived, and the invaded by the populace, he thrust his riots out of the queen's chamber and Marie Antoinette and her children from rage; it is said that from this time may he secret understanding that the queen he agitators of the faubourgs. Many nces of the good nature of this Ajax of n populace might be mentioned, as that the drums to cease beating for a few when Louis was on the scaffold; this ing the opportunity of addressing a few he people, and so provoked the Mar- at they would have commenced firing he drums instantly struck up again by nother general. Santerre possessing t, but a vast deal of courage, often run sk to save life and property, and there er that he miscarried, when despatched dée, in command of an army, to oppose For this mischance, however, he was o prison, and did not recover his liberty the fall of Robespierre. His good- d useful, though not very brilliant part nge drama of history was now at an end, d in obscurity 1809. [E.R.]

RRE, J. B., a Fr. painter, 1651-1717.

UIL, or SANTEUL, JOHN DE, in tolius, a French ecclesiastic and Latin -1697.

RIO. See SANCTORIUS.

S, J. DOS, a Portng. mission., d. 1622.

O, MARCO, a Venetian general who himself in the army of crusaders who the Greek empire, 1153-1220. AN- of the preceding, and his successor as he Archipelago, 1195-1254. MARCO, lo and third duke, died 1263. GULIELMO, son and successor of Marco, 1284. NICOLO, son and successor of the latter, distinguished against the Genoese and the Turks. GIOVANNI, brother of Nicolo, sixth and last duke, married his daughter to the prince of Negropont, who became prince of Naxos.

SANUTO, LIVIO, a Venetian noble, distinguished as a poet, historian, and geographer, 1530-1586.

SANUTO, MARINO, a Venetian traveller in the East, author of a curious work, 14th century. His relative, of the same name, historiographer to the state of Venice, an. of valuable Diaries, 1466-1531.

SANZIO, J. DE, an Italian painter, 15th cent.

SAPOR I., king of Persia of the Sassanide dynasty, succeeded his father, Artaxerxes, 240. He invaded Mesopotamia 242, and having conquered Armenia, Syria, and Cilicia, he put to death the emperor Valerius with great cruelty. He was defeated by Odenatus 269, and died 271. SAPOR II., a posthumous son of Hormisdas II., was proclaimed 310, before his birth. He became an active and warlike prince in conflict with the Romans, and was a great enemy to Christianity, died 380. SAPOR III., succeeded Artaxerxes II., 384, he kept peace with the Romans, died 389.

SAPOR, a king of Armenia, 420.

SAPPHO, a lyric poetess of old Greece, born at Lesbos, and supposed to have flourished about 610 B.C. Nothing certain is known of her life, but she is represented as a woman of dissolute morals, and is said to have drowned herself in consequence of the neglect of a youth with whom she had become enamoured. The invention of the Sapphic verse is attributed to her, but there only remains of her writings a 'Hymn to Venus,' and an 'Ode to a Young Female,' which have been rendered into English by Ambrose Philips. The contradictory traditions concerning her life have led to the supposition that other celebrated women of the same name must have lived at different epochs.

SARABIA, J. DE, a Span. painter, 1608-1669.

SARAVIA, H. A., of Spanish origin, but reckoned among English divines, was a professor of divinity and friend of Hooker, 1531-1613.

SARAZIN, J., a French sculptor, 1590-1660.

SARAZNO, J., a French marshal, 1770-1824.

SARBIEWSKI, MATTHIAS CASIMIR, in Latin Sarbievius, a Polish lyric poet, 1595-1640.

SARCHIANI, GUISEPPE, an Italian economist, archivist of Tuscany during the revol., 1746-1821.

SARCMASIUS. See SCHURTZFLEISCH.

SARDANAPALUS, the name of several princes of Assyria, the most celebrated of whom was the last sovereign of the first Assyrian empire. His reign dates from 836 to 817 B.C., when he was dethroned by Arbaces and Belesis, at the head of a revolt of the Medes, Persians, and Babylonians. In the last extremity, Sardanapalus, who had withstood a siege for three years in Nineveh, placed himself, his treasures, his wives, and his eunuchs on a funeral pile, which he fired with his own hand. He had ceased to exist when the city was taken, and that event was followed by the dismemberment of the Assyrian empire. The above date is only an approximation to the true one, as authorities vary. [E.R.]

SARPI, PIETRO, called Fra Paolo, a Venetian historian, and defender of the republic against the pope, Paul V., 1552-1623.

SARRABAT, N., a French botanist, 1698-1737.
SARRASIN, J. A., a Fr. physician, 16th cent.
SARRASIN, J. F., a French poet, 1603-1654
SARRASIN, M., a naturalist, 1659-1736.
SARTI, G., an Italian composer, 1730-1802.
SARTO, ANDREA VANNUCCHI, called DEL, the most dist. painter of the Tuscan school, 1488-1530.
SASSI. See SAXI.
SAUL, the first king of the Israelites, perished in combat with the Philistines B.C. 1040.
SAULI, the apostle of Corsica, 1535-1592.
SAUMAISE, CLAUDE, in Latin Salmasius, a native of Burgundy, eminent for his learning as a critic, commentator, Orientalist, and archæologist. He was born in 1588, and having retired to Holland on account of his protestantism, succeeded Scaliger as professor of history at Leyden in 1631. In 1649 he wrote a Latin memorial in defence of Charles I., which was answered by Milton for the parliament. In 1650 he visited the court of Sweden by invitation from Queen Christina, and is said to have suffered from the climate, so that he never recovered, but died in 1658. His father, BENIGNE DE SAUMAISE, was a Greek scholar, and counsellor to the parliament of Burgundy, 1560-1640.
SAUMAREZ, JAMES, Lord De, a British admiral, who was born in Guernsey 1757, and first signalized himself in the naval service during the American war. In 1797 he was in the action off Cape St. Vincent, and was second in command to Nelson at the battle of the Nile, fought soon after. In 1801 he was named rear-admiral of the blue, and appointed to the command of the squadron off Cadiz. With this little fleet he won a signal victory, for which he received the thanks of both houses of parliament, and a pension of £1,200. He became vice-admiral in 1831, died 1836.
SAUNDERS, SIR E., an Engl. judge, d. 1683.
SAUNDERS, J. C., a dist. oculist, 1773-1810.
SAUNDERS, W., a medical writer, 1743-1819.
SAUNDERSON, NICHOLAS, a native of Thurleston, in Yorkshire, who distinguished himself as a mathematician, though he was deprived of his sight by small-pox when only twelve months old. He was born in 1682, and succeeded Whiston as professor of mathematics at Cambridge university in 1711. The account of Saunderson's experience, the quickness to which his senses of hearing and feeling were heightened, and his surprising acquisitions, is one of the most interesting in biographical literature. Died 1739.
SAURIN, ELIE, a French protestant minister, 1639-1703. JOSEPH, his brother, a natural philosopher and mathematician, remarkable for his independent spirit, and for his controversies with Rolle, Huyghens, and Rousseau; he also abjured Calvinism, 1659-1737. BERNARD JOSEPH, son of the latter, a dramatic writer, 1706-1791.
SAURIN, JAMES, one of the most eminent protestant ministers of France, was the son of a lawyer at Nismes, and became pastor of the Walloon church in London, and afterwards to the protestant nobles who had sought refuge at the Hague. He is the author of some theological and critical works, 1677-1730.
SAURIN, RIGHT HON. WILLIAM, an Irish lawyer, and attorney-general, 1767-1840.
SAUSSAY, A. DU, a Fr. theolog., 1589-1675.
SAUSSURE, H. B., a Swiss natural. and philosopher, disting. for his valuable observations mad while exploring the glaciers of the Alps, and fo improvements in scientific instruments, 1740-99.
SAUSSURE, NICHOLAS THEODORE DE, bor
at Geneva, October, 1767; died April, 1845; son o
the preceding. He accompanied his father in hi travels, and assisted him in many of his researche
He afterwards devoted himself to physiologica chemistry, and contributed many important paper to this department of science. Priestley ha shown that plants absorbed carbonic acid; Saus sure confirmed this observation, and proved tha
a small proportion of this gas in the atmosphere favours vegetation, but that a larger amount asphyxiates plants. He likewise devoted muc time to a subject originally broached by Kirwan, viz., the connection between the inorganic con stituents of plants and the soils on which they grow, and established Kirwan's view that inorgan food is necessary for vegetation. He likewis made numerous researches on the composition of the air, at Geneva, particularly on the proportion of carbonic acid which is present in different con ditions of the atmosphere; and obtained resu which have been confirmed by the experiments more modern chemists with all the delicate app ances of recent discovery. He was one of the persons to point out the identity of sugar of mi
and of grapes; and to invent modes of anal organic substances so early as the beginn
the present century. [R.
SAUVAGE, D., a French historian, 1520—SAUVAGES, F. BOISSIER DE, a French ist, 1706-1767. His brother, P AUGUS philologist, 1716-1795.
SAUVAL, H., a French historian, 1620-SAUVEUR, JOSEPH, a French physici mathematician, who created the science of acoustics, 1653-1716.
SAVAGE, HENRY, chaplain to Charles I historian of Balliol college, 1604-1672.
SAVAGE, JOHN, a facetious divine, su
author of a 'Collection of Letters,' &c., die SAVAGE, RICHARD, has very little cl remembrance as a poet. Yet he threw off happy lines and phrases, and, among other often-quoted verse, 'The tenth transmitte foolish face.' His best poems, too, 'The Wan and 'The Bastard,' have, especially the latt interest which belongs to strong feeling ve real facts. The history of this unfortunate was a tragic romance; and it has preserve name by having been related in one of the impressive of narratives. His biographer, S Johnson, who became acquainted with him
the two were alike destitute and hopeless, s
of him with an affection which, amidst al unlucky man's faults, must have been justifi
some good points in his character. From J son's 'Life of Savage' the facts may be learned. He was born 1698, the illegitimate of two persons of rank, was persecuted by mother, narrowly escaped execution for mu and, after a miserable life of forty-five years, di
a prisoner for debt, in 1743. [W.
SAVARON, J., a French writer, 1550-1622.
SAVART, F., a French physician, 1791-1841.
SAVARY, A. C., a French physician and pup of the physiologist Bichat, 1776-1814.

, JAMES, farmer of the revenues of crown, and a writer on commercial .690. His two sons, JAMES and compiled 'The Universal Dictionary e,' published 1723.

, NICHOLAS, a French traveller and 1750-1788. JULIAN, his brother, the wars of La Vendeé, 1824.

, RENE, a distinguished French general. ative of Ardennes, and was appointed end'armes by the first consul for his perhaps more for his ready obedience the sentence against the unfortunate ghien. He was created DUKE OF his services in Prussia, and com- army in Spain until the arrival of succeeded the duke of Otranto as eral of police. After the restoration retirement; but at the revolution in he was appointed commander-in-chief n army, 1774-1833.

EN, ALEXANDER, a French mathe- l writer on naval tactics, 1720-1805.

Y, C. DE, a French writer, born 1540.

, SIR HENRY, a native of Yorkshire, l as an elegant Greek scholar, mathe- d patron of learning, founder of two s at Oxford, 1549-1622.

, GEORGE. See HALIFAX.

, L. V., an Italian poet, 1729-1804.

O, G., an Italian painter, 16th cent.

ROLA, J. M., a physician of Padua, His grandson, GIROLAMO, next ar- HAEL, of the same family, a compiler, INNOCENT RAPHAEL, nephew of the n author, 1680-1748.

ROLA, GIROLAMO, or JEROME, Ferrara, 12th October, 1452. He eligious education, and was in some precocious youth. Though originally his father's profession, as a physician, became a Dominican monk in 1474. ng philosophy for a season, he devoted tention to preaching, and produced a ion by the pointedness and vehemence oratory. In 1489 he removed to Flo- in the convent of St. Marco, and de- h extraordinary freedom and daring, usual success, against every form of ice, and unbelief. His unbounded in- constitutional ardour, seem to have magination, and he ventured on occa- ctions, at once novel and startling, ed them in the form of authentic under the impression that they were lations to himself from heaven. With e boldness and energy, he interfered olities of Florence, inculcated demo- pposed the ascendancy of the Medici, en they were expelled, he became a e triumphant party. These victors at deliberative council, and discussed omp the affairs of state, while Savo- xalted by them into a kind of prophetic president of the republic. His enemies, time, accused him to the pope, Alexan- n impostor and a heretic. His holiness him to Rome, but the reformer refused citation. On this refusal he was ex- communicated and forbidden to preach. But this sentence only excited him to more terrible denunciations, in which the pope himself was styled a usurper. A Franciscan inquisitor was sent to challenge and confront Savonarola, but the citizens interfered and sheltered him. The popular tide at length turned, when he shrank, after some vacillations, from subjecting his cause to an ordeal by fire. His antagonists entered the convent, dragged him out, placed him on the rack, and extorted some ejaculations from the unhappy victim, which their malignity easily construed into confessions of guilt. On being ultimately condemned to death with two of his associates, he was first strangled, then his body was tossed into the flames, and his ashes were thrown into the river, 23d May, 1498. The most of Savonarola's writings were in Italian, and only a few in Latin. He left behind him about 300 sermons and 50 tracts. His 'Triumphus Crucis,' is a work of some power, but his genius is principally seen in those sermons in which the errors of Romanism are unsparingly condemned, and many evangelical truths illustrated and enforced, and which are also distinguished and filled with peculiar unction and piety. The opinions of Roman Catholic writers vary widely as to the character of this hero-martyr, some holding him to be a saint, and others branding him as a heretic. Burned by one pope, he was tacitly canonized by another. Over the room he inhabited in the convent of St. Mark, still stands an inscription with the epithet—'Vir Apostolicus.' Savonarola was in many things in advance of his age, and was a reformer before the reformation. Eloquent, sincere, and devout, he laboured with heart and soul for his church and country, and met with that fate which the patriot and apostle have so often received from a fickle people, and an alarmed and vindictive despotism. [J.E.]

SAVOT, L., a French numismatist, 1579-1640.

SAWYER, SIR ROBERT, one of the chief counsel for the seven bps., reign of James II., d. 1692.

SAXE, CHRISTOPHER, in Latin Saxius, a German philologist and literary historian, 1714-1806.

SAXE. COUNT MAURICE of Saxony, better known in history as Marshal Saxe, was the natural son of Augustus II., king of Poland, and elector of Saxony. Maurice was a soldier, and saw actual service at the siege of Lisle, when he was only 12 years old. He was at Malplaquet in 1709; and he afterwards served under Prince Eugene against the Turks. In 1720 he was introduced to the Regent Orleans, who persuaded him to enter into the French service, and gave him the rank of marshal. Though a married man, he was as notorious for the frequency of his love adventures, as for his military abilities. He obtained the Duchy of Courland in 1726, through the fondness of the Duchess Anna for him, but he soon lost his new principality. He alienated the duchess by his inconstancy, and thus lost also the chance of becoming emperor of Russia, when Anna succeeded to the throne of the czars in 1730. When the war broke out between France and Austria in 1733, Marshal Saxe solicited and obtained employment in the French armies. He distinguished himself greatly at the siege of Philipsburg; and when peace was made in 1736 he devoted some time to the study of the art of war, and to the composition of a treatise on that subject, which is still cited by military writers. It was in the general European war, which began in 1740, that he gained the triumphs by which he is best known. He commanded the French army at Fontenoy in 1745, and won a memorable victory over the English and their allies, which was followed by the conquest of all Belgium. At the commencement of the campaign of that year, Marshal Saxe was lying ill at Paris, with his constitution utterly ruined by the dissolute life which he had long led, and suffering under a severe attack of dropsy. His physicians told him that if he left Paris for the army they could not answer for his life. His answer was, 'The question now is not how I am to live, but how I am to go,' and he went and conquered accordingly. He was obliged to be tapped only five days before the battle was fought; and he was carried about in a litter during the engagement. The victory of the French was due mainly to his skill and energy, and to the valour of the Irish brigade in the French service. In 1747 he gained a second victory over the English and their allies at Laffelt. He survived the conclusion of the war about two years, and died in 1750, loaded with honours by the French, who were indebted to him for the two chief of the very few successes which they have ever had in fair pitched battles against the English. [E.S.C.]

SAXE-COBOURG. See COBURG.

SAXE-GOTHA, ERNEST, duke of, a commander in the German wars of Gustavus Adolphus, 1601-1675. ERNEST II., a great patron of the sciences and letters, 1745-1804.

SAXE-GOTHA and ALTENBERG, E. LEOPOLD, duke of, distinguished as a poet and musician, 1772-1822.

SAXE-TESCHEN, ALBERT, duke of, son of Augustus II., king of Poland, and brother of the dauphiness, mother of Louis XVI., known as an enemy of the French republic, 1738-1822.

SAXE-WEIMAR, BERNARD, duke of, one of the most celebrated generals of the protestants during the thirty years' war, 1600-1639.

SAXI, or SASSI, GUISEPPE ANTONIO, an ecclesiastical historian of Milan, 1675-1751.

SAXO, called GRAMMATICUS, on account of his learning, a Danish historian, 12th century.

SAY, J. B., a French economist, 1767-1832.

SAY, SAMUEL, a dissenting minister, known as a poet and essayist, died 1743.

SCACCHI, F., an Italian savant, 1573-1643.

SCACCIA, J., an Italian engineer, 1778-1833.

SCÆVOLA, MUTIUS, one of the heroes of Roman story, said to have conspired with 300 others against Porsenna. He saved his life by an act of heroism, of which the record will be found in Livy.

SCALA, BARTOLOMMEO, gonfalonier of Florence, and the historian of his state, 1430-1495. His daughter, ALESSANDRA, wife of the poet Marullus, celeb. for her great learning, died 1506.

SCALA, DELLA, a famous Ghibelline family of Ferrara, principal of whom are MASTINO, elected podesta about 1260, assassinated by the Guelphs 1277. ALBERT, his brother, who avenged his death and governed after him from 1277 to 1300. CAN FRANCESCO, called 'The Great,' the most illustrious of the family, grandson of Mastino, podesta from 1312 to his death in 1329. Dante, who found a refuge at his court, has immortalised him in verse. A second MASTINO, nephew of the latter, reigned 1329-1351. He was followed by CAN II. and CAN III., both his sons, the latter of whom died 1375. ANTONIO, a natural son of Can III., reigned with his brother, Bartolommeo, and had him put to death 1381. He afterwards lost his estates, and died 1388.

SCALA, D. DE LA, a physician, 1632-1677.

SCALIGER, JULIUS CÆSAR, called the 'Elder,' a famous classical scholar and commentator, was born at Padua or Verona in 1484, and being naturalized in France, died at Agen in 1558. His history is disputed, as he is not believed to be the person he represented himself, but rather a Giulio Bordone, son of Benedetto Bordone, a Paduan, who followed the profession of an illuminator at Vienna. His inordinate vanity is supposed to have prompted him to pretend to a relationship with the Scalas of Verona. He acquired great reputation in France by his skill in polemics.

SCALIGER, JOSEPH JUSTUS, son of the preceding, and the creator of the chronological science, was born at Agar in 1540, and in 1593 became professor of polite literature at Leyden. He surpassed his father in learning, and drew largely upon his stock of words in all languages to enrich his learned contemporaries, with many of whom, like his father, he entered into angry controversy. The merit belongs to him of inventing the Julian period. Died 1609.

SCAMOZZI, V., an Ital. architect, 1552—

SCANDERBEG, or BEY ALEXANDER, a celebrated Albanian chief, whose proper name was George Castriotto. His father, Prince John of Albania, gave him in hostage to Amurath II. The sultan had him educated in the Mahometan faith, and at the age of eighteen gave him the command of a body of 5,000 troops, which he led against the Servians. His father dying in 1432, he resolved to acquire possession of his hereditary principality. Being a man of great prowess and energy of character, he soon effected his purpose, having previously renounced the Mahometan faith and allegiance to the sultan, by deserting to the Christians and joining Hunniades, general of the Hungarian army. Becoming chief of the Albanians, a protracted and harassing war followed, with various fortune, until, by repeated successes, he completely consolidated his power and preserved the independence of his country. He was a great terror to the Turks, who called him the 'White Devil of Wallachia,' and the Albanians still celebrate him in their national songs. After his death, however, his country soon submitted to Mussulman rule, 1404-1467.

SCANDIANESE, whose proper name was TITUS GANZARINI, an Italian dramatist, 1518—

SCAPULA, J., a Germ. lexicographer, 16th

SCARAMUCCIA, L. PELLEGRINI, a Milan painter and engraver, 1616-1680.

SCARBOROUGH, SIR CHARLES, physician Charles II., known as a mathematician, 1616-93

SCARDONA, J. F., an It. physic., 1718-180

SCARLATTI, ALESSANDRO, the founder of the Neapolitan school of music, 1650-1725. His son DOMENICO, a composer and harpist, 1683-1757. GIUSEPPE, son of the latter, an opera composer, 1718-1776.

SCARPA, A., an Italian anatomist, 1747-1832.

SCARRON, PAUL, famous in French literature as a burlesque writer and comic poet, was born at Paris in 1610. Having wasted his fortune in debauchery, he commenced writing for the theatres, and received a pension from Anne of Austria, which was withdrawn on the appearance of his 'Mazarinade.' In 1652 he persuaded the Mademoiselle D'Abigne, afterwards the famous Madame de Maintenon, to marry him, and fortunately for her, departed this life in 1660. The best of his works is the 'Roman Comique,' translated by Goldsmith.

SCARSELLA, SIGISMUND, surnamed Modino, an Italian painter, 1530-1614. His son, IPPOLITO, surnamed Scarlepino, a painter, 1551-1621.

SCARSGILL, W. P., an English wr., d. 1836.

SCAVINI, J. M., an Ital. physic., 1770-1825.

SCHAAF, C., a Germ. Orientalist, 1646-1719.

SCHAARSCHMIDT, ANTONY and SAMUEL, distinguished surgeons and anatomists, the former 1720-1791, the latter 1709-1747.

SCHABOL, J. R., a Fr. agricultur., 1690-1768.

SCHADOW, Z. R., an Ital. sculp., 1786-1822.

SCHADOW, J. G., a Germ. sculp., 1764-1850.

SCHÆFFER, G. H., a Ger. Hellenist, 1764-1840.

SCHÆFFER, J. C., a German naturalist, 1718-1790. His brother, J. GOTTLIEB, a physician, 1720-1795.

SCHALKEN, G., a Dutch painter, 1643-1706.

SCHALL, J. A., a Ger. missionary, 1591-1659.

SCHANK, JOHN, a native of Fifeshire, distinguished as a naval officer and engineer, 1740-1823.

SCHANNAT, J. F., a Ger. historian, 1683-1739.

SCHARD, S., a German compiler, 1535-1573.

SCHARFENBERG, G. L., a German entomologist, duchy of Saxe-Meiningen, 1746-1810.

SCHARROK, R., an English philosopher of the school of Hobbes, 17th century.

SCHATTEN, N., histor. of Westphalia, 1608-76.

SCHATZ, G., a German poet, 1763-1795.

SCHAUFELEIN, J., a Dutch painter and engraver, taught by Albert Durer, 1487-1550.

SCHEDE, P., a German poet, 1539-1600.

SCHEDE, E., a Germ. antiquarian, 1615-1641.

SCHEDONE, or SCHIDONE, BARTOLOMEO, an Italian painter, style of Correggio, 1570-1615.

SCHEELE, CHARLES WILLIAM, a native of Sweden, born 19th December, 1742, at Stralsund, Sweden; died 21st May, 1786, at Köping on Lake Moeler. This distinguished Swedish chemist, the son of a tradesman, was educated at a private academy in his native town, and afterwards at a public school, and then served his apprenticeship as an apothecary at Gotheborg. He subsequently acted as assistant to apothecaries at Malmo, Stockholm, and Upsala. There his genius attracted the attention of the professors at this celebrated university, who encouraged him in his pursuits; but it is remarkable that the Swedish government, although aware of his talents, allowed, perhaps the ablest man which that country has produced, ultimately to end his days as a humble apothecary in a village on the banks of Lake Moeler. To him we owe the discovery of fluorine, chlorine, and of molybdic, tungstic, uremic, lactic, gallic, tartaric, oxalic, citric, malic, purpuric, and saclactic acids, glycerine and oxygen. He ascertained the nature and the constituents of ammonia and prussic acid, the characters of barytes and manganese, and the elements of the atmosphere. Few men of his century, with the exception of Priestley, can be compared with him as a discoverer. The last act of his life exhibits his character in a highly honourable phase. When in 1777 he bought the apothecaries' shop at Köping, he formed the intention of marrying the widow of his predecessor, and only delayed for the purpose of saving so much property as to make such an alliance desirable on her part. While labouring under a mortal rheumatic affection he declared his intention of marrying her in March, 1786; but his disease increasing rapidly, it was not till the 19th May that the ceremony was performed. On the 21st he left her all his property, and on the same day he breathed his last. [R.D.T.]

SCHEELS, R. H., a Dutch savant, 1622-1664.

SCHEFFEL, C. S., a Ger. physic., 1693-1763.

SCHEFFER, JOHN, a German archæologist and literary savant, professor at Upsala, 1621-1679. His grandson, HENRY THEOPHILUS, a Swedish chemist and botanist, 1710-1759.

SCHEIBE, J. A., a Ger. composer, 1708-1776.

SCHEID, E., a Dutch Orientalist, 1742-1795.

SCHEIDT, BALTHAZAR, a German theologian and Orientalist, 1624-1670. His son, VALENTINE, a physician, 1651-1731.

SCHEIDT, CHR. L., a legist and historiographer to the king of Denmark, 1709-1761.

SCHEINER, C., a Ger. astronomer, 1575-1650.

SCHELHAMMER, CHRISTOPHER, a Dutch botanist, 1620-1652. His son, GONTHIER CHRISTOPHER, a physician and botanist, 1649-1716.

SCHELLER, E. J. G., a German lexicographer and philologist, 1735-1803.

SCHELLING, FREDERICK WILLIAM JOSEPH; born at Leonberg in Wirtemberg, 27th January, 1775: his philosophical career seems closed, but Schelling still lives in honoured retirement near Berlin. We shall certainly not attempt to give a critical account of the speculations of this remarkable man. It must suffice if we can point out his place, in the history of recent German philosophy, and define his practical influence over his contemporaries: nor do we undertake even this, unless under concession of the license to employ such general language as alone may convey to the reader of notices like these, some distinct conception of the character of an obscure and difficult theme.—The order of recent German speculation, as marked by its authors, is the following—KANT, FICHTE, SCHELLING, HEGEL. In the article devoted to him, we have explained pretty fully the peculiar achievements of KANT, which were briefly these;—living in an age when the pure sensational philosophy had arrived at its lowest stage, denying activity and even personality to Mind,—he re-established by irresistible criticism, that Mind is an essential Energy and Force; and farther unfolded the specific Laws according to which that Force acts. He showed that whatever the external Universe on which the Mental Force acts, our Substantive Knowledge depends, for its form and nature, wholly on these Mental Laws. Nay—overlooking to a large extent the possible power of INTUITION properly so-called (article LEIBNITZ)—he went so far as to say that, of the External Universe itself, we can know nothing save that it exists, or rather that an obscure something—called the NOUMENON—exists. It is evident wherein Kant's merit lies; he established the prime Reality of Subjective or Mental Laws.—Next, came FICHTE. Can it be alleged, said he, that Philosophy is complete, so long as it recognizes, on the one hand, a Subjective Force, and opposite to it that hidden and impenetrable Externality called the Noumenon? Let us look deeper into things! What necessity for this Noumenon? Do we in reality know anything except the movements of Mind itself; and is not the thing we term Externality, only our sense of obstacles in the way of the Mind's efforts to develop itself? Hence his pure SUBJECTIVE IDEALISM:—he rejected the existence of everything except his Ego; and it cannot be denied that he had several logical advantages over Kant.—When Fichte's philosophy—sustained by his wonderful ardour and eloquence—promised to become supreme, SCHELLING arose, and ventured a loftier flight. On first entering the philosophic arena, he was quite young; and a Temperament essentially poetic, warm with the Enthusiasm of early years, possessed as its companion and fellow-worker, an Intellect, which—whatever its degree of incompleteness—must, by all the world, be confessed to have been endowed with extraordinary powers. With Fichte, Schelling rejected Kant's dualism—the first and fatal step of both, (article HAMILTON). The ultimate principle of Philosophy, he said, must be One, or the Absolute. Now this Absolute cannot be in the Object or in Externality; for that is not perceived or known to exist unless by a Mental Force distinct from itself; neither in the Mental Force of Kant, which needs a Noumenon to stir it to action; nor in the Ego of Fichte, which only develops itself under the experience of obstacles. What then, is that, which all Philosophy seeks—the One of PARMENIDES, the Substance of SPINOZA,—that Absolute and Transcendent Reality, which is the foundation at once of all existence and all knowledge; and, for Itself, has no foundation except Itself? It will be observed how nearly this Inquiry touches on the thought of all Religious Philosophy,—so near is it, that the solution might appear contained in the Idea of a SUPREME MIND, in whom we live, move, and have our Being. And Schelling actually finds it, in an Idea closely analogous—the Idea of an Absolute Subject—of an EGO, not special like Fichte's, but Absolute and Transcendent, characterized by perfect unity, by liberty, reality, absolute substantiality,—cause imminent, infinite, indivisible, immutable. The correspondence, however, is not more than apparent: at least, there is soon a widest divergence. From this Absolute, according to Schelling, all things flow, or rather they are only its developments: Material Creation is an expression of its Infinite Reality, its positive manifestation within the limits of the Finite; and Mind is the act of its Self-consciousness, it is the act or power by which its Laws and Ideas are directly seen and felt. No use then, he exclaims, of a Pre-established Harmony between the realms of Thought and Existence; for they are the SAME: the actual World is only the representation of Ideas, and Mind is the type of the Universe. The SUBJECT and OBJECT, are thus not only, mere harmonious Opposites: they are IDENTICAL.—There are two distinct aspects under which this extraordinary and daring Philosophy of Identity, must be regarded: a few remarks on each will enable us to comprehend the nature and limits of Schelling's influence.—I. And, first, on that point of loftiest moment as to the character of any Philosophy—the place it assigns to the Nature and Duties of MAN. Now, it cannot be doubted, that, whatever the glowing and gorgeous account it can give of the attributes and dignity of the Reason—attaining in its high Inspirations, identity with the Absolute itself—Schelling's philosophy is open to that fatal objection already alluded to under article HEGEL—it builds upon Ideas obtained through our human Consciousness, and finally demonstrates that these Ideas are untrue! We should despair of success in an attempt to communicate here, anything of a distinct account of the conceptions of this remarkable German, as to the position of the individual Ego; but it is plain that there is no room among them either for our Human Personality, or our Human Liberty. His writings, indeed, are full of impressive references to Moral Liberty; but he tells us, when narrowly questioned, that Liberty, as a power of independent action, is incompatible with the idea of the Absolute. Neither on Schelling's system can personality of any kind inhere in the individual Mind. If we understand him aright, the soul is nothing more than an Idea of the soul of the Absolute. Its Individuality perishes with the body of which it is the living principle; although, as an Idea, it must live for ever, within the Thought of the Absolute, to which it returns. If, as has been alleged, this Pantheism is the most gorgeous of all similar schemes that Philosophy, ancient or modern, has evolved; certainly it is also one of the least disguised. It was understood that the silence during those twenty years, within which the system of Hegel rose, flourished, and fell, Schelling had undertaken to state his Philosophy anew, and to supplement it, so that Humanity and Responsibility should be saved. For this end in 1841, he reappeared, in possession of the Chair at Berlin; but after occupying that distinguished place for three years, he has finally retired, without affording the world assurance of his success.—Turning from the views of Schelling regarding Man, to those which inspire his conception of the External Universe, we pass from darkness into light. Considering this vast scheme of Material Nature, not as a mere collection of dead matter, held together by external relationship; but as a development now and for ever—a development that is incessantly unfolding, of the attributes of the SUPREME INTELLIGENCE—how profound and impressive the Thought! It is no exaggeration to say that this exalted and most true Idea, has penetrated alike into the Science, Art, and Literature of Germany, the greater portion of that loftiness and sojourning life, which has stamped it with the impress of Immortality. The Universe, said Schelling, is not merely an existence, it is a becoming—an about-to-be. It is not a mechanism, but a glorious ORGANISM: and on this ground OKEN and many of his compeers wrought out those wonderful prophetic views, which—even now—as shadowed and discern in their details, is perhaps the highest

ry of our own illustrious OWEN.—II. We must ten, however, with a few and brief remarks, on second main feature of this singular Scheme.
elling's philosophy is a Philosophy of IDEN-Y. He does not deny either Mind or Matter—either the Ego or the non-Ego; but he dees them variations in form only, and that they
the same. The Mind is in one sense a mirror the external universe; the Ideas of the former,
the Laws of the latter:—hence, every true ilosophy of Nature must aim at discerning the ntity of these Laws with these Ideas; for the covery of such Identity is its ultimate triumph.
Likewise from this essential aspect of Schelling's tem, much error, and much of highest value ve flowed. His own systematic 'Natur Philo-hie,' is certainly very strange; and no one in s country can recognize any accuracy in its thod. Undervaluing the guidance of Induction, institutes a description of à priori inquiry,— rting from the Mental Pole; and, laying down
at he finds there, as a sort of à priori schema, ets about constructing Laws of Nature, in cor-ndence with it. Nothing can well be con-ed farther from truth than his actual results;
ough even amid that extraordinary medley
y curious germs and indications, lie hid—ings of unquestionable genius. But the al Idea has not been unproductive. It has ired many of the noblest productions of THE; and we can trace its influence through erman poetry since Schelling first wrote.
greatest achievements, however, lie in the osophy of Art. It has raised Art, from being re imitation or copy of Nature, to a high re-h after ARCHETYPAL IDEAS,—a research ucted in the main by that mysterious and grandest Faculty belonging to our Human E. —the Faculty of IMAGINATION. — The lish reader will find many conceptions drawn Schelling, scattered through the prose writ-of COLERIDGE, whose remarkable mind
a philosophy was especially calculated to ate. — Of his successor HEGEL, we have y endeavoured to speak. See also article
PZA. [J.P.N.]

HELLINGS, WILLIAM, a Dutch painter of ape and history, 1631-1678. DANIEL, his r and pupil, 1633-1701.

HERMER, L., a Dutch painter, 1688-1710.

HERZ, J. G., a Ger. antiquarian, 16?8-1754.

HEUCHZER, JOHN JAMES, a Swiss physind naturalist, 1672-1733. His brother, a botanist, 1684-1738. His son, JOHN
, a naturalist, 1702-1729.

HEYB, F. C. DE, a Germ. poet, 1704-1777.

HIAMINOSSI, RAPHAEL, an Italian painter
ver, born at Borgo-San-Sepolcro, 1580.

HIAVONE, ANDREW, whose proper name
ULA, a painter of Dalmatia, 1522-1582.

HIONE. See SCHEDONE.

HIFFERDECKER, JOHN DAVID, a German and Orientalist, 1672-1721.

HISCHMIDT, J. J., a German jurisconsulrtizan of the doctrines of Wolfe, d. 1778.

HILL, FERDINAND VON, a Prussian officer,
e war against the French, 1773-1809.

HILLER, FRIEDRICH, is the only German
n contest the supremacy of Goethe. His range of thought is incomparably narrower; his imagery not only wants the inexhaustible variety of Goethe's, but also fails in reaching his romantic cast of refined ideality; and his tone of feeling is less purely and abstractedly poetical. But his poetry, while its richness of imagination within its own sphere is magnificent, and while it is ruled by a very high sense of art, glows with a flame of intense and elevated moral emotion, which is irresistibly and delightfully impressive. It communicates the spirit which prompted it, and which governed the character of the warm-hearted and conscientious poet,—the spirit of love and reverence, of love for mankind, and reverence for all that is truly great and noble. It was accident and emulation, rather than innate aptitude, that led him to put forth his strength most frequently on the drama; and his greatest works are less excellent in their portraiture of character (which is monotonous and often unreal), than in their deep passion, their moral purity and dignity, and their beautiful array of imaginative adornment. Many of his smaller poems, his odes and ballads, are as fine as those of Goethe; and he was not only an animated and eloquent historian, but also an acute expounder of the laws of philosophical criticism.—The short life of Schiller, beginning at a time whose literary character for Germany has been noted in the memoir of Goethe, is distributed, by his biographer Carlyle, into three periods.—The first of these reaches from his birth, on the 10th of November 1759, to 1783, when he was in his twenty-fourth year. This was the time of his irregular youthful aspirations, a stage in his history which was in some points like the youth of Goethe. His father, a retired army surgeon, was still in the service of the duke of Würtemberg; and the poet was born at Marbach, in that duchy. After shifting from school to school, he was, in 1733, by the command of the duke, placed for six years in a college recently founded at Stuttgard, and administered with a military formality of discipline, which proved highly irksome to the pupil. He had contemplated being a clergyman. He was now compelled to study law; and it was only as a change of evils that he accepted, after two years, the permission to betake himself to medicine. His favourite books were the critical and philosophical works of Lessing; the 'Goetz,' lately published by Goethe, which prompted a juvenile tragedy; and, among other poems, the 'Messias' of Klopstock, which tempted him to an imitation in his fourteenth year. In his nineteenth year he began to write 'The Robbers,' an irregularly impressive monument of youthful fantasy, an exaggerated picture of human passion and error, drawn by one who, in his own words, had 'presumed to delineate men two years before he had met one.' In 1780, having been appointed a regimental surgeon, he was able to print his tragedy: it caused universal excitement and much alarm, and brought on the author a ducal censure. In October, 1782, he absconded from Stuttgard to seek freedom and fame. In 1783 he published two other prose tragedies, 'Fiesco' and 'Cabal and Love.' Both are remarkable works, and the latter is deeply interesting; but neither is worthy to have been anything more than a youthful essay-piece of Schiller. —The second period of his life opens here. Becoming, for subsistence, 'poet' to the theatre at Manheim, he produced, besides small poems, the 'Philosophical Letters,' which show the continuance of his chaotic and unsettled state of mind; and, in the 'Thalia,' a periodical devoted to criticism, and chiefly written by himself, he printed, in 1784, the first three acts of the noble 'Don Carlos,' his earliest dramatic piece in verse. In the spring of 1785 he gave up his place in the theatre, and went to live in the pretty village of Gohlis, in the woodland meadows near Leipzig. There he wrote, in a more cheerful vein than hitherto, his beautiful 'Song to Joy.' 'Don Carlos,' completed in 1786, made him celebrated as one of the first of all German poets; but he was weary of dramatic writing, and occupied himself much with lyrical and narrative ballads, like 'The Song of the Bell,' 'The Walk to the Forge,' 'Knight Toggenburg,' and 'The Cranes of Ibycus.' About this time also, he printed his extraordinary prose romance (never finished) called 'The Ghost-Seer.' He was next busied much with historical studies, and printed in part a 'History of Remarkable Conspiracies and Revolutions.' Soon afterwards he visited Weimar, where he became acquainted with Herder and Wieland, and afterwards with Goethe, between whom and him there was at first much dryness, giving place by degrees to cordial esteem. In 1788 appeared the first volume of his admirable 'History of the Revolt of the Netherlands,' which procured for him what he had long panted for, a quiet and independent social position.—His attainment of this object begins the third and last period of his life. In 1789, being in his thirtieth year, he was appointed to the professorship of history at Jena, a few miles from Weimar; and in the beginning of the next year he married happily. He retained his professorship for ten years, removing, in 1799, to Weimar, where he lived on a pension from the duke, and on the fruits of such literary labour as he was able to undertake. He had been threatened with a disease of the chest as early as the time of his settlement at Jena; and the air of that place was pronounced too keen for him. The physicians indeed ordered, without effect, a total abstinence from intellectual exertion. Among the earliest fruits of this period were 'The History of the Thirty Years' War' (1791), regarded as his best work of this kind; and several treatises on the Philosophy of History, taken from or prompted by his lectures. Afterwards, studying the philosophy of Kant, he endeavoured to apply its principles to Literary Criticism in several singularly interesting essays, among which may be noted the 'Letters on the Æsthetical Education of Mankind' (1795). A good many critical and other papers were furnished to periodicals; and large additions were made to the stock of his minor poems. But, amidst all these exertions, and with a disease which he knew to be killing him, Schiller composed also the last and finest series of his long Poems. He contemplated writing an historical epic: but the design was never executed, and he fell back on the drama. His last historical work suggested the idea of 'Wallenstein;' and this fine play, or series of plays, which has with justice been declared to be 'the greatest dramatic work of the eighteenth century,' appeared in 1799. The tragedy of 'Maria Stuart' was published in 1800; the admirable 'Maid of Orleans' in 1801; in 1803, in the beautiful but imperfect tragedy of 'The Bride of Messina,' Schiller tried how far the forms of the Greek drama could be accommodated to modern ideas; and, in 1804, the career of an illustrious poet was worthily closed by the animated and poetical drama, 'Wilhelm Tell.' That year, at Berlin, where he saw his last play acted, Schiller's disease brought him to the brink of the grave. He recovered sufficiently to return to Weimar, and died there on the 9th of May, 1805. [W.S.]

SCHILLER, J. G., father of the great poet, known as an agriculturist, 1723-1796.

SCHILLING, F. A., a Ger. novelist, 1766-1839.

SCHILTER, J., a Ger. jurisconsult, 1632-1705.

SCHIM, H., a Dutch poet, 1695-1742.

SCHIMMELMANN, Ernest Henry, Count Von, a statesman and patron of letters, died 1833.

SCHIMMELMANN, Henry Charles, Count Von, a Danish minister of finance, 1724-1782.

SCHIMMELPENNINCK, Rutger John, a Dutch statesman and revolutionist, 1761-1825.

SCHINNER, or SKINNER, Matthew, known in history as the Cardinal of Sion, legate of pope Julius II., and chief of the intrigues opposed to the pretensions of the French, died 1521.

SCHINDLER, V., a learned German, d. 1

SCHLEGEL, John Elias, a German poet, dramatic writer, some of whose plays were acted in his native country, ancestor of the distinguished brothers of that name, 1718— John Henry, his brother, professor of h 1724-1780. John Adolphus, a third br distinguished for his literary talents as a the and poet, and particularly for his eloquen minister of the Lutheran church, 1721 — Charles Augustus, eldest son of the la officer in the service of the English East Company, and a student of Sanscrit literatur young. His other two sons are the subjects following articles.

SCHLEGEL, August Wilhelm Von, son of a Lutheran clergyman, was born at H in 1767. At Göttingen, where he was first cated for the church, he passed to philos studies, and distinguished himself by contri both prose and verse to the leading peri In 1797 he began to publish his excellent tran of Shakspeare, which, after some years, he left to be completed and improved by Tieck. In the same year he obtained a professorship at Jena. He married a daughter of Michaelis; but, soon separating from her, and resigning his office, he spent several years at Berlin. He there published the first of two volumes of poems, which, with his classical tragedy 'Ion,' were for a time highly estimated; and he also translated Calderon. But his chief occupation was the contribution of critical and other papers to periodicals, in which, with his brother Frederick and Ludwig Tieck, he strove at inculcating those views of literature which make up the system, called by the Germans the Romantic. In 1805 he became acquainted with Madame de Staël, whom he taught pretty nearly all she ever learned of German literature, and attended during her travels for several years. The eloquent and striking 'Lectures on Dramatic Art and Literature,' which have made his name so popular in England, were delivered at Vienna in printed the year after. On the fall of he went to Coppet, and resided there till e Stael's death in 1818. Next year he nted professor of history at Bonn, an h he held till his death. Here he mar-hter of the theologian, Paulus; and this like the other, soon ended in a separa-

mbition now, besides some minor objects,
nly at skill and fame as an Orientalist;
s essays, translations, and teaching, he uch for the study of the Sanscrit lane died in 1845. [W.S.]

GEL, FRIEDRICH VON, the younger Wilhelm, possessed both greater exactnowledge, and greater power of philohought: but he was obscure and myscarried completely away by that reverence for the middle ages, which other, Tieck, Novalis, and others, laid undation of their so-called Romanti-was born at Hanover in 1772, and died Classical literature was the theme liest works. In 1796 he and his bron foot the 'Athenæum,' the first organ eculiar critical opinions. His history exhibits a constant changing of place, dustrious and versatile series of literary hile his pursuits were further varied by nd official employment. The serious-consistency with which he carried out tion of the mediæval period showed
, in him as in some of the poets and a change of religion: he and his wife, a of Moses Mendelssohn, became Roman in 1801. The same turn of mind made with sincerity but much unpopularity,
s abettor of the political system of the government. The works of his which nown in this country are the 'Lectures story of Ancient and Modern Litera-15), and the 'Philosophy of History.'
[W.S.]

GEL, T., a Ger. philologist, 1739-1810.
GEL, T. A., a Ger. physician, 1727-72.
IERMACHER, FREDERIC DANIEL
an eminent German divine, was a native
, where he was born in 1768. His was obtained in the Moravian instituesky, and on leaving that academy in rsue the study of theology, to which he ed on dedicating his future life, he re-he university of Halle. Having received was in 1794 appointed assistant preacher berg, on the Warte; and afterwards
f the charitè, a large hospital in Berlin.
tuation he continued six years, and durncumbency published a variety of little ch as a German translation of Fawcett's
the Monologues, Letters of a Minister out and various contributions to religious ry periodicals. His translation of Plato a at an early period; and as that was a rtaking, comprising several large volumes,
cation extended over a series of years.
en appointed to a situation at Stolpe, he n, in 1802, and settled in that curacy, published a volume of sermons. He had ver, been a year resident at Stolpe, when osen professor extraordinarius of divinity
at Halle and preacher to the university. On the separation of Halle from Prussia, in 1807, he returned to Berlin as a public lecturer, and in two years after was appointed first minister of Trinity church, and afterwards professor ordinarius of the new university in that city. At this period he published his celebrated 'Study of Theology,' and in consequence several literary honours were conferred on him, for he was elected a member of the Royal Academy of Sciences, and secretary to the Philosophical Society. It must be acknowledged, that, however eminent his literary and philosophical acquirements, he brought at this part of his career a spirit of rash theoretical speculation to the discussion of theological subjects, that was deeply deplored by all simple hearted believers in the Gospel. Among his productions of this character must be ranked his 'Essay on the Gospel of Luke,' which was published in 1817; his 'Body of Divinity' (Christiche Glaube) was given to the world in 1822. This remarkable work, it is difficult to describe, for its plan is altogether unique, consisting of a regular consecutive series of philosophical propositions, the elucidation of which by turns astonishes the reader with its profundity, perplexes him with its intricacy, and delights him with the ardent piety that pervades it. In 1828, Schleiermacher accepted an invitation to come to London, to preach on the re-opening of Dr. Steinkopff's German church of the Evangelical Lutheran School. His text on that occasion was taken from Ephes. iv. 23, and the sermon, amid much that was of an eminently devotional and impressive strain, produced a great sensation by its novel and startling peculiarities. He was the author of several volumes of sermons, besides his last work on 'The Doctrine of the Christian Faith.' He died 12th February, 1834, in the full enjoyment of the comforts of the gospel. A posthumous portrait of him soon after his death was published, accompanied by an admirable hymn of Claus Harms, or 'Heaven as the Christian's Fatherland,' and under the picture the following inscription, 'Happy end of a celebrated Divine.' The early writings of this eminent man abounded in a strain of sentiment, that led to his being extensively classed with the Neologian divines of Germany. Nay, the bold and startling opinions he announced in his larger works gave rise to impressions still more unfavourable to his theological soundness, for he has been characterized by various writers as a Sabellian, Hegelian, Fatalist, and even a Pantheist. Those who are most intimately conversant with his works, regard all such epithets as entirely unwarranted at any period of his life. There can be no doubt, however, that as he advanced in life his views became more scriptural and orthodox, and he must be considered as the great leader in that happy movement, which broke up the old school of German theology,—as occupying a midway place between a Hegel and a Hengstenberg, between a dead Rationalism and a living Evangelism. He was a person of the most active habits. He preached every Sabbath, without notes, to a crowded audience, and his lectures at the university during the week attracted as great a crowd of admirers as his sermons in the church. He exercised an immense influence over the intellectual, and especially the religious character of his countrymen. [R.J.]

SCHLICHTEGROLL, A. H. FREDERIC VON, a German biographer and numismatist, 1764-1822.

SCHLICHTINGIUS, JONAS DE BUCCOWIEC, a Socinian writer of Poland, 1596-1664.

SCHLOEZER, or SCHLOETZER, A. L., a German historian and Orientalist, 1737-1809.

SCHLUTER, A., a Dutch sculptor, 1662-1713.

SCHMAUSS, JOHN JAMES, professor of public law and history at Gottingen, author of a 'Précis of the History of the Empire,' 1690-1747.

SCHMIDT, B., a German jurist, 1726-1778.

SCHMIDT, CHRISTOPHER, a writer of Russian history, Hanover, 1740-1801. His son, CONRAD FREDERIC, a theologian and philosopher, 1770-1832.

SCHMIDT, E., a Germ. philologist, 1560-1637.

SCHMIDT, F. W., a German botanist, d. 1796.

SCHMIDT, G. F., a Germ. engraver, 1712-75.

SCHMIDT, J. A., a Lutheran div., 1652-1726.

SCHMIDT, M. I., a Germ. historian, 1736-94.

SCHMIDT, S., a German Orientalist, d. 1697.

SCHMITH, NICHOLAS, a learned Jesuit and historian of Hungary, died 1767.

SCHMITZ, H. N., a Dutch engraver, 1758-90.

SCHMUCK, E. J., a Germ. physician, the first to write on magnetism in that country, died 1792.

SCHNEIDER, C. V., a Ger. anatom., 1610-80.

SCHNEIDER, E., or J. G., a German Hellenist, and actor in the French revolution, 1756-1794.

SCHNEIDER, JOHN GOTTLIEB, a German lexicographer, and naturalist, 1750-1822.

SCHNURRER, C. F., a German theologian and Orientalist, 1742-1822.

SCHOBER, G., a Germ. physician, 1670-1739.

SCHOEFFER, PETER, one of the inventors of printing, was a native of Gernsheim in Darmstadt, and in early life followed the trade of a copyist at Paris He was connected with Guttemberg and Faust from about the year 1450, and the daughter of the latter became his wife. He is supposed to have died in 1502.

SCHOEPF, J. D., a Ger. naturalist, 1752-1800.

SCHOEPFLIN, J. D., a German historian and publicist, professor at Strasburg, 1694-1771.

SCHOLARIUS, a patriarch of Constantinople, who was secretary to John Palæologus, and changed his name to Gennadius, died 1460.

SCHOMBERG, A. C., a divine, 1756-1792.

SCHOMBERG, ARMAND FREDERIC DE, descended from a German family, was born of an English mother of the house of Dudley in 1619, and began his military career in the army of Gustavus Adolphus. From 1661 to 1685 he was in the service of France, and became marshal, but in the last mentioned year he retired to Brandenburg in consequence of the revocation of the edict of Nantes, and became Prussian commander-in-chief and prime minister. In 1688 he joined the prince of Orange, and was shot at the battle of the Boyne, 15th July, 1690.

SCHOMBERG, HENRY, Count De, and marshal of France, distinguished as a statesman, ambassador, and commander, was born of an ancient family of Misnia, established at Paris, 1583, died 1632. His son, CHARLES, a marshal of France, and governor of Languedoc, 1601-1656.

SCHOMBERG, ISAAC and RALPH, two sons of a Jewish physician of Cologne, who died in London 1761. ISAAC was a graduate of Leyden and Cambridge, but was refused a fellowship College of Physicians, and died 1780. practised as a physician at Yarmouth an defrauded a public charity, and published Life of Mecænas as his own, died 1792.

SCHOMBERG, ISAAC, a naval comman historian, who distinguished himself in the Rodney, and in the victory of Howe 1794.

SCHONER, J., a Ger. mathemat., 147

SCHOOCKINS, M., a Dutch critic, 161

SCHOORL, SCHOREL, or SCHOREEL a Dutch painter of the Italian school, 149

SCHOOTEN, F., a Dut. mathemat., 17

SCHOPENHAUER, JOHANNA, a popu man anthoress, who lived at Weimar, and the friendship of Göethe, 1770-1838.

SCHOPP, CASPAR, in Latin Scioppius, a German, called the 'Grammatical Cur,' 157

SCHOTANUS, C., a Dutch historian,

SCHOTT, AND., a learned Flemish Jesu 1629. FRANCIS, his br., an author, 1548

SCHOTT, GASPARD, the pupil and f Father Kische, famous for his discoveries in and experimental philosophy, 1608-1660.

SCHOTTE, J. P., a Ger. physician, 17

SCHRADER, J., a Dutch savant, 1721

SCHREIBER, J. F., a surgeon, mathem and prof. of anatomy at St. Petersburg, 17

SCHREVELIUS, CORNELIUS, a Dutch critic and lexicographer, Haarlem,

SCHROECH, L., a Ger. physician, 164

SCHROECKH, J. M., a native of Vienna of a History of the Church, 1733-1803.

SCHROEDER, C., an Austr. general, d

SCHROEDER, JOHN JOACHIM, a Orientalist, 1680-1756. His son, PHILIP GE a physician and medical writer, 1729-1772

SCHUBART, C. F. D., a Germ. poet,

SCHUBERT, F., an Aust. musician, 17

SCHRYVER, PETER. See SCRIVERIU

SCHULEMBOURG, J. MATHIAS, Cou a companion-in-arms of Prince Eugene, 16

SCHULTENS, ALBERT, a German Or and biblical commentator, 1686-1750.

JOHN JAMES, an Orientalist, and success father as professor at Leyden, 1716-1778.

ALBERT, son and successor of the latter,

SCHULTET, ABRAHAM, in Latin Scul eminent protestant divine of Germany, 156

SCHULTING, A., a German jurist, 163

SCHULTING, C., a D. theologian, 154

SCHULTZ, BARTHOLOMEW, in Latin A a Ger. mathematician, who was employed gory XIII. in reforming the calendar, 154

SCHULTZE, E. C. F., a Ger. poet, 17

SCHULZE, BENJAMIN, an Orientalist and Lutheran missionary to India, died 17

SCHULZE, G. E., a Ger. philosopher, a work opposed to Kant and Reinhold, 17

SCHULZE, J., a German philosopher, of the doctrines of Kant, 1739-1805.

SCHULZE, P. H., a Ger. physician, 16

SCHUMACHER, HEINRICH CHRIS distinguished professor of astronomy, born stein 1780, died 1850.

SCHURER, J. L., a Ger. physician, 17

SCHURMANN, ANNA MARIA DE, a Cologne, remarkable for the extent of he ledge in the arts and sciences, 1607-1678.

FLEISCH, CONRAD SAMUEL, in
ius, a German savant, 1641-1708.
R, G., a Ger. physician, 1701-1785.
C. G., a Ger. philologist, 1747-1832.
J. C., a German mathematician and posed to Kant, 1743-1821.
HALER, an eminent German
-1848.
Z, BERTHOLD, otherwise CON-CKLITZEN, a German monk, to ntion of gunpowder has been attri-as preceded, however, by Roger ed 1292. Cannon were first used ns in 1300, and were employed by the battle of Cressy 1346.
Z, C., a Germ. painter, 1550-1594.
Z, C. T., a Ger. savant, 1675-1751.
ZENBURG, CHARLES PHILIP,
Austrian field-marshal and diplo-t Vienna 1771. He negotiated the een Napoleon and Maria Louisa in ded the Austrian contingent in the ussia 1812, and was general of the entered Paris after its capitulation 19.
ENBERG, PRINCE, the celebrated man, succeeded Metternich as prime ovember, 1848, when the Austrian nost in ruins; 1800-1852.
AUR, or SWEDIAUR, F. X., a an and naturalist, 1748-1824.
N, CURT CHRISTOPHER, Count Von,
n the service of Prussia, companionrlborough and Prince Eugene, born
the battle of Prague 1757.
. M., an Italian painter, 1522-1582.
UG., an Italian painter, 1639-1700.
an Italian physician, 1765-1837.
S. See SCHOPP.

e name of several illustrious Romans:
CORNELIUS, general of cavalry and
.C. 2. LUCIUS CORNELIUS, sur-
tus, consul 297 B.C. 3. LUCIUS onsul 259 and censor 258 B.C. The his tomb, discovered in 1780, is one monuments of the Latin tongue.
ORNELIUS, surnamed Asina, twice
d 254 B.C.; he distinguished hime Carthaginians in Sicily. 5. PUB-IUS, consul 218 B.C., in which year
tle of Picinus, which left Hannibal hern Italy; he went as proconsul to s killed there in the contest with
6. CNEIUS CORNELIUS, surnamed
r of the preceding, filled the same aped his laurels and his death in e same time. 7. PUBLIUS CORNEd Africanus the Elder, son of Pub-and nephew of the preceding (next NEIUS CORNELIUS and LUCIUS (or RNELIUS, sons of Scipio Africanus, ce in history; the latter, however,
as an historical writer, and for his second Africanus. 9. LUCIUS COR-amed the Asiatic, son of the Publius
d in Spain, and companion-in-arms Africanus. He was consul 189 B.C., ntiochus, king of Syria, but afterobscurity. 10. PUBLIUS CORNE-LIUS, surnamed Nasica, son of the Cneius Cornelius killed in Spain; he is remembered as a man of the rarest public virtue, distinguished himself as a jurisconsult, defeated the Lusitanians, and was consul 200 B.C. 11. PUBLIUS CORNELIUS SCIPIO NASICA, surnamed Corculum, son of the preceding, consul 162 B.C. 12. PUBLIUS CORNELIUS, surnamed Serapion, son of the preceding, was consul 138 B.C., and became sovereign pontiff by the choice of his fellow-citizens, without presenting himself at the election. He suppressed the sedition of Tiberius Gracchus, his cousin, at the cost of three hundred lives, B.C. 133, and was then sent on a mission to Asia, where he died 131. 13. His son, PUBLIUS CORNELIUS, was consul 112 B.C., and died the same year. 14. SCIPIO NASICA, son of the latter, known, in consequence of his adoption, as Metellus Scipio, and the enemy of Cæsar, exercised great influence at the declining period of the republic; he killed himself after the defeat of Thapsus B.C. 46. 15. His son, PUBLIUS CORNELIUS, was consul in the reign of Augustus B.C. 15, and was exiled for his incestuous intercourse with Julia. 16. The last of the Scipios known to history, grandson of the preceding, was a vile character of the reigns of Tiberius, Claudius, and Nero. He distinguished himself, however, as a soldier.

SCIPIO AFRICANUS THE ELDER (Publius Cornelius Scipio Africanus Major), the greatest man of his age, was born B.C. 234. He was the son of P. Cornelius Scipio who encountered Hannibal on the banks of the Ticino (B.C. 218); and perished in Spain B.C. 211. When only seventeen years old, Scipio saved the life of his father in the battle of the Ticino; two years after (B.C. 216) he fought at Cannae as a military tribune; and, being one of the few officers who survived that fatal carnage, was principally instrumental in preventing the Roman nobility from leaving Italy in despair. The distinction which he had thus acquired secured his unanimous election to the ædileship in B.C. 212; and in B.C. 210 he was sent as proconsul to Spain, nearly the whole of which country had reverted to the possession of the Carthaginians. Here his remarkable talents first displayed themselves; his military skill defeated the enemy in the field of battle, while his personal influence, his humanity and courtesy, gained for him the affections of the inhabitants of the country. Returning to Rome in B.C. 206, he was unanimously elected consul for the following year, and obtained the province of Sicily, with power to cross over into Africa, if he should deem it necessary for the interest of the state. The senate resolutely refused him an army, thus rendering his command worthless; but the celebrity of his name soon attracted volunteers from all the towns of Italy; and having obtained a prolongation of his command, he proceeded as proconsul to Africa (B.C. 204), where, in conjunction with Masinissa, king of the Numidians, he obtained some advantages over the enemy. The Carthaginians in the meantime had collected a powerful army under the command of Hasdrubal, the son of Gisco, and were aided by Syphax, a Numidian prince, who brought with him a numerous force. In the early part of B.C. 203, Scipio made an unexpected attack upon the two encampments, burnt them to the ground, and destroyed

nearly the whole army. The two generals, who escaped, soon returned with a fresh force, but were again defeated with great slaughter. The Carthaginians now becoming alarmed by these repeated disasters, resolved to recall Hannibal from Italy; and at the same time opened negotiations for peace, during which they obtained a truce for forty-five days. Before the specified time expired, the Carthaginian populace, who had never been desirous of peace, plundered some Roman ships which were bringing provisions for Scipio's army, and insulted the Roman envoys who were sent to demand reparation. Hostilities were resumed on the arrival of Hannibal, who soon collected an army far superior in number to that of Scipio. Hannibal, however, foreseeing that the loss of a battle would be ruinous to Carthage, was anxious before it was too late, to conclude a peace; and Scipio, fearing lest his enemies at Rome might succeed in supplanting him in the command, was not unwilling to put an end to the war; but the terms which he offered were such as the enemy could not, without entire submission, accept, and Hannibal was thus forced to continue to act on the defensive. Scipio now resolved to hazard a decisive battle, which his opponent cautiously avoided, till on the Roman army feigning a retreat, Hannibal followed with his cavalry, and was defeated in the neighbourhood of Zama. The decisive battle was at last fought on the 19th of October, B.C. 202, not far from the city of Zama. Scipio's victory was complete; 20,000 of the Carthaginians were slain, and an equal number taken prisoners. The negotiations which ensued were concluded during the following year, when Scipio returned to Rome, and was received with the greatest enthusiasm. He entered the city in triumph, and obtained, in honour of his victories, the surname of Africanus. The rest of his life was passed in comparative quiet. He was censor in B.C. 199, and consul a second time in B.C. 194. He served as a legate in Greece under his brother, Lucius, who was consul B.C. 190; and having on his return been accused of receiving bribes from Antiochus, king of Syria, he quitted Rome and retired to his country seat at Liternum, where he spent the remainder of his days in the cultivation of his estate. He is believed to have died B.C. 183, leaving two sons and two daughters, the younger of whom was the mother of the Gracchi. Scipio, as a general, was second to none but his great opponent Hannibal; as a Roman citizen he does not deserve equal praise; he disregarded the laws of the constitution whenever these stood in the way of his own views and passions. [G.F.]

SCIPIO AFRICANUS THE YOUNGER, (Publius Cornelius Scipio Æmilianus Africanus Minor) was the younger son of Lucius Æmilius Paullus, the conqueror of Macedonia, and the adopted son of Publius Scipio, the elder of the sons of the great Africanus. Scipio must have been born B.C. 185, as he took an active part, at the age of seventeen, in the battle of Pydna (B.C. 168), in which his father defeated Perseus, king of Macedonia. From his earliest years he appears to have devoted himself to the study of literature; and even his arduous duties as a military commander did not prevent him from embracing every opportunity of extending his knowledge of Greek letters and philosophy. The historian Polybius, wit whom he probably became acquainted in Greec was his intimate friend, and accompanied him nearly all his campaigns; and the poets Lucili and Terence, at a later period of his life, enjoye his friendship and patronage. His fondness Greek literature and refinement excited feelings uneasiness in the minds of his friends; but to th Scipio added the virtues and patriotism of a genui Roman. He first attracted notice in B.C. 15 when, in consequence of the disasters which ha befallen the Romans in Spain, great difficulty w experienced in raising troops, which he at once r moved by offering his services. As military tr bune in the army of Lucullus he distinguish himself by personal courage, while his disintereste integrity gained the affections of the barbarians a well as his own countrymen. On the breaking ou of the third Punic war in B.C. 149 he went to Afric still holding the rank of military tribune, and agai distinguished himself so much by his courage, pru dence, and justice, as to gain the unlimited con fidence of all with whom he came in contact. B.C. 148 he returned to Rome, accompanied by t wishes of all the soldiers that he might soon sent back as their commander; and such was impression produced by his character and achie ments that, when he offered himself a candi for the ædileship for B.C. 147, he was elected sul, though he had not attained the legal age had Africa assigned to him as his province. his arrival in the Roman camp he speedily re discipline, and commenced a series of oper which ultimately confined the Carthaginian their capital. In the spring of the following he attacked the devoted city, which was def from street to street, and from house to house after a struggle of three days, razed it to the gr When the arrangements necessary for red Africa to the form of a province were comp Scipio returned to Rome, where he obta splendid triumph, and also the surname of canus. He was censor in B.C. 142. Mean the war continued to rage in Spain, the inhabi of Numantia still continuing to refuse to knowledge the supremacy of Rome. Scipio accordingly appointed consul a second time 134, and succeeded in reducing them to submi (B.C. 133) after they had suffered the most dr ful extremities of hunger. For this victor received the surname of Numantinus. Durin command in Spain, Tiberius Gracchus, to who ter, Sempronia, he was married, had fallen a v to his efforts in favour of an Agrarian law the conqueror of Numantia, on his return to in B.C. 132, became the leader of the aris in preventing the law from being carried int He thus sacrificed the favour of the people. making a violent speech in the Forum, i he a second time publicly avowed his app the death of Tiberius Gracchus, he went the evening, accompanied by the senate an number of the allies, and retired to his with the intention of preparing a speec following day. Next morning he was f in his bed-room; and a general opinion that he had been murdered. Suspicion various persons; and among others, upo Sempronia, and her mother, Cornelia.

SCLATER, W., an English divine, died 1647.

SCOPAS, a Greek sculptor, 4th century B.C.

SCOPOLI, GIOVANNI ANTONIO, a naturalist and mineralogist of Tyrol, 1723-1787.

SCORZA, S., a Genevese painter, 1589-1631.

SCOTT, a family of dissenting ministers, the principal of whom was DANIEL, a writer of much learning on the Trinity, died 1759. THOMAS, his half-brother, author of Sermons, died 1746. The son of the latter, of the same name, published a version of the book of Job in 1774; and his second son, JOSEPH NICHOL, both a minister and physician, died about 1774.

SCOTT, DAVID, a Scottish historian, and partizan of the Stuarts, 1675-1742.

SCOTT, DAVID, was born at Edinburgh in the month of October, 1806. His father, Robert Scott, brought him up to his own profession, that of an engraver, but this pursuit being extremely distasteful to the younger Scott, he eventually took to painting in 1827, after the expiration of his apprenticeship. Having made several preliminary studies and efforts in Edinburgh, and attended the anatomical lectures of Dr. Monro, he considered himself sufficiently prepared for an Italian tour. He started in the autumn of 1832, and spent the greater portion of 1833 in Rome, where he painted a large unintelligible picture, which he called 'Discord,' or 'Household Gods Destroyed;' a composition recalling Flaxman's Prometheus Chained, but in this case absurdly applied; it suggests, if anything, Samson awaking after the treachery of Delilah. He returned to England in the spring of the following year, to find 'the colouring of English pictures of the day, white and vermilion, flimsy, raw, unnatural, and sketchy,' in common no doubt with many other travellers on the continent some years back. David Scott came home a devoted victim to the grand style, as foreshadowed in his 'Discord,' but to the poetic or ethic, rather than the religious; like Michelangelo, he was a lover of the abstract, but wanting the deep pious devotion which certainly pervaded the grand conceptions of that extraordinary man. Scott now exhibited a long succession of pictures at the Royal Scottish Academy, of which he was a member, of varied merit, but all of an unusual character and subject, classic and other history, however, gradually asserting its claim to share attention with abstract æsthetics, generally too abstruse to be felt at all by Scott's public; but in some instances the work was a compromise between the two, as in his 'Paracelsus,' or 'Alchymist,' and in his truly magnificent work, indeed his masterpiece, 'Vasco de Gama encountering the Spirit of the Cape,' now placed in the Trinity House at Leith. His perseverance in this unbeaten path in spite of an almost constant succession of disappointments as regards the more substantial rewards of art, gradually undermined his constitution, and he sunk at last into a premature grave March 5, 1849, in his forty-third year. With all his ill-timed abstractions, and moral peculiarities, and they are abundantly shown in the very interesting memoir of him by his brother, Scott was unquestionably a very superior artist, and may claim the martyr's branch with far more justice than Haydon. Most of his works show a high intellectuality, and many as pictures are vigorously drawn and even gorgeously coloured, as for instance his admirable 'Triumph of Love,' in the possession of his brother, a subject offering a delightful spot of sunshine among the usually prevailing gloomy abstractions of his pessimist philosophy. Among his unquestionably good works, also, either for sentiment of execution or both, are:—Queen Elizabeth in the Globe Theatre; Peter the Hermit, Jane Shore; Richard III.; Achilles addressing the Manes of Patroclus. To these must be added some series of designs, as those illustrating the Pilgrim's Progress; and his very remarkable and admirable series on 'The Ancient Mariner,' fully worthy of that extraordinary poem. For further details the reader may consult the Memoir of David Scott, R.S.A., containing his journal in Italy, notes on art and other papers, with seven illustrations, by William B. Scott, an ably planned work, and calculated to afford, if anything can, an invaluable lesson to all inordinately ambitious young artists, suffering under an impatient morbid hankering after the praise of those collectively, whose judgments individually they invariably profess to despise when unfavourable to themselves. [R.N.W.]

SCOTT, G. L., a mathematician, died 1780.

SCOTT, HELENAS, the son of a Scottish minister, practised as a physician at Bombay, and wrote 'The Adventures of a Rupee,' died 1821.

SCOTT, JAMES, an episcopal divine, celebrated as a preacher and political writer, 1733-1814.

SCOTT, JOHN. See ELDON.

SCOTT, JOHN, a Quaker poet, 1739-1783.

SCOTT, JOHN, a miscellaneous writer, who commenced the publication of the 'London Magazine' in 1820, and was killed in a duel arising out of a literary quarrel 1821. His works are 'A Visit to Paris in 1814,' and 'Paris Revisited in 1815 by Way of Brussels, including a Walk over the Field of Waterloo.'

SCOTT, JOHN, a learned minister of the Church of England, author of 'The Christian Life from its Beginning to its Consummation in Glory,' and of some critical and casuistical works, 1638-1694.

SCOTT, SIR MICHAEL, generally reputed a magician, was a native of Scotland, remarkable for his learning and skill in the occult sciences. His works are 'The Secrets of Nature,' 'The Sun and Moon,' 'Mensa Philosophica,' an edition of Aristotle, and a translation of Avicenna's History of Animals from the Arabic into Latin; died 1293.

SCOTT, MICHAEL, a Scottish merchant, author of the well-known sketches entitled 'Tom Cringle's Log,' which first appeared in 'Blackwood's Magazine.' Born in Glasgow 1789, died 1835.

SCOTT, REYNOLD or REGINALD, a gentleman of Kent, remarkable for his work written against the common belief in witchcraft, which was replied to by Casaubon, Glanvil, and James I.; d. 1599.

SCOTT, SAMUEL, an English painter, d. 1772.

SCOTT, THOMAS, rector of Aston Sandford, author of a 'Defence of Calvinism,' 1747-1821.

SCOTT, THOMAS, otherwise Rotheram, from his birth-place in Yorkshire, a prelate and statesman, died 1500.

SCOTT, SIR WALTER, had a pedigree, his sense of which affected materially both the spirit of his writings and the events of his life. From the great border-family, now represented by the dukes of Buccleuch, there came in the fourteenth century, as an offshoot, the family of Harden, the heads of which are barons of Polwarth. The poet's great grandfather was a younger son of Scott of Harden; his grandfather, poorly provided for, became a farmer in Roxburghshire; and his father, Walter Scott, was a writer to the signet or attorney in Edinburgh, and married the daughter of a medical professor in the university. Walter, the fourth child of this couple, was born in the Old Town of Edinburgh, on the 15th of August, 1771. He was a sickly infant, and became incurably lame in his second year; and, after this, till he was about eight years of age, his childhood was principally spent at his grandfather's farm-house of Sandyknowe, where he became lovingly familiar with the scenery and traditions and ballads of the border. In this stage he was fond of reading; but, on being placed at the High School of Edinburgh, towards the end of 1779, he failed to distinguish himself in the regular studies of the class. He was, however, eminent for his historical and miscellaneous knowledge, for his skill in story-telling, and for his personal courage. In his twelfth year his love of ballad-poetry was ineradicably established, by the delight with which he perused Percy's 'Reliques.' In the winter of 1783 he entered the university of his native city, attending only one session, with little or no apparent profit. He never understood Greek beyond the elements, and had but a loose scholarship in Latin; and the acquaintance, which he obtained in early manhood, with French, Italian, Spanish, and German, was very superficial. In May, 1786, when he was nearly fifteen years old, he was articled to his father, and attended regularly in chambers for about four years. For literary avocations he was making, undesignedly, full preparation, by devouring romances, novels, histories, and old plays; while he continued to distinguish himself by telling and inventing stories. His father's intention, as well as his own, was, that he should come to the bar; and his attendance in the debating-club, called the Speculative Society, was one of his steps of training, while it gave occasion for his writing of essays, exhibiting his turn for antiquarian and poetical studies. In 1792 he was admitted as a member of the Scottish Faculty of Advocates.—In 1796 he published translations, in verse, of Bürger's German ballads, Lenora, and the Wild Huntsman; and he contributed to Lewis's Tales of Wonder. In 1798 appeared his translation of Goethe's prose drama, 'Goetz Von Berlichingen;' and in 1799 he wrote, and made known to his friends, the earliest of his considerable efforts in original poetry, the ballads of 'Glenfinlas,' 'The Eve of St. John,' and 'The Grey Brother.' Still he had gained no high literary reputation; nor was literary composition more than an occasional employment for him. He paid an average amount of attention to his profession, and was desirous to secure an independent livelihood from some source other than literature. In the end of 1797 he married Miss Carpenter, the daughter of a French emigrant, whose small fortune added something to his income: his father's death next gave him a moderate patrimony; and, in 1799, the patronage of the duke of Buccleuch and Lord Melville, to whose politics he steadily and warmly adhered, bestowed on him the sheriffship of Selkirkshire, an easy office, with a salary of three hundred pounds. In the same year, his poetical taste, both in rhyme and in diction, (if not in more important matters,) received a new impulse and direction from hearing unpublished poems of Wordsworth and Coleridge, especially 'Christabel.' Now, likewise, easy in circumstances and occupying a good position in society, Scott was sufficiently independent of professional labour to devote himself more and more to less uncongenial pursuits; and he gradually made authorship the main business of his life.—The brilliant period of Scott's literary career extends from 1802, when he was in his thirty-first year, to 1825, when he was in his fifty-fourth. In the first of those years he published the first and second volumes, and in the next year the third volume, of 'The Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border.' This publication gave him at once a distinguished reputation. The old ballads were excellently edited; the annotations showed great sagacity, good sense, and various knowledge; and there was undeniable promise in the few ballads of his own that were inserted in the collection. In 1802, likewise, he had begun to write what he called, in a letter to Ellis, 'a kind of romance of border-chivalry, in a light-horseman sort of stanza.' This piece, insensibly swelling in dimensions, soon became too bulky for the 'Minstrelsy,' and was reserved to be the foundation-stone of Scott's celebrity as an original poet. It was circulated among his friends, and warmly approved by Jeffrey, Wordsworth, and others; while the author was editing the ancient romance of 'Sir Tristrem.' It appeared at length, in 1805, under the title of 'The Lay of the Last Minstrel.' Its success was immediate and unexampled. The surprise, doubtless, aided the result: the poem appeared when genuine poetry had long been unknown by the public, unless in the earliest volumes of Crabbe and Campbell; and it was also the first vigorous poetical narrative that had been produced in England for more than a century. But, further, it was the earliest poem which was inspired by the animation and eagerness of the age that gave it birth. The 'Lay' was not, any more than its successors, the effort of a poet aiming at the highest effects of his art: but it was a work of great genius and originality; and, if inferior to some of Scott's later poems in mechanism, and less splendid in strikingly poetical passages, it was more successful than any of them to his design, of re-creating the chivalrous romance in a shape accommodated to modern sympathies. 'Marmion,' containing, in its description of the battle, one of the most spirited passages in the whole range of our poetry, appeared in 1808; the beautiful metrical romance of 'The Lady of the Lake' in 1810; in 1811 appeared the 'Vision of Don Roderick,' indicating a decline in strength, which showed itself next year also in 'Rokeby;' in 1815 was published 'The Lord of the Isles;' and the list of the metrical romances closes with 'The Bridal of Triermain,' and 'Harold the Dauntless,' published respectively in 1813 and 1817, and both of them anonymously. In the course of this period, also, the poet edited the works of Dryden and Swift, contributed for a time to the Edinburgh Review, and in 1808 assisted zealously in establishing its formidable rival the Quarterly. He wrote also biographical and cri-

d performed much of other miscel-To such work he was led by those gements which he now formed, cised in the end so disastrous an fortune. His school-fellow, James ing been the editor and printer of Roxburghshire, was assisted by Scott printing-house in Edinburgh; and having lent money to the firm, partner of it in 1805. Not long connection with trade became yet arrelled with his bookseller, Con-ed to obtain facilities for giving to ture of a higher stamp than that on rs are likely to venture; and, not
y with his desire, he entertained of profit from a publishing busi-
a man of knowledge and influence Accordingly, in 1808, John Ballanof James, was placed at the head shing firm; but here, as in the tt was a partner to the extent of a se arrangements were kept pro-in the eyes of the public, and even imate associates, Scott was merely friend of the Messrs. Ballantyne.—
r the formation of these partnerships,
n the second stage of his literary was one of the first to discover the ty of his poetry; and he cheerfully ork to regain his laurels on a new ed for fame: he wished also for long cherished the ambition of ter-on; and this ambition he could not speedily from his ordinary means,
ointment as one of the principal urt of Session in Scotland (an hon-easy post), added, from about 1812, d a-year to his income. From this any of the rash adventures which he publishing firm; hence also, in e, arose the eager industry with
s prose works proved so profitable, volume after volume. In 1805, gaged on Marmion, he had begun
: in three weeks during the sum-added two volumes to it; and it was rmously in July of that year, bear-of 'Waverley, or, 'Tis Sixty Years
ozen years afterwards, the Waverley beyond example, admired by critics
ured by the public, were showered succession; and, although a few of decidedly the most vigorous and not till towards the close of the falling off was steady or remarkable.
n themselves, enough to prove mar-
and fertility, and indomitable steadi-
. From 'Waverley' in 1815 to the Crusaders' in 1825, eighteen novels eleven years.—This was the last prosperity, or rather the last year
e world was allowed to believe him
The extraordinary success of the bled him to assume, more rapidly have hoped, that place among the which it was his fatal weakness to nmensely. Purchasing, in 1811, a anks of the Tweed, naming it Abbotsford, and building a cottage on it, he acquired land around it till he possessed a considerable estate. He erected the baronial castle which we now behold, filled it with antiquarian nick-nacks and ornaments, planted and improved his grounds, and dispensed hospitalities which the most distinguished men in Europe were proud to partake. In 1820 he received a baronetcy; and in the following year he figured as the director of the whimsical pageantry which celebrated the visit of George IV. to Scotland.—Even before this time both firms of Ballantynes were tottering; and they were brought to the ground in the beginning of 1826, by the failure of Constable's house, with which they were deeply involved. The mortifying disclosure of Sir Walter's concealed partnership followed of course; and his liabilities were found to amount to a sum not much short of £150,000. He acted like a man of courage and a high-minded gentleman. He refused to offer to the creditors any composition, or to accept from them any discharge; he pledged himself to devote the whole labour of his subsequent life to the payment of the debt; he fulfilled the pledge, and died before his time through the toil which it cost him. A great part of the debt was satisfied during his lifetime; and the balance of the principal was paid by his executors. One main aid in effecting the result was the collected edition of his works, with the personal notes which he condescended to furnish to it. But he produced likewise a new series of writings, which, although the later are distressingly indicative of decay, and the best of them are not of a very high order, must be looked on with the respect due to the motive which prompted them.—In 1826 he published his novel of 'Woodstock,' written while his pecuniary anxieties and humiliation were at their height; afterwards appeared the 'Life of Napoleon,' (partly written before the bankruptcy), the 'Tales of a Grandfather,' the first and second series of the 'Chronicles of the Canongate,' 'Anne of Geierstein,' a 'History of Scotland' for Lardner's Cyclopædia, two Dramas, and 'Letters on Demonology.' In 1831 the failure of the active intellect was shown unequivocally by 'Count Robert of Paris,' and 'Castle Dangerous.' In 1830 Sir Walter had been attacked by paralysis, which recurred acutely more than once: and, prevailed on at last to pause from labour, he set out, in September, 1831, for the continent, of which, in his better days, he had seen very little. Naples was the farthest point he reached; the mind gave way completely; he was hurried home, and reached Abbotsford in July, 1832. There, after some days of unconsciousness, he died on the 21st of September. He was buried in Dryburgh Abbey. [W.S.]

[Dryburgh Abbey.]

SCOTT, WILLIAM. See STOWELL.

SCOTTI, C. G., an Ital. dramatist, 1759-1821.

SCOTTI, J. C., an Italian Jesuit, 1602-1669.

SCOTTI, MARCELLO, a learned ecclesiastic, born at Naples 1714, member of the legislative commission of the Neapolitan republic 1799, executed by the counter-revolutionists 1800.

SCOUGAL, H., a Scottish divine, 1650-1678.

SCRIBANI, C., a Flemish Jesuit, one of the twelve apostles commissioned by that body in Flanders, known as a controversial wr., 1561-1629.

SCRIBONIANUS, a Roman commander, proclaimed emperor in Dalmatia, and assassinated 42.

SCRIBONIUS, a Roman physician, 1st cent.

SCRIVERIUS, the Latinized name of PETER SCHRYVER, a Dutch philologist and historian, 1576-1660.

SCRIMZEOR, H., a Scotch writer, 1506-1571.

SCROGGS, SIR W., an English judge, 1623-83.

SCROPE, WILLIAM, a writer on sporting subjects, 1772-1852.

SCUDDER, H., a presbyterian writer, 17th cen.

SCUDERI, GEORGE DE, a French poet, novelist, and dramatic writer, 1601-1667. His wife was equally celebrated in epistolary composition. His sister, MADELEINE, eminent for her wit and writings as a novelist, 1607-1701.

SCULTETUS. See SCHULTET, SCHULTZ.

SCULTETUS, or SCULTZ, JOHN, a writer on surgery, born at Ulm 1595, died 1645.

SCUPOLI, L., an Italian ascetic, 1530-1610.

SCYLITZES, J., a Greek historian, 11th cent.

SEAMAN, L., an English divine, died 1675.

SEARCH, EDWARD. See TUCKER.

SEBA, ALBERT, a Dutch naturalist and pharmacopolist, Amsterdam, 1665-1736.

SEBASTIAN, king of Portugal, son of the Infant John by Joanna, daughter of the emperor Charles V., was born 1554, and succeeded his grandfather, John III., 1557. In 1578 he led the flower of his nobility into Africa on a wild expedition against the Moors, and perished in battle with nearly all his followers. Sebastian's fate being long uncertain, and having no issue to succeed him, gave occasion to many impostors to assume his name and title, and eventually to the annexation of Portugal to Spain.

SEBASTIANI, FRANCIS HORACE DE, a celebrated French marshal, distinguished during the republic, empire, and the monarchy, 1772-1851.

SEBASTIANO, DEL PIOMBO, the name by which SEBASTIANO LUCIANI is commonly known, from his office of the pope's keeper of the leaden seals. He was born at Venice in 1485, and was one of the pupils of Giovanni Bellini. He went to Rome about 1512, by the invitation of Agostino Ghigi, and soon contracted a friendship with Michelangelo, by whom, as an oil painter, he was pitted against Raphael. The large picture of the Raising of Lazarus, in the National Gallery, was painted by Sebastiano, in which he is said to have been assisted by Michelangelo, in rivalry with the Transfiguration of Raphael. They were both painted for Giulio de Medici, the bishop of Narbonne, and were exhibited together in Rome, and are not so unequal as to make the choice a matter of course. Sebastiano found his advocates. Sebastiano was created Frate del Piombo by Clement VII. It is the duty of this officer to fix the leaden seal to the bulls, &c. A salary is attached to it, and Fra Sebastiano del Piombo was no longer the painter Sebastiano Luciani had been: his ease made him lazy, Michelangelo reproved him for idleness; he was a great portrait painter. He died at Rome in 1547.—(Vasari, Vite de' Pittori, &c.) [R.N.W.]

SEBER, W., a German philologist, 1573-1634.

SECHELLES, J. MOREAU DE, a French statesman and financial administrator, 1690-1760.

SECKENDORF, GUY LOUIS VON, a German statesman, divine, and ecclesiastical historian, 1626-1692. His nephew, FREDERICK HENON, Count Von Seckendorf, a field-marshal and diplomatist in the interest, successively, of Prussia, Poland, and Austria, 1673-1763. LEON, Baron De Seckendorf, a poet, of the same family, 1773-1809.

SECKER, THOMAS, archbishop of Canterbury, a great promoter of religion and ecclesiastical learning, author of Sermons, 1693-1768.

SECOUSSE, D. F., a Fr. historian, 1691-1754.

SECUNDUS. See EVERARD.

SEDAINE, M. J., a Fr. dramatist, 1719-1797.

SEDANO, JOHN JOSEPH LOPEZ DE, a learned Spanish writer and numismatist, 1729-1801.

SEDGWICK, three puritan divines:—OBADIAH, preacher of St. Paul's, Covent Garden, &c., member of the Westminster Assembly, 1600-1658. WILLIAM, called the apostle of Ely, dates unknown. DOOMSDAY SEDGWICK, so called from preaching the approaching end of the world, died about 1662.

SEDILLOT, J. J. EMMANUEL, a French Orientalist and astronomer, 1777-1832.

SEDLEY, SIR CHARLES, a dramatic writer, courtier, and wit of the court of Charles II., who afterwards promoted the revolution of 1688, born at Aylesford, in Kent, about 1639, died 1701.

SEDULIUS, CÆLIUS or CÆCILIUS, an Irish Scotch priest, known as a Latin poet, 5th cent.

SEED, JEREMIAH, a learned divine, died 17[illegible]

SEEGERS, or SEGHERS, GERARD, a Flemish painter of altar-pieces, 1589-1651. His brother DANIEL, a flower painter, 1590-1660.

SEELEN, J. H. DE, a German philologist, 1687-1762.

SEEMILLER, SEBASTIAN, a Bavarian Orientalist and bibliographical writer, 1752-1798.

SEETZER, ULRIC JASPER, a Dutch traveller in the East, supposed to have perished 1811.

SEGAR, SIR WILLIAM, garter-king-at-arms, author of 'Honour, Civil and Military,' died [illegible]

SEGAUD, W. DE, a French Jesuit, 1674-[illegible]

SEGHERS. See SEEGERS.

SEGNER, J. A., a Hungarian mathematician and philosopher, 1704-1777.

SEGNERI, PAOLO, an Italian Jesuit, distinguished as a preacher and theologian, 1624-1694. His nephew, PAOLO, a Jesuit and preacher, 1673-[illegible]

SEGNI, B., an Italian historian, died 1558.

SEGRAIS, J. R. DE, a French poet, 1624-1[illegible]

SEGUIER, J. F., a learned botanist and numismatist, allied to the noble family of that name whose names occur in the next article, 1703-1[illegible]

SEGUIER, PETER, a French diplomatist, whose talents were opposed to the policy of Pope Julius II., 1504-1580. His son, ANTHONY, a lawyer and ambassador, 1552-1626. PETER, grandson of the first of that name, chancellor of France, and one of the founders of the French Academy, 1588-1672. ANTHONY LOUIS, of the same family, a royalist at the period of the revolution, 1726-1791.

SEGUR, a noble family of Guienne, principal of whom are—HENRY FRANCIS, Count De Segur, and lieutenant-general, 1689-1751. PHILIP HENRY, his son, Marquis, a marshal of France, minister of war in 1780 before Brienne, 1724-1801. LOUIS PHILIP, son of the latter, companion-in-arms of Lafayette in America, known also as a diplomatist and historian, 1753-1832. JOSEPH ALEXANDER, second son of Philip Henry, a dramatic and miscellaneous writer, 1756-1805.

SEILER, G. F., a Ger. philosopher, 1733-1807.

SEISSEL, or SEYSSEL, CLAUDE DE, a French historian and political writer, translator of Eusebius, and historian of Louis XII., 1450-1520.

SEJAN, N., a French composer, 1745-1819.

SEJANUS, LUCIUS ÆLIUS, a prætorian general of Rome, a favourite of the emperor Tiberius, put to death for aiming at the supreme authority 31.

SELDEN, JOHN, a famous scholar, antiquarian, and political character, time of Charles I. He was born at Salvington, in Sussex, and educated for the bar. He entered the House of Commons in 1624, and in 1640 represented Oxford in the long parliament. He afterwards became archivist of the tower and a commissioner of the admiralty. His noble life was devoted to learning, and he bears the character of a sincere Christian and a true patriot; 1584-1654.

SELEUCUS, surnamed Nicator, founder of the line of Syrian princes called Seleucidæ, was one of the generals of Alexander the Great, and, on the death of that prince, was governor of Media and Babylonia. He extended the dominion of his arms by policy as far as the Indus, and in 280 B.C. was acknowledged king of Macedon, Thrace, and Asia Minor. He reigned only a few months, and was assassinated by Ceraunus 279 B.C. SELEUCUS II., surnamed Callinicus, succeeded Antiochus II. 247 B.C., and after losing many of his provinces by the invasion of Ptolemy III. 242, was taken prisoner by the Parthians. He died in captivity B.C. 225. SELEUCUS III., surnamed Ceraunus, son and successor of the preceding, was assassinated B.C. 222. SELEUCUS IV., surnamed Philopator, was son of Antiochus the Great, to whom he succeeded B.C. 186, poisoned by his minister, Heliodorus, 174. SELEUCUS V. was son of Demetrius II., and was proclaimed king with Antiochus Grypus B.C. 125. He was killed by order of his mother, Cleopatra, 122. SELEUCUS VI., son of Antiochus Grypus, became king over a part of Syria in 97 B.C., and took the remainder from his uncle, Antiochus Cyricus, 94. He was killed the year following in the contest which ensued with the son of the latter.

SELIM, three emperors of the Turks:—SELIM I., son of Bajazet II., born 1467, dethroned his father and killed his two brothers 1512, defeated the shah of Persia 1514, conquered Syria and Egypt 1516-1517, died 1520. SELIM II., succeeded his father, Soliman II., in 1566, took Cyprus from the Venetians 1570, and Tunis from the Spaniards in 1571. In the same year he lost the great naval battle of Lepanto; died 1574. SELIM III., son of Mustapha III., was born 1761, succeeded his uncle, Abdoul Hamid, 1789, sustained a disastrous war against Russia and England, which was terminated by the peace of Jassi in 1792. He was afterwards the ally of England against France at the period of the expedition to Egypt, and signalized his reign at the conclusion of hostilities, by introducing our European civilization into his states. He was dethroned in 1807, and strangled the following year by order of Mustapha IV., who succeeded him.

SELIS, N. J., a French writer, 1737-1802.

SELKIRK, ALEXANDER, upon whose adventure the story of Robinson Crusoe was founded by Daniel Defoe, was a native of Largo, in Fifeshire, where he was born about 1680. He was left on the island of Juan Fernandez in 1704 by a Captain Stradling, to whom he had given some cause of offence. He was rescued by Captain Wood Rogers in 1709, and is said to have related his adventures to Defoe, with a view to their publication.

SELLE, C. T., a German physician, 1748-1800.

SELLER, A., an English divine, 1647-1720.

SELLIUS, ADAM BUCKHARDT, a Russian monk and writer, originally of Denmark, d. 1746.

SELLIUS, GODFREY, a native of Dantzic, known as a naturalist and historian, died 1767.

SELLON, BAKER JOHN, known for many years as a police magistrate, author of a standard law-book, entitled 'Analysis of the Practice of the Court of King's Bench and Common Pleas,' born in London 1762, died 1835.

SELVES, J. B., a Fr. jurisconsult, 1757-1823.

SEMERY, A., a French theologian, 1630-1717.

SEMIRAMIS, a queen of Assyria, of whom we have little certain historical knowledge. She is generally regarded as the wife of Ninus, and is said to have put him to death. The traditions agree that she reigned forty-two years after Ninus: she was called Rea on account of her atrocities.

SEMLER, J. S., a German divine, 1725-1791.

SEMPRONIA, two Roman ladies:—1. The wife of Scipio Æmilianus, a sister of the Gracchi, who is accused of having contributed to the death of her husband. 2. A lady concerned in the conspiracy of Catiline.

SEMPRONIUS, a name of frequent occurrence in Roman history. The principal who have borne it were the GRACCHI (see that article); besides these may be mentioned—SEMPRONIUS ASELLIO, a military tribune of Rome, distinguished in Spain B.C. 137. SEMPRONIUS LONGUS, consul of Rome B.C. 217, distinguished in the field against Hannibal. SEMPRONIUS TUDITANUS, a Roman tribune and commander, who was consul B.C. 203, and defeated Hannibal at Crotona. The others of the name are of less mark.

SENAULT, J. F., a Flem. ecclesias., 1599-1672.

SENDIVOG, M., a Polish alchymist, 1566-1646.

SENEBIER, JOHN, a protestant minister of Geneva, known as a natural philosopher and historian, 1742-1809.

SENECA, LUCIUS ANNAEUS; born at Cordova in the second year of our era; put to death at Rome by order of Nero in the sixty-sixth. A literateur, rhetorician, and philosopher, whose practical life is marked by all the singular contradictions that abound in his writings. At first a stern self-denying Stoic; then the ambitious politician intriguing with ladies at the court. Banished at the instance of Messalina, he writes his famous work on Consolations; the next production of his restless pen being a new Consolation, addressed to Polybius, a freedman—a mean and miserable flattery intended for the ear of Claudius. Recalled by Agrippina, we find him installed, in company with Burrhus, as preceptor and guardian of Nero; labouring avowedly during a few years, along with his firmer colleague, to restrain the passions of that disgrace of humanity; boldly defending Burrhus in defiance of Nero,—winking, meanwhile, at his pupil's worst excesses; even prompting to evil, for if we can credit antiquity, Seneca suggested that revolting and most monstrous parricide—all the while preaching the austerities of Stoicism: lastly, rising into the vigour of his best days, and, if with some ostentation, still meeting death as becomes a brave man!—Seneca, is perhaps the type and ideal, alike in action and thinking, of that large class of minds, possessed by a lively and restless fancy, and of remarkable quickness in appreciating, who have yet no steadiness either of heart or intellect, and are totally deficient in that invaluable power —the Faculty of Belief. High and low, large and small, in all grades of society and manners of life, we meet with such persons; and although never consistent, they are yet in one sense always sincere—i.e., they are ruled by the plan or opinion which is authoritative for the hour. Having no real Originality—that which cannot be divorced from ability to penetrate towards Truth—Seneca's literary writings are worthless: nor are his moral speculations stamped with the Tower-mark. In theory he is a copyist, and a bad one, for he seldom reaches the positive ground of any theory: and although in his practical writings he always displays great acuteness, and expresses himself clearly and pleasantly—qualities much increased by his large acquaintance with the surface of the world,—even the best of his maxims are tarnished by the vice of exaggeration. Generally, the colour is of Gold, but the ring of the true metal is awanting. [J.P.N.]

[Seneca—From an Antique Bust.]

SENECAI, SENECAY, or SENECÉ, Antoine Bauderon De, a French poet, 1643-1737.

SENEFELDER, Aloys, a native of Munich, inventor of the art of lithography, 1771-1834.

SENKENBERG, H. C., Baron De, a jurisconsult, and aulic counsellor of the emperor, 1704-1768. His brother, J. Christian, a physician and founder of an hospital at Frankfort, 1707-1772. R. Charles, son of the first named, a jurisconsult and German and Latin poet, d. 1799.

SENNACHERIB, king of Assyria, B.C. 712-707.

SENNERT, Daniel, physician to the elector of Saxony, 1572-1637. His son, Andrew, an Oriental scholar, 1606-1689.

SEPTIMIUS. See Severus.

SEPULVEDA, Juan Gines De, a learned Spaniard, who was historiographer to the emperor Charles V., and wrote his Life, 1490-1573.

SERAIN, P. E., a Fr. agriculturist, 1738-1821.

SERAO, F., an Ital. archæologist, 1702-1783.

SERAPION, a physician of Alexandria, supposed to have written against Hippocrates, 3d century B.C. A second of the name was a Syrian physician, author of two works still existing, 8th or 9th century. A third, called Serapion Junior, was an Arabian physician and medical writer of the 11th century.

SERARIUS, Nicholas, a learned Jesuit, called 'the luminary of the German church,' 1555-1609.

SERASSI, P. A., an Ital. biographer, 1721-91.

SERENUS, A. L., a Roman poet, 1st century.

SERGARDI, L., an Italian satirist, 1660-1726.

SERGEL, J. T., a Swedish sculptor, 1740-1814.

SERGIUS, the first of the name, pope of Rome, time of Justinian II., 687-701. The second, whose pontificate Italy was invaded by the Saracens, and Louis II. was consecrated king of Italy, 844-847. The third, one of Marozia's lovers, father by her of John X., 904-911. The fourth said to be the first who changed his name on assuming the tiara, 1009-1012.

SERGIUS, a patriarch of C'stantinople, 610-[illegible]

SERIEYS, A., a French compiler, 1750-181[illegible]

SERIMAN, Z., a Venetian writer, 1708-17[illegible]

SERLIO, S., an Italian architect, 1475-15[illegible]

SEROUX D'AGINCOURT, John Batt. L[illegible] George, a Fr. historian and antiquar., 1730-1[illegible]

SERPILIUS, G., a Hungarian ecclesiastic, [illegible] troversial writer and poet, 1668-1723.

SERRA, A., an Italian economist, 16th [illegible]

SERRA, M., an Italian painter, 1658-1728.

SERRANO, T., an Italian Jesuit, 1715-17[illegible]

SERRAO, J. A., an Italian prelate, 1731-1[illegible]

SERRE, Hercules, Count De, a French [illegible] man attached to the party of Richelieu, 1777-1[illegible]

SERRES, John De, in Latin Serranus, a learned French Calvinist and historiographer, 1[illegible] 1598. His br., Olivier, an agricult., 1539-1[illegible]

SERRES, Olive, a lady who claimed to be princess of Cumberland, as the legitimate daughter of Henry Frederick, duke of Cumberland, by a sister of the Rev. Dr. Wilmot; she was born at Warwick in 1772, and made a fruitless effort to obtain the recognition of her claims on the death of George III., previous to which she had been married to Mr. Serres, the king's marine painter. Died 1834.

SERRONI, H., an Ital. theologian, 1517-1587.

SERRY, J. H., a French theologian, 1655-1738.

QUINTUS, a partizan of Marius ween the plebeians and the sena- aded by Sylla, was born in Italy He reaped his earliest laurels in e Cimbri and Teutones, on the d there also became acquainted people. When Sylla triumphed retired to his prætorial govern- nd though he was continually lus, he virtually rendered that nt under his command, and ve it the benefits of a pater- He was assassinated at a ban- ad been invited by the Roman .C. 72. [E.R.]

SERVEDE, MICHAEL, was a in Arragon, A.D. 1509. From assumed the cognomen of Vil- e surname Reves, which he put of his books, appears to be a n of the first two syllables of her was a lawyer, and wishing r his own profession, sent him Toulouse. But literature and is attention and engrossed his ing to Spain he attached him- nfessor to the emperor Charles ed him first into Italy and then he year 1550 he took up his re- nd often conferred with Oeco- ers of theology. His mind now ts peculiar speculations, all in current beliefs. In 1531 ap- rk at Hagenau, 'De Trinitatis h the notion of a Trinity was but caricatured. The emperor to be suppressed, and the year published apologetic dialogues, venility of the work, but still same doctrines. In 1533 he ndied at Paris, afterwards re- , and resided for two years as ress at Lyons, busying him- y of medicine. In 1537 he re- took the degrees of master of nedicine. Leaving Paris, after the Sorbonne, he settled ulti- and for a series of years prac- le had been a considerable time on Theology, and under the smi Restitutio,' it appeared at but without author's name or roduced a great sensation—sus- nce of some Genevan correspon- ch refugee called De Trie, fell tus, and he was imprisoned by uring the process he contrived at once to Geneva, where he lay a month, waiting an opportu- Naples. After his flight from urned there in effigy, having ndemned as an outlaw, and he urned in person, if he had not le his escape. As he was about Zurich he was discovered, and f Calvin he was at once appre- th August, 1553. The accuser as Nicholas de la Fontaine, a lvin himself framed the eight- and-thirty articles of charge, as we learn from one of his own letters. At the first hearing of the case Servetus made explanations, and at the second hearing Calvin himself attended. In the mean- time the council of Geneva wrote to Vienne, with information that Servetus was in custody, and re- solved as the trial went on to send communications to several of the cantons. The council of Vienne demanded back the prisoner, but with tears in his eyes he entreated the Genevan syndics to retain him, and sist him before their own tribunal. The Genevan magistrates stood upon prerogative, or the burning of Servetus would have happened at popish Vienne, and the protestant syndics were proud to rival a catholic city in severity of pen- alty. His prosecution was now given to the at- torney-general, and the charge of sedition was specially pressed against the accused; for politics superseded theology in the discussion. Servetus replied at some length, and in his subsequent petition one of his principal endeavours is to clear himself from the charge of being a disturber of society. Calvin and he were confronted—they had maintained a correspondence some months previ- ous, and Servetus actually craved an indictment to be preferred against the reformer. Calvin, in the meantime, had quarrelled with the council in a case of discipline; the Libertine or anti-Calvinist party were growing in power, and Servetus hoped apparently to turn the tables on his principal antagonist. The opinion of the churches in Swit- zerland had now been asked, and they unani- mously condemned Servetus, though they differed as to the amount of punishment which should be inflicted on him. Toward the end of the pro- tracted investigation the influence of Calvin was little felt, and on the 26th of October, the un- happy Servetus was doomed to the stake the following day. Calvin interfered for a more leni- ent form of punishment, but his request was not granted. Servetus was greatly affected when he heard his sentence, though he gradually resumed his composure. Farell attended him, but seems to have made no impression upon his mind. The next day the sentence was carried into effect in all its cruel barbarity. The sufferer, during the half- hour of his consciousness amidst the flames, cried repeatedly—'Jesus, thou Son of the Eternal God, have mercy on me.'—This execution of Servetus has acquired an adventitious eminence from its circumstances. Had he been burned at Vienne, the deed would have been known only as one of thousands inflicted by papal mandate. But the scene of the martyrdom in the protestant republic of Geneva, and the theological notoriety of Calvin, have given it an extraordinary and a polemical celebrity. Much has been said and written about it: it has barbed many a declamation: and the harsh and vindictive spirit of Calvin has been often reprobated. But the fact is, that only in the year 1842, were the original records of the trial dis- covered and employed in the account. M. De La Valayre in 1842 made good use of those docu- ments, and so did Rilliet in 1844, in his 'Relation du Procès Criminal Intenté à Genève en 1553 Contre Michel Servet,' &c.—The result throws a better and more faithful light on the whole trans- action. It is proved that while Calvin approved of the punishment of death according to a theory

then commonly entertained, yet that he had little or no direct influence with the council during the latter portion of the trial. (See CALVIN). The union between religion and politics in the government of Geneva, led its rulers to believe themselves invested with the power of punishing heresy as a sin against God and a crime against the state. Nay, at the very same period Berthelier, a citizen, had been excluded from the church by Calvin, but the council declared him capable of receiving the communion. In 1547 Gruet, a leader of the Libertine party, had been beheaded for sedition, though religious opinion formed a special charge against him. In the document which contains the sentence against Servetus, assaults on Calvin and the Genevan ministers are not mentioned at all. Servetus himself held the same theoretic views, and in his indictment against Calvin he puts the alternative—'Till the cause be decided for his death or mine.' So that had he obtained supremacy in Geneva, he would not have scrupled to burn Calvin. What a miserable misconception of human right and Divine enactment! And it was certainly a sad and inconsistent thing for reformers to deny to others the toleration which they had claimed and gained for themselves. The career of Servetus was peculiar. Born in the land of the Auto-da-Fé, he was sent out of it to study, his father being afraid that his son's free speculations and pugnacious propensity would place him within the grasp of the inquisition; and yet he perished neither in Spain nor France. Coleridge has said, that 'if any poor fanatic ever thrust himself into the flames, that man was Servetus.' We cannot use these words in all their latitude; yet, certainly Servetus, with all his acknowledged talents and gifts, was ambitious and arrogant, was, in short, what Mosheim calls a 'semifanatic.' But surely such a character did not merit so awful a penalty, and we may read in the flames of Servetus that man is responsible to God alone for his belief, that truth does not suffer by toleration, for fire is not able to extirpate what argument cannot overthrow. A passage is found in the 'Restitutio' of Servetus, which has been understood by some as anticipating by seventy years, Harvey's famous discovery of the circulation of the blood. While we admit the boldness and eloquence of Servetus, his rare acquirements and restless industry, we are compelled to add that the equivocations made by him on his trial, both at Vienne and Geneva, do not place his moral character in the same favourable light. [J.E.]

SERVIEZ, JACQUES ROERGAS DE, a French historian, 1679-1727. His grandson, EMMANUEL GERVAISE, a soldier and writer, 1755-1804.

SERVIN, LOUIS, a French jurisconsult, who died suddenly when in the act of remonstrating with Louis XIII. against his tyrannical acts, 1626.

SERVIUS, MAURUS HONORATUS, a Roman grammarian and commentator upon Virgil, 5th c.

SERVIUS, SULPITIUS RUFUS, a Roman jurist and statesman, died in Antony's camp, B.C. 43.

SERVIUS TULLIUS, the sixth king of Rome, succeeded his father-in-law, Tarquin the Elder, B.C. 578. Murdered at the instigation of Tullia and her husband, B.C. 534. See TARQUIN.

SESSA, an Indian mathematician, the reputed inventor of the game of chess, 11th century.

SESTINI, D., an Ital. antiquarian, 1750-18

SESTO, CÆSAR DA, called the Milanese, Italian painter of the 16th century.

SETTALA, LODOVICO, in Latin Septalius, eminent Milanese physician, 1552-1633. His MANFRED, an able mathematician, 1600-1680.

SETTLE, ELKANAH, known as a poet dramatic writer, born at Dunstable 1618, d. 17

SEUME, J. T., a German writer, 1763-1810

SEVERINUS, a pope of Rome, 640.

SEVERUS, three Roman emperors:—1. LUCI SEPTIMIUS SEVERUS, the most important, born on the African coast 146, and having co manded the legions of Illyria, was proclaimed the death of Pertinax 193. He made many co quests in the East, and in 208 came to this isla where he built a wall between the Forth and t Clyde, as a check against the Picts. He died at Y in 211. 2. FLAVIUS VALERIUS SEVERUS, kille Maxentius, after a short indulgence in power. 3. VIBIUS SEVERUS, proclaimed by the legio Illyria 461, died 465. 4. See ALEXANDER.

SEVERUS, founder of a Christian sect, 2d c

SEVERUS, A., a Greek rhetorician, 5th c

SEVERUS, C., a Roman epic poet, 1st cent

SEVERUS, S., a Christian poet, 4th cen

SEVIGNE, MARIE DE RABUTIN CHAN Marchioness De, celebrated for her fine u standing and epistolary talents, was born at chateau de Bourdilly, in Burgundy, 1627. the death of the marquis de Sevigne, she liv widowhood twenty-five years, devoted to the cation of her children. Her famous letter addressed to her daughter, Madame de Gri Died 1696.

SEVIN, F., a French philologist, 1682-17

SEWARD, ANNA, a once popular writer, k as the friend and biographer of Dr. Darwin the daughter of the Rev. T. Seward, rec Eyam, in Derbyshire, where she was born Her publications were the poetical ro Louisa, 1782; a Collection of Sonnets, 1799; the Life of Darwin in 1804. She died in since which her Literary Remains and C pondence have appeared.

SEWARD, W., a biographical writer, 174

SEWELL, GEORGE, a native of Windsor, was settled as a physician at Hampstead, known to fame as a poet and miscellaneous w by his tragedy of 'Sir Walter Raleigh,' a 'Vi tion of the English Stage,' &c.; died 1726.

SEWELL, WILLIAM, son of a surgeon at sterdam, whose father was an English ref known as a Quaker historian, 1654-1720.

SEXTIUS, a Pythagorean philosopher, 1st c

SEXTIUS-EMPIRICUS, a Greek philo and physician, time of Commodus.

SEYBOLD, D. C., a Ger. philologist, 1747-1

SEYDLITZ, FREDERIC WILLIAM, Baron a companion-in-arms of Frederick the Great tinguished in the seven years' war, 1722-1773.

SEYMOUR, ARABELLA. See ARABELLA.

SEYMOUR, EDWARD, duke of Somerset, uncle to Edward VI., was brother to Queen J Seymour, and on his sister's marriage to H VIII. in 1536, was created Viscount Beau He distinguished himself in the Scottish French wars, and in the struggle for power a the death of Henry, became governor of the y ctor of the realm. In 1548 he was f Somerset, and took the functions rer and earl-marshal; in the same d the troops in Scotland, and won lusselburgh. His power was at last intrigues of the earl of Warwick, ke of Northumberland, and he was ower Hill, 22d January, 1552.

See SEISSEL.

a noble Italian family founded by ENDOLO, a peasant of the Romagna, at Cottignola in 1369, and enlisting of soldiers that passed through the adually to the rank of general. He rza on account of his great vigour.
ed in effecting the passage of the
in the service of Joan of Naples, ESO ALESSANDRO, duke of Milan, son of the preceding. He was born rose to distinction in the service of ds as general of the Milanese troops;
duke by the leaders of a revolt in 66. The descendants of the latter duchy through several generations.
of them was MAXIMILIAN, who events that followed the league of died at Paris, in the reign of Francis

VISCONTI.

ONA, daughter of J. G. Sforza, one
g dukes, and of Isabella of Arragon, of Poland by her marriage with n 1518; she died 1557.

L, SIR LANCELOT, a judge and rliament, born 1779, vice-chancellor 0.

L, THOMAS, a dramatic writer, and ryden as poet-laureate and historio-born of a good family in Norfolk
llowed in the wake of Ben Jonson f comedy; died 1692. CHARLES,
e his son or nephew, also a play-26.

BURY. The first earl of Shaftes-brilliant but inconsistent statesman
's reign. His son, the second earl,
r of ANTHONY ASHLEY COOPER,
the subject of this notice. He was n in 1671, and educated under the e of his grandfather. He travelled on the continent, and in 1693 en-use of Commons, where he acted with the Whig party. His health ming to fail, he went abroad in 1698,
Holland under the advice of Bayle
Next year his father's death called use of Lords; but, early in the reign premature infirmities forced him to er from public life. Thenceforth he f exclusively with philosophy and he died at Naples in 1713.—In 1711
ed his writings into a series, which Characteristics of Men, Manners, Times.' The most important pieces
n are, the 'Inquiry concerning Virfirst published in 1699; and the Pla-called 'The Moralists, a Philosophi-
' whose first appearance was in 1709.
ilosopher and as a writer, Shaftes-ntered extremes, equally undeserved, of admiration and of censure. His style is elaborate, artificial, affected, and studded all over with foreign and pedantic terms of his own invention; and he very seldom puts off his offensive air of foppish condescension. But there is hardly a page of his volumes in which we are not struck by the elements of fine writing; and some passages of his, with their lofty thoughtful eloquence, and their exquisite music of rhythm, are among the most beautiful things in the English language. The moral elevation and purity of the sentiments are always worthy of the amiable and irreproachable character of the author. The great defect in Shaftesbury's philosophical thinking is its indistinctness: he merely throws out hints, in a manner not unlike his master and model Plato, and often gives reason for believing that he himself had apprehended very obscurely the ideas he strives to express. Inconsistency, real or apparent, is a natural accompaniment of this mistiness of thought; and the vacillating uncertainty of opinion betrays itself most of all when questions of religion are directly handled. His mind had received a wrong bias through the scorn he felt for the Toryism and Jacobitism then rampant in the Church of England; and the tendency was augmented by his observation of the popularity possessed, among the clergy as elsewhere, by the philosophy of Locke, which Shaftesbury believed to contain the germ of evil religious consequences. Although, likewise, no thinkers could be more unlike than the cold and sceptical Bayle and the enthusiastic and aspiring Shaftesbury, the intercourse of the two did not improbably affect in some degree the opinions of the young Englishman. Accordingly Shaftesbury gives vent, especially in 'The Moralist,' to expressions and assertions, which fully justified Leland in uttering a warning against him in his 'View of Deistical Writers;' while elsewhere he contradicts such passages directly, or neutralizes them by fine trains of devout meditation.—In the philosophical system (if such it can be called) of the author of the 'Characteristics,' there are two or three peculiarities calling for hasty commendation. First, in Metaphysics he strenuously vindicated the possibility of à priori notions against the sensualistic philosophy of Locke; and his views on this great question, while they called forth the warm admiration of Leibnitz, and accorded with the opinions of that great thinker, were likewise a foretaste of the creed taught afterwards in fragments by Reid and systematized (not in all points safely) by Kant and his disciples. In the second place, Shaftesbury's Ethical doctrines placed him, at two points, in opposition to systems then prevalent in England. He combated eagerly and convincingly the Selfish theory of Hobbes: he directed thinkers into a psychological track that had recently been neglected, when, refusing to confine himself exclusively (like Cudworth and Clarke) to the region of Reason or Intellect, he indicated Feeling as an essential element in all Facts of Conscience or operations of the Moral Sense or Faculty. [W.S.]

SHAH-ABBAS. See ABBAS.

SHAKSPERE, WILLIAM, 'born at Stratford-upon-Avon, married and had children there; went to London, where he commenced actor, and wrote poems and plays; returned to Stratford, made his will, and died.' 'This,' says Steevens, 'is all that is known, with any degree of certainty, about Shakspere.' We should have cared very little about the birth and marriage, the will, or the death, of this native of a petty country-town in the sixteenth century, but for the one other certainty, 'he wrote poems and plays.' That fact renders the minutest incident in the life of this son of a Warwickshire yeoman a matter of interest to the whole human race; for out of the cottage in which he was born, has gone forth a voice which is the mightiest in modern literature; which has had no small influence in forming our national character; and which, in connection with the higher teaching from above, is refining and humanizing wherever its sound is heard.—Steevens was in a great degree right, as far as regards a mere biographical notice of Shakspere. His real biography lies in a critical estimate of his writings, as compared with others of his time, and in his relation to the age in which he flourished. The documentary biography, beyond that furnished by the facts that tell us the dates of his several works, lies in a very narrow compass.—William Shakspere was born in 1564. His baptism was registered in the parish church of Stratford, on the 26th of April, in that year. It was usual to baptize within three days of birth, and, therefore, his birth-day is held to be the 23d of April, the St. George's day of England. The probability, though not the certainty, is that he was born in the town of Stratford. The old house there, in which he is said to have been born, was unquestionably the property of his father, John Shakspere. His father was married and living in Stratford in 1558. His mother was Mary Arden, of the ancient family of the Ardens. The course of John Shakspere may be traced by the parochial and municipal records, from the office of juryman of the court leet in 1556, to that of bailiff, or chief magistrate, in 1568. He has been held to have been a butcher, or a wool-stapler, or a glover. In an age when there was little subdivision of occupations, the yeoman cultivating his land, might have sold the carcases of his sheep, dressed their wool, and prepared their peltries. The occupier of grazing land had no large separate markets for such commodities. There was a free grammar school at Stratford. We have no record that William Shakspere went to that school; but why should we doubt that he was educated there; it was the natural place of his education. Some persons have endeavoured to show that tincture of grammar school studies in hi that he was essentially unlearned. So is now wholly abandoned, except by tho

[Birth-place of Shakspere.]

if there be any left, who think that th
no learning without a constant parade
has been stated by Rowe, that John Sha
'a large family, ten children in all.'
other Shaksperes in Stratford. The re tinctly show that the father of the poe
children who survived the period of inf
have no trace how William Shakspere
ployed in the interval between his schoo
manhood. Some hold that he was an attor
The tradition is that he was a wild yo stealing deer. The certainty is that he w ing up that store of knowledge, and that range of genius, which made hi became.—At Shottery, a pretty villag mile of Stratford, is an old farm-h divided into several tenements, whe family of the name of Hathaway, and perty remained in the possession of scendants. Anne Hathaway became William Shakspere in 1582. The mar and license are preserved in the Consist at Worcester. By this marriage there children, Susanna, Hamnet, and Judeth.
the only son, died in 1596. The two survived their father, and inherited his p
Soon after his marriage William Shakspe connected with the Blackfriars' Theatr
don. In 1589, when he was only t years of age, he was a joint proprieto theatre, with four others below him i
The players of the Blackfriars' were Chamberlain's company, those who a royal patronage. We know nothing of the production of his first play. We can assign very few dates to any of his pla by the following table, which has been Mr. Knight, of the positive facts which dates previous to which they had duced :—

Henry VI., Part I.	Alluded to by N... 'Pierce Penn...
Henry VI., Part II.	Printed as 'Th... Part of the C... tion,'...
Henry VI., Part III.	Printed as 'Th... Tragedy of R... Duke of York...
Richard II.	Printed...
Richard III.	Printed...
Romeo and Juliet	Printed...
Love's Labour's Lost	Printed...
Henry IV., Part I.	Printed...
Henry IV., Part II.	Printed...
Henry V.	Printed...
Merchant of Venice	Printed 1600. Owned by Mr...
Midsummer Night's Dream	Printed 1600. Owned by Mr...
Much Ado about Nothing	Printed...
As You Like It	Entered at Sta... Hall...
All's Well that Ends Well	Held to be me... by Meres as... Labour's Wo...
Two Gentlemen of Verona	Mentioned by M...
Comedy of Errors	Mentioned by M...
King John	Mentioned by M...
Titus Andronicus	Printed...
Merry Wives of Windsor	Printed...
Hamlet	Printed...

h Night	Acted in the Middle Temple Hall	1602
)	Acted at Harefield	1602
re for Measure	Acted at Whitehall	1604
	Printed 1608. Acted at Whitehall	1607
g of the Shrew	Supposed to have been acted at Henslow's Theatre, 1593. Entered at Stationers' Hall	1607
s and Cressida	Printed 1609. Previously acted at Court	1609
es	Printed	1609
empest	Acted at Whitehall	1611
Winter Tale	Acted at Whitehall	1611
r VIII.	Acted as a new play when the Globe was burned	1613

es thirty-seven plays of Shakspere, the ex- e of thirty-one is thus defined by contemporary ts. The six which are not so defined, are celine, Macbeth, Timon, and the three Roman —There are not many instances of the men- f Shakspere, during his lifetime, by writers s period; but one writer, Francis Meres, s many of his more important plays, in 1598. oems carry their own dates, 'Venus and is' was published in 1593; 'Lucrece' in the 'Sonnets' in 1609. Meres had men- in 1598, Shakspere's 'sugered sonnets st his private friends.'—Shakspere became n connection with the theatres. He pur- the principal house in Stratford in 1597, arcels of land in that parish. He became ne-owner also by purchase. It is supposed e ceased to be connected with the theatres in for there is a valuation of his property in that for which he asked £1,433 6s. 8d. His father 1601; and it is more than probable that the st of poets succeeded him as a practical r in his native place. He had his actions in iliff's court for corn sold and delivered. He ooked up to by his neighbours, as there is ce in letters. His eldest daughter, in 1607, ed Dr. Hall, an eminent physician residing in ford. Judeth married Thomas Quiney, a man of substance, in February, 1616. The er of Stratford has another register two hs afterwards. On the 25th April, William spere was buried in the parish church. Anne, ife, survived till 1623. She was amply pro- for by the laws of her country; for the er part of Shakspere's property was freehold, the widow was entitled, for her life, to the r of one-third. The bequest to her of the d-best bed was one of affection, and not glect. The best bed was always an heir-loom. he eldest daughter, Susanna, died in 1649. th died in 1662. Neither left any heir-male. one grand-daughter of Shakspere, Elizabeth inherited the bulk of his property. By her d marriage she became the wife of Sir John nard. In half a century the family estates e all scattered, and went to other races; with exception of two houses in Henley-Street, which y Barnard devised to her kinsman, Thomas rt, the grandson of Shakspere's sister, Joan. e houses were purchased by the nation, in 7, of the descendants of the Harts. [C.K.]

SHAMMAI, a Jewish rabbi, president of the hedrim, at first a disciple of Hillel, but afterwards dissented from his master, and set up a new college; 1st century B.C.

SHANFARAH, an Arabian poet, 6th century.

SHARP, ABRAHAM, an astronomer and mechanician, who became assistant to Flamsteed at the Royal Observatory, 1651-1742.

SHARP, JAMES, the victim of his intemperate zeal for imposing the system of the Anglican Church upon Scotland, was a native of Banffshire, where he was born in 1618. He was first an advocate of the presbyterians, but after the restoration became a tool of the court party, and was rewarded with the archbishopric of St. Andrews. The wanton cruelties which followed provoked the bitterest hatred against him, and, on the 3d of May, 1679, he was dragged from his coach, and murdered in the presence of his daughter. This event occurred about three miles from St. Andrews.

SHARP, JOHN, grandfather of the celebrated Granville Sharpe (see below), was a learned prelate and theologian. He was born at Bradford, in Yorkshire, 1644, and distinguished himself by preaching against popery in the reign of James II. After the revolution he was successively dean of Canterbury and archbishop of York; died 1713. His son, THOMAS, archdeacon of Northumberland and prebendary of Durham, was a master of Hebrew learning; born about 1693, died 1758.

SHARP, RICH., a gentleman of great wealth, well known in the literary world, and once a member of parliament, au. of 'Letters and Essays,' 1759-1835.

SHARP, S., a writer on surgery, died 1778.

SHARP, WILLIAM, this eminent engraver was born in London, January 29, 1749. His father, who was a gunmaker, early apprenticed him to a bright engraver, and he commenced his career by engraving such works as door plates, &c., his first effort being on a pewter pot; but in 1782 he completely resigned this business, and commenced as a line engraver, executing plates after Stothard and others, for the booksellers, but he soon acquired a great reputation, and engraved many considerable works from the old and modern masters, and such is the delicacy and precision of his lines, that some of his plates are considered, both in this country and abroad, the finest specimens of line engraving extant; as for instance, the portrait of John Hunter, after Sir Joshua Reynolds, or his 'Lear,' after West. Sharp died at Chiswick of dropsy in the chest, July 25, 1824. He was a member of the academies of Munich and Vienna, but had declined the honour of 'Associate Engraver' in the Royal Academy of his own country, considering the exclusion of engravers from the full honours of the academy, an affront to the profession. This exclusion is now (1853) suspended. Sharp is reputed latterly to have resigned his mind to the reveries of Richard Brothers, Joanna Southcote, and Emanuel Swedenborg. That he may at one time have had faith in all these is possible, but not simultaneously. To confound the sublime morals and doctrines of Swedenborg with the reveries of Brothers, or the delusions of Joanna Southcote, is not less ridiculous than to assume that an orthodox Mahometan could at the same time be a good Christian. [R.N.W.]

SHARPE, GRANVILLE, was born in 1734 at Durham, and was apprenticed in trade, but, having a strong turn for literature, he abandoned the uncongenial pursuit of business. His friends having procured him a situation in the Ordnance Office, he continued for some time discharging the duties of that department until the declaration of war against America, and entertaining strong conscientious objections to the policy and justice of that measure, he resigned his place. Being possessed of some means, he now resolved to dedicate his life to study and to the duties of active benevolence. He instituted the society for the abolition of the slave trade, and distinguished himself by his zeal in devising measures for the extensive distribution of the Bible. He was the author of various literary works. Besides several pamphlets on slavery, he published Tracts on the Hebrew language, and Remarks on the Definite Article in the Greek New Testament. Mr. Sharpe died on 6th July, 1813. [R.J.]

SHARPE, GREGORY, a philosophical divine and Orientalist, born in Yorkshire 1713, died 1771.

SHARROCK, ROBERT, a dignitary of the Ch. of England, and a writer on morality, 17th cent

SHAW, C., a Yorkshire poet, 1739-1786.

SHAW, G., a disting. naturalist, 1751-1813.

SHAW, SIR JAMES, a native of Ayrshire, who rose from the position of a merchant's clerk to the high office of chamberlain in the city of London. He was born in 1764, and became alderman in 1798, sheriff in 1803, and lord mayor in 1805. The same year he was returned to parliament by the city, and continued one of its representatives till 1818. In 1831 he was elected chamberlain, and died highly respected at the age of eighty, 1843.

SHAW, JOHN, an English divine, died 1689.

SHAW, PETER, a medical writer, 1695-1763.

SHAW, SAMUEL, a divine and schoolmaster, author of miscellaneous works, 1635-1696.

SHAW, STEBBING, rector of Hartshorne, in Staffordshire, known as a topographical writer, and originally tutor of Sir Francis Burdett, 1762-1802.

SHAW, THOMAS, a native of Kendal, who became chaplain to the English factory at Algiers, and wrote an account of his travels, 1692-1751.

SHEA, DAVID, professor of Oriental languages at Haileybury College, and translator of Mirkhond's History of the Early Kings of Persia, born in Dublin 1772, died 1836.

SHEBBEARE, JOHN, a physician and political writer, pensioned by the earl of Bute, 1709-1788.

SHEE, SIR MARTIN ARCHER, second only to Sir Thomas Lawrence as a portrait painter, was born in Dublin 1769. He exhibited his first picture at the Royal Academy in 1789, and at his death, in 1850, was senior member and president of that institution. He is author of several poetical productions on art, and was in other respects a highly accomplished man.

SHEFFIELD. See BUCKINGHAMSHIRE.

SHELBURNE, WILLIAM PETTY, Lord, and first marquis of Lansdowne, born 1737. Became president of the Board of Trade in 1763, and joined Lord Chatham's administration in 1766. After the dissolution of that ministry he was a zealous oppositionist till 1782, when he was appointed secretary of state for foreign affairs. He became head of the cabinet on the death of the marquis of Rockingham, which position he retained till the coalition of Lord North and Mr. Fox; afterwards he was created marquis of Lansdowne, died 1805.

SHELDON, GILBERT, a munificent prelate w succeeded Juxon in the primacy, and be expending above £66,000 in charitable obj remained at his post in the midst of the aff during the plague of London. Among the wo executed at his expense is the theatre which be his name at Oxford. Born at Stanton, in Staffor shire, 1598, died 1677.

SHELLEY, G., a writing-master, died 1736.

SHELLEY, PERCY BYSSHE, a poet of ad able genius, was, in the words which he applied himself, 'a power girt round with weakn There is something marvellous in the rich origin of his imagination, and the ideal loveliness of t forms which it pours forth. But his figures fl in the air without touching earth; he wants h practical strength of sympathy and intuition human character; and, while always wa thought with fancy, he thinks so obscurely that attempts at narrative fail completely, while s those lyrical flights which are his best efforts often mystical or unintelligible. This ambiti turn of speculation, ill-directed and unearl caused the unhappiness of his life as well as chief faults of his poems. With the utmost g tleness and amiability of personal demeanour united an extreme confidence in his own opi on abstract questions; and, setting himself up, the presumption of youth, in opposition to rec principles which he did not understand, he made h self voluntarily an outcast, and remained thr life a martyr to his own indistinct chimeras.—S ley, the son of a wealthy baronet in Sussex, was in that county in 1792. His school-days made uncomfortable by his sensitive and r temper; and he was not distinguished as a sch But he laid the foundation of good Greek sc ship, and wrote two novels before he was si In 1808 he was sent from Eton to Oxford. with very slight philosophical reading, he b entangled in metaphysical difficulties, and, at teen, was pleased to publish, with a direct a to the heads of colleges, a pamphlet entitled Necessity of Atheism.' He was immediate pelled. Soon afterwards he printed his po 'Queen Mab,' in which singular poetical b are interspersed through a wild mass of spec absurdities. His alienation from his famil completed when, at the age of eighteen, he ried the daughter of a person who had k coffee house. After three years of misery t parties, the ill-assorted marriage issued in a s tion; and not very long afterwards Shelley agitated into temporary derangement, by le that his wife had destroyed herself. His ch were taken from him by a decree of the Co Chancery, on the ground of the atheism wh had avowed, and which he was too proud to retr compulsion. Already, among his various w ings, he had, in 1816, become acquainted with Byron, and lived near him on the Lake of G There, and by the Lake of Como, he began write poetry very sedulously, having for some t written oftener in prose. He studied and ad Wordsworth and Coleridge; he was familiar w the Greek dramatists, from whom he made fine translations; but probably no models influenced him so much as Goethe and Calderon. Not long after his wife's death he married the daughter of well known as the authoress of and other novels. They resided s in Buckinghamshire, where they s beloved by their charity to the ey's generosity had been remark-poverty which he had more than During this time, Shelley wrote his or,' and the gorgeously obscure n.' In the spring of 1818 he and red to Italy, where they at length es at Pisa. In that country, with iling, Shelley produced some of his

in a period of about four years.
beautiful though dreamy lyrical
rometheus Unbound;' the gloomy Cenci;' the mysterious but attrac-lion;' 'Julian and Maddalo,' in ays himself and Byron: and many nall pieces, lyrical and reflective.
hen he had not quite completed
year, he was drowned in a storm ttered in his yacht on the Gulf of lience to his own desire, his body,
hore, was burned, under the direc-rron and other friends; and the d to Rome, and buried beside the the Protestant cemetery beneath e pyramid. [W.S.]

[Tomb of Shelley.]

ARY WOLSTONECRAFT, wife of the 797, and acquired great reputation stein.' Among her other works er husband's poems; died 1851.
, WILLIAM, was born in 1714, in e his father owned the small estate
. He spent his youth, at Oxford literary idling and verse-making.
th year he succeeded to the family
his principal employment after-execution of those operations in ing, which made the Leasowes places of England, but involved the iary embarrassment. Shenstone but not vigorous writer, both in
se. His 'Pastoral Ballad' is one we have of its artificial kind, and contains some fine touches, both of description and sentiment; and his 'Schoolmistress,' a semi-burlesque imitation of Spenser's diction and stanza, has a spirit and originality which he never elsewhere showed. He died in 1763. [W.S.]

SHEPREVE, or SHEPERY, JOHN, one of the most learned men of his age, professor of Hebrew at Oxford about 1538, and author of Latin poems, &c., died 1542.

SHERARD, or SHERWOOD, WILLIAM, a learned botanist and antiquarian, who became British consul at Smyrna, and devoted much time in exploring Natolia and Greece; born in Leicestershire 1659, died 1728. His brother, JAMES, born 1666, cultivated a fine botanical garden at Eltham, in Kent, died 1737.

SHERBURNE, SIR EDWARD, clerk of the ordnance in the time of Charles I., known as a poet and classical translator, 1618-1702.

SHERIDAN, THOMAS, grandfather of the dramatist (next article), was born in the county of Cavan about 1684, and though of poor parentage became a clergyman in the Irish Church. He was a friend of Dean Swift, and an incorrigible wit, a genuine Irish sloven, a 'quibbler, a punster, and a fiddler,' died in extreme indigence 1738. His son, THOMAS, born at Quilca in 1721, went upon the stage in 1742, and was very successful as a tragedian; he wrote a 'Life of Swift,' 'Lectures on Elocution,' and an 'Orthoepical Dictionary of the English Language,' died 1788. FRANCES, wife of the latter, and grand-daughter of Sir Oliver Chamberlane, acquired considerable repute as a novelist, especially by her delightful romance of 'Nourjahad,' 1724-1767.

SHERIDAN, RICHARD BRINSLEY, was born at Dublin in 1751. His grandfather, Dr. Sheridan, a clergyman and schoolmaster in Ireland, was an improvident wit, and a friend and coadjutor of Swift; his father, Thomas Sheridan, was well known as an actor and a teacher of elocution, and as the author of a Pronouncing Dictionary; and his mother, a remarkably amiable and accomplished woman, wrote, besides other pieces, the fairy tale of 'Nourjahad.' Richard, an idle and mischievous boy, passed at school for a hopeless blockhead. But, though he had not learned to spell English when he left Harrow, at the age of eighteen, he was ambitious enough to join his friend, Halhed (the Orientalist), in publishing a translation from the Greek. He professed to study law in the Middle Temple; but his prospects were very hazy indeed, when, being barely of age, he made a runaway marriage with Miss Linley, a beautiful and accomplished singer. He refused to allow his wife to perform in public; and a small fortune she brought him was speedily dissipated by that careless way of living, which he practised at all stages of his life.—His career falls into two periods, exhibiting an alternation such as few men have gone through. The comic play-writer and theatrical manager transformed himself successfully into a statesman and orator.—His earliest comedy, 'The Rivals,' appeared in 1775, when the author was not much more than twenty-three years old. This humorous and lively play was succeeded next year by the commonplace farce of 'St Patrick's Day,' and the witty and clever little opera of 'The Duenna.' In 1777, was played his celebrated comedy 'The School for Scandal,' an inimitable picture of the surface of society as seen on its weak side, and fuller of sparkling wit than any English play except those of Congreve. Sheridan's course of play writing may be said to have closed in 1779, with his witty and ill-natured farce 'The Critic.' While engaged in bringing out his earliest plays, he became one of the proprietors of Drury Lane Theatre; and, acting as manager, he conducted his affairs with his usual carelessness. The wit which he exhibited in society was even more remarkable than that which glittered in his comedies; but the one as well as the other was really gained (as his biographer, Moore, amusingly shows) by careful premeditation, and owed very much to unscrupulous and dexterous borrowing.—Becoming intimate with Fox and Burke, and impressing these eminent men with a strong belief in his political and oratorical talents, he obtained a seat in parliament in 1780. He worked hard for the House of Commons, and was, in his great efforts, one of the most showy and striking of parliamentary orators. Of his famous speech on the trial of Warren Hastings, no record has been preserved that at all accounts for the extraordinary impression which it unquestionably made. Losing his wife in 1792, he married again, in 1796, a lady with whom he received five thousand pounds; and with this money and fifteen thousand pounds from shares in the theatre, he purchased an estate, and dreamt of living in splendour. But his affairs were already deranged beyond retrieval; and his sottish habits were becoming more and more confirmed. The last dozen years of his life were spent in continual difficulties, which made it the more honourable to him that he adhered steadfastly to the Whigs, even when his patron and boon-companion, the Prince Regent, deserted them. He was treasurer of the navy during the short ministry of Fox and Grenville; but after 1812 he was no longer able to speak in the house. Abandoned by friends, hunted by bailiffs, and sunk in habits and feelings, the wit and orator died in 1816. Those who had not offered to cheer his deathbed, gave him a grave in Westminster Abbey. [W.S.]

SHERLOCK, R., an English divine, 1613-1689.

SHERLOCK, William, an episcopalian divine, was born in London, 1641, and received his education at Eton. Having distinguished himself at the university by his talents and acquirements, he obtained rapid preferment in the church, for, in 1669, he was appointed rector of the parish of St. George's, London; in 1681, prebendary of Pancras, St. Paul's cathedral; master of the Temple, and rector of Therfield; in 1691, dean of St. Paul's. His best known works are a 'Practical Treatise on Death;' 'A Discourse on Providence;' and 'The Future Judgment.' He died in 1707. [R.J.]

SHERLOCK, Dr. Thomas, son of the preceding, and a clergyman of the Church of England also. He was born in 1678, and having repaired in due time to St. Catherine Hall, Cambridge, to prosecute his education, he became eventually master of that college. He afterwards succeeded his father as master of the Temple; and it may be stated, as somewhat remarkable, that both father and son held this situation for the long period of seventy years. In 1728 he was elevated to the bench as bishop of Bangor, and thence, in 1734, he was translated to the see of Salisbury. A still higher promotion was put in his offer, for he was urged, in 1747, to accept the primacy. But that high honour he was obliged to decline on account of his bodily infirmities. He was prevailed on, however, in the year following to accept the see of London. His death took place in 1761. He was a popular and voluminous author. His 'Sermons,' his 'Use and Intent of Prophecy,' and his controversial writings on the Bangorian Controversy form the chief of his published works. [R.J.]

SHERWIN, John Keyse, an eminent engraver and designer, born in Sussex of humble parentage about 1750, died 1790.

SHERWOOD, Mrs., a popular English novelist and writer of juvenile books, 1775-1851.

SHIEL, Richard Lalor, born in Dublin 1793, and best known as a parliamentary orator, was called to the Irish bar in 1814, when he had already distinguished himself as a speaker at public meetings. His connection with politics dates from 1822, when he became an active supporter of the Catholic Association; and his career in parliament from 1829, after the passing of the Catholic Relief Act. In 1850 he went as her majesty's minister to the court of Tuscany; d. there 1851.

SHIELD, William, an eminent English composer, was born at Smalfield in the county of Durham, in the year 1749. He was apprenticed to a boat-builder at North Shields, during which period his musical talents began to develop themselves in such an extraordinary manner that he was induced to devote himself wholly to the study of the science. Shield first appeared as a dramatic composer in 1778. In rapid succession he produced music to the 'Flitch of Bacon;' 'Rosina;' 'The Poor Soldier;' 'Robin Hood;' 'Fontainbleau;' 'Marian;' 'Oscar and Malvina;' 'The Woodman,' &c. In 1807 he made a tour of the continent, and soon after his return home published his 'Introduction to Harmony,' which reached a second edition in 1817. He published also a volume of glees, and 'The Rudiments of Thorough Bass.' In 1817 the prince regent (George IV.) appointed him to the situation of master of the band of musicians in ordinary to the king, in which situation he conducted the musical services at the coronation of George IV. He died in 1829. [J.M.]

SHIPLEY, Jonathan, a prelate and poetical writer, one of whose daughters became the wife of Sir William Jones, born about 1714, died 1788.

SHIRLEY, Sir Anthony, a famous Eastern traveller, who became the ambassador of Shah Abbas to various courts of Europe, and Spanish admiral in the Levant; born at Weston, in Sussex, 1565, supposed to have died in Spain about 1630. His brother, Sir Thomas, travelled with him, and published an account of Turkey. A third brother, Sir Robert, was also his fellow-traveller, and, like Sir Anthony, acted as ambassador of the shah, 1570-1623.

SHIRLEY, James, a well-known poet and dramatic writer of the Elizabethan age, was born in London about 1594, and educated at Oxford and Cambridge. After taking a curacy in the Church of England he became catholic, and after an unsuccessful attempt to establish a grammar school, commenced writing for the stage. He was rendered destitute by the great fire of London, and is wife were so affected with grief this event, that they died within rs of each other, 1666.

THOMAS, a relation of the traveller nown as a medical writer, 1638-78.

WALTER AUGUSTUS, bishop of , born at Westport, in Ireland,

, A. L., a Ger. writer, 1737-1809.

E, the wife of a wealthy jeweller, reet, who became the mistress of d is represented as a woman of eauty. In 1482, after Edward's unished on an accusation of witch- ke of Gloucester, and deprived of fortune, but it is unknown where re is proof that she was living in enry VIII., at which time she is h terms by Sir Thomas More.

a Scotch optician, 1710-1768.

a physician and professional writer, other works, of a 'Natural History Medicinal Waters,' died 1772.

R CLOUDESLEY, a British admiral, e parentage near Clay, in Norfolk, n 1674 he served under Sir John d greatly distinguished himself in ripoli. His other principal actions ies of Cape la Hogue and Malaga. ed by shipwreck on the Scilly tober, 1707.

IR BARTHOLOMEW, an eminent order of London, died 1701. His a puritan divine, 1657-1715.

, HENRY, lieutenant-general in the inventor of the deadly case-shot, a 'Shrapnel shells,' died 1842.

D, S., a learned divine, died 1754.

a divine and royalist, died 1643.

., a popular comedian, died 1776.

'ORTH, PHILIP NICHOLAS, bishop uthor of a 'Discourse on the Con- Whole Scheme of Revelation with Human Reason,' and of a work m, entitled 'Scripture not Tradi- 2.

M., a Fr. antiquarian, died 1812.

IR ROBERT, a Scottish physician, political writer, 1643-1712.

puritan divine, 1577-1635.

., a French poet, 1512-1589.

JOHN, regius professor of botany or of 'Flora Oxoniensis,' 1758-96.

hter of Amaury I., king of Jerusa- sively wife of William Longsword, as mother of Baldwin V., and of n. With the latter she mounted Jerusalem 1186, the year preceding hand of Saladin.

Italian prelate and historian, auth. ' published by Muratori, died 1215.

a French Jesuit, 1677-1726.

OCH AMBROSE CUCURRON, a orn at Foussenet, near Toulouse, the abbé L'Epée as master of the school in Paris 1789, died 1822. row escapes during the revolution, he joined Janffret in publishing Political, and Literary Annals of France.' He wrote several works on the interesting subject which chiefly occupied his attention, and in 1800 established a printing press for the use of his scholars.

SICHEM, C. VAN, a Dutch engraver, d. 1580.

SIDDONS, MRS. HENRY, daughter of a comedian named Murray, became the wife of Mr. H. Siddons, son of the great actress (next article.) That gentleman dying in 1814, the brother of his widow undertook the management of the Edinburgh theatre in her interest, where, for many years, she excelled in genteel comedy and the gentler parts of tragedy. Died after 1830.

SIDDONS, SARAH, the most eminent of English actresses, was the eldest daughter of Roger Kemble, and was born at Brecknock in South Wales, 14th July, 1755. Notwithstanding her father's connection with the theatre, there seemed at first small chance of her becoming an actress, as her parents placed her out as lady's-maid in the family of Mrs. Greathead of Guy's Cliff, near Warwick, and in that position the incipient queen of tragedy remained for two years. They resorted to this measure for the purpose of separating her from Mr. Siddons, a member of her father's company, for whom she had an attachment; but to whom, notwithstanding such opposition, she was married in 1773. Two years afterwards she made her appearance in London, 29th December. Her debût had been procured by Lord Bruce, afterwards earl of Aylesbury, who had recommended her to Garrick, but the result was not flattering. The character, perhaps, was ill chosen—Portia, in 'The Merchant of Venice.' In the summer of next year we find her at Birmingham playing with Henderson, and subsequently at Bath with increasing success, in such parts as Euphrasia, Alicia, Rosalind, Matilda, and Lady Townley. On her next appearance at Drury Lane, 10th October, 1782, the actress proved triumphant. The part was better suited to her powers—Isabella, in 'The Fatal Marriage.' This was followed by Jane Shore, Euphemia, Calista, Belvidera, and Zara, in 'The Mourning Bride.' In Dublin and Cork, in the following year, she enjoyed a repetition of her metropolitan triumph. On her return to London she attempted another Isabella, that of Shakspeare in the difficult play of 'Measure for Measure.' This was in November, 1783. To the same year belong also her appearances in Constance, Volumnia, and Lady Macbeth; and to the following, the rememberable circumstance of Sir Joshua Reynolds painting her portrait in the character of the tragic muse, of which he was so proud that he traced his name on the hem of the muse's garment. Her fame now became prerogative, and her profits large. At Edinburgh she received a thousand guineas for performing ten nights, with many presents, among them a magnificent silver urn, inscribed 'A Reward to Merit.' Mrs. Siddons owed much of her success to her personal beauty and dignity; her voice was remarkably melodious, and her mental endowments were extraordinary. On her brother, John Kemble, becoming manager of Drury Lane in the spring of 1788, she appeared for his benefit as Katharine, in 'The Taming of the Shrew.' In the same theatre, also, she played Juliet in 1790, and Lady Macbeth in 1794. She transferred her talents to Covent Garden theatre, on her brother's taking a share in it (1801), and continued to reign there until its conflagration in 1808, with a short interregnum, during which Master Betty shone as a meteor. On the opening of the new theatre, 18th September, 1809, she appeared as Lady Macbeth, but in consequence of the O. P. riots, did not appear again until 24th April, 1810. In the following season she repeated all her principal characters, and on 29th June, 1812, retired altogether from the stage, in the part of Lady Macbeth, her greatest effort; reciting on the occasion a poetical address written by Mr. Horace Twiss, her nephew. After her retirement from the stage, she gave a course of public readings from Shakspeare at the Argyle Rooms, to which afterwards she added public readings from Milton's 'Paradise Lost.' Between 1812 and 1817 she likewise appeared on two or three occasions; but a new style of acting had then set in, which rendered her further appearances inexpedient Her death took place 8th June, 1831, at Upper Baker-Street, London; and she was buried in a vault at Paddington church. Her style of acting was grand, noble, and natural; somewhat cold and classical, but free from the formality which distinguished that of her brother. [J.A.H.]

SIDMOUTH, HENRY ADDINGTON, Viscount, a statesman of the party of William Pitt, eldest son of Dr. Addington. He entered parliament in 1784, and was admitted to the office of speaker as early as 1789. This honourable post he retained twelve years, and then resigned it to take the more responsible position of prime minister, in which he succeeded Pitt in March, 1801. He remained at the head of affairs till May, 1804, and in 1805 became president of the council under the great leader of his party. In 1812 Lord Liverpool became premier, and Viscount Sidmouth home secretary. In 1822 he retired to private life, and passed the remainder of his years at his official residence as ranger of Richmond Park; 1757-1844.

SIDNEY, ALGERNON. See SYDNEY.

SIDNEY, SIR HENRY, an English statesman, descended from a noble family in Surrey, and knighted by Edward VI. He held several state offices, and in 1568 was sent to Ireland as lord-deputy. He married Mary, eldest daughter of John Dudley, duke of Northumberland, and sister of Robert Dudley, the favourite of Elizabeth; d. 1586.

SIDNEY, MARY, countess of Pembroke, and daughter of the preceding, bears a distinguished name in English literature, both as the sympathizing friend of her brother, Sir Philip Sidney, and as the possessor of similar talents. She was married to the earl of Pembroke in 1576, and having survived her husband twenty years, died at her house in Aldersgate-Street, 1601. She wrote an Elegy on her brother, and other poems, including translations of the Psalms from the Hebrew. She also translated Mornay's 'Discourse of Life and Death,' and the 'Tragedy of Antonie.'

SIDNEY, SIR PHILIP, son of Sir Henry Sidney of Penshurst, in Kent, was born there on the 29th November, 1554. He made while young the tour of the greater part of Europe, and, in 1575, returned to England, where he became one of the brightest ornaments of the court of Queen Elizabeth. His learning was unusually ample and varied, his natural genius was bril
he was pre-eminent in all the martial a ments and courtly graces which our g prized so dearly. He was a generous Spenser and others of the literary band med the Elizabethan era. Sir Philip's ductions both in poetry and prose, th
burdened by the pedantic conceits whic ventional taste of the court delighted i ordinary amount of pathos, and an exq of natural beauty. The queen had rest from joining Drake's expedition in 158
from seeking the elective crown of Pola
ing' as Camden says 'to further his adv
out of fear that she should lose the je times.' But in 1586 he obtained the c
the cavalry in the auxiliary army whic led to the Netherlands against the Sidney fell in a skirmish near Zutphen, tember, 1586, at the early age of thirty had headed three successful charges o squadron against the enemy, when he through the thigh with a musket ball.
shattered the bone, and Sidney in great carried off the field by his followers. A him along he asked for water, and a bott found and brought to him. He raised it but as he saw at that moment a poor so lay mangled on the ground, 'ghastly his eyes at the bottle,' Sir Philip remove tasted draught from his own lips, and to the dying man, saying 'Thy necess greater than mine.' Sidney's wound pr tal, and he died at Arnheim, after eight severe suffering. He was buried in old S deeply regretted by his countrymen of e
A general mourning was observed for him,
then without precedent in England.

SIDONIUS, CAIUS SOLLIUS APO
MODESTUS, a Fr. poet and orator, Lyons,

SIEBENKEES, JOHN PHILIP, prof.
sophy and Oriental languages at Altorf,

SIEYES, COUNT EMMANUEL JOSE
monly called the ABBE SIEYES, a politici French revolution, was born at Frejus, 1
him, mainly, Buonaparte was indebted fo
portunity of assuming the supreme autho
the interest of Sieyes' history terminates event. At the period of the American r he occupied the post of grand-vicar in th of Chartres, but soon after abandoned his tical expectations for the arena of politi prospect of the estates-general meeting 1789 gave occasion to his first publicat
principal of which, 'Qu'est-ce que le Tie
(What is the Third Estate), contribute to the formation of a sound public o government, though a most threatening the circumstances. It exhibited m 25,000,000 of men governed without h son by about 200,000 of the privileg consisting of the clerical and lay nobless returned to the estates-general by the Paris, powerfully seconded Mirabeau of the Seance Royale, 23d June, 178 assembly being declared national, he t devoted himself, with his extensive kn
the former history of France, to the ev constitution. We may say a word h and readers of histories of those times:—it ing to judge of the probability of success a labour when the results have been long but quite another to pronounce on it be- event; add to which, the patriotic daring s, for that period, was no less remarkable e foresight and logical clearness of his In one point he went beyond Mirabeau, mely, of the royal veto, the principle laid y Sieyes was that of making the king's rely magisterial, and giving him no right ere with the will of the nation as expressed epresentatives: a point which is now re- as secure in the English constitution, for the sovereign really possesses the veto, it is reated as obsolete. It would occupy too pace to follow the Abbé Sieyes through the of the constituent assembly; it is well that the ideas of the Girondins prevailed, this became more evident, Sieyes grew re- and finally retired from public affairs for a ason. In this interval the Jacobin out- f 10th August occurred, the national con- was summoned, and Sieyes reappeared as ts members: the first question was that of g's fate, now a prisoner in the Temple, and ave his vote by simply repeating the words t,' (death), and to the questions of delay eal, 'no;' it is denied in the Biographie temporaines that he used the words 'la ns phrase.' In the height of the Jacobin ncy, Sieyes cautiously opposed the party spierre in convention, from which he re- ter the fall of the Girondins, and only re- his place some months after the fall of erre; at this period he narrowly escaped mpt at assassination, and soon afterwards s ambassador to Prussia. While there we is notice of him in the recently published s of the duke of Buckingham; it occurs in from Mr. T. Grenville, then at the court of —'I have seen Sieyes at court with his nd cockade. What Lavater would say of tures I know not, but I have seldom seen a ance of so bad impression. His manners, , and appearance here, have produced but disgust in all that are not of the nks of life, but it is to those that his mis- onsidered as being chiefly addressed, and id to have both means and agents enough through upon the lower classes down At this very time, so fallacious is opinion, as intriguing, not with the lower orders, h Buonaparte, then in Egypt, to whom he veyed an intimation of the state of affairs he Directory. In fine, Napoleon suddenly d, and concerted with Sieyes the coup f the 18th Brumaire, which resulted in ointment of Sieyes, Ducos, and Napoleon, isional consuls. The part of Sieyes was layed out when he had placed the crown emagne within reach of the successful sol- d great must have been his disappointment he latter grasped his projects, and absorbed le power and merit of realizing them in person. It is probable that Sieyes could nderstand such a result, and in the char- f Senator, he often made vain efforts to is master. On the restoration of the Bour- bons, he became an exile, but the revolution of 1830 enabled him to return to his country, where he died, at the advanced age of eighty-eight, in 1836. [E.R.]

SIGALON, X., a French painter, 1790-1837.

SIGAUD DE LAFOND, JEAN RENE, a French physician and natural philosopher, disting. as the discoverer of new methods in obstetrics, 1740-1810.

SIGEBERT, two kings of France, the first born about 535, was the third son of Clothaire I., king of the Franks, whom he succeeded as king of Austrasia, or Metz, 561. He was assassinated at Vitry, at the instance of Fredegonde, mistress of his rival, Childeric, 575. The second of the name, son of Dagobert I., succeeded to the kingdom of Austrasia 638, died 656. Several Anglo-Saxon kings of this name are also mentioned.

SIGEBERTUS, a monk of Gemblours, in Brabant, a disting. historian and savant, 1030-1112.

SIGISMUND, a king of Burgundy, 516-524.

SIGISMUND, emperor of Germany, son of Charles IV., and brother of Wenceslaus, was born 1368, became margrave of Brandenburg, 1378; king of Hungary, in virtue of his marriage with Mary, daughter of Louis, 1386; and emperor in 1410. Between the last two dates he had to contend with the Turkish emperor, Bajazet, and, after becoming emperor, with a revolt in Bohemia, headed by Ziska, and occasioned by the disgraceful burning of John Huss. He became master of events, and was crowned at Prague in 1436, died 1437. His second wife is called the Messalina of Germany.

SIGISMUND, three kings of Poland—SIGISMUND I., called 'the Great,' son of Casimir IV., was born 1466, and succeeded his brother, Alexander, in 1507, died 1548. SIGISMUND II., surnamed Augustus, born 1520, was son of the preceding, and succeeded him in 1548, died 1572. SIGISMUND III., surnamed De Vasa, born 1566, was son of John III., king of Sweden and of Catharine, the daughter of Sigismund I. He was elected king of Poland in 1587, and succeeded to the crown of Sweden in 1594. Being a catholic, his uncle, Charles, duke of Sudermania, easily undermined his authority in Sweden, and he lost that kingdom in 1604. In 1610, he succeeded in placing his son, Uladislaus, on the throne of Russia, but was afterwards obliged to succumb, and besides that, was involved in the war with Gustavus Adolphus. Died 1632.

SIGNORELLI, LUCA, was born at Cortona in 1441, and was the pupil of Piero Della Francesca. He was one of those extraordinary geninses like the Pisani, Giotto, Masaccio, and some few others, whose works have formed eras in the history of art. It is hardly too much to say, that Signorelli anticipated Michelangelo in grandeur of design; he constitutes the connecting link between Masaccio and Michelangelo, as Filippino does between Masaccio and Raphael. Signorelli's great works are in the chapel of the Madonna di San Brizzio in the cathedral of Orvieto, where he has represented in extensive frescoes, the History of Antichrist, the Resurrection of the Dead, Hell, and Paradise. These frescoes were commenced in 1499, in continuation of the unfinished series begun by Fra Giovanni da Fiesole: the ceiling was finished in 1500. The whole of the frescoes were finished about 1503, and are sufficiently new and vigorous in style to account for the extraordinary progress in design generally displayed in the famous cartoon by Michelangelo exhibited in 1506. Such indeed is the extraordinary vigour displayed in these frescoes that Vasari and many others have indicated Signorelli as the immediate precursor of Michelangelo, who, says Vasari, always expressed the highest admiration for his works, and Vasari adds, that all may see what use he made of the inventions of Luca in his great work of the Last Judgment, in the Sistine chapel, especially in the forms of the angels and demons, and in the arrangement. The fact is indisputable, some of the best figures are little more than transcripts from Signorelli. Luca died at Arezzo in 1524, whither he had retired, and where he lived, says Vasari, more after the manner of a nobleman than an artist. —(Vasari, Vite de' Pittori, &c. Ed. Flor., 1846, segg.) [R.N.W.]

SIGONIUS, C., a learned Italian, 1520-1584.

SIGORGNE, P., a Fr. philosopher, 1719-1809.

SIGWART, G. F., a Germ. anatomist, 1711-95.

SILANION, an Athenian sculptor, 346 B.C.

SILHON, J., a French philosopher, died 1666.

SILHOUETTE, STEPHEN DE, a French statesman, dist. as a miscellaneous writer, 1709-1767.

SILIUS ITALICUS, CAIUS, a Roman pleader, and author of poems on the Punic war, was born A.D. 16, and became consul under Nero, 68. He was afterwards proconsul of Asia; died 100.

SILVA, D., a learned Milanese, 1690-1779.

SILVA, J. B., a French physician, 1682-1748.

SILVERSTOLPE, A. G., a Swedish statesman, historiographer, and philologist, 1772-1824.

SILVERIUS, a pope of Rome, 536-538.

SILVESTER. See SYLVESTER.

SILVESTRE, ISRAEL, a French designer and engraver, 1621-1691. His son, LOUIS, a painter, and member of the Academy, 1675-1760.

SIMEON, a Jewish rabbi who flourished about the year 120, and through fear of the Romans retired to a cave, where he lay in concealment twelve years, and composed the Zohar, a cabalistic work.

SIMEON, CHARLES, fifty-three years rector of Trinity Church, in the university of Cambridge, author of valuable theological works, published entire in 21 vols. 8vo, 1832. These consist of Discourses, forming a commentary upon every book of the Old and New Testament, born at Reading 1759, died 1836.

SIMEON OF DURHAM, an English historian of the Saxon and other kings from 616 to 1130. He probably died soon after the latter of these dates.

SIMEON, J. J., a Fr. jurisconsult, 1749-1842.

SIMEON, surnamed METAPHRASTES, an ecclesiastic of Constantinople, who lived in the tenth century, author of 'Lives of the Saints.'

SIMEON OF POLOTSK, a Russian preacher, ecclesiastical writer, and dramatist, 1628-1680.

SIMEON, surnamed STYLITES, a Christian fanatic who acquired immense fame by passing the last forty-seven years of his life upon the tops of ruined pillars. He flourished, if such a word is at all applicable to him, from 392 to 461. A second saint of the name dwelt on his pillar sixty-eight years, but the former was the original inventor of this pastime.

SIMEONI, G., an Italian writer, 1

SIMI, N., an Italian astronomer, 1

SIMLER, JOSIAS, a Swiss divine,

SIMMONS, S. F., a learned physic

SIMMONS. See SYMMONS.

SIMNEL, LAMBERT, an impostor of Henry VII., who gave himself out of York, second son of Edward IV. feated at the battle of Stoke 1487, and by promotion to an office in the king's SIMON. See MONTFORT.

SIMON, E. T., a French writer, 17

SIMON, J. F., a French antiquary

SIMON, RICHARD, a French H theologian, who sustained a contr Bossuet and the Port Royal savants Another of the same names, publi tionary of the Bible in 1703, which seded by that of Calmet.

SIMON, V., a French dramatist, 1

SIMONET, E., a French theologian

SIMONETTA, GIOVANNI, a lear author of a History of Francisco Sfor service he was, died about 1491. O family were also writers.

SIMONIDES, a Greek poet, 558-4

SIMONIN, S., a poet and ascetic,

SIMPLICIUS, a Greek philosophe of Justinian, in the 6th century, anti mentaries on the works of Aristotle an

SIMPLICIUS, two saints of the R dar:—the earliest, a bishop of Autun the latter, a pope, who suc. Hilary 4

SIMPSON, EDWARD, rector of Kent, dist. as a divine and chronologist

SIMPSON, JAMES, an Edinbu known as a writer on education, died

SIMPSON, THOMAS, the son of a who rose through difficult circumst professor of mathematics at the Roy author of Treatises on Fluxions, Chanc Algebra, and other subjects, born in I 1710, died 1761.

SIMS, JAMES, a physician and writer, most distinguished as a botani

SIMSON, R., a Scotch mathemat.,

SINCLAIR, CHARLES GIDEON, Ba general and writer on military tactics

SINCLAIR, SINCLAIRE, or GEORGE, an engineer and professor o at Glasgow, author of works on hydr the principles of astronomy and nav wrote also a popular book on witch ritions, entitled 'Satan's Invisible covered.' Died 1696.

SINCLAIR, SIR JOHN, an emin and miscellaneous writer, philanti member of parliament, was born castle, in Caithness, 1754, and adm English bar in 1775. Five years aft member for his native county, and a that celebrity as a public character nected his name with the stirring commencement of the present centu the author of a 'History of the Reve Britain,' and a 'Statistical Account Died 1835.

SINDHYAH, SINDIAH, or SCI HADJI, a Mahratta prince, who invad

on the fall of the Great Mogul in 1770, and became master of Delhi, 1741-1794.

SINGH, MAHA RAJAH RUNJEET, the despot of Lahore and Cachemire, was born in 1779, and was first known as a captain of banditti. His career is one of the most remarkable among the numerous instances of success which mark the possession of genius and an iron will, in states of society, which, however magnificent, may still be called barbarous. His troop of marauders swelled to an army, which he brought into the highest state of skill and subordination, until it was sufficient to give him the command of millions of people. He died in the sixtieth year of his age, after a protracted illness, in 1839, and his funeral pyre was honoured by the voluntary death of four of his princesses and seven slave-girls. A portrait, and some particulars concerning this extraordinary man will be found in Mr. Princep's work on the Origin of the Sikh Power. [E.R.]

SINNER, J. R., a Swiss savant, 1730-1787.

SIRANI, J. A., an Italian painter and engraver, 1610-79. ELIZABETH, his daughter, was also an artist, and was poisoned at the age of twenty-six.

SIRI, V., an Italian historian, 1608-1685.

SIRICIUS, a pope of Rome, 385-399.

SIRLET, F., a German engraver, died 1737.

SIRMOND, JAMES, a learned French Jesuit, 1559-1651. JOHN, his nephew, historiographer royal, 1589-1649. ANTHONY, brother of the latter, Jesuit preacher and theologian, 1591-1643.

SISMONDI. JEAN CHARLES LEONARD SIMONDE DE' SISMONDI, divided his life, as he himself says, between history and political economy. His works in the latter department are confessedly ill-starting, hypothetical, and unsatisfactory; but his historical writings are very valuable, both for their matter and their liveliness of composition; and he did good service also as a critic of Italian and Spanish literature. He was the last of a noble family, which, driven from Pisa into France by republican dissensions in the fourteenth century, was again (being protestant) forced into Switzerland by the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. He was born in 1773, at Geneva, where his father was a clergyman. After completing the usual education in his native place, he was compelled, by losses of his father on the bankruptcy of the French funds, to become a mercantile clerk at Lyons. The revolutionary disturbances drove the family about for several years, in the course of which they spent twelve months in England; and for five years, from 1795, Sismondi directed the cultivation of a small estate which his father purchased in Tuscany. In 1801, the family having returned to Geneva, he published his sensible and useful 'Tableau de l'Agriculture Toscane.' He had also made much preparation for his historical work on Italy; but his speculations in political economy were the first to be completed. In 1807 appeared the earliest volumes of his excellent 'Histoire des Républiques Italiennes,' which was completed, in sixteen vols., in 1818, and augmented in a subsequent edition. A series of Lectures which he delivered at Geneva, was published in 1813, and is well known in England by a translation: 'Historical View of the Literature of the South of Europe.' In 1819 he went to England, to marry a sister-in-law of Sir James Mackintosh. His principal employment afterwards, was the composition of his largest and most laborious work, 'L'Histoire Des Français.' The first volume appeared in 1821; and he did not live to carry it farther than the reign of Louis XV. In 1822 he published 'Julia Severa,' a short but heavy historical novel of the Fall of the Roman Empire; and a history of that period appeared in 1835. In the last year of his life he made himself unpopular at Geneva by advocating the expulsion of Prince Louis Napoleon from Switzerland. He died in his native city in 1842. [W.S.]

SISMONDI, UGILINO, called Buzzacherino, a Pisan admiral, celebrated by his naval victory over the Genoese in 1241.

SIVERS, H. J., a German naturalist, 1709-58.

SIX, JOHN, a Dutch dramatic writer, known also as the friend of Rembrandt, 1618-1700. He had a relation of the same name, who translated the Psalms into Dutch verse.

SIXTUS, or XYSTUS, the name of several popes, of whom the most remarkable was Sixtus Quintus, the subject of the following article: the preceding four are—SIXTUS I., of uncertain date, say 119-128. SIXTUS II., like the former, a martyr of the Christian religion, 257 or 260. SIXTUS III., the successor of Celestine, 435, died 440, since which his name has been enrolled with the saints. SIXTUS IV., a member of the noble family of Rovere, in Savona, succeeded Paul II. 1471. He took an active part in the conspiracy of the Pazzi against the house of the Medici dukes of Florence, and ranks among the most unprincipled occupants of the papal chair. He wrote some ascetic works, and founded the Vatican library; died 1484.

SIXTUS QUINTUS, one of the most celebrated of the popes of Rome, was descended from Sclavonian parents who had fled to Italy at the period of the Ottoman conquest of their country. His father, Pereto Peretti, was a vine-dresser in the humblest circumstances, but so hopeful of the fortunes of his son that he named him FELIX or FELICE. This child was born in 1521, and educated by his uncle, Fra Salvatore, who had fortunately joined the Franciscan order of friars: before passing under his care, however, the young Felix had acted as swine-herd, or in any field occupation by which a scanty addition could be made to his parents' income. Felix Peretti made great progress in scholarship and dialectics, and being ordained priest acquired a valuable reputation by his oratory as Lent preacher in Rome, in the year 1552. His firmness in the catholic faith at this time—under trying circumstances—procured him also the friendship of the grand inquisitor, and the now rising churchman attached himself to the severe party of Ignatius and others, whose influence was then beginning to be felt. In quick succession he became commissary-general at Bologna, inquisitor at Venice, and procurator-general of his order; and these steps gained, by dint of a pushing and resolute ambition, he is said to have assumed the greatest humility, and affected the infirmities of old age; the truth of such statements, however, is denied by Ranke, who justly observes that the highest dignities are not to be won by such means. It is much more probable that Peretti's energy as a reformer of his order, and the discriminating friendship of the pope, Pius V., marked him out as the man for the epoch, and we know that he stood firmly by his favourite, whom he clothed with the purple in 1570. The son of the vine-dresser was now ranked with the princes of Italy by the title of Cardinal Montalto, and he still varied his public labours by rural occupations. We are not informed of all the circumstances attending his election to the papacy, but he succeeded Gregory XIII. in 1585, and at once commenced the administrative and social reforms in Italy that he had so long contemplated. Unlike a recent example, he carried his measures with a high and firm hand, and so vigorously enforced justice, that the instances often read more like cold-blooded cruelty: his measures had the desired effect, however, of extirpating the bandits who had so long overrun the country, and of bringing some show of order out of the general lawlessness of society. We cannot enumerate here his great enterprises in administrative reform, or the magnificence of his public works, but they all mark his passion for order and completeness. His foreign policy was of the same trenchant description; no half measures or vaporings were to be tolerated; for examples of this spirit, it may be sufficient to name the great catholic league, and the invasion of England by the Spanish Armada. Still more surprising and gigantic were his conceptions as he grew old, as his rigid financial system enabled him to amass a large public treasure in the vaults of Saint Angelo. His designs now were sufficient to prove that he had perfected the government of his own states, and improved the discipline of the church, as an instrument of a more universal dominion than the papacy had ever reached; even the Greek church and the empire of Mahomet were destined to be transformed under his hand. Sixtus Quintus breathed his last amid these visions of grandeur on the 27th of August, 1590. A storm burst over the palace of the Quirinal at the moment of his death, and it became an article of the popular faith that he had achieved his enterprises by a compact with the evil one, which had then expired. [E.R.]

SIXTUS OF SIENNA, a preacher and theologian, born of Jewish parents, 1520-1569.

SIXTUS OF VESOUL, JEAN PARIS, called Le Pere, a French Capuchin and Orientalist, 1736-92.

SKELTON, JOHN, one of the early poet-laureates of England, when that office was conferred as a degree at the university, was born towards the close of the 15th century. He was known to be curate of Trompington and rector of Dip, in Norfolk, in 1507, and is understood to have garnished his sermons with a good deal of invective against persons in authority. His poetical satires brought down upon him the displeasure of Wolsey, who ordered him to be arrested; Skelton, however, was protected in the sanctuary of Westminster by the abbot, Islip, and d. there 1529.

SKELTON, P., an Irish divine, 1707-1787.

SKINNER, S., a philologist, 1622-1667.

SKYTTE, J., otherwise SCRODERUS, a Swedish senator, originally the preceptor of Gustavus Adolphus, 1577-1645. His nephew, LAURENCE, known as an ecclesiastical writer, died 1696.

SLATER, or SLATYER, WILLIAM, an elegiac poet, rector of Otterden, in Kent, 1587-1647.

SLEIDAN, JOHN, whose proper name was PHILIPSON, a celebrated Ger. historian, 1506-66.

SLINGELANDT, PETER VAN, a fa painter, taught by Gerard Dow, 1640-

SLINGELANDT, SIMON VAN, gra ary and treasurer-general of the Unite died 1786.

SLOANE, SIR HANS, Bart., a celeb ist and promoter of natural history, Ireland in 1660. He died in 1752. medicine, but being fond of natural devoted much attention to that science, accompanied the duke of Albemarle to short residence in that island enabled h an immense number of plants, and oth natural history, with which he returned and commenced the practice of his pro this he succeeded admirably, soon acqu reputation, and becoming president o of Physicians, and physician to Geor love for the natural sciences continued his life. He was the friend and corr John Ray and most of the celebra ists and philosophers of his time; and great distinction to himself and adva Society, first, the office of secretary; a the death of Sir Isaac Newton, that of the Royal Society. He is the auth valuable works and treatises, among his catalogue of the plants of Jamaica Latin; and his voyage to, and natura that island. He accumulated an im of objects of natural history, art, and which, along with his library, consistin volumes and MSS., he bequeathed to nation, upon condition that they woul family a sum of £20,000 sterling. agreeing to this condition, secured th and having already become possessors leian manuscripts, and the Cottonian posited them in the fine old mansio House, which they purchased for t and thus laid the foundation of the seum.

SLODTZ, SEBASTIAN, a sculptor, family of distinguished French artists, Antwerp, 1655-1726. His son, P. A designer, and professor of painting to Academy, died 1758. RENE MICHAE the latter, a sculptor and designer, 17(

SMALBROKE, RICHARD, bishop of distinguished as a controversialist, 167

SMALRIDGE, GEORGE, bishop known as a theologian and Latin poet,

SMART, CHRISTOPHER, an elegs scholar and poet, born at Shipbourn 1722; d., the victim of a settled melan

SMEATHMANN, HENRY, an Engl ist and traveller in Africa, 1750-1787.

SMEATON, JOHN, a man of rare occupies a most conspicuous place in th civil engineering. He was amongst t styled himself 'civil engineer,' and to more unimpeachable character or high members of the profession point a Smeaton was born in 1724, at the dawn of Britain's first display of commercia facturing vitality. As a mere boy he bent to the mechanical pursuits. In 1 to London, to attend the courts of h minster, in pursuance of his father'

ke him an attorney like himself; but, in 1750, find him established as a philosophical instrument maker in Great Turnstile, Holborn. The ling had taken its bent, and nature was too ng for any effort of authority to give the tree ther form. In 1752 and 1753, he made the experiments 'concerning the natural powers of water wind to turn mills, and other machines depending on circular motion,' from which resulted the st valuable improvements in hydraulic machines, which remain to this day a standard of the losophical process of inquiry into practical estions. For this essay Smeaton received the pley gold medal of the Royal Society in 1759, which he had been made a member in 1753, in knowledgment of previous contributions to its nsactions. In 1754, Smeaton travelled in Holand and the Netherlands, and there no doubt acired a most important part of the engineering ducation, which qualified him to occupy the conpicuous position he afterwards did as standing ounsel of his profession. In 1756, Smeaton comenced the great work which more than any other ay be looked upon as a lasting monument of his kill — the Eddystone lighthouse. Two lightouses had been erected on the Eddystone Rock efore Smeaton's admirable structure, of which the irst was swept away in a storm, and the second, hich was of timber, was destroyed by fire in December, 1755. The cutting of the rock, for the oundation of the building, was commenced August, 1756. The first stone was landed June 12, 1757. The building was finished October, 1759, and the antern lighted for the first time on the 16th of hat month. In all, there were 421 days' work pon the rock. This, Smeaton's first work, was lso his greatest: probably the epoch of its erection, nd other circumstances considered, it was the most rdnous undertaking that has fallen to the lot of y engineer to execute, and none was ever more ccessfully accomplished. And now having been ffeted by the storms of nearly 100 years, Smeaton's ork stands unmoved as the rock it is built a proud monument to its great author. Robert Allan Stevenson have erected the Bell Rock the Skerry-Vor lighthouses since, but inguished as is the merit due to these men, have readily testified as to who taught the reat lesson, and what was their example and dard of excellence. Smeaton's reports on the he executed or advised to be carried out, published in 1812, under the supervision of Society of Civil Engineers, founded in 1771 by aton and his friends. These reports are a mine ealth for the sound principles they unfold and able practice they exemplify, both alike based ose observation of the operations of nature, affording examples of cautious sagacity in ap- the instructions she gives by means within each of art. Smeaton perfected the atmosc steam engine, but lived to see the far greater ovements of the steam engine by James Watt into extensive operation. Smeaton dedicated are time to philosophical study and investi-, and had an astronomical observatory at orpe near Leeds, his birth-place. Here, on 6th September, 1792, while walking in his n, Smeaton was seized with an attack of sis, and on the 28th Oct. he died. [L.D.B.G.]

SMELLIE, WILLIAM, a Scotch physician, author of a complete course of midwifery, died 1763.

SMELLIE, WILLIAM, a printer of Edinburgh, translator of Buffon's Natural History, and author of a work entitled the 'Philosophy of Natural History,' 1740-1795.

SMIDS, LUDOLPH, a German poet, 1649-1720.

SMIRKE, ROBERT, a native of Carlisle, famous as a painter of historical and imaginative subjects, member of the Academy, 1752-1845.

SMITH, ADAM, a very great name in Scottish Literature; distinguished even amid those of our best writers and philosophers; and which will recall to all ages, as it now does to every civilized nation, the Man who by the authority of Reason laid the foundations of the Freedom of Industry, and of unfettered Commerce among States. Smith was born at Kirkaldy in Fifeshire on 5th June, 1723: in 1737 he entered the university of Glasgow, where he studied under Hutcheson: from Glasgow he passed to Baliol College, Oxford, returning to Edinburgh in 1748. In 1751, he obtained the Chair of Logic in his Alma-Mater; and in the subsequent year he was nominated to the professorship of Moral Philosophy. It is unnecessary to record that his genius threw around this ancient University the greatest splendour of which it yet can boast,—an assertion not to be modified, even although his successor was REID. Resigning his chair in 1763, he accompanied the young duke of Buccleuch to the continent—meeting in Paris, along with his old companion HUME, the distinguished Economist and Statesman, TURGOT and the celebrated QUESNAY. Probably first moved thereto by his intimacy with Hume —who, some time previously had published his exquisite Political Essays—Smith had long turned his thoughts to the momentous subject which afterwards engrossed them; and his interest in it must have been greatly deepened by intercourse with the founders of that famous French School, which first aimed to reduce all Problems concerning the Public Riches, into the form of a Science. At all events, on his return to Scotland in 1766, he retired to his native town; and after ten years of undisturbed meditation, he produced his imperishable work, 'On the Nature and Causes of the WEALTH OF NATIONS.' In just tribute to the extraordinary deserts of the Author of the 'Inquiry,' Government bestowed on Smith a lucrative and not laborious Fiscal Office. He fixed his residence thereafter in Edinburgh, where he died on 8th July, 1790. As a Man, Smith left behind him the truest testimony to his worth—viz., the best minds of his country mourning for their lost friend. He was simple and sincere, earnest in his beliefs, indefatigable in work; nor do many of the odd anecdotes that still circulate regarding his absence and abstraction, fail to do their part in enabling us to complete a picture of him. Besides his great works, the Theory of the Moral Sentiments and the Wealth of Nations, he left a few philosophical Essays, among which is a precis of the early History of Astronomy, most exact, penetrating, and beautiful. He had been engaged for many years on another work, that promised to be of higher moment than even the Wealth of Nations—viz., a Treatise of Civil and Political Law —meaning to trace at once the History and the Theory of Law, from their obscure commencements, in the infancy of Society and in the Human Reason, up to their highest developments. It is only the student of Smith's actual works, who can conceive the amount of detriment to Science involved in the loss of such a Treatise. No fragments of it remain.—We hasten to offer a brief account of the two great and completed investigations whose titles are as above.—I. Disciple of Hutcheson, the Author of the Theory of Moral Sentiments, is in clear revolt against the moral doctrine of HOBBES—viz., that the foundation of Morality is the feeling of Self-interest, and also against the somewhat broader scheme of Utility, as propounded by Hume. Concurring with his Master, that we must seek that foundation in disinterested sentiment, he does not concur with him, that the required sentiment is Benevolence. In Smith's view the foundation of Morals is in Sympathy: we feel, he says, that conduct right on the part of another, with which we sympathize; and we hence infer that such acts on our own parts, alone can be right, with which others sympathize. However narrow and singular this principle may seem as a basis, the skill, clearness, feeling and eloquence, with which the theory is developed, will ever attract admiration. nor perhaps is any portion of its development more ingenious and striking, than where Smith shows, how Reason—working on the ground of primal feeling—gradually forms the rules of Morality,—involuntarily, almost, classifying the virtues; and so impressing on the mind those rules and classifications, that, in acting, we seldom or never require to recur to consideration of the fundamental sentiment. Amidst the pleasure, however, with which we go along with these deductions, one very important question cannot fail to occur,—May not something of the same kind be established, with regard to any other supposed foundation of morality? If—accepting sympathy as that foundation—we really act through rule, and a direct sense of the obligation of the several virtues, and not because of any immediate feeling of sympathy; can it justly be averred against the moralists who claim Utility or Self-interest, as the simple or ultimate basis, that they are ever acting with direct eye to Self-Interest? There is a truth here which sadly damages the scaffolding beneath certain declamatory criticisms!—The errors of Smith's system are two. First, deriving the sense of right from sympathy with others, it pronounces, that no one can have a sense of right unless through intercourse with others; and that the quickness of that sense must be proportionate to the extent of such intercourse. The Author of the Theory, adopts this conclusion, and ingeniously but vainly defends it. The feeling of right, has sanctions in the Human Soul, which transcend everything that concerns intercourse with our fellows. Secondly, Like Hutcheson's scheme of Benevolence, and the doctrine of Utility itself, the Moral Theory of Sympathy, is quite too narrow; mistaking an important moral motive, for the Supreme Faculty which weighs all motives, and determines Moral Action. This Supreme Faculty has been termed Conscience: we prefer to designate it with Kant—the PRACTICAL REASON: it is the Energy through whose unchallengeable supremacy, the philosopher of Konigsb cerned that REALITY, which is the part of the Subjective IDEA of G

'Inquiry into the Nature and Causes of Nations,' stands to the Science it relation held by the labours of Lavois cal Science, or the combined disco vestigations of Copernicus, Kepler, a Astronomy. Previous to the era of all Economic Theories rested on principle, demonstrated by no i merely assumed as true; in other ciple expressive of the common notio
It was reserved for the great Scotch for its foundations, to Observation, a analyzed by Reason; to apply in strictest rules of Philosophic Induc
the basis so discovered, to rear a per ture. It is not requisite now, neithe able space permit us, to follow Smit scientious research. It is matter of c ledge, how clearly he discerned, an he established, the truths that all
by men are the produce of labour, quantity of labour employed in their
the real measure of value: nor have trace, the fine and continuous reason him from these simple and indubitable unnoticed Principles, to the ultimate determine the economic prosperity
His achievements were indeed exha bare contents of his Treatise suffice consists of five sections. In the first the general causes of the formation, decline of Public Riches, and of the
among the various classes of men, w modern Society. Next he analyzes Capital, explaining the mode in wh ally accumulates, and the nature of the production of Wealth. The thir sections are occupied in examining theories or abstract doctrines in Polit that have successively prevailed at di of History and among various Nation termining their influence—good a
the development of the arts and industry and commerce. Finally, searching glance at the nature of P Revenue, and inquiries concerning justest means of raising it by taxati peculiarity of Smith—indeed of thinker on such subjects—that at only of his inductive, but also of processes, he looks far around him ov well as deeply into the nature of what he writes may be sustained all ence and principle: and few men h sessed in so remarkable a degree, analyze experience—to separate t complex phenomena, and assign to tion of the result which is due to it.
in Historic criticism and illustrati Wealth of Nations is admitted by e possess a charm belonging to scarcel
the same kind, that either precede lowed it. With the exception of c Thinker, who possesses at once political and historical knowledge discernment, not inferior to Smith's writers on this subject, since the publication of the Classic Treatise, have rather been keen logicians than observers: and perhaps the highest compliment that can be paid to the Wealth of Nations, lies in the fewness and comparative unimportance of the modifications, which any of its conclusions have undergone, even from the scrutiny of such men as Ricardo, Malthus, and James Mill.—Smith in his lifetime reaped a deserved celebrity. On its first publication, the Inquiry was hailed as the Organon of a new Science, and rapidly translated into every language within civilized Europe. And ever since, it has been adding triumph to triumph; prejudices, one after another, falling before its force; and men and nations, in proportion as they acknowledge its worth, becoming more and more bound in brotherhood. Is then, this remarkable monument complete; — shall Smith's doctrines, unmodified, continue to govern the policy of States? A question not lightly to be answered! The relations of the classes within Society are changing; and sentiments prac*tically* unknown in Smith's time, are pressing up*ward* into sway. There is one great Element, even wards the production of the Wealth of a People, which, in this memorable work, one misses ice. Among Machines, what one is equal in bt or productiveness to the Human Brain? how fares this, under the stern and withering m of the Division of Labour? It is foolish row aside questions of this sort, under the nce that they smell of Socialism. The man d be daring who should deny, that under an ization permitting the culture and employ*by* every one, of all his Human Faculties, no n could fail to increase immeasurably in th, as assuredly it would in Dignity and ness. [J.P.N.]

ITH, ANKER, an Eng. engraver, 1759-1819.

ITH, CHARLOTTE, wife of a West India ant, who, in a period of reverse, had recourse r pen as a means of support, and became a guished novelist and poetess; born in Sus*f parents* named Turner, 1749, died 1806.

ITH, EDMUND, a dramatic wr., 1668-1710.

ITH, ELIZABETH, a young lady of remark*ccomplishments* in ancient and modern lan*s*, polite literature, and mathematics, author new translation of Job, and of the Life of tock; born at Burnhall, near Durham, 1776, rematurely of consumption 1806.

ITH, G., a landscape painter, 1714-1776.

ITH, HENRY, a Cb. of England divine, whose nce rendered him highly popular, 1550-1600.

ITH, HORACE, joint author, in connection his brother, JAMES, of the famous 'Rejected sses,' was born in London in 1779, and be*a* member of the Stock Exchange. These ar writers formed their literary partnership e establishment of the 'Pic Nic' newspaper, olonel Greville, in 1802, and were soon highly med as periodical writers. The 'Rejected resses' appeared in 1812, on the re-opening of ry Lane theatre, and have continued popu*till* the present time. Horace was afterwards tinguished as a novelist by his well-known works, 'Love and Mesmerism,' 'Brambletye House,' &c., and died 1849. JAMES, who was elder by four years, and followed his father's profession of a solicitor, made no further effort to keep his name in remembrance; he died in 1839.

SMITH, SIR JAMES EDWARD, an English physician, founder and first president of the Linnæan Society, disting. as a naturalist, 1759-1828.

SMITH, JAMES, a native of Glasgow, whose name has become cele. in connection with agricultural and manufacturing improvements, 1789-1850.

SMITH, JOHN, a physician, 1630-1679.

SMITH, JOHN, a learned divine, author of 'Ten Discourses on Theological Subjects,' 1618-1652.

SMITH, JOHN, a mezzotinto engraver, abt. 1700.

SMITH, JOHN, known as CAPT. JOHN SMITH, or SMYTH, a military officer and traveller, whose life is intimately connected with the history of New England, 1579-1631.

SMITH, or SMYTHE, JOHN, an ambassador, traveller, and writer on military weapons, 16th c.

SMITH, JOHN, an English divine and antiquarian, editor of an edition of the Venerable Bede, 1659-1715. His son, GEORGE, who completed the latter work, was author of a book entitled 'Britons and Saxons not Converted to Popery,' 1693-1756.

SMITH, JOHN, a native of Glenorchy, in Argyllshire, and a minister of the Scotch Kirk, famous as an antiquarian and Celtic scholar, 1747-1807. His works are Alleine's Alarm, Catechism of Dr. Watts, and other small works, translated into Gaelic; 'Essay on Gaelic Antiquities, concerning the History of the Druids,' 'Ancient Poems, translated from the Gaelic,' 'A Dissertation on the Authenticity of the Poems of Ossian,' a 'Life of St. Columba,' a 'Commentary on the Prophets,' &c.

SMITH, JOHN, a London banker, and member of parliament in the Whig interest, 1767-1842.

SMITH, DR. JOHN PYE, was a native of Sheffield, were he was born in 1775. His father was a bookseller, and young Smith, from his facility of access to books, early acquired a strong taste for reading, which furnished him even in boyhood with a large stock of miscellaneous knowledge, though from the nonconformist principles of his family, it was chiefly directed to the works of the Puritan divines. Having shown a decided bias for the ministry as his future profession, he was entered a student of the Dissenting college, at Rotherham, under the superintendence of the able and learned Dr. Williams. He was, on the completion of his term of study, appointed classical master of that institution; and so much satisfaction did he give in the performance of his academical duties, that he was transferred in a few years to the higher and more important college of Homerton, first in the classical and ultimately the theological chair. At an early period of life, he determined to produce a work on one of the leading doctrines of the Christian religion. And the influence of Priestley's writings having been productive of much evil in shaking the faith of many as to the divinity and atonement of Christ, he set himself to the composition of a work which should furnish a full answer and refutation of the Socinian heresy. This book, which he entitled 'The Scripture Testimony to the Messiah,' was hailed by all denominations as a most valuable contribution to theological literature; and by the acuteness and force of its reasoning, as well as by its extensive erudition, raised the author to the foremost rank of British divines. He was complimented through Dr. Dwight of Yale college,

America, with the honorary degree of D.D. A supplementary volume was published in 1818, consisting of 'Four Discourses on the Priesthood of Christ.' Dr. Smith was led to direct his researches into various departments of the great field of science, especially into that of geology, and being deeply interested in the bearing of that new science on the truth of the Mosaic Record, he published in 1839 a treatise entitled, 'The Relation between the Holy Scriptures and some parts of Geological Science.' Dr. Smith, after discharging the duties of the theological chair at Homerton for the long period of fifty years, resigned his professorship in 1850, and at a public breakfast to which he was invited, he received from his friends a most gratifying and honourable testimonial in the form of £2,600 subscription for the aid of students in divinity to be called the Smith Scholarship. His death took place early in the following year in Southwark. [R.J.]

SMITH, JOHN STAFFORD, a famous composer of glees, anthems, and madrigals, died 1836.

SMITH, JOHN THOMAS, keeper of the prints and drawings in the British Museum, a miscellaneous and antiquarian writer, 1766-1833.

SMITH, MILES, a learned prelate, one of the ministers employed in translat. the Bible, 1568-1624.

SMITH, RICHARD, a Roman Catholic divine and professor at Douay, born in Worcestershire 1500, died 1563. The principal circumstance recorded of him is his attendance at the burning of Ridley and Latimer.

SMITH, RICHARD, a Roman catholic divine and controversial writer, 1566-1655.

SMITH, R. A., a Scotch musical composer, whose works, sacred and secular, bear testimony to his high genius and prolific industry. His compositions are likely to maintain their place among the national music of Scotland, 1780-1829.

SMITH, ROBERT, distinguished as a writer on optics and musical sounds, 1689-1768.

SMITH, ROB. PERCY, brother of the Rev. Sydney Smith, a barrister and man of letters, 1770-1845.

SMITH, S., a presbyterian writer, born 1588.

SMITH. SIR SIDNEY SMITH, born at Westminster in 1764, was the son of Sir John Smith, a veteran general of the seven years' war. Young Sidney became a midshipman at the age of twelve, and served in several of the naval actions of the American war. He then entered the Swedish service and distinguished himself in the short war of 1788-1790 between Sweden and Russia. He was honoured by the Swedish king with the knighthood of the order of the sword. He returned to the English service in the war between the French republic and this country, and signalized his courage and skill under Lord Hood in the operations at Toulon in 1793. He next commanded the Diamond frigate in the channel fleet, and drew the attention of both friends and foes by the arduous enterprises which he undertook against the French coast and harbours. He was captured at Havre de Grace in 1796 in a desperate attempt to cut out a privateer that was moored in the Seine. Sir Sidney was taken to Paris and imprisoned in the Temple, where he was treated with peculiar and unjustifiable rigour, till he effected his escape, and succeeded in reaching England in 1798. He now was appointed captain of the Tiger, 84 gun-ship, and sailed to the Mediterranean. In 1799, when Buonaparte had marched his army from Egypt to Syria, Sir Sidney Smith saved the important fortress of St. Jean d'Acre, and thereby defeated the whole scheme of the French expedition. The Turkish commandant, Djizzar Pacha, was about to evacuate Acre and abandon it to the victorious French army, that was advancing along the coast from Jaffa, when Sir Sidney Smith arrived in the bay, and decided the Turks on resisting. Sir Sidney had under his command the Tiger of 84, the Theseus of 74 guns, and some smaller vessels. He landed seamen and marines, guns, and ammunition, and co-operated zealously with the Pasha in strengthening the works during the interval of two days, that elapsed before Buonaparte's army arrived. He was also fortunate enough to capture the French flotilla that was conveying heavy guns and stores for the siege, and these were now arrayed in defence of the place. The French appeared before the walls on the 17th of March, and a siege commenced which Buonaparte urged on for two months with unremitting violence, and which the Turkish garrison and their English confederates resisted with equal firmness. At last, after having lost 4,000 of his best troops, Napoleon raised the siege and retreated to Egypt. He always referred with the utmost bitterness to this disappointment, and spoke of Sir Sidney as the man who made him miss his destiny. Sir Sidney continued to serve off the Syrian and Egyptian coasts, and co-operated in 1801 with the English expedition which General Abercromby led to expel the French from the East. Sir Sidney not only as a naval officer protected the disembarkation of the English troops, but he landed himself and took part in the operations of the troops on shore. He was wounded at the battle of Alexandria, in which Abercromby was killed. Sir Sidney was made an admiral in 1805, and he distinguished himself under Sir John Duckworth in forcing the passage of the Dardanelles in 1807. He afterwards commanded on the South American station; and at the close of the war, he was second in command in the Mediterranean. He died in 1841. [E.S.C.]

SMITH, SYDNEY, was born in Essex, in 1768, and educated at Winchester and Oxford. About 1796 he became a curate on Salisbury Plain, whence, two years afterwards, he removed with a pupil to Edinburgh. There he became intimate in the knot of energetic young men who afterwards became so famous; and he receives the credit of having suggested the idea of the 'Edinburgh Review.' He long continued to furnish that celebrated periodical with papers, which, though displaying neither great knowledge nor great power of thinking, are irresistibly diverting and most effective, through the writer's unscrupulous and biting sarcasm, his flashes of eccentric fun, and his unsurpassed skill in the art of quizzing. Sydney Smith's wit was yet more celebrated in society, and established him as one of the most brilliant talkers in the Whig circles of London. He migrated thither from Edinburgh in 1803: in 1806 he received from Lord Erskine a rectory in Yorkshire, where he resided for some years, and wrote his famous and stinging Letters on the Catholic Question in the name of 'Peter Plymley.' In 1829 he was presented to another living by Lord Lyndhurst; and in 1831

ing, might have been succeeded by Sobieski, had he made any effort, but he permitted the election of Michæl, and only acted upon the dictates of ambition, when the latter had proved his incapacity. A desolating civil war now threatened the country, as the adherents of Sobieski and of Michæl were encamped against each other, but a new invasion of the Turks numbering 150,000 combatants, under Mahomet IV., suddenly announced a new danger. At this crisis Michæl and his army took to flight, and the partizans of Sobieski, upon whose head a price had been fixed, swore to defend him: he then led them against the Turkish hosts, and in another great battle put 15,000 of them to the sword, recovered the spoils they had taken, and set 80,000 prisoners at liberty. While Sobieski was reaping these laurels in one part of the kingdom, Michæl in another had concluded the shameful treaty of Budchaz, by which he bartered away a part of his dominions on condition of being supported in arms against his rebellious general; against this treaty Sobieski appealed to the diet, and falling upon the Turks once more, beat them at Kotzin (1674), and took the fortress till then deemed impregnable, at a loss to the enemy of 20,000 men. On the day of this battle Michæl breathed his last, and Sobieski commenced his reign under the title of John III.; but he had hardly felt the weight of the crown before a new invasion of 200,000 Turks and Tartars summoned him to the field. Once more he led his brave Polanders against this redoubtable enemy, whom he charged with the inspiring battle-cry of 'Christ for ever;' his successes, however, produced no better result than an honourable treaty of peace, which had little more effect than a truce. In 1683 Sobieski was persuaded by the pope to enter into a defensive alliance with the emperor Leopold, and in July of that year the grand vizier, Kara Mustapha, led a vast army of 300,000 men against Vienna. The capital of the Austrian empire had no prospect but submission, when Sobieski, yielding to the entreaties of a sovereign who had refused him the title of 'majesty,' placed himself at the head of a small but devoted army of less than 20,000 men and proceeded to the seat of war by forced marches. On his way, he was joined by some of the German princes, whose reinforcements swelled his army to 75,000, and with this force he came in sight of the Turkish encampment, which he viewed from the ridge of the Kalemberg overlooking the Austrian capital. From these heights Sobieski rushed down upon the enemy, and obtained a victory with the praises of which all Europe resounded. For the evil return rendered to this hero by the emperor Leopold, and consummated by the peace of Moscow in 1686, we have no space. He died at Warsaw, June 17, 1696, and years afterwards Charles XII. paused in his headlong course to visit his tomb, and drop a tear to his memory. [E.R.]

SOBRY, F., a French writer, 1743-1820.

SOCINUS, Faustus, nephew of Laelius Socinus, and a descendant of the illustrious house of the Sozini, was born at Sienna, in December, 1539. His family being suspected of heresy, Socinus at the age of twenty took refuge in France for a season, but returned to Italy on his uncle's death, and spent twelve years at Florence in the service of the grand duke. In 1574 he retired to Basle, and four years afterwards was invited by the court physician, George Blandrata, to Transylvania, where opinions similar to his own had been for some time professed. Francis Davidis had held, as a legitimate deduction, that if Jesus be a mere man, or a creature, it is idolatry to offer any religious service to him. The arguments of Socinus failed to convince him, and the refractory divine was thrown into prison, where he died after six years of close confinement. In 1579 Socinus visited Poland, but the unitarians of that country had scruples about admitting him into their communion. He left Cracow, after a residence of four years, and soon after married the daughter of a nobleman, who was his patron and protector, and on whose estate he lived in retirement. He gradually obtained influence in the country, and many persons of rank and wealth were led to espouse his creed. In 1598 the mob subjected him to a cruel maltreatment, dragged him through the streets, and burned his papers. Socinus died at a village in the neighbourhood of Cracow, March, 1604. The vague and floating anti-Trinitarian opinions on the person of Christ, which had for some time been abroad, were reduced by Socinus into a system. He denied the Supreme Deity of the Saviour, affirming that he had no existence till he was born of the Virgin—denied that the Holy Spirit is a person—excluded the atonement from his 'scanty creed,' regarding the death of Jesus only as a martyrdom—denied the personality of Satan—and refused the doctrine of original sin and that of eternal punishment. In short, he impugned all that in every age has been held distinctive of evangelical theology. The views of his uncle, Laelius, seem to have first impressed his mind with those ideas, and though he discards all fanaticism, yet he indicates that of that uncle's interpretations, was all by special revelation to him from Christ himself. Opera, vol. ii. 505. The works of Socinus, the first two volumes of the 'Fratres Poloni' consist of numerous exegetical and polemical tracts, and letters; a long account of an argument with Francis Davidis, the 'Responsio prior' viensibus,' replies to Puccius and Solanus, a cellany of disputations, with a variety of anti-ists, and a life of the author prefixed by a knight.

SOCINUS, Laelius, a celebrated heresiarch, uncle of the preceding, born at Sienna in 1525, but quitted Italy to join the reformation party in Switzerland, where he died in 1563.

SOCRATES, born at Athens in the year B.C.; suffered the punishment of death for 'impiety' at the age of seventy.—How arduous the approach with a view to represent the Just of the Earth! To analyze a specific system is comparatively easy; even to transport one's self to the position of its Framer, and discern it—as alone it can be discerned—from within is still a task chiefly for the Intellect: more difficult, but also, quite within reach of impartial search, to estimate the illustrious Statesman, appreciate the obstacles he overcame, and comprehend the space and duration of his influence: but if the Inquirer be earnest and endowed with a portion of Imagination, need he shrink from the attempt to accompany the military Hero, to operations, and even to par-amid the clangours of War.

e most just, the most exalted,
of Humanity to which classic wonderful creations, ever gave of all who preceded, to a Being e—who, without ambition, or al advantage, but, through the ral and Intellectual greatness, ld at once of the Heart and t World,—to think or write of few broken paragraphs which rtake—this, demands prepara-order, and much rarer moods.
ocrates were of no mark or note ate; nor was their son gifted ersonal distinctions, which were nt nowhere in Greece. A face iful, flattened nose, protruding siognomy anything but attrache made no attempt to veil or ncies, by ordinary solicitudes:
cloak, and oftenest unsanolled through all Public places,
wever, of all observers; fre-
by multitudes; and greeted he choicest Youth of Athens,
red. Closer inspection of the s we have of him, goes, indeed, explaining this latter remarkcination. A massive head inrity, a broad although rugged ect of self-possession which in-whom mastery appertained too ermit him to feel conscious of ccordingly of repellent affecta-
, or reserve; but, on the con-
the most genial Humour ever shine among his singular fea-
f all others, the surest to win
essor to the respect and likings
d frank; but one higher, was or Socrates that devoted and ment, which even a spirit un-CIBIADES, could not refuse.
ally sundering Youth from Age,
ts authority as Counsellor, and ings of guardianship: but the less from the inconstancy and outh, than from the rigidity of ces, bonds multiply and tighten . Custom governs, as second
e bend before social and con-
, beliefs, and expectations; and f less fettered existence. No
, however, had subjected So-asing in Knowledge and Wis-nour he was youthful as at first:
e, though young men clustered ng him as best companion as hing like a mask of the inestim-poken of, is not uncommonly om mere lack of thought, and erament. But it belonged to hrough his moral and intellec-freely and consciously among UITIONS, which Youth—when —simply obeys. He had des of that rich Nature, of which our actual Men are but stunted and fractional developments; and thus, were his sympathies so full and sincere. Hence too, that unaffected solemnity which often mingled very touchingly with his most humorous moments. He could not conceal from his own Soul, that he had gone deeper than Sense; and that the Voices to which he listened came from beyond the World. It was not for an Intellect so masculine, to get entangled with unmanageable theories concerning the nature of the INTUITIONS: he simply felt their presence, and reverently bowed himself down:—like Pythagoras, he said he had a Heavenly guide, and owed his safety to his 'Dæmon.'—Turning from the Man to his mission, one might at first fall into something akin to disappointment at its apparent simplicity; and because it had so little to do with the founding and promulgation of arduous Speculation. Yet the functions which Socrates appropriated, are just the most important that can fall to Mortal: and the methods he took to fulfil them, show by their nature, how profound and universal his objects were; for these methods, without one tittle of modification, are as applicable now as in long gone Athens, and will abide so through all time. Γνωθι σεαυτον. Before acting or speaking, know what you propose. If you speak, know what you speak: if you believe, know what you believe: no Ignorance is so shameful as an assumed knowing or believing, what one knows not. Ascertain what your Mind, in verity is, and be that. Surely a simple message! Do we marvel, that the delivery of it consumed the Existence of one of the greatest of Men? CIRCUMSPICE! It can scarcely require to be mentioned, that Socrates wrote nothing, and was not a professed Doctor. His plan was much more direct and practical. He seized on some one whom he met in his walks; and, by searching conversation, constrained him into contact with the foregoing truths. For the most part he laboured to bring men to recognize two grand sources of evil—two all prevailing and always prevailing detriments to Sincerity and Truth. Foremost, the careless, unconscientious use of words. A Word: observe what it is, what realities it ought to represent! First, it stands for a certain definite Thing—a fact or form in Nature about which there can be no dispute; and secondly, by every one of its derivative meanings, it represents some actual analogy among Things, and certain equally definite laws of the Mind. To understand a word, then, implies no slight knowledge; and the use of it requires proportional care. Do men really thus comprehend the words they employ? Take up any common or received proposition, and question a man who says he stands by it;—ask, if he comprehends its terms? We fear it is as certain now, as Socrates demonstrated it to be, in Athens, that—no matter how momentous the proposition, no matter although some entire system of Morals, Politics, or Theology may hang on it—aye, that ninety-nine in a hundred even of so-called intelligent persons, would not come clear through the scrutiny! The power to construct language is an especial distinction of Humanity; and the right and conscientious use of it, is the means by which alone we connect the past with the present, and discern through Nature and History, those grand and serene principles of Order which reveal a Supreme Government: employ it otherwise, and it veils reality; it is an excuse for not looking at Things; the Mind becomes its instrument; Truth gives way to Dogma, and we are False without a blush. Would that every generation had its Socrates! Again, Socrates, rejoiced to force on collisions with the professional Teachers of his time,—the class of men who had assumed the title of SOPHISTS. It is now well and generally understood, that the once prevalent conception, that these Sophists were avowed and conscious teachers of Fallacies, is quite erroneous. They had no such distinction. Mere representatives in Athens, of the ordinary professional Teachers of almost every age, they were men who expounded Theories they had never bottomed; and undertook, for fees, to prepare Young men, by the teaching of Oratory and Philosophy, for the daily work of Athenian public Life. Certainly Socrates did not spare their presumptuous profession of Theories; and he rejoiced to do then, what, if he had lived on Earth for ever, he might have done every day and anywhere—to reduce them, by his keen interrogations as to the signification of their propositions, to the embarrassed avowal of Ignorance. But his antipathies were equally strong against the whole system of acquiring Knowledge—as it was termed—for use. The thing to be accomplished, he said, is to become true Men, and the uses will follow. Does the Oak of centuries send out its strong arms that they may cast a shadow? On the contrary, it ascends and spreads, through the vigour of its inner Life; and then, tribes and nations sit down within the grateful covert. This, indeed, is no idle distinction. Knowledge attained with chief view to specific uses, never forms the Man, and is not true Knowledge. Truth, in itself is not yet represented by conventional institutions and requirements: and the Mind which seeks in the first place to subserve these, must be satisfied to miss Truth. First and last, it was the counsel of Socrates—Be Men—Γνῶθι σεαυτόν! For thus alone can you become true citizens of Athens, or worthy to worship the Gods.—The teaching of Socrates, in so far as we have sketched it, was critical only; although his interrogations seldom failed to point the way to some momentous positive Truth. Concerning his own positive conclusions, we refer to the article PLATO,—desiring rather, in our remaining space to view him as a practical Citizen. And surely, Athens had never a better or a nobler one. Inferior only to his love of Truth and Justice, was his ardent love of his natal soil, his desire for its prosperity, and his obedience to its Laws. When exigencies demanded, a willing patriot and brave soldier: he fought at Delium, Potidœa, and Amphipolis—a pattern of endurance even to rank and file; and he bore himself without ostentation, or the wish for notice. If he spoke in public, it was to defend the innocent; and he cared not then, whether before an excited People or the Thirty Tyrants. During his whole long life, he never broke a Law—refusing in his own case to sanction disobedience, by an easy escape from the consequences of one of the most unjust sentences recorded in History. Observe too, his careful treatment of the national Mythology—his respect for the Gods. It is not easy to define precisely the position of Socrates towards the G

It is clear he had penetrated far dee pomorphism, and discerned a mora dian and father of Man. But he the Laws: partly, it may be, thro sense of the necessity of Order to mainly through the Motive, whic prompted Spinoza to reply to his a
'Your religion is good; you ought nor doubt that it will assure your it stimulates your piety, it helps yo quil and virtuous life.' What wonderment we ask—what had most illustrious of the Greeks, t Athens could not be safe unless by Hemlock? What fault, i found in him? 'Yet they onl
more, "Not this man, but Barab
of course, there is none, although tion. Athens was confessedly t case of Socrates was just that toleration has existed nowhere or as Mr. Maurice acutely intimates, had only announced some new antagonistic to those already aflo
have hated him—not even wou blamed. By proposing his parti would virtually have claimed h
other Teachers, and been a ne Socrates did not do this; he did n
sect: he proved that the methods
unworthy, and their pretensions war on the very profession of S perience of the Ages, bears but the certainties in such a case.
Maurice, 'a Teacher of this kind he says, he must be regarded as tor; the city must honour him zens.' And for such a claim, w ance from those who are wise in Isolation, was the seal of the great but it likewise caused and pers that destroyed him. Glorious, i and noble Life: neither did he d that are gone, and ages yet to over Plato's admiring and affectin conversations of that last evenir hearts, and subdue our souls. W
the majestic old Man; amid the a alone unmoved—discoursing of d
tion, and immortality—an Im showed him Death as a mere inci
not any sudden disruption or cri
the opening of a pathway towar duty still exists, and wherein the who preceded him, surely for e dom he had sought here; Wisdom for there; only he should disce and live more purely. The fina
It may be, that through that hu clung to him, or with other a intent,—'Crito,' he said, '*forget
I vowed to Esculapius.*' Socrates σώματα ἀσκεῖ! 'The last,' cried friend, the best of all men of this and the most just of all men!'

SOCRATES, surnamed SCHOL marian, professor of the law, and in Constantinople, about the m

tury, author of an ecclesiastical history which tinues that of Eusebius from 309 down to 440. is work is in much esteem as one of those original uments which can be relied on for accuracy and passionate judgment.

SODERINI, J. A., a Venetian antiquarian, mismatist, and Eastern traveller, 1640-1691.

SOLANDER, DANIEL CHARLES, an eminent turalist, was born at Nordland, in Sweden, ere his father was minister, in 1736. He adied under Linnæus, and became the com- nion of Sir Joseph Banks in Captain Cook's first yage round the world. The objects of natural tory collected in this expedition, which ter- nated in 1771, are now in the British Museum, are the MSS. of Solander. In 1771 he received degree of D.C.L. from the university of Ox- , and in 1773 became assistant librarian at the sh Museum. Died 1782.

OLANO, F., a Spanish physician, 1685-1736.

OLARI, two Italian painters:—ANDREA, sur- d del Gobbo, born at Milan about 1480; ANTO- alled Zingaro, 1382-1455.

OLARI, J. G., an Italian poet, 1737-1814.

OLDANI, A., an Ital. naturalist, 1736-1808.

OLDANI, J., an Italian poet, 1579-1641.

OLDANI, M., an Italian sculptor, 1658-1740.

OLE, ANTONIO DAL, a famous Italian land- ainter, 1597-1684. His son, GIOVANNI GUI- a painter in the style of Guido, 1654-1719.

OLER, F., a French Jesuit, ascetic writer, torian of Japan, 1568-1638.

OLIMAN. See SOLYMAN.

OLIMENA, FRANCESCO, surnamed L'ABATE an eminent painter of Naples, 1657-1747.

OLINUS, CAIUS JULIUS, a Latin writer of ntury, author of 'Polyhistor,' a poor com- taken without acknowledgment from Pliny.

OLIS, ANTONIO DE, a Spanish historian and thor of a 'History of Mexico,' 1610-1686.

OLIS, F. DE, a Spanish painter, 1629-1684.

OLIS, J. D. DE, a Spanish navigator, 16th c.

OLIS, V., a German engraver, 1514-1570.

OLLIER, J. B. DE, a Fr. Jesuit, 1669-1740.

OLOMON, the son and successor of David as the Jews.

OLOMON, a king of Hungary, 1045-1100.

OLON, born at Salamis in the 638th year be- hrist, whence he early removed to Athens: one of the Seven Sages of Greece, of whom, s long distance of time, we can frame the ctest picture. Known in his youth as a poet, as well for his personal qualities, as because e station and repute of his family, highly ned in Athens, we find him at an early age ing his fellow-citizens, to rescind by acclama- the shameful decree, which, on account of ous defeats, had threatened death to any n who should propose to renew expedi- against the revolted Salamis. Appointed under, Solon returned victorious, only to rtake and accomplish a far harder task. The relations in Attica were in confusion: in- of Government, Sects raged. The inhabitants e hill country demanded a government of the democratic order; those of the plain wished ligarchy; those on the sea shore a mixed . Draco's Laws—so profuse in death-punish- ts, and therefore so destructive of the best sanctions of authority—still prevailed; and that plague which afterwards so often threatened the extinction of Rome, viz.: the oppression of debtors by creditors, under the letter of harshest laws, had spread through Athens, widely and deep, the spirit of the worst kind of revolutions. To remedy these latter evils was comparatively easy, inas- much as each could be extirpated by one positive decree; and Solon, now intrusted with the supreme power, annulled Draco's Laws, altered the laws of creditor and debtor, and removed the hardships of existing relations, by an artifice not unknown to modern statesmanships—an artifice never excusable unless under pressure of im- perative and inevitable necessity—viz., a sweep- ing depreciation of the currency. But the work of adjusting political relations, or of framing a practical constitution for the State, was not so easy. Solon executed it in a way that enforced the assent, and even gained him the applause of all his countrymen; nor through all their subse- quent and frequent vicissitudes, did the wisest of the Athenians ever cease to revert with longing regret to his wise Laws. In outline Solon's con- stitution was this:—He divided the citizens into four classes, according to their wealth:—the fourth class, containing the masses. To this class he refused access to any magistracy; but that no man within the domain of Athens, might be ex- cluded from the rights, duties, and dignity of citi- zenship, he constituted a public assembly of the whole citizens, before which, all decisions of the higher courts might be brought in review: a privilege apparently restricted, but which soon convinced the Athenian plebs, that, in the last re- sort they were really masters of the Laws. Act- ing on that principle of checks, which—however easily discredited by abstract logic—has been found invaluable in experience, from the time of Athens and Rome, down to our own day, Solon sought security against haste or excess of the popular Assembly, first in the Council of the Areopagus, of which all who had been Archons were members, and which he invested with the general guardian- ship of the Laws; and again in a second Council or Senate, charged with the initiative of every law, and the discussion of it, previous to its being ques- tioned in the Assembly:—each of the four classes sending one hundred members to that Senate. Add to which, that to secure justice and aid the weakness of the poorer classes, he authorized any one to bring before the tribunals a transgres- sor against the person or property of any other: this he considered the most effective police: under Solon's laws, there were no processes as to Com- petence. Wiser than Lycurgus, Solon expected no perpetuity for his enactments; he ordained them, therefore, merely for a century. Alas! the Instability of Human affairs! On returning from his travels, the Legislator found Athens again in confusion, and on the eve of the splendid but ab- solute monarchy of Pisistratus! Want of success in Statesmanship is often good proof of deficiency in true Wisdom; and their speedy failure might have thrown discredit on Solon's Laws. But in modern times, we can interpret more soundly: we have learnt the surpassing difficulty of planting in an old country, a new Tree. Surely, the sad ex- perience of France, establishes how inestimable the privilege and imperative the duty, to prune the branches, and clear the roots—so that it decay not nor fall—of that umbrageous Oak under whose shade our forefathers lived!—Solon, we have said, was a poet; he was more,—the fragments that have reached us, prove him a master in Greek song. He felt too, the dignity and power of the Art; and he consecrated it to the same noble purposes to which he gave all his life—the inculcation of high morals and philosophy, and the elevation of the Athenian people. We omit here, because they are universally known, those touching personal anecdotes related of him by Herodotus. [J.P.N.]

SOLVYNS, FRANCIS BALTHASAR, a Flemish artist who accompanied Sir Home Popham to the East, and published a picturesque description of the Hindoos, their Manners, Customs, and Religious Ceremonies, 1760-1824.

SOLYMAN, caliph of Damascus, 715-717.

SOLYMAN, emir of Cordova, 1009-1016.

SOLYMAN, three emperors of Turkey:—SOLYMAN (TCHELEBI) I., proclaimed emperor after the defeat and capture of his father, Bajazet, by Timour, 1402; dethroned by his brother, Mousa, during a revolt of his subjects, and soon after killed, 1410. SOLYMAN II., next article. SOLYMAN III., brother of Mahomet IV., succeeded on his deposition, 1688, having previously acquired the most effeminate habits by a forty years' residence in a seraglio, died 1691.

SOLYMAN THE GREAT, second Turkish emperor of that name, was born in 1494, and succeeded his father, Selim, in 1520, being then in the twenty-seventh year of his age. The circumstances of the period were such as to call forth the highest qualities that any statesman or sovereign could possess. The arms of Selim had been the terror of Christendom, and the next destination of his fleet, at the moment of his death, immediately after his conquest of Egypt, was a subject of the most anxious solicitude. A general league among the Christian princes was in agitation, and it was only their own mutual jealousies, and the designs of Francis I. in Italy, that prevented its realization; added to which was the enmity of the haughty and warlike Mamelukes in Egypt, and the similar precarious state of many conquests on Enropean territory. The situation of Solyman was much the same as that of the grand duke of Russia would be, if the throne of Nicholas, at the present crisis, were suddenly vacant; but with this difference, that his enemies were anxious for war, and eager to observe the least indication of weakness, and take advantage of it to destroy the infidel. It was the critical period of the consolidation of the Turkish power, and Solyman, without the ferocity of his father, instantly proved himself equal to the emergency. We have not space to enumerate his conquests, but the Mamelukes were put down, the Hungarian army defeated, and Buda taken; he even besieged Vienna, but was compelled to retire with the loss of 80,000 men; at the same time he improved the administration of his dominions, encouraged literature, opened roads, erected caravansaries, hospitals, and libraries, and exhibited the most enlightened regard for the welfare of the vast populations ruled by him. The titles bestowed upon Solyman indicate his high qualities, for while his own countrymen designate him 'the Conqueror' and 'the Legislator,' he is called by Europeans 'the Great' and 'the Magnificent:' he was also a poet, and contributed greatly to form the present Turkish language by the happy fusion of the Arabic and Persian tongues, promoted by his example as polity. He perished of fever in a new expedition against Hungary, while encamped before the walls of Sziyeth, two days before its capture, 8th September, 1566. [E.H.]

SOLYMAN, two pachas of Bagdad:—SOLYMAN I., of Georgian parentage, reigned 1750-1780. SOLYMAN II., succeeded 1780, and reigned during a period troubled by the incursions of the Wahabees, and the ravages of Timour Pacha, in Mesopotamia; he repulsed the latter, and died 1802.

SOLYMAN, emperor of Persia, 1666-1694.

SOLYMAN, a general and minister of Sultan Selim I., governor of Egypt 1526-1538, governor of Zemen 1538-1541; after which he became grand vizier. He enriched Egypt with many public monuments, and caused a general survey of the country to be made.

SOMEREN, CORNELIUS VAN, a Dutch physician, 1593-1649. His son, JOHN, a magistrate and poet, 1622-1676.

SOMEREN, J. VAN, a Dutch jurist, 1634-1[illegible]

SOMERS, JOHN, Lord, born at Worcester, where his father was an attorney, in 1650 or [illegible], died 1716. He united the study of literature with that of the law, and became known as a political writer in the time of Charles II., and in 1688 was one of the counsel for the seven bishops. The success of the revolution now opened the way to honour, and in 1695 Somers had become lord high chancellor of England, with the title of Lord Somers, Baron Evesham. In the reign of Queen Anne he was one of the commissioners for effecting the Union of Scotland, and in 1708 became president of the council.

SOMERSET. See SEYMOUR.

SOMERVILLE, WILLIAM, a gentleman of Warwickshire, who ranks with the inferior class of poets, author of 'The Chase,' a didactic and descriptive poem, in blank verse, 1692-1742.

SOMMIER, J. C., a Fr. theologian, 1661-[illegible]

SOMNER, WILLIAM, a Saxon scholar and antiquarian, who held the office of clerk to the ecclesiastical court of Canterbury, 1606-1669.

SONNERAT, P., a Fr. naturalist, 1745-1[illegible]

SONNIN, E. G., a French architect, 1709-[illegible]

SONNINI, C. N. SIGISBERT MANOS, C[illegible] De, a French naturalist and traveller in West Africa, Egypt, Greece, Wallachia, and Moldavia, au. of works of travel, and of an edition of Buffon with a continuation, in 127 vols. 8vo, 1751-1[illegible]

SOPHIA, empress of Constantinople, niece of Theodora, and wife of Justinian II., with whom she shared in the government of the state. On the death of that prince in 578, she conspired against Tiberius Constantine, who had been raised to the throne by her advice, and, being deposed by him, was compelled to live in privacy.

SOPHIA, half-sister of Peter the Great, czariness of Russia, was born 1667, and in 1689 placed herself at the head of the revolt of the Strelitzes. Having succeeded in her ambitious designs, she reigned over the Muscovites under rs, Peter and Ivan. The for-y possessed himself of the sole reat), and Sophia died a pri-704.

LOTTE, queen of Prussia,
Augustus, elector of Bruns-
second wife of Frederick I., ntributed to the foundation of ences at Berlin.

THEA, queen of Prussia,
I., king of England, wife of
., and mother of Frederick the

as a native of Colonos, a beau-immediate vicinity of Athens,
B.C. 495, being thus thirty Æschylus, and fifteen years
s. His father, Sophilus, being y, and possessed of considerable liberal education in all the l accomplishments of his age;
further enchanced by a person
, which had been moulded and rcises of the palæstra. His owledge of poetry and music, ructed in the latter art by the attested by the fact that, when fter the battle of Salamis led to celebrate, around the eir valour, the glorious victory ieved, he, though a youth of to play an accompaniment on ean, in which the chorus of untry's triumph. It is besides so composed the words of the cement of his career as a drander circumstances peculiarly lus had for thirty years been ter of the Athenian stage, and the palm with a youthful com-of twenty-seven, whose great
d personal graces had excited in his favour. The festival of n this occasion, rendered still the return of Cimon from the inging with him the bones of ple accordingly flocked to the
; and when Cimon and his tered the theatre to offer the
to the god, the chief Archon,
of choosing judges by lot,
nerals at the altar; and, after
m the usual oath, constituted between the rival tragedians.
Sophocles exhibited his first heir award obtained the first ent career fully justified the
es. From this epoch (B.C. 468) supremacy till B.C. 441, when Euripides was preferred to him,
t prize. For sixty-three years
l to compose and exhibit; and he twenty times obtained the re frequently the second, and low as the third—an amount of ceeded that of his great rivals.
bited the Antigone, the earliest nas, a play which gave such Athenians that they appointed him as a colleague of Pericles and Thucydides in the war against the inhabitants of Samos. He seems to have won no laurels in his military capacity. Several offices of honour and respectability were conferred upon him in his old age; he was made priest of Halon, a native hero; and after the disastrous termination of the Syracusan expedition (B.C. 413) he was, in his eighty-third year, appointed one of the committee of public salvation; in which capacity he consented (B.C. 411) to the appointment of the council of Four Hundred. The last years of his life were disturbed by family dissensions. In consequence of his partiality for a grandson, his eldest son endeavoured to deprive him of the management of his property on the ground of incapacity and dotage. The only defence offered by the aged dramatist was to read in presence of his judges a passage from the Œdipus at Colonos which he had just written; on hearing which the judges dismissed the case, and rebuked his son for his undutiful conduct. Sophocles died B.C. 405, after completing his ninetieth year. He is believed to have written 113 plays, of which only seven, along with some fragments, have descended to us. His private character seems to have been, on the whole, amiable; the blemishes attributed to it being those of the age rather than the individual. In the hands of Sophocles the Athenian tragedy reached its highest degree of perfection. His language is pure and majestic, avoiding on the one hand the daring and sometimes rash flights of Æschylus, and on the other never descending to the common-place diction of Euripides. [G.F.]

SOPHRANI, R., a Genoese biographer, 1612-72.

SORANUS, two physicians of Ephesus, the earlier of whom dates about the reign of Trajan.

SORANZO, J., a doge of Venice, 1312-1328.

SORBAIT, P., an Italian physician, died 1691.

SORBIERE, SAMUEL, a French physician, philosopher, and historiographer royal, 1615-1670.

SORBIN, A., a French prelate, 1532-1606.

SORBONNE, ROBERT DE, a doctor in theology, who was the chaplain and confessor of Louis IX., and founded the college that bears his name, was born at Sorbon, a village in the diocese of Rheims, in 1201. His object was to found a society of learned theologians, who should live in common, and deliver lectures gratuitously, and this design he began to execute in 1253, by assembling a body of professors and scholars, whom he lodged near the Luxembourg palace. He died in 1274, and left the bulk of his property to render his benefaction permanent. The Sorbonne formed one part only of the faculty of theology in the university of Paris, but its name became so famous that it was often given to the whole, and graduates were proud to name themselves of the Sorbonne, rather than the university.

SOREL, AGNES, a maid of honour to the queen of Charles VII. of France, who has acquired a name in history by the influence she acquired over that monarch when she became his mistress, 1409-1450.

SOSIGENES, an astronomer of Alexandria, who went to Rome in the time of Julius Cæsar, and was employed by him in reforming the calendar, B.C. 45.

SOSTRATUS, the architect of the renowned Pharos, or lighthouse, of Alexandria, 3d cent. B.C.

SOTER, a bishop of Rome, 168-176.

SOTHEBY, W., an English poet, 1756-1833.

SOTHERON, FRANK, a British admiral, employed in the defence of Naples, 1767-1839.

SOTO, DOMINGO, a Span. ecclesias., 1494-1560.

SOTO, FERDINAND DE, a Spanish adventurer and navigator, of whom an interesting account may be read in Bancroft's History of the United States, died 1552.

SOTO, PETER, a Spanish divine, 1500-1563.

SOUBISE, CHARLES DE ROHAN, Prince De, marshal of France, and minister of state to Louis XV. In the earlier part of his career he distinguished himself in the field, but in his later years became implicated in the Dubarry intrigues, so disgraceful to that court; he was brother to the cardinal of Soubisse (see ROHAN), 1715-1787.

SOUFFLOT, J. G., a Fr. architect, 1714-1781.

SOULT. NICOLE JEAN DE DIEUN SOULT, Duke of Dalmatia and Marshal of France, was born in 1769, at St. Amand. His father was a notary. Soult entered the ranks of the army in 1785; and in 1791 he attracted the favourable notice of Marshal Lukner, and received a lieutenant's commission. He rose rapidly under Custine, Hoche, and Marçeau, and particularly signalized himself in the victory of Fleurus. In 1799 he acted under Massena in Switzerland, and in 1800 he served under the same commander in the defence of Genoa. Soult was wounded and taken prisoner in a sally in the early part of this siege, but was set at liberty after Napoleon's victory at Marengo. Napoleon, who heard of Soult's bravery and skill, now employed him under his own eye; and Soult's promotion went forward till he had reached the highest station. He was the first of the marshals whom Napoleon created in 1804, and he was the first marshal whom Napoleon made a peer. He was the chief organizer of the great army which was assembled at Boulogne for the invasion of this country; and when the 'army of England' was countermarched into Germany against the Austrians, Soult led the main column, and participated largely in the glories of the campaign of Ulm and Austerlitz. He took in the next year a distinguished share in the victory of Jena; and showed consummate firmness as well as daring in the desperate struggle at Preuss Eylau. In 1808 Soult was sent into Spain. He defeated the Spaniards at Reynosa, and subsequently commanded against Sir John Moore, whom he engaged at Corunna. He next occupied the north of Portugal, but was surprised and defeated by Wellington at the Douro, and retreated with great loss and difficulty into Spain. In 1809 he gained the great victory of Ocana over the Spaniards, and subdued all the south-west of Spain, except the city of Cadiz. He lost in 1811 the hard fought battle of Albuera against Beresford. Soult was recalled to aid Napoleon after the Russian campaign; but in the July of 1813, he was sent back to Spain to stem if possible the advance of Wellington after the English triumph at Vittoria, and to save the south of France from invasion. Soult did his duty nobly though unsuccessfully. He found the wreck of the French armies of Spain driven in disorganization upon Bayonne; the spirits of the men were damped by repeated defeats, and their discipline had suffered proportionally. Against him the English and their allies were coming on, flushed with success, in the highest state of efficiency, and with Wellington to lead them. Soult restored order and spirit among his men, and in a fortnight from the time of his arrival at Bayonne he led them boldly again into the Spanish territory against the British. A series of engagements in and near the Pyrenees followed, in which Soult showed strategetic abilities of very high order, and gained several partial successes, though ultimately he was driven back into France. He now defended his native country against the invaders with indomitable courage, and an inexhaustible fertility of resources. Repeatedly engaged, and almost constantly defeated, he still presented an unbroken front against his assailants, and kept his retreating army ready to dispute every tenable post, and seize any favourable chance of attack that fortune might offer. The final battle of Toulouse was contested by him with undiminished skill and courage; and though, on the whole, the Engagements were successful, Soult had the advantage on several points of the battle; 5,000 of his enemies had fallen; and he led his army safely out of the field, ready for further operations when the news arrived of the emperor's first abdication. In 1815 he joined Napoleon and fought at Waterloo, where he acted as one of the emperor's major-generals. After the second return of the Bourbons, Soult was for some time proscribed, but was ultimately restored to all his dignities. After July, 1830, he was entrusted by Louis Philippe, who employed Soult's talents in the war office, and also twice made him president of the council. He was present at the queen's coronation in 1838, as representative of France, and was received with warm favour by the English nation. The old marshal died at the chateau of Soult-Berg, 26th Nov., 1851. [E.

SOUSA. See SOUZA and FARIA.

SOUTH, ROBERT, rector of Islip, in Oxfordshire, distinguished as a theologian, more especially in the controversy with Sherlock on the Trinity, born at Hackney 1633, died 1716.

SOUTHCOTT, JOANNA, was born about 1750 at Gittisham, in Devonshire. Her parents were in humble circumstances, and, until her fame became celebrated, she obtained her living as a domestic servant. Her case is a very curious one both in the history of psychology, and of religious enthusiasm. From her mother, who lived to see Joanna had reached the age of womanhood, she had conceived the most exalted religious ideas, the existence of which her father often felt himself called upon to check: she was still, however, a sober member of the Church of England. At length she joined the early morning and evening meetings of the Wesleyans, and, in 1792, associated exhorters with that body. The religious exercises to which Joanna was thus introduced seem to have produced, as exciting causes, her remarkable visions and dreams, which soon took the form of prophecies, and commanded universal attention. Some of her predictions received a remarkable fulfilment, especially that which she published immediately after the conclusion of the peace of Amiens in 1801; for she then derided the joy of the nation, and gave the solemn assurance that a calamitous series of wars were about to break out, the events of which would be more terrible than any on record; at a later period, she as

Napoleon would never land in Eng-
at his power would be overthrown.
which formed the ground of these re often very striking as dramatic the rude doggrel of her prophetic quently becomes picturesque, if once
d mind can overcome the disgust
by their uncouthness, and their demmon grammatical correctness. She blication of her prophetic pamphlets about 1804 was brought up to Longed at the west end by some of her any of whom were persons of con-society. Soon after this event, an med Thomas Dowland, and a poor Joseph, also had visions, and a paper
r named Carpenter—in whose employ finally published many of them: we n here, however, because this Cariving himself to be the 'Right Man' prophecies, finally took her place as he sect who followed her, having first ssion when she was believed by the ened of her followers to have fallen sion. That delusion consisted in the
he was destined to bring forth Shiloh,
h, and its origin is explained by Car-result of her believing that she was bride itself, instead of its shadow or
e. We may here mention, that pre-rrival at this idolatrous pitch, which ainful to contemplate, Joanna had ear in 'sealing' her followers, gen-st unjustly regarded as a mere trick
ey. The old man Dowland expired years after the commencement of his, Joanna's prophecies, and 1814 was y her for the birth of Shiloh. We ails of the amazing increase of her d the magnificent preparations made t, to state the simple fact, that she by appearances, and expired on the ember, in that year—having pre-red her conviction that, 'If she was had, at all events, been the sport of good or evil.' The whole case, like of the kind, may be explained by the ained laws of psychology. Females own, in states of temporary derange-ut naked into the streets: the voice them that if they would put off their would be invisible. Such are the
to which the spiritual language falls,
in the symbolic tongue, are bodily ese are what must be put off in order
rit may enter a life unseen by mortal row out the hint, because many such abroad, and it may serve to show cerity of such a woman as Joanna, spiritual laws, may be insufficient to from the grossest errors. We omitted he appearance which Joanna mistook
y was the result of a diseased condied when her body was opened. The ought of her writings is the redemp-by the agency of woman, the supposed fall. [E.R.]

RN, THOMAS, a dramatic writer of the es II., born at Oxmantown, near Dublin, 1660, died 1746. His tragedy of 'Isabella, or the Fatal Marriage,' is deeply pathetic, and Dryden places him in the same rank as Otway. The principal of his other productions are 'Oroonoko,' and the 'Spartan Dame.'

[Birth-place of Southey.]

SOUTHEY, ROBERT, was born in 1774 at Bristol, where his father was a linen-draper. In 1792, the means being furnished by his uncle, the English chaplain at Lisbon, with a view to Southey's becoming a clergyman, he was admitted at Baliol College, Oxford. He had already gone through much miscellaneous reading, had planned epics, and written plays. His studies at the university became still more diversified: Rousseau and Godwin, and the contagious enthusiasm of the French Revolution, made him, for a time, a republican in politics, and in religion a doubter or unitarian. Southey was the most unlikely of all men to become a minister in a church whose creed he did not cordially accept. He abandoned his clerical views, began to study medicine, but gave it up in disgust, and left Oxford in 1794. The principal fruit of the extreme opinions he then held was his drama of 'Wat Tyler,' never published by himself. In 1794 he made acquaintance with Coleridge; and, having already published poems in conjunction with his friend Lovell, he now, with his new ally, wrote 'The Fall of Robespierre,' and 'Joan of Arc.' In 1795 Southey married, at Bristol, Edith Fricker, the sister of Mrs. Coleridge and Mrs. Lovell; but, compelled by poverty, the pair immediately separated, the poet accompanying his uncle to Lisbon. On his return he published, in 1797, his 'Letters from Spain and Portugal.' He was still reluctant to embrace literature as a profession. The study of law was now commenced in London, but never zealously pursued, and gradually deserted altogether for literary study and composition His circumstances were made easier by the friendship of Mr. W. W Wynn, who allowed him an annuity of £160 till he obtained the Laureateship. His youthful extravagances of opinion were already, to all appearance, quite extinct; if he was not even far on the way towards that admiration of aristocratic principles and of the hierarchy of the church of England, which, oddly mixed up with liberal hobbies of his own, he entertained and expressed so vehemently in the later stages of his life. In 1803 he settled himself in a house called Greta

Hall, near Keswick; and there he resided for nearly forty years, labouring at his desk with the steadiness of an attorney's clerk, and dividing his time, easily and regularly, between the tasks by which he made his bread, and the undertakings by which he hoped to gain immortality. In 1813, his 'mania of man-mending,' as he called it, being completely cured, he was appointed Poet-Laureate, chiefly through the influence of Sir Walter Scott, who himself declined the place; and the hundred a-year which it gave him was his only certain income till 1835, when Sir Robert Peel conferred on him a pension of three hundred pounds. Out of the gains of his industry, the prudent and kind-hearted man of letters supported one of his sisters-in-law for some time in his house, and the other for many years; while he brought up his family in respectability, and left at his death several thousand pounds in cash and insurances, and a large and valuable library. His sheet anchor was writing for periodicals, a kind of composition in which he was particularly skilful. The 'Annual Review' received his first contributions; he wrote the historical sections of the 'Edinburgh Annual Register' for the years 1808, 1809, and 1810; and he was a constant contributor to 'The Quarterly Review' from its commencement in 1808 till he ceased to be able to write at all. But his separate publications amounted to forty-five, of which by far the greater number were works of his own in prose and verse, his share in the others being that of editor and critic.—In his later years he relied for lasting fame on his historical works and his speculations on politics and society. But he was neither a deep or exact thinker, nor possessed of the highest requisites for historical narrative; and the only permanent popularity he gained in this field was through his Lives of Nelson and of Wesley. 'The Doctor,' begun to be published anonymously in 1834, has much that is clever, and a great deal that is amusing; but it contains rather the collections of a reading man than the inventions or observations of a man of genius. All Southey's prose is excellent in style, easy and idiomatic, tasteful and clear, though wanting in point and tending to verbosity. His poetical merits have been matter of keen controversy. He was a better artist than poet, lofty and just in his theory of poetical art rather than spontaneously imaginative or passionate in execution. Yet, since he deserves high honour for the constancy with which he aimed at deliberate and symmetrical performance, in a time when most other poets worked from inconsiderate impulse only, it is satisfactory to find in his best poems so much that gives pleasure to the real lovers of poetry. 'Madoc' indeed is heavy and vague; but 'Thalaba' (1801) and 'The Curse of Kehama' (1810), in spite of their extravagance of theme and their unwise experiments in rhythm, are very fascinating to imaginative readers; and in 'Roderick the Last of the Goths,' (1814), he has come nearer than any other man of our century to the tone of the epic. In 1837 the death of Mrs. Southey, after long affliction, deeply depressed her husband, already worn out by his many years of honourable toil. In 1839 he found an affectionate companion for his decline, by marrying Miss Bowles, herself a well-known authoress. After this time his memory and other powers failed rapidly; and he had been quite imbecile for a good while before his death, which took place in March, 1843. [W.S.

SOUTHGATE, Richard, an antiquarian, and minister of the Church of England, 1729-1795.

SOUTHMAN, P., a Dutch painter, 1580-1646.

SOUTHWELL, N., an Eng. Jesuit, died 1676.

SOUTHWELL, Robt., an English Jesuit, said to be descended from an ancient family of Norfolk or Suffolk, was born in 1560, and entered the order at Rome in 1578. Having come as a missionary to England, his design was discovered, and he was executed at Tyburn, February 21, 1595. He suffered with great courage. He is the author several religious works and poems.

SOUVARROF. See Suwarrow.

SOUVIGNY, G. De, a Fr. Hellenist, 1598-16

SOUZA, John De, a Portuguese Orientalist state secretary, 1730-1812. See also Faria.

SOUZA-BOTELHO, Don Jose Maria, a tuguese diplomatist and man of letters, 1 1825. His wife, known as a novelist, died 18

SOWERBY, James, originally a drawing-ter, known as a writer on botanical and min gical subjects, illustrated by himself, 1766-1

SOYE, P. De, a Dutch engraver, 1538-15

SOZOMEN, Hermias, an ecclesiastical rian, known as a pleader at Constantinople 5th century. The portion of his history now dates from 323 to 439.

SOZOMENO, an Italian historian, 1387-

SPADA, J. B., an Italian cardinal, 1597-

SPADA, J. J., an Ital. naturalist, 1680-1

SPADA, L., an Italian painter, 1576-162

SPAENDONCK, Gerard Van, a Dutch ter, fam. for his flowers and miniatures, 1746

SPAGNOLETTO, the name by which seppe De Ribera is generally known in He was born at Xativa, near Valencia, in January 12, 1588. He went early to Italy, so identified with Naples that he is com enumerated among the painters of that s Dominici indeed asserts that he was born in poli, in the province of Lecce, in Naples, an his father, a Spanish officer, married there D Caterina Indolli, a lady of Gallipoli, where Gu was born, in 1593; but according to Cean mudez, the lady, the place, and the date, three wrong. As Dominici is a great author Neapolitan painters, nothing short of docu can supplant his account; these, however, mudez professes to speak from, though he do give them. He was at first the pupil of Fra Ribalta in Spain, he then studied in Rome, eventually with Michelangelo da Caravagg Naples, and he not only adopted the natu style of this painter, but even surpassed him i own manner. Lo Spagnoletto was a painte prodigious power and facility, but of co-ord jealousy and arrogance. He was a prominent m ber of the infamous Cabal of Naples, the triumv headed by the Greek Belisario Corenzio, the I being Giambattista Caracciolo. These men reported to have resolved to expel or poison ev painter of talent who should attempt to settl Naples: Domenichino is said to have been th victim, and they succeeded in expelling Annib Caracci, the Cav. D'Arpino, and Guido. Sp noletto terminated his great but scandalous ca in a remarkable manner. In 1648 his fe

r. Maria Rosa, became the mistress of Don Austria, and accompanied that prince to ; this had such a powerful effect on the paniard that he disappeared from Naples never heard of more, leaving his wife and with his large fortune at Naples. Cean ez says he died at Naples in 1650, but in e appears simply to have copied Palomino; s no authority. Luca Giordano was the stinguished of Spagnoletto's scholars. — ci, Vite dei Pittori, Scultori, ed Architetti ani; Cean Bermudez, *Diccionario His-*kc.) [R.N.W.]

GNUOLI. See MANTOVANO.

LDING, JOHN JOACHIM, an eloquent Swed-yman, author of several religious works, 04. His son, GEORGE LUDWIG, editor of n of Quintilian, 1762-1811.

LANZANI, LAZARO, an eminent physi-nd naturalist, was born at Scandiano in y of Modena, in 1729. He died in 1799. ied at Reggio and Bologna, and he soon such a great reputation for learning, that rsity of the former town invited him to professor of logic, metaphysics, and Greek. the six years he remained there his leisure devoted to the prosecution of those physi-rches that have rendered his name so cele-He became afterwards professor at Modena, nately filled with great honour to himself lit to the university, the chair of natural t Pavia. At this latter place he had the endence of the cabinet of natural history g to the university; and with the view of t from the low state into which it had e travelled through various countries, as onstantinople and Asia Minor, and made lections of objects in all the departments of with which he enriched it. While at on his return home, he heard that some of agues, enemies of his reputation, had ac-n of stealing some of the objects from the . His innocence, however, was clearly ed; it was proclaimed by an imperial edict, eturned to Pavia with the greatest honour t. Spallanzani's writings are numerous, e procured for him an universal reputation siologist and naturalist. His experiments production of animals; his researches into lation of the blood; his works on the gy of animals and vegetables; and his g accounts of the infusoria and other pic animals, are full of new and interesting nd have added much to our knowledge of bjects of which they treat. [W.B.]

GENBERG, A. T., a Moravian prelate, f a Life of Luxendorf, 1704-1792.

HEIMS, FREDERIC, a German theologian, of philosophy at Geneva, and author of works, 1600-1649. His son, EZEKIEL, a r. and statesman, 1629-1710. FREDER-ther of the latter, a theologian, 1632-1701.

FVENFELDT, J. G., a Swedish philolo-hor of a Sclavonic dictionary, 1655-1727.

RK, T., an English divine, 1655-1692.

RKE, T., a puritan divine, 1548-1616.

RRE, ERIC, a Swedish senator, who con-to place Sigismund III. on the throne of and was beheaded by Charles IX. 1600.

SPARRMANN, ANDREW, an eminent Swedish naturalist, was born in the province of Upland about 1747, and was instructed in botany by Linnæus. In 1765 he made a voyage to China, and again in 1772 and 1775, to South Africa. He returned from these travels laden with specimens of natural history, both plants and animals. He died at Stockholm, where he had become keeper of the museum, in 1820.

SPARROW, A., bishop of Norwich, died 1685.

SPARTACUS, a native of Thrace, who became a soldier in the Roman army, and, having deserted, was sold as a slave, and finally numbered with the gladiators condemned to destroy each other for the amusement of the people of Italy. In the year 73 B.C., about the period when Italy was overrun with bandits and its seas infested by pirates, the period of anarchy and social ruin attending the decline of the ancient republic, Spartacus with about seventy of his companions in bondage effected their escape, and resolved that, since they were to die, the scene of their struggle should be a larger one than the blood-stained arena, and that they would fall as brothers. They were joined by fugitive slaves, and others of the oppressed classes, till their numbers swelled to an army, of which Spartacus became the commander. The details of the struggle are related by Livy, Plutarch, and Appian. Spartacus had no hope of conquering the whole power of Rome, but was resolved on escaping into Germany, and bearing away with him the spoils of the cities of his late masters. He gained three great victories in succession over Lentulus, Genlius, and the consul of the preceding year, Manlius, and his course was now open to the Alps, but dazzled by these splendid successes he led his troops southward again, and the next year, B.C. 71, he was defeated by Crassus. He performed prodigies of valour, before meeting with his death in this last action, and many of his companions in arms, who became prisoners, were crucified, and set up at intervals on the road between Rome and Capua. [E.R.]

SPARTIANUS, ÆLIUS, a Latin historian, of very indifferent repute, 4th century.

SPEED, JOHN, an English historian and antiquary, was born at Farrington, in Cheshire, 1552, and was originally a tailor. His talents coming under the notice of Sir Fulk Greville, procured him an allowance which enabled him to abandon his business, and devote his time to literature. His works are—'The Theatre of the Empire of Great Britaine, presenting an exact Geography of the Kyngdomes of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and the Isles adjoyning;' 'The History of Great Britaine, from Julius Cæsar to James I.;' and 'A Cloud of Witnesses, or the Genealogies of Scripture,' prefixed to a new translation of the Bible in 1611. Died 1629.

SPEGEL, HAQUIN, archbishop of Upsala, known as a poet and philologist, 1645-1714.

SPELMAN, SIR HENRY, an English historian and antiquary, born at Congham, in Norfolk, 1562, died 1641. His works are considered highly valuable. His son, SIR JOHN, an archæologist and historian of Alfred the Great, dates unknown. His great-grandson, EDWARD, a classical scholar and antiquarian, died 1643.

SPENCE, JOSEPH, an accomplished scholar and professor of poetry at Oxford, author of an 'Essay on Pope's Odyssey,' and an 'Inquiry into the Agreement between the works of the Roman Poets, and the Remains of Ancient Artists;' born 1698, accidentally drowned 1768.

SPENCER, JOHN, a learned divine and critic, author of an erudite Latin treatise on the Hebrew Laws and Rituals, born in Kent, 1630, died 1695.

SPENCER, JOHN CHARLES, Earl, formerly Viscount Althorpe, and known as a Whig statesman at the period of the Reform Bill, was born in 1782. From 1806 to 1834 he was member for the county of Northampton, and soon after the accession of William IV. became chancellor of the exchequer. He was most remarkable for the zeal with which he devoted himself to agricultural improvements. Died 1845.

SPENER, P. J., a German divine, 1635-1705.

[Kilcolman Castle, the residence of Spenser.]

SPENSER, EDMUND, was, with one illustrious exception, the greatest of those poets whose genius brightened the last generation in the long reign of Elizabeth. Closing his life when Shakspeare was in the midst of his career, he was the earliest of the poetical stars that rose in that dazzling firmament. Indeed, although English literature had undergone great development as well as great changes during the two centuries that had intervened since the death of Chaucer, yet the long period gave birth to no poet of a very high order; and, in this view, there was truth in the assertion made by Spenser himself, that he was 'the shepherd boy, who after Tityrus his lay first sang.' The spirit of his inventions was caught from the older poetry of England, the irregular minstrelsy of the middle ages, with its chivalrous ideas, its fantastically gorgeous pictures, and (above all) its saturation in allegory. His forms, on the other hand, were prompted by those Italian studies, in which he was so well versed, and which, introduced earlier by Surrey and others, exercised so strong an influence over all the Elizabethan poetry. Spenser, without forgetting to emulate the lyrical and meditative effusions of Petrarch and his followers, aimed, in his greatest work, at doing for English literature that which Ariosto and Tasso had recently done for the literature of Italy. He designed to construct, out of the undigested elements of mediæval song, a polished and elaborate work of art, which should resuscitate the world of chivalry, in a shape not unacceptable to a generation farther advanced in knowledge, and familiar with models higher than the old romances. The design was executed, in his 'Faerie Queene,' with a marvellous affluence of imagery at once romantic and natural, and with a delicate feeling of the beautiful such as hardly any poet has ever surpassed. If his symbolic meanings sometimes press themselves on us so closely as to cool our poetic mood, they are as often embodied in scenes and figures which, with or without regard to their hidden significance, entrance us by a spell as powerful as those of the enchanters and elves amidst whom are brought to wander. And, though the plan of the work is too vast; though the half of it, which is all that we possess, contains Six Books, each which is as long as most epics: yet these deal successively with successive characters and events, which are sufficiently independent of one another to allow of their being studied separately, without detriment either to our comprehension of the whole or to the æsthetic effect they produce. The 'Faerie Queene' is a great work, a work fairly comparable to the most illustrious of the narrative poems that grace the continental literature of Europe. And when we think of it as belonging to our Elizabethan age, we should remember, also, that it is the only work of the very highest class, except only the dramas of Shakspeare, which that age, with all its fertility and energy, was fortunate enough to produce. Nor did it exercise, even the much less of influence on the non-dramatic poetry of England, than the masterpieces of the dramatist exercised on his successors. The characteristic stanza which Spenser invented for his romantic epos, was the very smallest of the benefits in which following poets were led, consciously or unconsciously, by the example he had set them. The events of Spenser's life, though less obscure than those of Shakspeare's, are yet known very imperfectly, that his biographers can do little more than tantalize the curiosity of their readers. He was born in London, probably in 1553, perhaps earlier. He was descended of a good family, probably some offshoot from the house of Althorp, and a few circumstances in his early history suggested the supposition, that his father might have been one of the Spensers or Spencers of Hurstwood in Lancashire. He was admitted of Pembroke Hall, in Cambridge, as a sizar, in 1569, took his degrees of B.A. and M.A. in 1573 and 1576. This is all that we know with certainty in regard to his youth. In the north of England he wrote his first considerable work, which is 'The Shepherd's Calendar,' published in 1579. These pieces, consisting of twelve pastorals, called 'The Shepherd's Calendar,' published in 1579. These pieces, not unacceptable to ordinary readers, not only from their fondness for old words and phrases which they clung to the author, but by a frequent rustic familiarity both in sentiment and expression. Yet some of them in whole, and parts of all of them, justify to the full the reputation he gained for him. About the same time he was tempted into giving some countenance to the attempt of the learned physician Gabriel Harvey to naturalize in England the hexameter and other prosodial forms and laws of the

he was already engaged in composing his epic; and, in his correspondence, mention is made of nine comedies which he had written before 1580. He had become acquainted with Sir Philip Sidney, whose friendship he has commemorated in verse; and he was patronised, in early manhood, by Sidney's uncle, the all-powerful earl of Leicester. In the year last named he went to Ireland, as secretary to Lord Grey of Wilton, then appointed viceroy, and immortalized by the poet under the character of Artegal, the personification of justice. Lord Grey's government was very short; but, while it lasted, the poet was made clerk of the Irish Court of Chancery, and received also a lucrative lease (which he sold) of abbey-lands in the shire of Oxford. In 1586 he received another grant, consisting of three thousand acres of land in the county of Cork, on which stood his castle of Kilcolman. His residence must have been chiefly in Ireland for several years; and, on his Irish domain, by his beloved stream Mulla, his great poem was principally composed. In 1590, the poet being then in England, were published its first Three Books, which are also by universal consent the finest. The allegorical design, explained in an introductory letter to Raleigh, was set forth in the title-page: 'The Faerie Queene, disposed into Twelve Books, fashioning Twelve Moral Virtues.' In the Three Books which now appeared, were allegorized Holiness, Temperance, and Chastity. In 1591 appeared a volume of his minor poems, quaintly entitled 'Complaints.' Its most noticeable pieces are 'The Ruins of Time,' 'The Tears of the Muses,' and a long satirical fable called 'Mother Hubbard's Tale.' Spenser was addicted to complaining; and, though he had received so much from his patrons, and showed himself attentive and shrewd in matters of business, he was poor in the latter part of his life, whether through improvidence or by reason of the disturbed state of Ireland. In the same year in which the 'Complaints' appeared, the queen bestowed on him a pension of fifty pounds a year. In 1595 he published 'Colin Clout's Come Home Again,' a poem not only very beautiful, but interesting for its many allusions to the poet's personal history. In the same year appeared a large series of Sonnets, and the exquisite 'Epithalamion,' in which he celebrates his recent marriage. In 1596 Spenser brought to England, and published, the Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Books of 'The Faerie Queene.' They are the Legends of Friendship, Justice, and Courtesy. All that we possess beyond these is a fragment containing Two Cantos 'Of Mutability.' The Six Books required for working out the design are traditionally said to have been written on a voyage from Ireland; but there is great reason for doubting whether the poem was ever in any sense completed. The only other work of the poet that calls for notice is his prose treatise, 'A View of the State of Ireland,' written or finished in 1596, but never published till 1633. It is a curious book, and an excellent and vigorous specimen of old English prose. In September, 1598, he was appointed sheriff of Cork. Perhaps office caused the tragical catastrophe which closed his end. The rebellion of Tyrone broke out immediately, Kilcolman castle was burned, and a new-born child of the owner perished in the flames. He and his wife escaped, and sought shelter in London. He died there, on the 16th January, 1599. According to Ben Jonson he perished of want; and the fact may have been so, although it seems improbable. His funeral, at all events, was splendidly celebrated by the earl of Essex; and his grave is in Westminster Abbey, next to that of Chaucer. [W.S.]

SPERLING, Otto, a physician and naturalist of Hamburgh, 1602-81. His son, of the same name, professor of jurisprudence and history, 1634-1715.

SPIEGEL, H., a Dutch poet, 1549-1612.

SPIELMANN, James Reinhold, an eminent professor of chemistry at Strasburg, 1722-1783.

SPIGELIUS, or VAN DEN SPIEGHEL, Adrian, a Flemish medical writer, 1578-1625.

SPILBERG, J., a Dutch painter, 1619-1690.

SPILLER, John, a sculptor of promising talents, who studied under Bacon, and executed the statue of Charles II. for the Royal Exchange, born in London, 1763; died of consumption, 1794.

SPINCKES, N., a nonjuring divine, 1654-1727.

SPINELLI, F. M., prince of Scala, and a philosopher of the Cartesian school, 1686-1752.

SPINELLI, M., an Italian historian, 1230-68.

SPINELLI, N., a Jesuit of Naples, 14th cent.

SPINELLI, or SPINELLO, a family of Italian artists who flourished in the 14th and 15th centuries, one of whom is said to have painted a figure of the devil so hideous, that it haunted him in his dreams, and occasioned a singular conference with the presumed original. This singular story is related by Vasari.

SPINOLA, Ambrose, Marquis De, descended from a noble family originally of Genoa, was born in 1571, and entered into the military service of Spain at the period of the war in the Netherlands. His first great exploit was the reduction of Ostend, on the 14th September, 1604, after a siege of more than three years, and the loss of 130,000 men under previous commanders. This victory was rendered the more remarkable by the circumstance, that Maurice of Nassau, at the head of an equal number of troops, had made repeated efforts to raise the siege, and Spinola, before his last successful assault on the city, had sustained fifteen terrible combats with him: such an achievement caused his name to resound through Europe, and he was soon after appointed commander-in-chief in the Netherlands. For the next twenty-six years the name of Spinola appears always foremost in the annals of that protracted struggle, as the hero of the catholic party, and the house of Austria. We may mention among his exploits the capture of Juliers 1622, and of Breda in 1625. He was recalled from this command in 1628 through the influence of intrigues at Madrid, and was subsequently employed in Italy against the French. His death was hastened by grief at the shameful manner in which his glory was betrayed in this new enterprise, and he expired at Castel-Nuova di Scrivia, Sept. 25, 1630. [E.R.]

SPINOLA, Frederick, brother of the preceding, and commander of the Spanish fleet of the Low Countries, killed in a naval action 1603.

SPINOZA, Baruch, or Benedict, born in Amsterdam, 24th November, 1632; died in his solitary apartment at the Hague, 24th February, 1677:—it will astonish many to observe that this illustrious Thinker, whose name is the mark of an Epoch in Philosophy, and whose reputation is once more in the ascendant in a country like Germany, attained no greater age than forty-five. But paucity of years, was not the sole obstacle, of which—in estimating Spinoza—the just critic requires to take account. His parents were Portuguese Jews, rich and of weight in the synagogue; and the young Inquirer had to bear their frowns, as well as that terrible excommunication of the Rabbis—the formula schammatha. Disasters so grievons could not drive him from his Integrity, but they naturally disturbed very sadly the course of his meditations, depriving him of leisure, and inflicting nearly the keenest of anguish. The greatest and the wisest of his time, however, loved him: he enjoyed the respect of VAN ENDE and the DE-WITTS: and it may be imagined, how inestimable, in such circumstances, the solace of such affection! Spinoza acted like the bravest of men. Resolute to live with meditation, he acquired the art of polishing lenses, that so—like St. Paul—he might supply, by the labour of his hands, his material wants: and, thus raised above the farther shock of circumstance, he rented a single chamber from Van den Spyck, an honest burgher of the Hague, wherein he henceforth lived and meditated, and produced the wonderful works which so stunned all Europe. To that little room the student must needs go back if he would discern Spinoza: and he must further add, that the feeble, emaciated, and sickly form he sees writing there, had learned so well the value of independence, and had so felt the delight of searching for Truth, that, although sustaining nature on some such sum as our twopeuce or threepence a-day, he declined to be drawn from his retirement by munificent offers of patronage—resisting the solicitations even of the world-renowned PRINCE of CONDE.—In proceeding with the system of Spinoza, we bespeak your to explain the forbearance of scientific readers, and the gravest attention of all others; forbearance, because we must write popularly; and attention, because the writings we are about to analyze are the true source of so much subsequent Philosophical History. We shall divide our exposition into several distinct sections.—I. Like his early and only master Des Cartes, Spinoza recognized the necessity of first laying down his Method of Inquiry, or determining by prior investigation the road which alone seemed likely to lead to Truth. There are, he says, three kinds of knowledge commonly so called;—the First, consisting of mere hearsay, and of vague experiences and impressions passively received—making up those indiscriminate beliefs, and confused images, which are represented by the opinions and prejudices of the vulgar. Of such knowledge, the philosopher makes no account.—The Second, is of a higher aim; it arises when we seek the relations of things or of phenomena; when after comparing objects and classing them by their resemblances, we ascend to the general Law expressing their apparent place and function in the Universe. But this knowledge is also vitiated and incomplete; vitiated, because we rarely discern or apprehend an object precisely as it is—being misled by the imperfection of our Senses: incomplete, because although it may lead us to a Law, it does not explain or account for Law itself.—The Third kind of knowledge alone possesses absolute certainty; and alone is worth the pursuit of the philosopher. It is born when we discern some Absolute Principle, from which, by rigorous deduction, the character of the Universe, the phenomena of Mind and Matter, the nature of Man and God, can be seen to flow. Then we are superior to sense and its illusions; Experience with its deceits and phantasms, and Reasoning merely discursive, which never lead to the absolute goal, are banished from the domain of Metaphysics. If, indeed, the longed to the Human Faculties to obtain primary and all-comprehending principle, Spinoza would be right; but he has not brought with him Organ by which he demands that Intuitory elevation from which these defective ones start. His method is thus defective at the set, and immeasurably inferior to that of Cartes, who—not thinking of the desirable of the real and practicable—lays down the moveable axiom, that Philosophy must ever begin in the certainties of Consciousness.—II. Searching for the adequate primary Principle of Philosophy, Spinoza quickly and easily reaches the Idea of Existence in itself, or as it is termed by him the Idea of SUBSTANCE—that which stands under all phenomena. What is this Idea? How can we define Substance? It is infinite, it is perfect—else it were limited and determined by something else, and would not be the ultimate principle of Existence. But it must have attributes, or intelligible characteristics? Spinoza speaks of these occupies his system. It was suggested by LEIBNITZ afterwards, that our Idea of Substance involves also the Idea of Cause, or of Force—of Activity—a criticism whose propriety is unquestionable, and which of itself goes far to invalidate those terrible fatalistic conclusions, which—as we shall see, inhere in the philosophy we are considering. But apart from objections like these—which is the fundamental one—whence drew Spinoza the knowledge of this Idea of Substance and its attributes? By what process, or in what manner can he convince any one of his right to that or any different from an appeal to Consciousness? Can he indicate any one of his right to that postulate? Can he indicate any yet, the system reared on that postulate—and over-rides every other truth of which sciousness testifies! In this is the weakness of such efforts; and it is the ruin of all metaphysical as well as of à priori schemes. The man who owns no mental phenomena except those gather from external nature, or explained by and appearances, seldom reflects that the seeming clearness—he is really employing and secondary certainties (if they be allowable) for the purpose of establishing a primary one.—III. Let us consider the Fabric reared on this postulate—a Fabric which certainly, even in the present state of the sciences, is the reasoning most complete. Allow the postulate—and we have a mailed combatant, whose chink for your arrows! triumph of Spinoza's reasoning—this is the secret of that power by which he has crushed opponents.—Scrutinize the substance or reality of all

an infinite number of Attributes se were it not infinite. Of these,
y are known, or manifested to us by :—Extension and Thought. But
f an Infinite Substance, must in it-
-infinite in energy, though limited nsion, as Extension, can have no ought, as Thought, must have the
ite expansion, owning no limits
r Time. Such the attributes that stance; if such attributes did not ot cognizable, the Infinite Abso-
would be a mere negation, un-knowable. Turn now to the tes. Through what is Extension ot in itself:—Infinite Space, is a ithout meaning, a simple negabstance has attributes, so Extenribute, has modes or manifestales or manifestations of Extension
s, through which alone we know s which crowd it, and the motions
it. Each of these is Finite: they ltiple; and by the infinity of their ome, in their totality, to equal the e they represent. This will at once 16th proposition of the Ethics, 'It Substance to develop itself necesinity of attributes, which also are fied.' Again with regard to not Thought its modes? For could it be known? As Space is ough Form, Thought is manifested Ideas are its modes, and they too nfinite. The VARIETY of Things, longer a mystery: it even belongs
so that the problem of philosophy
re us, is this ineffable, and unapite and absolute SUBSTANCE, units Infinite attributes, which again unfolded and rendered apprehen-nfinitude of modes—Forms and ake up the Universe. The student o detect the true parentage of cheme of SCHELLING. Spinoza that as every mode of Extension to a mode of Thought, the order of IDEAS, is necessarily the same connection of THINGS,—surely a ticipation of the Philosophy of
It now only remains, that we state conclusions accepted by Spinoza
from his system, regarding MAN easy to see, that the remorseless could admit no Deity, apart from bstance. God, according to this st in essence be that Substance;
tible Names, with the same Attri-justice to that great Thinker, the be warned, not to attach to the conceptions of Inertness, absence of or of Will. If Spinoza has said that f understanding, he meant only
, just as he would have so spoken that is, treated without regard to
We are dealing, it must never be a consummate logician, whose de-has no flaw; and he necessarily h the most abstract conception—
passing down by regular steps, from almost inaccessible heights. Rather, the World, all Things are God; the Material Universe, but also Intelligence: every firmament that shines, every thought that pierces the serene, every emotion that agitates the heart, every virtuous and heroic aspiration that raises humanity above circumstance and the grave—these, ay, and manifestations, which human eye nor ear has either heard or seen—these, are fulgurations of Divinity—gleams of the character of that Essence which is All! Surely we have no Atheism here; but a loftiest, however mistaken, Pantheism. It is said quaintly by NOVALIS that Spinoza was 'intoxicated with God!' As to MAN, the conclusions are too sorrowful. His Understanding is a mere succession of these modes of Thought; his Soul a more exalted or comprehensive Mode: and, as to every mode of Infinite Thought there is a corresponding mode of Extension, each soul has a body which it animates, or of which it is the Idea. No personality here; not a shred of human Liberty: Body and Soul, each a mere expression, impersonal and transient, of one phase of that huge all-comprehending Development! Spinoza saves, indeed, that form of Morality within which he lived himself. Part of the Infinite, let us recognize our blessedness. To live, to enjoy in plenitude, we must concentrate our desires around one aspiration—the longing to possess God, which means to love Him, and thereby to live in Him.—How poorly, this bare outline represents Spinoza! Has the student who peruses these lines, ever, under the dark vault of Heaven, or at the hour of midnight, experienced perplexity alike of Head and Heart, as he questioned the Mystery of Things? So, likewise, did the young and heroic Jew of whom we write; and the foregoing was his solution. It must in nowise be forgotten that the Philosophy of which, through mere exercise of Intellect, we give an account, was dug by this remarkable man, from the mine of his profound Nature; what we describe, he created; it is for us to examine and contemplate only, but he believed; it gave him dignity and integrity through Life, and did not impair his courage at a lonely Death. [J.P.N.]

SPIRITI, S., an Italian historian, 1712-1776.

SPIRITO, L., an Italian poet, born 1436.

SPITTLER, BARON VON, a minister of state and historian of Wurtemberg, 1752-1810.

SPITZNER, J. E., a Ger. naturalist, 1731-1806.

SPIZELIUS, T., a Lutheran divine, 1639-1691.

SPOFFORTH, R., an Eng. musician, 1768-1826.

SPOHN, FREDERIC AUGUSTUS WILLIAM, professor of philosophy and ancient literature at Leipzig, born 1792, died prematurely when preparing to publish a work on hieroglyphics, 1824.

SPOLVERINI, HILARION, a Italian painter, famous for his battle-pieces, 1657-1734.

SPOLVERINI, MARQUIS, an Italian administrator and writer of poetry, 1695-1763.

SPON, CHARLES, a French physician and Latin poet, 1609-1684. His son, JAMES, a physician, antiquarian, and traveller, 1647-1685.

SPONDE, HENRY DE, in Latin Spondanus, a learned French prelate and ecclesiastical historian, 1568-1643. His brother, JOHN, a classical scholar and editor, 1557-1585.

SPONTINI, GASPARO, a composer of sacred music and operas, was born at Majolatti, in the Roman states, 1778, and educated at Naples. He visited Paris in 1803, and in 1807 became director of music to the empress Josephine. This was followed in 1810 by his appointment as director of the Italian opera, which he exchanged in 1820 for that of chapel-master at Berlin, where he remained till 1842. Died in Italy 1851.

SPONTONI, C., an Italian historian, 1552-1610.

SPORENO, J., an Italian historian, 1490-1560.

SPOTSWOOD, or SPOTTISWOOD, JOHN, archbishop of St. Andrews, descended from an ancient Scottish family, was born in the county of Edinburgh 1565. He accompanied James VI. to England, who raised him to the primacy, and made him one of the privy council for Scotland the same year. He laboured greatly to bring the Church of Scotland to the episcopal discipline, and became chancellor of that kingdom in 1665, two years after he had crowned Charles I. at Holyrood. Died 1639. SIR ROBERT, his second son, wrote a History of the Scottish Church, and was put to death by the Covenanters.

SPRAGGE, SIR EDWARD, a naval commander, who distinguished himself against the Dutch admirals, Ruyter and Van Tromp, and was accidentally drowned 1673.

SPRANGHER, BARTHOLOMEW, a Flemish painter, whose principal work is The Last Judgment, 1546-1623.

SPRAT, THOMAS, a learned English prelate, one of the first fellows of the Royal Society of London, of which he wrote a History; he was also the friend and biographer of the poet Cowley; born in Devonshire 1636, died 1713.

SPRENGEL, K., a Germ. botanist, 1766-1833.

SPRENGEL, M. C., a Germ. hist., 1746-1803.

SPRENGER, B., a German agriculturist and writer on the Cultivation of the Vine, 1724-1791.

SPRENGER, P., a Germ. historian, 1735-1806.

SPURSTOW, WILLIAM, minister of Hackney, near London, at the period of the civil wars, author of religious works, and of attacks on episcopacy, published under the name of Smectymnus; d. 1666.

SPURZHEIM, JOHN GASPAR, a famous name in the history of phrenological science, was born at Longwich, near Treves, in 1776, and became acquainted with Dr. Gall at Vienna, where he studied medicine. From 1805 till 1813 he was the constant companion of Gall in his travels and scientific researches, and subsequently became an active promulgator of the new doctrine in England and France. He died in 1832, a few months after his arrival in Boston, United States. One of his distinct claims is that of having demonstrated the fibrous structure of the brain; but his works are too well known to require particular description.

SQUARCIONE, FRANCESO, a painter of the Venetian school, and virtuoso of art, 1394-1474.

SQUIRE, S., a learned prelate, 1714-1766.

STAAL, MARGUERITE JEANNE CADIER DE LAUNY, Baroness De, the daughter of an artist of Paris, and, previous to her marriage, the attendant and the confidential friend of the duchess of Maine. Her faithfulness to the latter led to her own imprisonment in the Bastile, on emerging from which she married M. de Staal, an officer of the Swiss guard. The interesting 'Memoirs of Her Life' were written by herself; 1693-1750.

STABEN, H., a Flemish painter, 1578-1658.

STACE, P. P., or STATIUS, a Latin poet, 61-96.

STACKHOUSE, JOHN, nephew of the celebrated divine, distinguished as a botanist, d. 181[illegible].

STACKHOUSE, THOMAS, a minister of Shrop-shire, author of 'A General View of Ancient [illegible] tory, Chronology, and Geography,' dates unkno[illegible]

STACKHOUSE, THOMAS, a well-known [illegible] gious writer and theologian, was born in [illegible] He became minister of the English Chur[illegible] Amsterdam, and finally rector of Benham Va[illegible] in Berkshire, where he died in 1752. His [illegible] cipal work is a 'History of the Bible.'

STADION, PHIL., Count, a diplomatist in [illegible] service of Austria, time of Napoleon, 1768-1[illegible]

STADIUS, J., a Flemish astronomer, 152[illegible]

STADLER, M., a Ger. mus. compos., 1748–[illegible]

STAEL, ANNE LOUISE GERMAINE DE[illegible] born in 1766 at Paris, where her father, M.[illegible] ker, afterwards the celebrated minister of F[illegible] was then a banker's clerk. At the age of t[illegible] she became the wife of the Baron De Stael-[illegible] tein, the Swedish ambassador at Paris; an[illegible] strong literary turn which she had already exh[illegible] now developed itself still further, and produc[illegible] the course of her life, a series of works embr[illegible] almost every sort of composition in prose or [illegible] At first sanguine in the cause of the revol[illegible] she soon became warmly interested in the s[illegible] ings of its victims, especially the queen, who[illegible] had the courage to defend in print. In 180[illegible] entered on the course of speculation, in whi[illegible] was afterwards strongest, by publishing her [illegible] 'De La Littérature, considérée dans ses rap[illegible] avec les Institutions Sociales;' and her very e[illegible] cal novel 'Delphine' appeared in 1802. I[illegible] year her husband died. Madame De Stael [illegible] much too independent to be acceptable to Nap[illegible] who banished her from Paris, and after[illegible] ordered her to confine herself to her chate[illegible] Coppet on the Lake of Geneva. From 180[illegible] 1815 she travelled much in Germany, Italy [illegible] England, and visited Sweden and Russia. [illegible] 'Corinne,' in form a novel, and the most ele[illegible] of all tributes to the antiquities and scen[illegible] Italy, appeared in 1807. Her most amb[illegible] work, 'De L'Allemagne,' printed at Paris in [illegible] was seized by the police, and only publishe[illegible] London some years later. After the second r[illegible] ration she lived chiefly in Switzerland, where [illegible] contracted a secret marriage with M. De R[illegible] She died in 1817. After her death, useful co[illegible] butions were made to the history of the tim[illegible] the publication of her 'Considérations s[illegible] Révolution Française,' and her 'Dix Ann[illegible] Exil.' [W[illegible]

STAEL-HOLSTEIN, ERIC MAGNUS, B[illegible] De, a Swedish diplomatist, born 1725, mi[illegible] plenipotentiary at the court of France from [illegible] to 1799, died 1802. He married the celebra[illegible] daughter of Necker in 1786, and assisted pow[illegible] in the French revolution till his recall.

STAFFORD, a noble family belonging to [illegible] Norman aristocracy of England. The princi[illegible] historical names are:—HUMPHREY, a partisan [illegible] Henry VI., created duke of Buckingham 14[illegible] HENRY, his grandson, a favourite of Richard II. [illegible] beheaded 1483. EDWARD, beheaded on an ac[illegible] sation of treason by Henry VIII. 1521.

RD, ANTHONY, a learned writer, aue Life and Death of Henry, Lord Staf-641.
RD, WILLIAM HOWARD, earl of, who title by marriage with the heiress of n 1640, was the second son of Thomas, folk. He was executed in connection npowder plot 1680.
G. E., a German chemist, 1660-1734.
R, or STAYNER, SIR RICH., a naval of Cromwell and Charles II., d. 1662.
See DALRYMPLE.
NT, A., a Flemish painter, 1580-1660
NS, J., a Fr. theologian, 1595-1681.
RI, F., an Ital. Hebraist, 1501-1574.
IRI, V. F., an Italian mathematician
letters, 1678-1709.
IDGE, JOHN, a learned schoolmaster
rian, known from 1481 to 1522.
SH, FRANK HALL, a gentleman of wn as an elegant writer and connoisarts, author of a 'Life of Voltaire,'
s of the Mediterranean,' 'Notices on n Capitals of Europe,' 'Seville and its d 'Poems,' 1798-1840.
PE, a noble English family, principal
e:—JAMES, the first earl, who distinself both as a diplomatist and military e wars of William III., born in Hert-73, died 1721. CHARLES, grandson eding, and third earl, born 1753, was d as a man of science by several valuions, among which are the printing
n by his name, a calculating machine, sail against wind and tide, locks for thod for securing buildings from fire,
chord for tuning musical instruments.
d of the French revolution he openly blican sentiments, and even laid aside of the peerage. By his first wife, the great earl of Chatham, he had three ne of whom is the subject of the fol-
e; his second wife, daughter of Mr.
ville, bore him three sons; died 1816.
PE, LADY HESTER, whose remarkable t Lebanon may be numbered among teresting romances of history, was born er father was the celebrated Lord Staner mother a daughter of the great Earl onsequently she was niece to William ose house she resided, acting as his tary, and sharing in all his confidences.
are silent on the causes which er fate, after the death of her uncle,
re principally two:—First, the disgust nature for European society, created by ge of the secrets of diplomacy, and the tful life of all around her; and secondly, nfluence which prevailed for about ten at period, and of which history takes
It is certain, however, that from 1794 of Pitt, startling announcements were made by private letters to the minophecies were actually fulfilled both in and France: it is probable that these es, exaggerated by her unrestrained
, and her longing for the free simplicity finally determined Lady Stanhope to
and. William Pitt having recommended his niece to the care of the nation, she received a pension of £1,200 per annum, with which, after his death, she commenced a life of great state in the East, and acquired immense influence over the Arabian population. Her manner of life, and romantic style are well known; we will only add, therefore, that it is unfair to judge her character from the reports of English travellers, for she was one of those high-souled women who not only refused allegiance to the empty mannerisms she had cast off, but was well able to answer every fool who forced his way into her presence according to his folly. She never married, but adopted the habit of an Arabian cavalier, and under those bright skies, rode and dwelt where she pleased, virtually queen of the deserts, and mistress of the ancient palaces of Zenobia. Her permanent abode was in Mount Lebanon, about eight miles from Sidon, where she died in 1839. [E.R.]

STANHOPE, P. D. See CHESTERFIELD.

STANISLAUS, a bishop of Cracovia, k. 1079.

STANISLAUS, AUGUSTUS, the last king of Poland, was a son of Count Stanislaus Poniatowski, and of the princess Czartoryska. He was born in Lithuania in 1732, and was advanced to the throne by the intrigues of Catharine of Russia, aided by another of her favourites, the Polish traitor, BRANESKI, in 1764. It is hardly necessary to mention that the crown of Poland was elective, and that the people had been kept in a state of serfdom under a powerful aristocracy,—circumstances exceedingly favourable to the Russian designs, and productive at last of the infamous partition of Poland, and the virtual effacement of that ancient kingdom from the map of Europe. The first partition of Poland between Russia, Prussia, and Austria, took place in 1773, and the second, after a long struggle, in 1792, when Kosciusko was defeated by the Russian general, Suwarrow. Stanislaus abdicated his vain title in 1795, and took up his abode in Russia, where he died, in receipt of a pension, the proper reward of his career, in 1798. [E.R.]

STANLEY, EDWARD, bishop of Norwich, a younger son of Sir John Thomas Stanley of Alderley, in Cheshire, born 1770, author of a 'Familiar History of Birds,' published in 1835. He had been upwards of thirty years rector of Alderley, when he was elevated to the see of Norwich through his connection with the Whig party in 1837; d. 1849.

STANLEY, JOHN, a musical composer, 1713-86.

STANLEY, THOMAS, the name of three accomplished men of letters, the first of whom, SIR THOMAS STANLEY, of Laytonstone, in Essex, wrote poems, and was knighted by Charles I. The second THOMAS, and most famous of the three, was his son; he was a master of philosophy and polite learning, and a friend of William Fairfax, the translator of Tasso; his works are 'The History of Philosophy, and Lives of the Philosophers,' and some original poems, and translations from the Greek, born 1625, died in London, 1678. The third of the name was a son of the latter, who translated when very young the Histories of Ælian.

STANLEY, WM., a dignitary of the church, author of 'The Devotion of the Church of Rome compared with the Devotion of the Church of England,' 1647-1731.

STANSEL, V., a German astronomer, 1621-90.

STANYHURST, RICHARD, an Irish clergyman, known as a poet and historian, 1546-1618.

STANZIONI, M., an Ital. painter, 1585-1656.

STAPEL, JOHN BODÆUS A, a Dutch physician and botanist, honoured by Linnæus, d. 1636.

STAPLETON, SIR ROBERT, a native of Carleton, in Yorkshire, who fought in the interest of Charles I. at the battle of Edgehill, 1642, and adhered steadfastly to the royal cause; he wrote several dramatic pieces, and translations of the classic poets, died 1669.

STAPLETON, THOMAS, Roman Catholic professor of divinity at Louvain, known as a learned controversial writer, 1535-1598.

STARCK, SAMUEL, a native of Pomerania, distinguished as a theologian and Oriental scholar, 1640-1697. His grandson, JOHN AUGUSTUS, a theologian, Orientalist, and historian, professor at St. Petersburg, 1741-1816.

STARK, W., a London physician, died 1769.

STARNINA, J., an Italian painter, 1354-1406.

STAROWOLSKI, SIMON, a Polish ecclesiastic and historian of his country, died 1656.

STASZIC, S., a Polish patriot, 1755-1806.

STATIUS, PUBLIUS P., a Roman poet, 61-96.

STAUNTON, SIR GEORGE LEONARD, an Irish physician, who rose to the post of attorney-general in Grenada, and having attached himself to Lord Macartney in the character of secretary, was afterwards known as a diplomatist, and his intimate adviser; his principal services were displayed in the arrest of Major-general Stuart, commander-in-chief of the Madras army, in treating with Tippoo Sultan, and in the embassy to China; of the latter he published an interesting account in 2 vols. 4to, 1797. Born in Galway, 1737; died 1801.

STAUPITZ, J., a German theologian, d. 1527.

STAVELEY, T., a learned antiquary, d. 1683.

STEBBING, HEN., a friend of Bishop Sherlock, known as a writer in the Bangorian controversy, and the attack on Warburton's Legation, d. 1763.

STEDMAN, J. G., a Scotch officer in the Dutch East India service, author of an interesting narrative, 1745-1797.

STEELE, SIR RICHARD, was born in 1671 at Dublin, to which his father had gone from England as secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant. At the Charterhouse School in London, he formed a life-long intimacy with Addison. Steele next went to Oxford, but, bent on being a soldier, and discouraged by his family, eloped and enlisted in the Horse Guards. His officers, knowing him to be a gentleman, and becoming aware of his attractive social qualities, procured an ensign's commission for him; and, in the gay company of the mess, he exhibited and cherished his good-hearted liveliness, his inclination for dissipated extravagance, and the sanguine flightiness which in later life made him a rash and unsuccessful speculator. Intervals of repentance for his follies gave birth, while he was in the army, to his tract 'The Christian Hero;' but he dealt more in play-writing, and produced lively and popular comedies, which had the merit (rare on the English stage for some time previously) of being morally correct. His first piece, 'The Funeral, or Love A-la-mode,' was acted in 1701, 'The Tender Husband' in 1703, and 'The Lying Lover' in 1704. His only subsequent drama ('The Drummer' being really Addison's) was 'The Conscious Lovers,' which did not appear till 1722. In 1709, by starting 'The Tatler,' he had the great merit of striking out a new kind of literary composition; and his large share in this first periodical, the active part he took in the 'Spectator,' and his still more active authorship in 'The Guardian,' place him second only to Addison among the Essayists. Before commencing 'The Tatler,' he had become useful as a political pamphleteer on the Whig side, and was appointed 'Gazette' writer, and afterwards a commissioner of stamps. On the fall of the Whig ministry in 1710, the Tories, anxious to obtain the aid of his pen, allowed him to keep his place. But Steele, honourably true to his party, refused to write for their enemies, and, not content with silence, he insisted in 1713 on attacking the ministry in 'The Guardian,' and resigned his commissionership. He was soon brought into the House of Commons, but expelled for matter relating to the succession to the crown contained in 'The Englishman' and 'The Crisis.' After the accession of George I., he again sat in parliament, was knighted, and appointed a commissioner for the forfeited estates in Scotland. He continued to write on politics. His 'Whig Examiner' has been noticed in the memoir of Addison. In his latest years he was poor and embarrassed, and he died in Wales in 1729.

STEEN, F. VAN, a Flemish painter, born [illegible]

STEEN, JAN, a Dutch painter, 1636-168[illegible]

STEENWYCK, HENRY VAN, a Flemish painter, remarkable for his skill in delineating the interiors of churches and temples, 1550-1604. His son, of the same names, distinguished in the same line of art, was a friend of Vandyck, who introduced him to Charles I. He was born in 158[illegible] died in London at an unknown date. ANNA STEENWYCK, celebrated as a painter of still life, was born at Breda about 1640.

STEEVENS, GEORGE, the well-known commentator on the works of Shakspeare, was born at Stepney 1736, and first appeared as an editor of the immortal dramatist in 1766. In 1770 he associated his labours with those of Johnson, and a joint edition appeared in 10 vols. 8vo, 1773. In 1793 it was reprinted in 15 vols., the criticisms of Malone having appeared in the interval. Steevens died in 1800.

STEFANI, P. DE, the earliest sculptor of the Neapolitan school, about 1228-1310. His brother THOMASO, a painter, was b. at Naples abt. 1[illegible]

STEFANO, called Il Fiorentino, an Italian painter, grandson and pupil of Giotto, 1301-[illegible] THOMASO, his supposed son, called, from his style, Il Giottino, 1324-1356.

STEFFANI, AGOSTINO, a musical composer claimed by the Germans as a native of Lei[illegible] and by the Italians as a countryman of theirs, born in 1665, and was first known as a sing[illegible] at St. Mark's at Venice. He composed several operas, but the most celebrated and numerous his works are his chamber duets. Died 1729.

STEFFENS, HEINRICH, a naturalist, miscellaneous wr., and patriot of Copenhagen, 1773-18[illegible]

STEIBELT, D., a Germ. composer, 1760-18[illegible]

STEIGUER, N. F. DE, a Swiss patriot, 1728-[illegible]

STEIN, CHRISTOPHER GODFREY DANIEL, geographer and compiler, prof. at Berlin, 1771-18[illegible]

W., a Germ. accoucheur, 1737-1803.
F. KARL, Baron Von, a Prussian enemy of Napoleon, was born at nd became minister of finance and n on the death of Struensee 1804.
iled from Prussia by the influence of Europe he retired to Prague, and is year 1812, was with the emperor
t. Petersburg. He lived in privacy
e till 1827, when political circum-
l him to public life; died 1831.
T, G. S., a Ger. philos., 1738-1809.
family of French artists:—FRANCIS, ar-pieces, 1563-1605. JAMES, the of the family, a painter, designer, 1596-1657. FRANCIS, brother of 3-1647. ANTOINE, their nephew, engraver, 1630-1682. CLAUDINE, oine, 1634-1697. FRANCOISE, a dates unknown. ANTOINETTE, a engraver, 1635-1676.
. A., a Venetian writer, 1757-1833.
. C., an Italian poet, 16th century.
J., an Italian moralist, 1699-1770.
, F., an Ital. naturalist, born 1577.
, MAGNUS, Count, a Swedish gent, period of Charles XII., was born rst bore arms under the princes of Baden, in the coalition against Louis ed the army of Charles XII. at the t of his campaigns, and in 1701
the glorious victory of Narva. He Charles in his meteor-like progress
d, and when, in 1707, the Swedish Saxony, meditating where next he his veterans, Stenbock was made cania; in which post he gained the
the people by his firm administra-
. In 1709 Charles was defeated by at at the battle of Pultowa, and nself shut up in Bender, on Turkish e Danes, who had been defeated by e beginning of his career, took ad-his crisis to break through their and send an invading army against they took the town of Helsingburgh.
ed to the field at the head of the ia, consisting partly of undisciplined mbled in haste, and rivalling his gn in glory, gave the Danes a bloody ren followed the enemy into Gerd their cities, and gained a second ver the combined Saxon and Danish
however, was the limit of his suc-
ng to perfidious counsels, he pene-Holland, and the Russians having
s other enemies, he was at last comulate. Stenbock became the prisoner in 1712, and died in a miserable
a 1717. [E.R.]
, L., a German physician, 1523-87.
., a doge of Venice, 1400-1413.
ICHOLAS, in Latin Stenonius, a fast, author of professional and theoloorn at Copenhagen 1638, died 1687.
IUS ATHENIENSIS, a Greek phyfessor of Christianity, 7th century.
IUS BYZANTINUS, a Greek gramxicographer, 5th century.

STEPHEN, the name of several saints:—1. The Jewish martyr, stoned shortly after the crucifixion of the Saviour, as recorded in Acts. 2. The first pope of the name. 3. The first king of Hungary of the name. 4. Stephen of Muret, founder of a religious order in France, died 1124. 5. An English abbot, surnamed Harding, founder of several monasteries, died 1134.

STEPHEN, several popes of Rome:—STEPHEN I., reigned 253-257. STEPHEN II., died four days after his election, 752. STEPHEN III., successor of the latter; in his time Pepin was invited into Italy to subdue Astolphus, king of the Lombards, and the foundation was laid for the temporal sovereignty of the papacy, died 757. STEPHEN IV., reigned 768-772. STEPHEN V., who crowned Louis, son of Charlemagne, emperor, reigned seven months only, 817. STEPHEN VI., reigned 885-891. STEPHEN VII., remarkable chiefly for his disgraceful treatment of the corpse of Boniface V., succeeded that pontiff in 896, and was strangled by his predecessor's friends 897. STEPHEN VIII., predecessor of John, son of Marozia, 929-931. STEPHEN IX., another pope of the period in which Marozia figured, 939-942. STEPHEN X., an advocate for the marriage of the priests, and distinguished by his efforts to unite the two churches, reigned only a few months, 1057-1058. Sometimes only nine popes of this name are reckoned, Stephen II. being omitted.

STEPHEN, four kings of Hungary:—STEPHEN I., introduced Christianity into that country, and published a body of laws; he is numbered with the saints, and gives his name to the famous crown, reigned 997-1038. STEPHEN II., reigned 1114-1131. STEPHEN III., succeeded 1161; he aided the emperor, Manuel Commenus, against the Venetians, and was twice dethroned for short periods, first by his uncle, Ladislas, and afterwards by Stephen, a brother of Ladislas; he died 1173. STEPHEN IV., reigned two years only, but gained an illustrious name by his victories over Ottocar, king of Bohemia, 1270-1272.

STEPHEN, king of Poland, surnamed BATHORI, was a noble Hungarian, born 1532, elected prince of Transylvania 1571, succeeded to Henry of Valois as king of Poland 1575, died 1586.

STEPHEN, king of England, was the third son of Adela, fourth daughter of William the Conqueror, and of Stephen, count of Blois. He was born in 1105, and was invited to the English court by his uncle, Henry I., who enriched him with estates and honours, and finally promoted his marriage with Matilda, heiress of the county of Boulogne, and niece to David, king of Scotland. On Henry's death in 1135, Stephen, who was then in France, hastened to England, and was crowned king to the prejudice of Henry's daughter, Matilda, empress of Germany; this event, however, was an advantage to the English nation, for he was a man 'noble and hardy, of passing comely favour and personage, excelling in martial policy, gentleness, and liberality towards all men, and though he had continual wars, yet did he never burthen his commons with exactions.' In such an age, there could be no question between a character thus described, residing at the seat of government, and a woman connected by the nearest ties to a distant land, and if many of the barons kept aloof from Stephen, it was probably far more from a sense of the privileged despotism they might have retained in the latter case, than from any regard to the welfare of the state. It would seem, in fact, that Stephen's principal difficulties arose from his regard for the old Saxon population at a period when the barons were rising into importance, and to the disgust excited by it among the chivalrous aristocracy introduced by his grandfather; the insolence of whose bearing, and their followers infesting the highways, could not but be galling to the peaceful burgher. The intestine troubles produced by these causes were commenced by David of Scotland, to whom Matilda was more nearly related than Stephen. Invading England in the spring of 1136, that prince was induced to retire by the cession of Cumberland; but returning again, in the year following, was defeated at the battle of the Standard, fought on Cutton Moor, August 22, 1138. Then followed, in September, 1139, the arrival of Matilda, supported by the earl of Gloucester, and the disaffected barons, to whose forces Stephen was compelled to yield: the triumph of Matilda lasted from February to September, 1141, when the king recovered his liberty, and his rival took refuge in Normandy. Nor yet was Stephen allowed to wear the crown in peace, for Matilda having resigned her pretensions to Henry Plantagenet, her son, that chivalrous prince landed an army at Wareham, in 1153, and met the forces of Stephen at Wallingford. The threatened bloodshed, however, was now avoided by an armistice, for at this juncture the son of Stephen expired, and he was easily prevailed upon to conclude a treaty recognizing Henry as his successor, who had only just arrived at the age of manhood, and could afford to wait a few years: the interval was brief indeed, for Stephen died the year following, aged forty-nine, 1154. The foreign troops drawn by Stephen from Brittany and Flanders, and the fortresses erected by the barons in their contests with him, were alike harassing to the people during his troubled reign, and besides all this he maintained a difficult struggle with the papal clergy. [E.R.]

STEPHEN, JAMES, a lawyer and political writer, who suggested and arranged the system of continental blockade, by which Napoleon was so greatly embarrassed during the late war; he was first known as a reporter on the 'Morning Chronicle,' but attracted the attention of government by his anonymous pamphlet, entitled 'War in Disguise, or the Frauds of Neutral Flags,' soon after which he became member for Tralee. Mr. Stephen was connected by marriage with Wilberforce, and having resided some years at St. Christophers, he was well acquainted with the colonies, and proved himself a valuable adherent in the cause of negro emancipation. Died 1832.

STEPHEN, JOHN, a Danish hist., 1599-1650.

STEPHENS, ALEXANDER, a miscellaneous writer, born at Elgin, in Scotland, 1757; died 1821. His works are 'A History of the War of the French Revolution,' 'Memoirs of Horne Tooke,' 'Public Characters.' Besides these he was a contributor to the 'Annual Obituary,' and the 'Monthly Magazine.'

STEPHENS, HENRY, the first of a family of French printers, the most distinguished in those early times, when the most learned men devoted themselves to the perfection of the new art: he was born at Paris about 1470, began pr 1503, and died 1520. FRANCIS, his s is known to have carried on the busi 1537 to 1547. ROBERT, the brother of and second son of Henry, born at Paris protected by Francis I., but after that death had a severe struggle with the
the Sorbonne: their enmity drove him
in 1552, and he died there in the Calvi 1559. CHARLES, brother of the latte on the noble work in which his family
barked their fortunes, from 1535 to 1564.
son of Robert, one of the most learned finest spirits of his age, was born at Pa
he ruined himself in the cause, and di hospital of Lyons 1506. Several othe family are mentioned, the last, ESTIE TOINE, born at Geneva 1594, ended hi career at the hospital Hôtel Dieu 1674.

STEPHENS, J., a learned divine, 150

STEPHENS, JOHN, an officer of th
James II., who maintained himself by after the success of the revolution, and wro works for the booksellers, died 1726.

STEPHENS, R., an Eng. antiquary, d

STEPHENS, W., an English divine, d

STEPHENSON, GEORGE, a civil en extraordinary genius, not only in his ar affairs in general. As the names of Bri Smeaton are connected with our canal that of Arkwright with mechanical spin Watt with the steam engine; of Fulton wi navigation; so is that of George Stephen nected with our railway system, and we
with the railway system of the world.
humble parents at Wylam, in the county
ham, about nine miles west of Newcastlein April, 1787, he seems to have been le own resources for education. His first picking turnips at twopence per day.
he was a 'trapper' in the coal workin
there, in the lonely hours he spent with
of the men in the pit depending on his
to the air trap which he had to open and cl minated the idea which, long after matured,
him to be classed among the great benef mankind. When he was fourteen or fifte of age he worked at Water-row pit as he
on the waggon-way between Wylam and N
He, therefore, became early experienced working of and laws of motion of wag railways. As he often referred to this ex in later years, and to actual experiments
that time, we have another proof to add more that genius will always declare itself as the special subject of its delight is for contemplation. About 1805 Stephen his father's roof and went to Killingwo centre of the collieries worked by the 'gra Lords Ravensworth and partners. He wa lingworth still a brakesman; but soon af got the charge of the steam engine, an adv
which arose from the circumstance of h successfully remedied defects in the valve g engine, after several ineffectual attempts made to do so by a then celebrated ti whose actual business it was. Stephen before this acquired a reputation among h workmen as a repairer of clocks and watch pointed engineer in consequence of this success, he married, and a son was born, an only child, Robert, who was early associated with his father in the glorious career tracked by the name of Stephenson, father and son. Between 1807 and 1815 Stephenson's attention was much drawn to the subject of locomotive engines, many attempts having been made during that period to introduce them on the tramways and edge railways of the Northumberland and Durham coal districts, with but very partial success. After various trials and modifications of his designs, George Stephenson started a locomotive on the Killingworth railway on the 6th of March, 1815, which embodied every essential part of the locomotive of the present day, with the exception of the tubular boiler and expansion gear. This was not the starting point of Stephenson's public career, however, although it was about this period that from his genius having been turned in another, for the moment, more important direction, he actually did come prominently before the public. It was as an inventor of the miners' safety lamp that Stephenson's pre-eminent merit was first recognized. As an independent inventor of a safety lamp, depending on the same principles as that of Sir Humphrey Davy's lamp, Stephenson was presented by a number of the leading coal owners of the north with one thousand pounds and a piece of plate. On that occasion the chairman, Mr. Charles John Brandling, said:—'A great deal of controversy, and he was sorry to say of animosity, had prevailed upon the subject of the safety lamp; but this he trusted, after the example of moderation that had been set by Mr. Stephenson's friends, would subside, and all personalities cease to be remembered. As to the claim of that individual to testify their gratitude to whom they were that day assembled, he thought every doubt must have been removed in the mind of unprejudiced persons by a perusal of the evidence recently laid before the public. He begged Mr. Stephenson's acceptance of this token of their esteem, wishing him health long to enjoy it, and to enable him to employ those talents with which Providence had blessed him for the benefit of his fellow-creatures.' Stephenson in acknowledging the gift, gave the following pledge, which was nobly redeemed during the subsequent part of his valuable life.—'I shall ever reflect with pride and gratitude that my labours have been honoured with the approbation of such a distinguished meeting; and you may rest assured that my time and any talent I possess shall hereafter be employed in such manner as not to give you, gentlemen, any cause to regret the countenance and support you have so generously afforded me.' Though men of Stephenson's scope and frame of mind are in a great measure independent of education, they most thoroughly understand the advantages of it. George Stephenson, therefore, took special care to secure his son's receiving every advantage in this way, and was well rewarded even in the beginning; Robert Stephenson carried off mathematical and philosophical prizes from Edinburgh university. The first locomotive railway, for the purposes of travelling according to the present principle of action, was constructed between Stockton and Darlington. Stephenson was engineer. The safety-lamp testimonial had enabled him, in partnership with certain capitalists and his son, to establish the now world-renowned engine factory in Newcastle. On the opening of the Darlington railway, in 1825, Stephenson's engines travelled with a speed of ten miles an hour; but his ideas and anticipations of the capabilities of this mode of transit, both as to speed and the effect it would produce when generally adopted, as he foresaw it must be ultimately, were such as he did not then even dare to express for fear of being pronounced insane! With the engineering of the Liverpool and Manchester railway, Stephenson entered upon the field of his great fame; and from 1825 to 1847 he occupied the foremost position of all railway engineers, whether in Britain or on the continent. His son, and his pupils and assistants, spread the fame of his name and the principles of his practice from one end of the world to the other, and continue to do so. Stephenson was a man of iron frame of body and mind, of plain manners, ardent temperament, eminently social habits; too confident of his powers and too sure of his position to be ambitious; he unflinchingly pursued his own ends by all means, and seldom if ever failed in accomplishing his objects. He amassed great wealth, partly from his profession; but he was also an extensive coal proprietor, and it is no small portion of his renown that he mainly, on his own account, established the inland coal trade to the metropolis. He died at Tapton house near Chesterfield, aged sixty-seven, on the 12th August, 1848. [L.D.B.G.]

STEPNEY, GEORGE, an English poet and ambassador of the reign of James II., 1663-1707.

STERBEECK, F., a Flemish botanist, 17th ct.

STERLING, JOHN, one of the most independent and true-hearted thinkers of this age, generally known as an essayist and critic, was born at Kames castle, in the Isle of Bute, in 1806. His father, Captain Edward Sterling, was a native of Waterford in Ireland, but was descended from a Scotch officer—one of those who acquired military distinction in the army of Gustavus Adolphus. Captain Sterling also was a political writer, and editor of the Times newspaper. From 1810 to 1814 he resided in Glamorganshire, where his son became deeply imbued with that love of nature, and the 'metaphysical and religious' value of its scenes, which is so conspicuous in his letters and essays. On the fall of Napoleon in 1814 the family went to reside in France, and barely managed to effect their escape in the following year, when the exile of Elba returned to reassert his rights; the family then settled in London. In 1824 John Sterling was sent to Trinity College, Cambridge, and remained there till 1827, when he left without taking a degree, but returned for that purpose in 1833, on resolving to enter the Church of England. Here he studied the classics under Archdeacon Hare, and though he did not become a thorough scholar, it is pleasant to read the confession of his old teacher that he was 'something better' in the mastery which he obtained over the spirit of the old Greek poetry and philosophy. In the interval between leaving college and taking orders, Sterling became a contributor to the Athenæum and other periodicals, and pursued his literary avocations in London, under the influence of such men as Coleridge and Wordsworth, not to forget his friends Carlyle and Frederick Maurice; in 1830 he married the sister of the lady who became the wife of the latter. The connection of Sterling with the church as curate of Herstmonceux, of which place his friend, Archdeacon Hare, was rector, lasted no more than about six months, but in this period he devoted himself with religious zeal to all the arduous duties of a country curate; his health meanwhile giving way, and his convictions gradually ripening towards a more universal faith than that of the church articles. Before taking the curacy he had resided some two years at St. Vincent, in the West Indies, and after leaving it he once more travelled under more genial skies than those of England, a measure rendered necessary by his tendency to consumption. These travels extended, by easy stages and long halts, from the south of France to Italy and Madeira, and were varied by his occupations as an author, but still more by the restless energy of his mind as a thinker, engaged in the deep problems opened up by the study of German literature and the Bible—no longer to him a mere historical narrative but a great symbol, the interpretation of which none of his masters could furnish. About 1841 he published his tragedy of 'Strafford,' which had been to him a labour of love, the one in which his genius 'swam the lightest,' but it fell still-born from the press. In 1843 his sensitive frame, already weakened by the malady which consumed him, received a severe shock from the death of his mother and his wife within a day or two of each other, and he breathed his last, kindly watched in his last illness by Mrs. Maurice, in the spring of 1844. Having appointed Archdeacon Hare and Mr. Carlyle his literary executors, the former published a collection of his works, to which a memoir was prefixed, in 1848; and the latter his picturesque and affecting 'Life of John Sterling,' in 1851. We need not dwell on the distinction between these two works,—the one lamenting his earnest strivings towards the truth as a deplorable fall, and the other so graphically sketching the 'victorious believer and the victorious doer.' We may add, however, one pregnant sentence from the pen of Sterling himself:—'The quantity of inwardness, faith, and power, which has come before me in my own generation, cannot, I think, pass away into the Invisible without helping towards some great outward revolution. But O! how perilous will be the position of any man who may stand forth as the leader and standard-bearer in such a movement! For how small and weakly charged were the "lofts of storied thunder" even in Luther's time, which the prince of this world could set loose against him, compared with those of modern civilization and philosophy, which would be just as fierce in their way as were, of old, the papacy and the empire.' [E.R.]

STERN, J., a Bavarian painter, 1698-1746.

STERN, T., a Dutch engraver, 17th century.

STERNE, or STEARNE, JOHN, a learned Irish physician, nephew to the famous Usher, at the time of his birth bishop of Meath, was born in that county 1622, and died 1669. He was better known as a theologian than a physician, and has left some learned works. His son, JOHN, successively bishop of Dromore and Clogher, died 1745.

STERNE, LAURENCE, though born in 1713 at Clonmel, owed his Irish birth, and the passing of his childhood in Ireland, to the fact that his
the younger son of a Yorkshire squire, was lieutenant in a marching regiment. Lauren educated by his father's kinsmen; and also a clerical uncle obtained for him a pre York Cathedral, and the living of Sutton
East Riding. In addition to these prefe after his marriage in 1741, his wife's fami sented him to the parish of Stillington. The
the two parishes being adjacent, he conti perform duty in both, residing at Sutton, a himself (in his own words) with 'books, p
fiddling, and shooting,' publishing a comple
mons, quarrelling with his clerical brethre collecting, by observation and reading, the rials on which his literary fame was to be buil became celebrated immediately on publishi first two volumes of 'Tristram Shandy' in and his reputation increased till the appeara
the ninth and last volume in 1766. The ' mental Journey,' which came out in 1768
undoubtedly inferior, but is still the favourit
many readers. His way of life soon ceased even outwardly, respectable. His publicati two volumes of Sermons in 1760 was a pecu speculation. In the same year he obtained an Yorkshire living; but his clerical duties see have occupied from this time very little o attention. He wandered about, enjoying his riety in London, and making two continental nies, the one into France, the other into I
The lightmindedness so evident in his works, not least so in the posthumous 'Letters,' o
by his daughter, led him into dissolute habi which improvidence was the least serious died, in lodgings in London, in 1768, leaving family quite unprovided for. The moral tend of Sterne's writings is unquestionably low;
freedom of plagiarism, especially from Rab
and Molière, is audacious; but his airy and gra humour is admirable, and some of his chara are among the most natural and original comic portraits. [W.

STERNE, RICHARD, a native of Manch
Nottinghamshire, who attended Laud at his e tion in the character of chaplain, and after restoration became archbishop of York. He a treatise on Logic, and some Latin poems, b
his share in Walton's Polyglott Bible; 1596-

STERNHOLD, THOMAS, an English and poet, whose principal claim to remembra
his share in the versification of the Psalms, d

STESICHORUS, a Greek poet, 640-560

STETTEN, PAUL VON, a Ger. historian,
1786. His brother, of the same names, 1731

STEUART-DENHAM, SIR JAS, a Scot
on political economy, grandson of the lord ad
of this name, born at Edinburgh 1712, died

STEVENS, A., an English architect, died

STEVENS, GEORGE ALEXANDER, a and humorous writer, originally known as a ling player, author of 'The History of Pope
a novel, 'Lectures upon Heads,' and a of songs, the most popular of which was Storm;' died 1784.

STEVENS, R. J. S., a composer, 1753-

STEVENS, WILLIAM, a tradesman of L cousin to Bishop Horne, and distinguish him by his theological writings, 1732-1807.

W. B., a divine and poet, 1755-1800.
N, Sir John Andrew, a famous
er, born in Ireland 1759, died 1833.
ar work is the arrangement of the adapted to the words of Moore, n conjunction with him. He also age, and composed many anthems

N, John Hall, a clever satirist rriter, described by Laurence Sterne, timate friend, in the character of ristram Shandy, author of 'Crazy
s for Grown Gentlemen,' 'Lyric Moral Tales,' 1718-1785.
N, Robert, a civil engineer, the whose character were great sagacity, perseverance. In private life he was g worth, who consecrated to benery talent committed to his trust.
w in June, 1772, the son of a West
t, he was, while yet an infant, left circumstances conspired to render her only son, Robert, by no means for. But the mother's energy overiculties, and Robert Stevenson re-lementary education. About 1787
ried Mr. Thomas Smith, an ingeni-had commenced life as a tinsmith but who afterwards successfully im-de of illuminating lighthouses, by lamps with parabolic mirrors for l fires which formerly served as e mariner. Stevenson was at the neteen intrusted by his step-father rintendence of the erection of the
the Little Cumbrae in the Frith through this connection became,
gineer to the Northern Lighthouse which he resigned in 1843, after s arduous duties for about half a great work of Stevenson's life, that s reputation as an engineer princi-he Bell Rock lighthouse. To him ur of conceiving and executing, a ry on the Bell Rock, a situation, un-n the level of the rock, which is ry tide, of much greater difficulty stone. His zeal, ever alive to the mproving on the conceptions of his meaton, led him to introduce some hanges in the arrangements of the tower, suggested by the facility of s of greater dimensions than Smeaton
o get from the granite quarries of venson may, with the strictest proto have created the lighthouse sys-
, and brought about its present state
In no country has the caloric system lighthouses been carried out so per-tland; and whether we consider the eauty of the optical apparatus, the of the buildings, or the discipline
e light-keepers, we cannot fail to impress of that energetic and cast of mind which directed the rks of general engineering Stevenson
sively engaged in every part of Bris rank with Rennie and Telford in the profession. Mr. Stevenson died on the 12th July, 1850, in the seventy-ninth year of his age. [L.D.B.G.]

STEVENSON, W., an antiquarian, died 1821.

STEVENSON, William, a clerk in the record office, known as a miscellaneous writer, 1772-1829.

STEVIN, Simon, in Latin Stevinus, a Flemish mathematician, teacher of Prince Maurice, and inspector of the dykes in Holland, died 1633.

STEWART, Dugald, born in Edinburgh, 22d November, 1753; died at his seat on the Frith of Forth, 11th June, 1828:—the eloquent disciple of Reid, and chief expounder of the Philosophy of the Scottish School. Appointed, at the early age of twenty-one, to succeed his father in the Mathematical Chair in the University of Edinburgh,—an office honourably filled by him for five years; he was on the retirement of Dr. Fergusson, elected Professor of Moral Philosophy. The charm of his style and manner was so great, and such the clearness of his exposition, that in a brief time his class-room was crowded by rising Youth from all quarters of the United Kingdom; and it is not to be denied that in conjunction with Playfair and other celebrated men then in Edinburgh, he contributed powerfully to confirm that generous liberality of Thought prevailing in our northern metropolis, when Horner, Lansdowne, Brougham, Russell, &c. lived there as young men. This peculiar influence of his teaching too, was strengthened by personal intercourse with him. Of easy access, a kindly gravity, and much openness, he possessed every quality necessary to attach his pupils: and it is not rare even at this late day, to hear him spoken of with more than admiration. Stewart retained his office until 1810, when, on his retirement, Dr. Thomas Brown was instituted to the Chair.—We wish it were possible to account as highly the Metaphysician, as we require to account the Man. His works, indeed, are voluminous, and few authors ever had the gift of a warmer, more perspicuous or persuasive style. Whatever idea he touches, he unquestionably adorns: nevertheless it cannot be asserted either that Stewart has done much to advance Speculation, or that he had personally attained an adequate grasp of the History of Philosophy, and the place it has occupied in the long development of Humanity. Reid and he, it must be remembered, stood in very different positions. Reid was essentially a Discoverer. Whatever the merit or defects of his system, it was a system framed by himself. Stewart, on the other hand, received it as a work accomplished: and, had he possessed the ability of his Master, the Philosophy of the Scottish School would have grown greater under his hands, and passed on towards the condition of a Science. Undoubtedly he improved its phraseology, for instance, for the term 'Principles of Common Sense,' he substituted 'Laws or Elements of Belief;' he strengthened some of its weaker parts, and gave precision to others; and he enriched Reid's account of the Faculties, by much felicitous and apposite illustration—witness his elaborate account of the Laws of Association: but, beyond Reid, he did not advance one hair's breadth: with him, as with his master, Philosophy confined itself to a statement or examination of some fundamental ideas of the Reason; neither attempting to account for them, nor to ascend to their origin, nor to follow them to their applications. He left the Scottish School in all vital respects, in the condition in which he found it,—'having,' in the words of Cousin, 'a commencement in psychology, but no regular logic, neither a metaphysic, nor a theodicœa, nor a cosmology—a little of morals and politics, but no system.' Stewart's best work—that in which alone we discern marks of scientific Thought—is his Philosophical Essays; and his worst, is the most famous, viz., the Historical Dissertation in the Encyclopædia Britannica. It may seem a harsh and presumptuous deliverance, but we have no dread of its being gainsaid—that in our higher Philosophical Literature, it would be difficult to find a less adequate treatment of so great a theme. From the absence of coherence—the absence of any trace of unity or comprehensive principle, the Dissertation is liker the expansion of a commonplace book, than an effort to contemplate the continuous flow of Human Thought. It evinces too, an extraordinary defect of sympathy with the whole progress of speculation in modern continental Europe: Stewart manifestly knew nothing of KANT; and he did not think it necessary to take notice of SPINOZA! A singular illustration, surely, how strictly insular, we Scotchmen have been as Thinkers, until within these recent years: and therein a promise that brighter lights, in many ways, will break over our future.—Let us conclude in the spirit in which we began, and pay to the memory of Stewart, the tribute owing to a benevolent, upright, and liberal man of undoubted talent—one of the most polished writers of his day, and as fascinating a Teacher as ever occupied a chair in our Metropolitan University. [J.P.N.]

STEWART, MATTHEW, D.D., born at Rothesay in 1717; died in 1785. A pupil of Robert Simson in the College of Glasgow, he early evinced great mathematical talent; and, having given ample evidence alike of his tastes and power, he was called from the living of Roseneath to succeed Maclaurin in Edinburgh in 1747. He discharged the duties of this important office until 1772, when his son, the well-known Scottish metaphysician, began to assist him. Like all our British mathematicians of that period, Dr. Stewart was strongly attached to Geometrical Methods; and he evinced his singular command of them in the discovery, while at Roseneath, of the propositions published under the title 'Geometrical Theories,' by his 'Tracts, Physical and Mathematical,' and his 'Propositiones More Veterum Demonstratæ:' —the latter set of propositions, however, having been discovered by analytical methods, although demonstrated synthetically. The subsequent introduction of the Continental analysis into Britain, greatly diminished the interest at one time attached to such exercitations: but if we mistake not, the discovery of new, general, and very powerful methods in Geometrical treatment, is about to produce a useful revival of old Tastes. [J.P.N.]

STEWART, ROBERT. See CASTLEREAGH.

STEWART-DENHAM. See STEUART.

STIFEL, MICHAEL, in Latin Stifelius, a Lutheran divine and mathematician, died 1567.

STILES, EZRA, an American divine, president of Yale College, and author of a curious history of three of the regicides who fled to America at the period of the restoration, 1727-1795.

STILICHO, FLAVIUS, a Vandal of gr and bravery, who distinguished himse declining period of the Roman empire advanced to the highest dignities of th Theodosius the Great. After serving in he represented that sovereign and sust dignity of the Roman name at the court then ruled by Sapor III., and on his r rewarded with the hand of Serena, the adopted daughter, besides being intrust with the guardianship of his two sons, and Honorius. On the division of th Stilicho became virtual governor of th the character of first minister to Hono the same power in the East was exercis finus, under Arcadius, the other empe military genius of Stilicho, after this p exhibited in the reduction of Africa, whic led into a revolt by Eutropius, the so Rufinus at the Eastern court, and subse the great contests with Alaric and E In the year 403 he routed the former nea and in 406 put the hosts of the latter to killed their commander. While Stilicho sustained the fortunes of the Roman nam was accused of having a secret understan Alaric, and treacherously put to death The wives and children of 30,000 Germ were in his service were massacred at time.

STILL, JOHN, bishop of Bath and Well of one of our vile old plays, died 1607.

STILLING, JOHN HENRY, or JUS LING, a native of Florenburg, in Nassau, was born in 1740, remarkable as a philo and miscellaneous writer. Though broug humble circumstances, he became, by the his natural talents, a physician and prof the university of Strasburg, where he died Author of 'Theory of the Human Spirit,'

STILLINGFLEET, DR. EWARD, was 1635, at Cranborn, Dorsetshire. Being for the church, he was entered a studen John's College, Cambridge, and being ord 1657, was immediately presented to the r Sutton, Nottinghamshire. During his r in this place, he published his 'Origines an apology or defence of revealed religion—a manifesting so rare a combination of natura and acquired learning, that his reputati divine spread far and wide. A shower of pre was rained upon him. He was first a preacher of the Rolls' chapel, then to the of St. Andrew's, Holborn, lecturer at the and chaplain in ordinary to king Charles 1685 he published his 'Antiquities of the Church.' In 1688, immediately subsequ revolution, he was promoted to the see of ter; but, instead of reposing in the indulg ment of his dignity, he engaged with h ardour in the pursuits of theological li particularly in the composition of some con works against the Socinians, as well as physical discussion with Locke. He died His works are comprised in 6 vols. folio.

STILPO, a Stoic philosopher, 306 B.C.

STIRLING, J., a mathematician, 18th

STIRLING, WILLIAM, earl of, a Scot matist and poet, whose descendant is the claimant of lands in Nova Scotia, granted to his ancestor by Charles I., 1580-1640.

STOBÆUS, J., a Greek writer, 5th century.

STOCCADE, N., a Flemish painter, 17th cent.

STOCCHI, F., an Italian astrologer, 1599-1661.

STOCK, SIMON, an English monk, who became general of the Carmelites, and is known as an ascetic writer, died 1265.

STOCKDALE, P., a Scotch poet, 1736-1811.

STOCKVICH, H., a Dutch painter, 1761-1818.

STOFFLER, or STOEFFLER, JOHN, a Germ. astronomer, born of poor parents, 1452, died 1531.

STOFFLET, N., a Venetian general, 1751-1796.

STOKE, E., a Dutch chronicler, 14th century.

STOLBERG, FREDERIC LEOPOLD, Count, a German diplomatist and man of letters, 1750-1819.

STONE, EDMUND, a Scottish mathematician, whose father was gardener to the duke of Argyll; he was patronised by the duke when a discovery was made of his self-acquired learning, but died in poverty 1768.

STONHOUSE, or STONEHOUSE, SIR JAMES, an infidel physician, who became a convert to Christianity, and a religious writer, 1716-1795.

STORACE, S., an eminent composer, 1763-96.

STORCH, A., a German theologian, 1501-1557.

STORCH, H. F. VON, a celebrated political economist and statistician, b. in Riga 1766, d. 1835.

STORCH, NICHOLAS, founder of the religious doctrines of the anabaptists, was born at Stolberg in Saxony, towards the close of the fifteenth century, and was therefore a young man when Luther commenced preaching the doctrines of the reformation. He went much farther than Luther in proscribing ancient authorities, for he denounced all external documents and traditions whatsoever, and accepting no book but the Bible, he taught his disciples to renounce the study of literature and theology, and trust to the Spirit of God to enlighten their understandings. He insisted, also, on the necessity of re-baptism, when that ceremony had been performed in infancy, on the principle, that it was an act of faith, and could not otherwise be valid. Neither Calvin nor Luther could tolerate these doctrines, and they became still more hateful to the princes of Germany, when political ends, and the doctrine of the community of goods was associated with them. For years past the poor half-starved and half-naked serfs of Germany had been accustomed to assemble in great numbers, and with 'Bread and Cheese' inscribed on their banners, had threatened the complete overthrow of the existing state of society. This state of things is glanced at in another article (LEYDEN) and it led to much bloodshed: at length the elector of Saxony, at the pressing instance of Luther, banished their spiritual guide, in addition to executing their political in the person of Munzer, 1525. Storch was a man of the most amiable disposition, but the baptists of the present day deny all connection with his party, to avoid the odium belonging to these scenes of turbulence. He died in his retreat at Munich, 1530. [E.R.]

STORCK, A., a Dutch painter, 1650-1708.

STORY, JOSEPH, an American judge and master of jurisprudence, author of 'Commentaries on the Conflict of Laws,' 1779-1845.

STOSCH, P., a Germ. antiquarian, 1691-1757.

STOTHARD, THOMAS, a distinguished painter and designer, whose beautiful compositions have become familiar to the public by the engravings of Collins, Heath, Parker, Cronick, and Medland. He was born in London 1755, and exhibited the earliest proofs of his talent in Bell's edition of the British Poets. The subjects graced by his pencil since then amount in number to many thousands, and they are often marked by that beauty of form and sense of human happiness, which are the highest recommendations of the pictorial art to the popular taste. The 'Procession of the Flitch of Bacon,' the 'Canterbury Pilgrimage,' and the 'Wellington Shield,' are well known; died 1834. His son, CHARLES ALFRED, an antiquarian draughtsman, author of 'Monumental Effigies of Great Britain,' was born 1787, and accidentally killed 1821.

STOW, JOHN, one of our most valued antiquarian writers, was the son of a merchant tailor of London, and was born in Cornhill about 1525. He quitted his trade when in his fortieth year, and being patronised by Archbishop Parker and Robert Dudley, earl of Leicester, devoted his time to antiquarian studies. His first work, published 1565, was 'The Summary of the Chronicles of England,' which was published in an enlarged form, under the title of 'Flores Historiarum,' in 1600. His famous 'Survey of London' appeared in 1598. Stow lived to beg his daily bread in his eightieth year, and died 1605.

STOWELL, WILLIAM, SCOTT, Lord, brother of Lord Eldon, civilian and member of the privy council, was born in Durham, 1745. His father was a coal factor in Newcastle, and that town was in hourly expectation of the rebels when his mother approached her confinement; she was lowered from the walls in a basket, therefore, and conveyed to the other side of the river, at great hazard, where she gave birth to the subject of this notice, and his twin sister Barbara. Having completed his education at Oxford, Scott was admitted a fellow of that university in 1765; in 1772 he became bachelor of civil law, and in 1773, after his admission as a bencher of the Middle Temple, was elected by the members of convocation to the office of Camden's reader of Ancient Histories. He held this appointment till 1785, and in the interim took the degree of doctor in civil law; he also made the acquaintance of Dr. Johnson, whom he accompanied to Edinburgh. He now rose from one post of distinction to another, until in 1798, he was appointed judge of the High Court of Admiralty, and a privy councillor. In 1790 he entered parliament as member for one of the pocket boroughs, but in 1801 took a more honourable seat as representative of the university of Oxford, where his exertions had insured a high degree of prosperity and efficiency to the Bodleian Library. He continued to represent the university till he was raised to the peerage on the coronation of George IV. in 1821; the office of admiralty judge he retained till 1828, a period of thirty years, honourably illustrated by the Reports of his decisions, which have been published by Dr. Robinson. Lord Stowell died January 28th, 1836. He was twice married, the second time to a daughter of the famous Admiral Earl Howe. [E.R.]

STRABO, a Greek historian and geographer, author of one of the most valuable relics of antiquity, being a description of nearly every part of the world known in his time, namely, the first century of the Christian era. This work is indispensable to the elucidation of ancient history.

STRADA, FAMIANUS, an Italian priest, historian of the 'Wars in the Netherlands,' 1572-1649.

STRADA, J., a Flemish painter, 1536-1605.

STRADELLA, ALESSANDRO, a Neapolitan, who flourished about the year 1650. He was an excellent composer, singer, and performer on the violin. The romantic incidents in the life of Stradella have often been narrated, and some years since they were selected as the subject of an opera, the music of which was composed by Von Flotow. He died from wounds inflicted upon him by the stilettos of two Venetian assassins, somewhere about the year 1670. His compositions were chiefly of a miscellaneous character. [J.M.]

STRAFFORD, THOMAS WENTWORTH, earl of, victim of his efforts to establish the arbitrary power of Charles I. in England, was the son of Sir William Wentworth, of Wentworth-Woodhouse in Yorkshire, and was born in Chancery Lane, London, in 1593. He was the eldest of twelve children, and having succeeded to the estates of his father, was soon after appointed custos rotulorum (keeper of the archives) for the West Riding, and in 1621 became member of parliament for his native county. At the commencement of the reign of Charles I., during the arbitrary administration of Buckingham, Wentworth stood nobly by the rights of the people—he even bore imprisonment, the deprivation of his offices, and his tyrannical exclusion from parliament: he was among the foremost promoters of the famous Petition of Right: for, said he, 'We must vindicate—what? New things? No,—our ancient, legal, and vital liberties, by setting such a seal upon them as no licentious spirit shall hereafter dare to infringe.' It may seem strange that a man whose political life commenced thus, should leave his party and become the first sacrifice on the altar of freedom, but there are two considerations which explain all such anomalies—those of character and circumstance. Strafford was a man of pre-eminent genius, haughty, audacious, and fond of power—of that stamp who mingle with their nobler qualities a reserved ambition, and ever hold themselves in readiness, like the couchant lion, to make a magnificent spring upon the object they mark out. Circumstances are the determining cause in such a case, and had Wentworth lived a few years later he might have anticipated the actions of a Cromwell, without his strict virtue; as it happened, the critical death of Buckingham, who fell by assassination, before the popular cause had gained strength enough to promise much grandeur of success, following quick on recent overtures from the court, provoked the lion to make his spring on what he deemed nobler quarry than the cause he had so long waited on. It was no mean ambition, or obscure contest in which his promotion now involved the renegade, for the smouldering zeal of England for her ancient liberties, began to spread in bright flame, and Pym warned him of his fate, when he attempted to justify his conduct; with him,—beyond all question, the greatest spirit that the king had won to his cause,—the question of a manly despotism on the one hand, or a free commonwealth on the other, was now to be debated, and his head was but the first stake in the game. We shall not consider it neces
low this great statesman and daring from one employment to another, a measures which brought him to ruin;
matter of history. In 1640, eight yea appointment as lord-deputy of Ireland, warded with the earldom, and his style
that of lord-lieutenant, but he was now
by the king to await the meeting of Charles, at the same time, solemnly as that 'not a hair of his head should
The popular party meanwhile, heade had prepared their accusation of Laud ford, and the impeachment was carrie bar of the House of Lords, on Novembe
The accumulative evidence, and the character of Strafford's designs, coul doubt of his intention to accomplish indictment charged him with: 'to s fundamental laws of the realm,' as c
the parliament; but the necessary leg
under the law of treason, completely and Strafford made such a defence th
mittee abandoned that mode of proc framed a bill of attainder. Abandoned by Charles, Strafford was executed in of this sentence on the 12th of May,
Letters, which make two folio volumes, lished by Dr. Knowles in 1789. It is that Whitlocke, chairman of the co
which the impeachment was conducted, fies to the bearing of Strafford when on 'Certainly,' he says, 'never any man a part, on such a theatre, with more wi stancy, and eloquence, with greater re
ment, and temper, and with a better gra words and actions, than did this great lent person; and he moved the hearts auditors, some few excepted, to re pity.'

STRANGE, SIR JOHN, an English author of Reports, 1696-1754. His so naturalist and antiquarian, 1732-1799.

STRANGE, SIR ROBERT, one of the nent historical engravers of Europe, w Pomona, one of the Orkneys, July 14, 17 attempting various pursuits, he joined t der in 1745, and was present at the Culloden. He afterwards lived by dra traits in Edinburgh, till he married in 17
he went abroad, and resided first at subsequently at Paris, where he comm study of engraving under Le Bas, and settled as an historical engraver, in 1751. His reputation soon extended b limits of his own country: he has no su line engraver generally; he went again 1760, and though formally excluded fro lish Royal Academy, when established i in 1768 he was successively elected a m
the academies of Rome, Florence, Bolog and Paris. He was knighted by Geo 1787, and died July 5, 1792, bequeathi
terity many exquisite engravings from s most celebrated Italian pictures. But of Strange are far too elaborate to be they do not amount to sixty altogether:
nese masters appear to have been his
but one of his most celebrated works

length of Charles I., after Vandyck. Strange is unsurpassed in the representation of flesh: a fine example is the Venus of the Tribune, after Titian. The question of the exclusion of engravers from the academy was one taken up very warmly by Sir Robert, he assumed the whole to be personal to himself. Certainly, in the original scheme for the foundation of the academy in 1753, it was designed that two out of the whole number of twenty-four should be engravers. It is gratifying to be able to state, that this standing cause of contention among English artists has at length been removed: the height to which the dispute was carried at one time, may be seen in a statement published by Sir Robert Strange himself, 'An Enquiry into the Rise and Establishment of the Royal Academy of Arts. To which is prefixed a letter to the Earl of Bute.' London, 1775.—(Le Blanc, Le Graveur en taille douce, Part II., Leipzig, 1848; Longhi, La Calcografia, Milan, 1830.) [R.N.W.]

STRATO, a Greek epigrammatic poet, presumed contemporary of Septimus Severus, from 193-211.

STRATO OF LAMPSACUS, a Greek philosopher, surnamed the physician, or naturalist, from the materialistic character of his system. He was the successor of Theophrastus, and taught Ptolemy Philadelphus in Egypt.

STRAUCH, F. R., a Sp. theologian, 1760-1823.

STRAUCH, J., a Ger. jurisconsult, 1612-1679.

STRAUCHIUS, ÆGIDIUS, a German mathematician and controversial divine, 1632-1682.

STRAUSS, JANS JANSZOON, otherwise JOHN STRUYS, a Dutch traveller, author of Memoirs of his Life, and of his journies through Muscovy, Tartary, Persia, and the East Indies. His travels date from 1647 to 1673. Died 1694.

STREATER, R., an English painter, 1624-80.

STRICKLAND, E., distinguished as a traveller and naturalist, grandson of Sir George Strickland of Bayntun, in Yorkshire, and of the celebrated Dr. Cartwright, was born in Yorkshire 1811. His travels in Asia, followed by the publication of papers on geology and ornithology, date in 1835. In 1847 he began his editorial labours upon the zoology and geology of Professor Agassiz for the Ray Society. He succeeded Dr. Buckland as professor of geology at Oxford, and was killed by a railway accident in September, 1853.

STRIGELIUS, VICTORINUS, a Ger. divine and philosopher, period of the reformation, 1524-1569.

STROEMER, MARTIN, a Swedish professor of natural philosophy and astronomy, 1707-1770.

STROGONOFF, COUNT ALEXANDER VON, the Mæcenas of arts and letters at St. Petersburg, born about 1750, died 1811. His nephew, PAUL, a military officer and statesman, died 1814.

STROZZI, a Florentine name, which has been illustrated by many noble characters as statesmen, warriors, and men of letters. The savants and poets are—PALLAS, chief of the university, and a devoted friend of learning, 1372-1462. TITO VESPASIANO, a Latin poet and statesman, 1422-1501. ERCOLE, his son, anthor of a poem on the Greek language, and a friend of Bembo, born 1471, assassinated 1508. FRANCISCO DI SOLDO, a translator of Xenophon and Thucydides, known from 1550 to 1563. CIRIACO, or CHIRICO, professor of philosophy and Greek at Bologna, 1504-1565. LAURENTIA, his sister, a nun, and author of festival hymns in Latin, 1514-1591. GIAMBATTISTA, an elegant writer, who was invited to Rome by Urban VIII., and had apartments in the Vatican, died 1634. GUILIO, author of a fine epic poem on the origin of Venice, died 1636. PIETRO, secretary of briefs under Paul V., and afterwards professor of philosophy at Pisa, 1575-1640. BERNARDO, surnamed Il Cappucino and Il prete Genovese, a painter, 1581-1644. NICOLO, a tragic writer, died 1654; and GIACOMO, a poet and dramatist, flourished at Venice, 1583-1660. The public characters are those following:—

STROZZI, FILIPPO, a Florentine senator, born 1488, and allied to the Medici by his marriage with Clarice, niece of Leo X., famous in history for his attempt to expel that family from the republic. He was taken prisoner, and anticipated the public death reserved for him by self-destruction, 1538. His sons went to France, and engaged in the service of that state against Charles V., who protected the Medici. PIETRO, general of the French galleys and marshal, was killed at the siege of Thionville 1558. LEO, his brother, was chief of the forces sent to the aid of Mary Stuart; he was killed in Italy 1554. FILIPPO, son of Pietro, born at Venice 1541, became colonel of the French guards, and distinguished himself at Montcontour and Rochelle; he was wounded in a fight with the Spanish fleet off the island of St. Michæl, and was then thrown overboard, though living, by order of the admiral, Santa Cruz, 1582.

STRUDEL, P., a Tyrolese painter, 1660-1717.

STRUENSEE, ADRIAN, a theologian and ascetic writer, minister at Halle, in Saxony, 1708-1791. His eldest son, CARL AUGUST VON STRUENSEE, a distinguished economist, tactician, mathematician, and statesman, 1735-1806. His younger son is the subject of the following notice.

STRUENSEE, JOHN FREDERIC, Count, whose fate is connected with that of the hapless princess, Matilda Caroline, sister of George III., was born at Halle in 1737, and became physician to Christian VII., king of Denmark, in 1768. The marriage of Christian had disappointed the ambitious hopes of the queen dowager, Julia Maria, who had hitherto been able to retain her influence at court, and had calculated on the succession of her son, Prince Frederic; she became, therefore, the mortal enemy of Matilda, who found herself neglected by the king, and after a long pleasure excursion, in which he was accompanied by Struensee, virtually separated from him. The first circumstance leading to any intimacy between Matilda and Struensee was the inoculation of her child, from which time she appears to have concerted with him the counter intrigues which led to the ruin of both. He first became governor of the prince, then counsellor of the conferences and reader to the king; his friend and firm coadjutor, at the same time, Count Brandt, being appointed director of the court spectacles. The imbecility of the king favoured any enterprise, however rash, and Struensee, once in action, contemplated nothing short of a complete revolution in the state, by which the aristocracy was to be abased, and the people gratified with a free press and many useful reforms. All this was accomplished in 1771, and the adventurer became secret minister with the title of count; having, however, a powerful party of the nobles, headed by the queen dowager and Count Rantzau, opposed to him. This party began by blackening the character of Matilda, who had been reconciled to the king by the influence of Struensee, and as scandal is always palatable to those whose conduct would most merit its envenomed shafts, the press was set in motion against the authors of its freedom. In fine, the same deplorable weakness that had enabled Struensee to effect his rash enterprise, was now used to his destruction. Late one night in January, 1772, the conspirators suddenly forced their way to the king's apartment, persuaded him that he was about to be assassinated, and procured his order for the arrest of Struensee, his friend Brandt, and the queen. The latter was sleeping in her chamber at four in the morning, when Rantzau entered without ceremony and made her his prisoner, and it is well known that her life was only saved by the presence of the English fleet, by which she was conveyed to Germany. The charge against them was that of conspiracy against the state, aggravated by adultery. Struensee and Brandt were beheaded on the 28th of April, 1772, and four years after Matilda, not then twenty-five years of age, expired in Zell. [E.R.]

STRUTT, JOSEPH, an artist and antiquarian writer, born at Springfield, in Essex, 1749, died in London 1802. Having been apprenticed to Ryland, the engraver, he united the study of antiquities to his profession, and produced the following valuable works:—'The Regal and Ecclesiastical Antiquities of England,' 1773; 'Manners, Customs, Arms, Habits, &c., of the English, from the Arrival of the Saxons to the Reign of Henry VIII.,' 1774-1776; 'Chronicle of England,' 1777-1778; 'Biographical Dictionary of Engravers,' 1785-1786; 'A Complete View of the Dresses and Habits of the People of England,' 1796-1799; and that most favourite of all his works, 'The Sports and Pastimes of the People of England,' 1801.

STRUVE, GEORGE ADAM, in Latin Struvius, a Ger. jurisconsult, 1619-1692. His son, BURCKHARD GOTTHELF, professor of history, 1672-1738.

STRUYS. See STRAUSS.

STRY, A. VAN, a Dutch painter, 1755-1824.

STRYPE, JOHN, an indefatigable compiler of works relating to ecclesiastical history and biography, was born at Stepney, of German extraction, 1643, and became rector of Low Layton, in Essex, about 1669. It was here, during a sixty years' incumbency, that he compiled his valuable works, the chief of which are his 'Ecclesiastical Memorials,' the publication of which was completed in 1721; his 'Annals of the Reformation,' published from 1709 to 1731; and his 'Lives of the Archbishops Cranmer, Parker, Grindall, and Whitgift.' In the latter part of his life he became lecturer at Hackney; died 1737.

STUART, the royal house of Great Britain after the union of Scotland. The first of the name was the only child of Walter, the Steward of Scotland, and his wife Marjory, daughter of King Robert Bruce; he was born 1316; commanded the second division of the Scottish army at the battle of Halidon, 19th July, 1333; concluded the treaty of Perth with Edward III., 1335; succeeded David II. under the title of Robert II. 1371, died 1390. His son, ROBERT III., reigned after him, and continued the peace till 1399, when Henry IV. to the throne of Eng renewal of hostilities; died 1406 ceeded by his son, JAMES, who bore the same name,—the fifth of ing father of the unhappy Queen JAMES, MARY. The other king were James the Sixth of Scotla England, Charles I., Charles II., by whose deposition in 1688 t finally expelled the throne. The named, JAMES FRANCIS EDW
Elder Pretender, was acknowledg
XIV., under the title of James I
in 1719 married the daughter o king of Poland; he made some recover the kingdom, and died a
He resigned his pretensions to hi
EDWARD, born 1721, who fought throne of his ancestors, and was loden 1746; died at Rome 1788.
Stuarts was his brother, HENRY entered the church after the disas became titular cardinal of York;
Prince Charles, however, he assu of Henry IX. The invasion of It republic soon after, compelled hi
in Venice, and he was there suppo
from the English crown. Died 1

STUART, ARABELLA. See S

STUART, SIR CHARLES, fou
Bute, the favourite of George II military officer beginning of last

STUART, DANIEL, brother-in-Mackintosh, many years editor
the 'Morning Post' and the 'Cou

STUART, GILBERT, a Scottis
miscellaneous writer, Edinburgh,

STUART, JAMES, descended f
Moray, and known as a partiza was born at Duneam in 1776, an to the signet in 1798. The ch career was a fatal duel with Sir of the famous biographer and frie son, which took place in 1822.
victor, was tried for murder, bu 1835, when Lord Melbourne bec was in London editing the 'Cou
and was rewarded for his suppor
ment by the office of inspector of f

STUART, JAMES, commonly Stuart,' was born in London, of S 1713, and prosecuted his famous in the period from 1742 to 1755.
ties of Athens,' a work of high va
taking research and truthfuln
1762; died 1788.

STUART, JOHN, a Scottish
professor of Greek at Aberdeen, count of Marischal College and U
Sculptured Pillars in the North Scotland,' and 'Observations Accounts of the Progress of the Scotland,' 1751-1827.

STUBBE, H., a learned write

STUBBS, G., an English divi

STUBBS, G., a disting. painte

STUBBS, or STUBBE, JOHN,
and political writer, lived about 1

STUCKIUS, J. W., a Swiss divine, 1542-1607.

STUKELEY, WILLIAM, a famous antiquarian, born at Holbech, in Lincolnshire, 1687, died 1765. His works are 'Itinerarium Curiosum,' or an 'Account of the Antiquities and Curiosities on his Travels through Great Britain,' published 1724; 'Palæographia Sacra, or Discourses on the Monuments of Antiquity that Relate to Sacred History,' 1736; an 'Account of Stonehenge,' 1740, and some others.

STURE, STENO, called 'the Elder,' administrator of the government of Sweden, was the son of the statesman, Gustavus Anundson Sture, by Bridget, half-sister of Charles Canuteson. The historical events in which all the Stures figured mark the period of the union of the three kingdoms, Norway, Denmark, and Sweden, as effected by Margaret of Waldemar. Charles Canuteson, installed king in defiance of Christian I. of Denmark, expired in 1470, and Steno Sture, already known for a 'skilful, cautious, and free-minded lord, and therewithal prosperous in his designs,' received the government at his death, with the counsel never to strive after the regal title, the assumption of which, by Charles, had brought many disasters upon the kingdom. Steno Sture was the man of the people, and the chief votes for his election were those of the peasants and burgesses; few of the lords followed his banner. In the middle of 1471, Christian appeared at Stockholm with a fleet of seventy ships, and Steno advanced to the relief of the capital with about ten thousand men; the strength of the Danish army was about the same, and it was posted on a sandy height, called the Brunkeberg, outside the town. Here the battle for the independence of Sweden was fought, on the 11th of October, and the Swedes gained a hard won victory, as may be judged from the fact that no less than five hundred of the enemy fell around the Danebrog or standard of Christian, who quitted Sweden, and made no further attempts against it. The wise administration of the kingdom by Steno Sture now secured to Sweden a long succession of happy years, and in 1477 he founded the university of Upsala. His later years were disturbed by the invasion of Finland by Russia, the accidental burning of Stockholm, the plague, the failure of crops, and finally, by the revival of the Danish claims under King John. All these circumstances combined to deprive Steno Sture of his power in 1497, but he regained it in 1501, and again carried matters with a high hand. He died by poison, probably administered by the physician of the Danish queen, in 1503. [É.R.]

STURE, SUANTO NILSON, successor of the preceding, was joined in the government of Sweden by a warrior priest named Hemming Gadd, who was 'oftener seen at the head of an army or a fleet than at the altar.' Suanto is described as a valiant warrior of a bounteous and cheerful disposition. It was said of him proverbially that no one was admitted into his service who was observed to wink before the blow of a battle-axe, and that he would rather strip himself of his clothes than suffer a fellow-soldier to go unrewarded. He seems to have been 'hail fellow, well met,' with the peasantry, and made a gallant stand with them against the pretensions of John, king of Denmark. He was marching against Prince Christian, son of John, when he expired suddenly in 1512. His administration had been one prolonged warfare with the Danes, and he succeeded in drawing into his alliance the Hanse Towns of Germany. His death was followed, a year later, by that of King John, who was succeeded by the cruel tyrant, Christian II. [E.R.]

STURE, STENO SUANTESON, son and successor of the preceding Suanto Sture, and 'the noblest and most chivalrous of his family,' was elected administrator in defiance of the Danish faction, one of whom was run through at the feast in the castle of Stockholm, on that occasion. In 1516, the ambitious prelate Gustavus Trollé, connived at the revival of the Danish claims under Christian, and that invader was defeated by Sture at the battle of Brenn-Kirk, near Stockholm, 22d July, 1518. In this battle the Swedish banner was carried by a young noble, GUSTAVUS VASA, destined to be the avenger of his country, and the founder of a dynasty of kings. In the beginning of 1520, the Danish army made a new invasion, and a battle was fought on the ice of lake Assundun in West Gothland. Steno was mortally wounded, and being carried out of the battle, died in his sledge while hastening across the ice to Stockholm, where his wife, Christina Gyllenstierna, continued the resistance with great heroism. The Swedes, however, were routed, and the coronation of Christian was celebrated by that 'massacre of Stockholm,' which makes one of the bloodiest chapters of history. Such were the results at which the policy of Margaret of Waldemar had arrived; aggravated, however, by the bigotry of a dark and ambitious superstition assuming the name of religion. These events possess more than the interest of old annals. The Stures of Sweden carried on the battle of freedom and the Christian faith till the Gustavuses arose, to whose great victories we owe at this hour the peaceful possession of the Bible in Europe. [E.R.]

STURGEON, WILLIAM, a great discoverer in electro-magnetism and galvanism, was born at Whittington, in Lancashire, 1783. He was apprenticed to a shoemaker, and his career exhibits a striking example of the distinction that is sometimes reached under the most difficult circumstances, arising from a deficient education and social position. His experiments and works having led to his general recognition as a man of high science, Mr. Sturgeon was appointed professor of experimental philosophy in the military academy at Addiscombe; died 1850.

STURGES, JOHN, a theologian, died 1807.

STURM, JAMES, a German diplomatist, whose protest against the exclusion of the deputies of the reformed from the diet of Spires, in 1519, led to the appellation of 'Protestants,' was born at Strasburg 1489. He was employed in several embassies, and contributed materials towards Sleidan's History of the Reformation; died 1555.

STURM, JOHN, in Latin Sturmius, called on account of his great learning the German Cicero, author of several original works and translations, Strasburg, 1507-1589.

STURM, or STURMIUS, JOHN CHRISTOPHER, professor of mathematics and natural philosophy at Altorf, author of several works in physics, 1635-1703. His son, LEONARD CHRISTOPHER, an engineer and writer on architecture, 1669-1719. To the same family belongs CHRISTOPHER CHRISTIAN STURM, a pastor at Hamburgh, one of whose works has been translated into most European languages; and is known in English under the title of 'Reflections on the Works of God,' born at Augsburg 1740, died 1786.

STURT, JOHN, a London engraver, 1658-1730.

STURZ, H. P., a German writer, 1736-1776.

STYLE, W., a writer on law, 1603-1679.

SUARD, JEAN BAPTISTE ANTOINE, an elegant writer, secretary to the Fr. Academy, 1733-1817.

SUAREZ, F., a Spanish theologian, 1548-1617.

SUAREZ, J. M., an Ital. antiquary, died 1677.

SUBLEYRAS, PETER, a French painter, taught by his father, Matthew, and by Rival, 1699-1749.

SUBTERMANS, or SUSTERMANS, JUSTUS, a portrait and hist. painter of Antwerp, 1597-1681.

SUCHET, LOUIS GABRIEL, duke of Albufera, one of Napoleon's generals, was born at Lyons 1772, and rose to distinction in the wars waged by the republic in Italy. In 1800 he was major-general, and in 1805 began his career in the Spanish peninsula, where he rose to the command of one division of the army, and obtained his ducal honours. He became a peer of France after the restoration, and died 1826.

SUCKLING, SIR JOHN, a poet and courtier of the period of James I., was born at Whitton, in Middlesex, in 1609, and became the friend and companion of such men as Falkland and Devereux. At the period of the rebellion he displayed his loyalty and love of show by spending £12,000 in equipping a troop of one hundred horse, who proved too fine to be good for much in the field. Another trait of his character was exhibited by his endeavour to rescue Strafford, for which he was obliged to fly to France, where he died prematurely in 1641. He was an elegant writer, an accomplished scholar, and a great wit.

SUDAN, J. N., archivist of Lyons, 1761-1827.

SUE, JEAN JOSEPH, father and son, French surgeons, the former 1710-1792. PIERRE, a nephew of the elder, author of a 'History of Galvanism,' 1739-1816.

SUENO, three kings of Denmark, the first reigned 985-1014. The second, his grandson, received the crown of that country to the prejudice of Harald, king of Norway, 1047, died 1074. The third, usurped the throne after assassinating Canute V., 1147, and was killed in battle with Waldemar, 1157.

SUERKER III., king of Sweden from 1192-1210.

SUETONIUS, CAIUS TRANQUILLUS, a Roman advocate, who obtained the office of tribune through the influence of his friend, Pliny the Younger, and was afterwards secretary to Trajan. He is now known as an historian and miscellaneous writer, by his 'Lives of the Twelve Cæsars,' and his 'Notices of Grammarians, Rhetoricians, and Poets,' still extant.

SUETONIUS-PAULINUS, a Roman general, who became governor of Britain, and vanquished Boadicea, queen of the Iceni, 59.

SUETT, RICHARD, a low comedian of great humour, and supposed to be inimitable in his line. He was a native of London, and a choir boy in St. Paul's cathedral. He made his first appearance on the stage at the Haymarket theatre, while yet very young; but afterwards sought practice in the provinces, and particularly at York, where he acquired some reputation. In 1781 he appeared at Drury Lane, and became famous in comedy and broad farce. Among the parts for which he was celebrated were Robin, Endless, and Dicky Gossip. He died in 1805 at the age of forty-seven, habits of intemperance having led to his early death. [J.A.H.]

SUEUR, EUSTACHE LE, was born at Mont Didier in 1617, and became the pupil of Simon Vouet at Paris, but by the aid of some of Marc-antonio's prints after Raphael, and some of the pictures of that great painter in France, he developed a style superior to that of any of his contemporaries. His celebrated series of twenty-two large pictures, from the life of St. Bruno, now in the Louvre, was painted before his thirtieth year; they were originally painted on wood in the cloister of the Carthusians at Paris, but were transferred to canvas in 1766. Le Sueur died in 1655, in the thirty-eighth year of his age. Considering his comparatively short life, his works are very numerous, and most of them are on a large scale: they have been well engraved by the Massards, G. Andran, and the two Picarts. His style was grand in design, and he excelled in composition, but he was deficient both in colour and in chiaroscuro. The more showy style of Lebrun obscured the reputation of Le Sueur during his lifetime, but he now holds deservedly a much higher place than his more successful rival. He is sometimes styled the French Raphael. In composition, in character, and in the disposing of draperies, he was equal to the greatest of the Italians.—(Felibien, Entretiens sur les vies, &c., des plus excellens Peintres, &c.; D'Argenville, Abrégé de la vie des Peintres; Supp. to Pernety's Cyclopædia.) [R.N.]

SUEUR, J. LE, a French protestant, d. 16[illegible]

SUEUR, PETER LE, a French wood engr[illegible] 1636-1716. NICHOLAS, his nephew, 1690-1[illegible]

SUFFREN, J., a French Jesuit, 1565-164[illegible]

SUFFREN SAINT-TROPEZ, PETER ANDRE DE, one of the most dist. naval officers pro[illegible] by France, served under De Grasse, 1726-1[illegible]

SUGER, the Abbé, a French statesman, of Louis VII. and Louis Le Gros, 1082-115[illegible]

SUHM, P. F., a Danish historian, 1728-[illegible]

SUICER, or SCHWEITZER, JOHN GA[illegible] a Swiss theologian and Hellenist, 1620- His son, J. HENRY, a theologian and com[illegible] tator on the Bible, 1644-1705.

SUIDAS, a Greek lexicographer, who is posed to have lived about the 11th century. work is highly valuable for its details of li history, and its excerpts from lost authors.

SULLA. See SYLLA.

SULIVAN, SIR RICHARD JOSEPH, a m[illegible] of parliament, and employé of the East Company, author of 'Analysis of the Po[illegible] History of India,' died 1806.

SULLIVAN, JOHN, an American general member of Congress, afterwards a judge of Hampshire, 1741-1795. His brother, JA[illegible] governor of Massachusets, author of 'Observa[illegible] on the Government of the United States,' [illegible] 'Dissertation on the Constitutional Liberty of Press,' 1744-1808.

SULLY, H., an English watchmaker, d. 1728.

SULLY, MAURICE DE, bishop of Paris, celebrated as a preacher, and for having laid the first stone of the cathedral, 1160-1196. EUDES, his successor, 1197-1208.

SULLY, MAXIMILIEN DE BETHUNE, duke of Sully, born 13th December, 1560, was the second son of Francis de Bethune, baron of Rosny, a French protestant noble of high lineage, but impoverished patrimony. Young Maximilien Rosny was taken at the age of twelve to the court of Henry of Navarre, (afterwards Henry IV. of France,) then in his twentieth year, and was solemnly commanded by his father to live and die with the royal master, to whom he was then assigned. Rosny accompanied Henry to Paris and narrowly escaped perishing in the massacre of St. Bartholomew. When the young king of Navarre escaped from Paris, and renewed the armed resistance of the Huguenots against their catholic persecutors, young Rosny was with him, and became, while yet in boyhood, a captain of proved courage and skill. During the nineteen years of civil war, which elapsed before Henry was acknowledged king of France, Rosny rendered him the most eminent services, not only by valour and conduct in the field, but by his honesty and candour as an adviser, and also by the genius, as a financier and a statesman, which developed itself in the young noble, during the struggles and vicissitudes of this stormy portion of his chivalrous master's career. When the civil wars were at last ended, and Henry obtained undisputed possession of the crown, the internal affairs of the kingdom were in the most deplorable condition. There was the bitterest animosity of sect against sect. Agriculture, trade, and foreign commerce had suffered equally from the lawless violence of the contending factions; the finances of the crown were deeply, and as it seemed irretrievably embarrassed; and the resources of the state were dilapidated and apparently destroyed. Rosny now acted as the king's chief minister in reorganizing the kingdom out of the shipwreck of intestine strife and national bankruptcy. He was indefatigable in searching out and redressing the abuses that had grown up in every department of the administration; he investigated the origin and proper character of each branch of the revenue, and he personally examined the productive and commercial capabilities of the various districts and towns. He studied the modes of collecting the taxes and other imposts, that might be most lucrative to the crown, and least oppressive to the subject. The reformes, which he thus cautiously and wisely planned, were put into execution by him with equal firmness and skill; and having found, when he undertook the management of the French finances in 1597, an empty treasury, an increasing national debt, and an over-burdened and discontented population, he left in 1611 a surplus revenue, a large accumulation of treasure, and satisfaction and prosperity in every class of the community. It was not only as a financial reformer that he served his king and his country. He was Henry's counsellor in all the king's great measures of the reign with regard to foreign affairs, and also in those by which liberty of conscience and full rights of citizenship were guaranteed to the Huguenots, and by which the effective administration of the law and the maintenance of order and tranquillity were secured. He was liberally rewarded by his sovereign with wealth and honours, and in 1606 was made duke de Sully, and a peer of France. After Henry's assassination in 1610 Sully retained his offices for a short time under Louis XIII., but finding his influence decline and his counsels slighted, he retired from the court. Part of the occupation of Sully's after life was the composition of his well-known and valuable Memoirs. He died December 22, 1641. [E.S.C.]

SULPICIA, a Roman poetess, 90 B.C.

SULPICIUS, GALLUS. See GALLUS.

SULPICIUS-LEMONIA-RUFUS, SERVIUS, a Roman lawyer, and friend of Cicero, 106-43 B.C.

SULPICIUS, RUFUS, a Roman orator, born 124 B.C., became tribune 88; he was decapitated by Sylla, as a partizan of Marius.

SULPICIUS-SEVERUS, an ecclesiastical historian of the 5th century, author of a 'Life of St. Martin of Tours,' and an 'Ecclesiastical History.'

SULZER, J. G., a Swiss writer, 1720-1779.

SUMAROKOFF, ALEXANDER PETROWITSCH, a dramatic wr., poet, and fabulist of Moscow, considered the founder of the Russian drama, 1727-77.

SUMMONTE, J. A., a Neapolitan historian of the city and kingdom of Naples, who was rewarded for his labours by a persecution, and died 1602.

SURITA, or ZURITA, JEROME, a Spanish historian and secretary to the Inquisition, 1512-80.

SURIN, J. J., a French Jesuit, 1600-1665.

SURIUS, L., an ascetic writer, 1522-1578.

SURREY. See HOWARD.

SUSARION, an ancient Greek actor, supposed to be the inventor of comedy.

SUSON, B. H., a French ascetic, died 1366.

SUSSEX, AUGUSTUS FREDERICK, duke of, sixth son of George III., was born 1773. He married the Lady Augusta Murray, second daughter of the earl of Dunmore, in defiance of the royal marriage act, and though the marriage was pronounced void, they continued to live together till the lady's death in 1830. The children of this marriage were SIR AUGUSTUS D'ESTE, since dead, and a daughter, who became the wife of Sir Thomas Wilde, Lord Truro. The duke died in 1843, and was buried, by his own will, at Kensall Green Cemetery.

SUSSMITCH, J. P., a Germ. divine, 1705-67.

SUTCLIFFE, or SOUTCLIFFE, MATTHEW, dean of Exeter, and founder of a learned establishment at Chelsea, which proved the origin of the present military asylum, 1582-1629.

SUTTON, RICHARD, one of the founders of Brazennose College, Oxford, and steward of Sion monastery, near Brentford, known 1490-1522.

SUTTON, THOMAS, founder of the Charterhouse, was an accomplished English gentleman, and merchant, born at Knaith, in Lincolnshire, 1532. In 1569, being already secretary to the earl of Warwick, he was appointed master-general of the ordnance at Berwick, and greatly distinguished himself in the northern rebellion, which broke out under the earls of Northumberland and Westmoreland. In 1573, he commanded one of the batteries which compelled the castle of Edinburgh to surrender to the English; and the same year went to the assistance of the Regent Morton as one of the chiefs of a body of 1,500 men, sent into Scotland by Elizabeth. In 1582, Sutton married a relative of the earl of Warwick, and soon after commenced those speculations as a contractor, merchant, and armed privateer, by which he acquired his immense fortune. This was greatly augmented, however, by the value of the coal discovered in two manors which he had purchased of the bishop of Durham. After the loss of his wife in 1602, Sutton began to change his manner of living, and being deeply impressed with a sense of religion, he finally purchased the dissolved monastery of the Chartreuse, which he endowed most nobly with the bulk of his property: the purchase money alone was no less than £13,000, in those times a much greater sum than at present. He died at Hackney, in 1611, and his remains were deposited in a vault prepared for them under the chapel of the Charter-house. After his death, the nephew of Sutton, though munificently provided for, sought to invalidate the foundation of this charity, and the history of his attempt is supposed to implicate Lord Bacon as a particeps criminis. Like many of our noble charities, the administration of the Charter-house is said to have been marked by great abuse, the augmented value of the endowment being much more largely shared in by the officials and the school than the needy brethren; very recently, however, a vindication has been published by the present master, Archdeacon Hale, entitled, 'Some Account of the Early History and Foundation of the Hospital.' [E.R.]

SUVEE, J. B., a Flemish painter, 1743-1807.

SUVENHUSIUS, WILLIAM, professor of Hebrew and Greek at Amsterdam, editor of an edition of the Mischna, with Notes, and a Latin version, published 1703.

SUWARROW, or SOUVAROFF, PETER ALEXIS VASILIEVITCH, Count, a Russian general, remarkable for his headlong valour and barbarian energy of purpose, was born at Suskoi, in the Ukraine, 1730, and commenced his military career in the campaign against Sweden in 1747, shortly followed by the seven years' war. In 1762 he returned to his country, but took the field again in 1768, and obtained those successes in Poland which led to its first partition between Russia, Austria, and Prussia, the events of which date from 1768 to 1771. In 1773 he led the Russian hordes against Turkey, and captured in succession Tourtakaye and Hirsout. In 1782 he defeated the Tartars of the Crimea, and obliged them to take the oath of submission to Russia: the next year he was appointed general-in-chief and governor of that country. The Turks having renewed the struggle in 1787, a desperate battle was fought at Kinburn, where Suwarrow was severely wounded, and compelled to seek repose in his litter; his troops were soon after thrown into confusion, but the general mounted his horse, and reproaching them with their cowardice, threw himself almost into the midst of the enemy, and retrieved the fortunes of the field. The crowning victory in this campaign was the capture of Ismail, a fortress of Bessarabia, near the mouth of the Danube, in December, 1789. In 1794 the brave Polanders took the field under Kosciusko, to fight once more the battle of their independence, and in two months the Vistula was crimsoned with the blood of the patriots: on the 4th of November, Suwarrow captured Praga, and on the 9th he made his solemn entry into Warsaw. Much has been written about the excessive cruelty practised on this occasion, but there is really nothing to show that it exceeded the usual practice —fiendish as it is—of a victorious army; and it is recorded that Suwarrow's eyes filled with tears when the keys of Warsaw were presented to him, at the remembrance of what had occurred. He was, in some respects, a man of almost barbarian character; of this no denial can reasonably be admitted; but we are disposed to believe that his method of leading the Russians to victory was as merciful as any method could be, and it is from the Russian side of view that we ought to estimate the character of her commanders; to measure them by the higher standard applicable to our own countrymen, is manifestly absurd. Suwarrow's eccentricities enter largely into all the narratives of his career, but we can hardly find space for his personal portrait, or for those traits of character which properly belong to biography. In height he barely exceeded five feet, he was miserably [illegible] had a large mouth, a wrinkled forehead, and [illegible] patches of grey hair on his head. His contempt of dress could only be equalled by his disregard of every form of politeness, and some idea may be formed of both from the fact, that he was [illegible] in the morning by several buckets of cold water thrown over him, and that he often drilled his troops in his shirt sleeves, with his stockings hanging down about his heels; like his men also, he practised dispensing with the use of a pocket handkerchief. His favourite signal of attack was a shrill cock-crow: 'To-morrow morning,' said he, previous to the storming of Ismail, 'I mean to be up at three before daybreak, I shall then dress and wash myself, then say my prayers, then give one loud cock-crow, and capture Ismail.' His despatches announcing victory were equally singular, and were generally in doggrel rhyme. One of these, from the campaign of 1773, is literally rendered thus. It was addressed to Prince Romanzoff:—

'Glory to God—glory to thee,
Tourtakaye's taken and taken by me!'

The most remarkable points in his character as a soldier were his contempt of strategy, and his devoted courage: his motto was 'Forward and strike,' 'Nothing to be thought of but the offensive—quick marches—energy in attack—the bayonet is steel.' With these qualities he won the heart of his soldiers, and obtained his great victories over the Poles and Turks. They were unsuited, however, to the atmosphere of a court, and after the death of Catharine, Suwarrow disgusted her successor, Paul I., and retired to his estate of Kinburnschansk, where he remained till 1799. The desire of his heart to take a command against the French was then gratified, and he was sent into Italy at the head of 30,000 Russians, to co-operate with the archduke Charles of Austria. No exigency or respect of persons could induce this stalwart old kern to alter his principles: asked for his plan by the emperor, he protested he had none, or, if he had, that he should not disclose them: pressed with propositions for defensive operations, he would not hear of them; 'Tell my lord, the prince, that I know nothing of the defensive; I can only attack. I shall advance when it seems good to me to [illegible]

n I do, I shall not stop in Switzerll go, according to my orders, into até. Tell him that at Vienna I am ut that here I am at least his equal.
marshal, so am I; he serves a great lo I; he commands an army, so do I;
and I am old. I have acquired expe-cessive victories, and I receive neither dvice from any one: I trust alone in sword.' It is not surprising that he l by Massena at Zurich, and that a us conducted against the generals of ar of Napoleon, should have had an y termination, yet Suwarrow was
y moment, unworthy of his laurels.
ngth ordered to return, and died, nee emperor, at St. Petersburgh, May
[E.R.]

ENRIETTA. See COLIGNI.

DE, archbishop of Embrun, 1250-71.

J., a Dutch chemist, 1774-1826.

ERDAM, JEAN, a celebrated anatomist
gist, was born at Amsterdam in 1637.
680. His father was an apothecary, d a collection of objects in natural gaged while a mere boy in cleaning
this museum, the young Swammerquired a taste for the study of nature, an especial lover of entomology. He cine at Leyden, and took his degree
. He prosecuted his anatomical re-great zeal and success, and was the er the art of injecting the arteries and has proved of such use in dissections.
ack of a quartan ague obliged him to studies for a time, and upon his recoquished his human anatomy, and de-almost entirely to that of insects. In ished his 'General History of Insects,' attempts a classification of them, aceir structure and the metamorphoses
. From this work he acquired great ut in consequence of over-exertion in ealth gave way. He fell soon after-an extremely hypochondriacal state, ng even to answer a question addressed
t length became unfit for entering into this sad state of mind he was struck liar tenets of an extraordinary woman
, Antoinette Bourignon, and soon bed into the depths of her mystical defancied that he would offend the Deity
g his anatomical pursuits, and throw-scalpel, he followed his fanatical leader
He returned some time afterwards to but his mortifications and mystical reduced him to the state of a living n one of his fits of melancholy, he e manuscripts he could lay his hands rtunately some time previous to this, means had compelled him to sell a em, which ultimately coming into the erhaave, were published by him many he unfortunate author's death. [W.B.]

VELT, HERMANN, called Hermann of ch landscape painter, 1620-1690.

, OLAUS, an excellent botanist, was born
g in Sweden, in 1760. He died in 1817.
of eighteen he was sent to study at the university of Upsal, and attended the lectures of the younger Linnæus. Soon becoming his own master he devoted himself to travel and collecting plants. While only twenty-three he undertook at his own expense a voyage to the West Indies and South America. He explored the botany of Jamaica, St. Domingo, and the other islands; and after visiting the coast of America returned to Europe by way of England. In London he made the acquaintance of Sir Joseph Banks, Sir Hans Sloane, &c., and returned to his native country with great acquisitions in both knowledge and collections. He was soon afterwards elected a member of the Academy of Stockholm, and the year after made its president. He was called to the chair of botany at the medico-chirurgical institution of that town, and was decorated by his sovereign with the orders of Vasa and the Polar Star. He taught botany with much success at Stockholm, and continued a great upholder of the Linnæan system. He established many new genera of plants; described with clearness and conciseness an immense number of species: and paid particular attention to cryptogamic botany. Schreber has called a genus of plants after him, Schwartzia. [W.B.]

SVEDBERG, or SWEDBERG, JESPER, bishop of Skara in Westrogothia, was born on his father's estate near Fahlun in Sweden, 1653, and was many years chaplain in a regiment of cavalry, and superintendent of the Swedish mission established in England and America. He was raised to the see of Skara in 1702 by Charles XII., and three years later became doctor of theology at Upsala. In 1719 the family was ennobled, and the name of Swedenborg adopted by his son, Emanuel, as mentioned in the following article. Bishop Swedberg was a great writer, and among the fruits of his pen is an autobiography still in MSS. His children are the subjects of some curious notices, among which occurs the following:—'I have kept my sons to that profession to which God has given them inclination and liking; and I have not brought up one to the clerical office, although many parents do this inconsiderately and in a manner not justifiable, by which the Christian Church, and also the clerical order, suffer not a little, and is brought into contempt. I have never had my daughters in Stockholm, where many reside in order to learn fine manners, but where also they learn much that is worldly and injurious to the soul.' This good old man died in 1735. [E.R.]

SWEDENBORG, EMANUEL, in an eminent sense The Philosopher of Christianity, was born at Stockholm, 29th January, 1688. His parentage is shown in the preceding article, and as the events of his life were few and simple, we shall here limit ourselves to a sketch of his literary career, and a justification of the above title. In 1709 Emanuel Swedberg, afterwards Swedenborg, completed his education at the university of Upsala, and published his academical dissertation, consisting of moral sentences from the writings of Seneca, Publius Syrus, and others, illustrated with notes from the old Latin authors. From 1710 to 1714 he was journeying abroad, according to the custom in those days, sometimes writing heroic verses, epigrams, or love pieces in the Latin tongue to relieve his toils at the various seats of learning that he visited. In 1716 he commenced the publication of papers on the mathematics and physical sciences in his 'Dædalus Hyperboreus,' and was received into public employment as the colleague of the famous Count Polheim; soon afterwards he was appointed assessor in the Metallic College by Charles XII., who honoured him with his personal friendship. In 1718, besides continuing the 'Dædalus,' Swedberg published a work on algebra, which included, among the higher rules of mathematics, the integral and differential calculus: the year following he assumed the style of nobility by favour of Queen Ulrica Eleonora, and from that period had a seat with the nobles of the equestrian order in the triennial assemblies of the states. From 1719 to 1722, his professional avocations introduced him to the study of the fusibility and structure of metals, and, gradually, to the geometrical principles of chemistry, for the further study of which, and the knowledge of mines, he journeyed some fifteen months through the German states. The titles of his works in this period indicate very clearly the progress of the Thinker proceeding steadily through the physical sciences towards a philosophy of nature: the chief of them are 'Arguments derived from Appearances in Sweden in Favour of the Depth of the Waters, and Greater Tides of the Sea in the Ancient World;' 'Specimens of a Work on the Principles of Chemistry;' 'Observations on Iron and the Elementary Nature of Fire;' and 'Miscellaneous Observations about Natural Things, especially Minerals, Fire, and the Strata of Mountains.' In 1734 he completed one stage of this onward march by publishing his 'Principia,' contained in the first of three folio volumes, which were issued at Dresden and Leipzig at the expense of the duke of Brunswick, and to publish which, Swedenborg undertook another journey. This work explains the production and nature of the elements, the formation and laws of the solar vortex, and the sublime analogy between the starry heavens and the magnetic sphere, it will be found to ante-date many important discoveries, especially in the co-relation of magnetism, electricity, light, gravitation, and all the physical forces; while the practical part on mineralogy has been pronounced, in Cramer's 'Art of Assaying Metals,' 'magnificent and laborious.' While this work was passing through the press, its author made the acquaintance of Wolff's Ontology, and having found that his own theory of the elementary world agreed with it, his ambition took wing, and he resolved to try the experiment of applying his principles to the deep subjects glanced at by that philosophy. His prompt reasoning flashed through all difficulties like a sabre-cut—nature is all mechanism—the soul is in nature—these principles of his, with Wolff's seal on them, are the exponents of nature—why, then, not demonstrate the nature of the soul with as much precision as that of the elementary world? With Swedenborg to think was to do; hence arose his Philosophy of the Infinite, a 'Prodromus,' as he calls it, written immediately after the perusal of Wolff in 1734: in strict relation with all that preceded it, this little work was but a plank thrown across the gulf which separated one field of thought from another,—it carried Swedenborg from the dead mechanics of metals and elements to the living. Treating of the soul had set him thinking about the body; he is curio[illegible] know what the learned are doing—whether [illegible] have found the same key as himself; now, t[illegible] fore, he buries himself for a few days in th[illegible] rary at Dresden, reads the 'Bibliothèque Itali[illegible] which contains an account of the learned m[illegible] the day, and finds to his extreme satisfacti[illegible] new and wide field open before him. [illegible] learned men are divided into parties—some a[illegible] ing and others denying the animation of the [illegible] others, again, with the microscope searchin[illegible] body through and through to decide these con[illegible] It is the same with the question of the a[illegible] constitution of the blood—the existence o[illegible] animal spirit in the nerves—the growth o[illegible] embryo in the womb—the cause of the circul[illegible] and all the kindred topics. Ruysch, Bianchi, [illegible] wenhoeck, Borelli, Lancisi, Morgagni, Malp[illegible] are here with all the treasures of art and lea[illegible] with anatomical preparations and models o[illegible] human frame hardly equalled by anything i[illegible] our own times, and finally, with the doctrines o[illegible] metry and analogy already pressed into the ser[illegible] Discovery and art had anticipated all the re[illegible] ments of the philosopher. It was only for [illegible] to take up the thread of demonstration at a p[illegible] where all confessed that nature was seen to wor[illegible] most distinctly and perfectly. Swedenborg, in short, reverting to his attempted demonstration of the connection between soul and body on mathematical principles, resolved to pursue his inquiry from this fresh plane of induction. Obliged to return for a season to his professional avocations, he carried this high purpose along with him, and in 1736 obtained leave of absence again for the purpose of writing and publishing a great work. Space is not allowed us to follow him step by step, as we might do, in the conception and publication of his works on the 'Animal Kingdom.' Three years were occupied abroad in collecting and digesting his materials, and in 1740 'The Economy of the Animal Kingdom, Considered Anatomically, Physically, and Philosophically,' appeared at Amsterdam, followed in 1744 by 'The Animal Kingdom,' and in 1745 by 'The Worship and Love of God,'—the latter, apart from its philosophy, acknowledged by competent judges for one of the most gorgeous specimens of Latinity in existence. Three works completed the Thinker's second stage; and among the doctrines contained in them are still discoveries of high importance in physiology awaiting an adequate criticism, or courting adoption: such are the author's demonstration of the animation of the brain, and of its coincidence of the ing formation with the systole and diastole of the heart, and after birth with the respiration of the lungs—of the beautiful provision for muscular [illegible] derived from the respiration, exhibiting the fun[illegible] of the lungs in distributing and regulating [illegible] throughout the entire system—of the law of [illegible] and society among the organs—and of many o[illegible] which it would be inconsistent with our [illegible] enumerate, but tending upwards to a rational [illegible] chology. Through the whole of his career up t[illegible] point, Swedenborg's labours had grown, one ta[illegible] of another, like a tree; the goodly proportion[illegible] excellent fruit of which, placed him in the h[illegible] rank of scientific men; he was not yet, how[illegible] the Philosopher of Christianity. In after ye[illegible]

ours as his preparation; and est, are well aware that they
d that their results enter no lations than the words of a ne thoughts of an older one.
5, as he drew near the utmost ophical inquiries concerning clares his eyes were opened hat, warned by a divine ap-ned his uncompleted labours and devoted himself to the e was called. This is a subs in a notice which is neces-nation in matters of fact, but the case of Swedenborg is om that of the visionaries of oursed with spiritual beings.
is is this:—not that he saw he actually lived with them things in the spirit world as ıd only existing here in the
it as an instrument for pubdigesting in a rational form derived from them. It is, ıd value of these conclusions
ne whole weight of his claims the title we have assigned
many Christian philosophers, philosopher of the Christian nstrument of Providence in former, and doing precisely ts of thought that Paul did e, grounded in Judaism or in ay indeed that the systems of ın philosophers have nothing istianity, but they stand, as ns will admit, on ground apart
npt to reconcile religion and been cordially acknowledged er side. Theologians have no system of philosophy has to it, the Christian doctrine
nly pretensions of this nature ıteen weary centuries being ritings of the mystics—more cob Bœhmen, and his eloquent ry, the nonjuring divine, Wilter have become obsolete, not could ever cease to engage for this very sufficient rea-e they embraced had become iculars inconsistent with our things, and the most they alive the spirit of earnest ion of a future great develop-ys been looked for. Sweden-ed, wrote after Newton and rks he was acquainted, and tter informed on the progress
day, and with the richer hare future; step by step all the had hitherto engaged attender his review, and whatever or death in nature, seems to ı as the animals were brought he would call them. Such by Providence to furnish the
th the Christian development
re we will endeavour to state

in what this consists, and in what it does not. Certainly, it is not a mere dialectic, for what, after all, is that, but a logical instrument, fashioned, if possible, to reconcile the self-sufficient reason with faith; and what does the insufficiency of the German schools consist in except this, that the very process of reason by which the understanding and the Word are sought to be reconciled, does but strengthen the former? Besides, the true Christian Philosophy cannot, by the very conditions which call for it, be a bare method: like Christianity itself, it must be a result, and a final one. In this consists the supereminence of the mental philosophy contained in the theological works of Swedenborg. It groups the thoughts round the affections, and it gives the latter a mighty power both to raise and to lower the former, so that the regenerate man, or him whose affections have been purified by the procedure of a pure love through them, is altogether another, even as a reasoning man, for he becomes the little child who has entered into the kingdom of God. This hint of the real nature of Swedenborg's philosophy is all we can here give; and now a word or two on the two great subjects of development in which it is embodied: these are his doctrine of the Bible, and his doctrine of the spiritual world. The former has never been represented by him as an invented allegory, but as a perfectly unique divine symbol, such as the supreme wisdom becomes when it is breathed through the human mind, the self-intelligence meanwhile not interfering with its appropriation of images and figures. Let not these expressions be read carelessly, but deeply pondered, for they will be found to consist with a great law of intercourse between higher and lower intelligences; they point, in short, to the marvellous fact, that the Word is the open gate between the world and heaven, which it links together by a correspondence of thoughts and ideas: this can now be brought to the test of objectiveness through some states of clairvoyance, while its subjective test is open to all who know what Christian experience is. But the statements of Swedenborg concerning the spiritual world, are after all perhaps, the first and greatest difficulty that his readers have to encounter, and even when these are not altogether discredited, the similarity between spiritual and natural things is regarded as offensive. In the first place this similarity is apparent only, and belongs to a superficial acquaintance with his meaning; the real similarity being not that of identity but correspondence, and arising from the universal law that the ideal is nothing, even in things spiritual, till it finds repose and form in the real or substantial. We have already alluded to the preparation of Swedenborg, as consisting in the mathematical discipline of his mind and his acquaintance with the sciences, two distinct courses of which he went through—the elementary, in which all nature is reviewed as a mechanism, even to the intercourse between soul and body, and what we may term the concrete, which views the soul or living form in nature; the one a study of the laws which unite the atomic parts of bodies, from the grain of salt up to the scattered stars of the firmament; the other a study of organization from the least living part of the body, up to the rational soul dwelling in its whole order by influx and correspondence. This double course of preparation, it may now be apprehended, was absolutely necessary if spiritual laws were ever to become subjects of study: and even if we grant, in any case, that Swedenborg has brought them down to a too rigid formula, the form is but the net needful to catch these winged thoughts, or rather, the artist's stationary figure representing his ever living and varying model; the life, the actual motion, cannot be drawn, but only one phasis of it, from which infinite variety and living beauty may be inferred. We hold it no disparagement of Swedenborg, therefore, that when he had arrived at his spiritual manhood, he was still as a child who had never left his mother nature—that his 'umbilical cord was never cut,' as Emerson expresses it: had it been, we should have had another great mystic, another Bœhmen, Bourignon, or Peter Poiret, but we should still have awaited the Newton of the unseen universe. We have not space to substantiate these hints as we could wish, by reviewing ever so briefly the mass of writing to which they apply; yet we cannot conclude without a word or two on the principal of these works. The series commences with the 'Arcana Cœlestia,' published in London from 1749 to 1756. This work, a model of literary method and precision of language, is really the text-book of all that followed it, and is remarkable for the increasing depth of its meaning as we pass from volume to volume. The very heart of its contents, if we may dare trust ourselves to express so much in one sentence, is a psychological disclosure of the struggle between the Divine and the human natures in the experience of the Saviour; and it is in course of this development—sometimes expressed in terms applicable to Him alone, sometimes in the lower phraseology of all Christian experience—that Swedenborg has evolved his philosophy, and established his doctrine of the Word. We may here repeat, therefore, what we have already intimated, that it is in vain to look for either of these in the set terms of a creed; it is a study which frees the mind of all formularies, and the deeper it is pondered, the more confidingly may the spirit take wing in the pure ether: terms, we have indeed, precise and beautifully fashioned forms of thought in these writings, which are as the nests in the branches, to which the tired thoughts will always return for repose and security, and the more gratefully the longer they have been on the wing: anything more than this Swedenborg would be the last among theologians to contemplate. That he speaks as a master is most true, but as one whose constant anxiety it is to place his disciples on the same intellectual footing as himself, to lure them gently on, whether by persuasion or authority, till they may look at the same divine things that he gazed upon, less by prerogative than the constitutional right which belongs to all. In a word, if there is any truth in Swedenborg's revelations at all, their pre-eminent value consists in this, that they unite the understanding and the Word; as the poet attracts the eye and the heart to nature—not by a painted mirage, or a crowd of stilted figures to be taken for it, but by awakening instincts, and touching the chords which really unite them within the human consciousness; they are, therefore, speaking within the bounds of coolest reason, the very complement and last necessity of Protestant freedom, for no church can claim dogmatic au over any man who has once possessed hi

this key to the Scriptures, and no philoso have any dangers for him: all the stronger, fore, becomes the moral authority of the chu
it thus grounds itself in the reason and fre man.—After the Arcana, Swedenborg pu in 1758, a small tract 'Concerning the Las ment and the Destruction of Babylon,'
'On the White Horse of the Apocalypse,'
'On the Earths of our Solar System, and the Earths of the Starry Heavens,' and mary view of his position in theologica entitled 'The New Jerusalem and its H Doctrine:' he added to these, as his labour
year, his account 'Of Heaven and its Wo accompanied with an 'Account of Hell.'
now is that Last Judgment and the De Babylon, manifested, as he says, among spi
1757? Why the announcement of the comm ment of a new age, almost instantly fol
speaking historically, by the earthquake French revolution, the commotion begun by is still spreading from land to land, and thr
to tremble under the feet of many general A question surely not answerable in these d
final judgment upon all things by the con tuous regard hitherto paid to it. Why als may ask, this revelation of the Word coinc
with its publication in all the known langua
the world? That White Horse—what is i the free human spirit, the illuminated underst
ing, proceeding by which, through ages nations, the Eternal Wisdom, as a crowned rior, subdues all that is contrary to its domi
It may be easy to doubt one figure, even admiring its beauty and universality, but wh
this figure take a consistent place in the g epic of the Scriptures and of human history, marches in due order with a thousand o equally grand and universal? We can but these are some of the questions that the rea Swedenborg must be prepared to encounter,
by these glimpses at his meaning we are far intending any eulogy: they are simply des to supply the place of a more elaborate dis tion. Swedenborg continued his developmen the Word and of Spiritual Laws during whole remainder of his life—a period, reck
from 1745, when his spiritual sight comm of twenty-seven years. The principal works lished by him after those mentioned above his 'Doctrine of the Lord,' 'Doctrine of the S Scripture,' Doctrine of Life,' and 'Doctri Faith,' all in 1763; his 'Angelic Wisdom
cerning Divine Love and Wisdom,' and 'Co
ing Divine Providence,' in 1763 and 1764
'Apocalypse Revealed,' 1766; 'The Delig
Wisdom concerning Conjugal Love,' 176
'The True Christian Religion,' 1771. N
these works were published in his own co
where the press was not free, but in Lon Amsterdam; for this reason he made journeys backwards and forwards, which w
only changes that marked his external life whole period. He died in London, in the fifth year of his age, 29th March, 1772.

SWEERT, E., a Dutch botanist, 17th cen

SWEERT, F., a Flemish historian, 1567-

N, G., a Dutch physician, 1700-1772.
DEANE, grandson of Godwin Swift,
e uncles of the celebrated writer (next
d a descendant by the mother's side
al Dean, a naval commander of Crom-
; author of an Essay upon the Life, nd Character of Dr. Jonathan Swift; His son, THEOPHILUS, a miscel-er, died 1815.

JONATHAN, though Irish by birth, was escent. His grandfather was a clergyefordshire, and married a cousin of the n; his father, who was steward of the f court, died very poor in 1667; and as born at Dublin in November of the
The widow was thrown for support on tions, by whom her son was educated
l of Kilkenny, and at Trinity College, was a careless student, and irregular in Even then, however, he had worked ion as a satirist, having sketched the
'ub' before he came across to England.
ion, occurring in 1688, opens the first tages in the career of this singular and an. While he was always a polemic, strongest in satire, the opinions which
d, and the victims whom he attacked, ifferent in the different periods of his uring the first of these periods, extend-is twenty-first year to his forty-third, alous Whig; for three years more he d in supporting the politics and party ish Tories; and in his third epoch, the most creditable of all, and reaching ty-sixth year to his sixty-ninth, his chiefly directed, always earnestly lways wisely, towards improving the d condition of Ireland. The closing long life, lasting nine years, was inactivity, enforced by the decay of
-On coming to England, Swift was he family of the accomplished Sir
e, whose wife was a kinswoman of uring this first residence at Moor
d hard, acted as secretary of his
a favourite of William III., and g's offer to give him a troop of e Pindaric odes, which, being n acquiescence in the unpalatable
d to him by Dryden: 'Cousin ver be a poet.' But his practice aking, was useful in training him
n of those comic and satirical ugh they want all the elements
so much in his characteristic t vigour of diction, as to be is works, and the most curious me. In 1694, having become patron, he crossed to Ireland,
t to be a country pastor in yment of a hundred a-year.
t was only a feint; perhaps mistake. On receiving a emple, he benevolently ob-his living to a poor curate nd returned to Moor Park ady begun his course of coming to a breach with
He now began his tutor-

ship and admiration of the unfortunate 'Stella,' who was a Miss Johnson, the daughter of Sir William Temple's steward, and then no more than thirteen or fourteen years old. During his second residence at Moor Park, he was led by his patron's share in the controversy between Bentley and Boyle, to write his 'Battle of the Books;' and probably the 'Tale of a Tub' also was now completed. These early works, while they fly at game higher than his political satires, are as characteristic as anything he ever wrote; and they are as full of talent, though not so well fitted for popularity, as the satirical romance which is his masterpiece. As a writer of plain, pure, vigorous, idiomatic English, Swift has no equal; and he has hardly any superior as a satirist, uniting extraordinary force with extraordinary humour, tremendously powerful in invective, and yet more formidable for the biting dexterity with which he wields the lash of irony. In reading his works we are never allowed to forget that he was ill-tempered, nor to suspect that, notwithstanding some good points, he was essentially bad-hearted and selfish; but we are impressed by his strength even when he uses it in defence of error, and diverted by his wit even when it plays on things true and sacred. The intellectual characteristics of his writings were equally prominent in his conversation: when in good humour he was a marvellous talker, full of lively anecdote and jest; and he was always ready to throw back a stinging retort on an adversary. On Sir William Temple's death in 1699, Swift edited his posthumous works in London, and then accompanied Lord Berkeley, who was sent to Ireland. Misunderstandings occurred as usual; but, on his patron's recall next year, Swift was left in possession of livings yielding nearly four hundred a-year.

[Laracor Church.]

He took up his abode at his vicarage of Laracor, in the county of Meath, made himself beloved for the charitable disposition which was one of his redeeming virtues, and discharged his duties as a parish clergyman with all the assiduity allowed by visits to England. These, however, took place every year, and sometimes lasted for several months. In 1704 the 'Tale of a Tub' and 'Battle of the Books' were published together, and, though anonymous, were attributed by the public to the right author. The former of the two was generally disliked by the clergy; and it was used as the means of infusing into the mind of Queen Anne an aversion to Swift, which made it impossible for his friends in the ministry to gratify his eager desire for ecclesiastical preferment in England. The effect was not removed, either by his serious and manly 'Project for the Advancement of Religion,' or by the fine irony exhibited in the very title of 'An Argument to Prove that the Abolishing of Christianity in England may, as things now stand, be attended with some Inconveniences.' As early as 1708, when the latter of these pieces appeared, Swift was edging off from his political party. A real dissent from their opinions was indicated in more than one of those occasional pamphlets of his, which cannot here be so much as named. He was a vehement high churchman, and wrote against all relaxation of tests. In other points, such as his advocacy of annual parliaments, his doctrines would now make him be classed as a Radical. But his chief reasons for dissatisfaction with the Whigs themselves were two. They wounded his self-love by resisting demands of the Irish clergy, who had chosen Swift as their organ; and, above all, they could not, or would not, make him a bishop.—In the autumn of 1710, when the Tories had just come into power, a second mission from the Irish prelates introduced him familiarly to Harley and St. John: Godolphin, the Whig leader, treated him haughtily: and he enlisted in the cause of the new ministry with an envenomed alacrity. The most valuable service he rendered them was performed in the seven months ending in June, 1711, during which he wrote 'The Examiner.' Later in the same year he assisted the negotiations for peace by his tract 'The Conduct of the Allies:' and, the discreditable treaty of Utrecht having been concluded, his defence of it grew into the 'History of the Four Last Years of the Queen.' Still his new friends contented themselves, even more than the old, with rewarding him by flattering attentions. He proudly refused to be Harley's chaplain: and the minister, though he must have seen that he was hardly a safe man for the episcopal bench, made the attempt to raise him. But the royal obstinacy proved insurmountable. As a last resource, the deanery of St. Patrick's Cathedral, in Dublin, was secured for Swift in the spring of 1713: and, accepting this fairly lucrative appointment as a sentence of exile, he departed, resolving, as he says in one of those bitter letters which are among the most vigorous of his compositions, to forget everything in England, and never see it again, 'if they have no further service for me.' He was speedily recalled to write one or two pamphlets, and to see the displacement of the Tories on the accession of George I. He then returned to Ireland, and ceased to have any concern in English politics.—Soon after 1714, when his residence was fixed in Dublin, he became involved, further than the world was allowed to suspect, in troubles arising out of his strange and unmanly flirtations. Stella, under the protection of a widowed lady, had come to live near him on his settlement at Laracor: and she now removed to Dublin, where she unexpectedly found a rival. This was Miss Vanhomrigh, the 'Vanessa' of Swift's verses, who had become acquainted with him in London much in the same way as Miss Johnson, and who now with her sister followed him to Dublin. Stella's jealousy caused scenes, which the Dean thought to termi marrying her secretly in 1716. The pa never more than friends, before the mar after it; a state of affairs for which reasons have conjecturally been assigned. in 1723, Vanessa chose to write to Ste manding explanations; and Stella exhibi letter to Swift. He rode off with it in a pa of rage, presented himself to Vanessa, thre her table, and departed without saying The shock killed her in a few weeks. his other victim long survive. He was away from his last visit to England, in the 1727, to attend her on her deathbed. meantime he had continued to write w usual frequency. In 1726 he lived with his villa at Twickenham, and contributed first draught of 'Martinus Scriblerus:' an also, he published the bitterest, most ing and most amusing of all satires on human the 'Travels of Lemuel Gulliver.' Lillip Brobdignag will always preserve the na Dean Swift. Nor was any practical occasi trifling to call forth his cynical wit: he new stronger than in his 'Polite Conversation his mock 'Directions to Servants.' Irish however, were now his chief object; an interests of the nation were embraced with zeal, which, in its denunciations of wrong flicted by England, forgot all distinctio political party. The 'Drapier's Letters,' lished in 1723, to expose a patent grant copper coinage in Ireland, raised Swift, wh one hesitated to hold as the writer, to the a of a popularity, which was augmented by many acts of private kindness, and by an saint series of masked attacks on the govern and on prevalent abuses. Some of the best Dean's pamphlets are dressed in his fav ironical garb. One of them is a plan for off the national debt, by the very simple proc confiscating and selling the church lands. another, he offers at once to increase capit Ireland, and to diminish the surplus popula the little children are to be carefully fattened sold to the London butchers: the plan is re mended by a grave array of statistical cal tions; and objections are answered in a man the most tremendous sarcasms on Irish misery English misgovernment. That Swift's en was unabated in 1735, when he was in his e eighth year, is proved by one of his best rhy pieces, 'The Legion Club,' a libel on the House of Commons, who had resisted claim the clergy. But his last public efforts were m in the same cause, during the succeeding yea Giddiness, and other symptoms, had long tended danger. His memory now began to and terror of worse evils made him miserable, the other powers gave way likewise. After hav lingered for three years in peaceful idiocy, he of hydrocephalus in October, 1745. He queathed his property, amounting to al £10,000, for the formation of an hospital in D lin for lunatics and idiots. [W.

SWINBURNE, H., a civilian, died 1624.

SWINBURNE, Henry, the descendant of ancient Roman Catholic family, known as iter of Narratives of his Travels in wo Sicilies, died in Trinidad 1803.

JOHN HENRY VAN, a learned , professor of philosophy, logic, at Franeker, and of astronomy at 6-1823.

OBIAS, rector of Cuxton, in Kent, k strangely entitled, an 'Inquiry and Place of Hell,' died 1720.

G., a rector of Buckinghamshire, en and Hell Epitomised,' d. 1673.

OHN, chaplain to the English fac-, author of papers on Etruscan, Eastern Antiquities, and a con-niversal History, 1703-1777.

., an Eng. horticulturist, last cent.

J., a Flemish painter, 1625-1703.

, CHARLES WILLIAM POULETT, f the earl of Durham as governor-ia, was born in London 1793, and ercantile business of his father, pson, till 1830. Four years pre-become a member of parliament, Whig administration was formed, s vice-president of the board of rer of the navy. In 1834 he be-of that board, and in 1839 was e government of Canada, having raised to the peerage. He was by a fall from his horse, 1841.

, FLOYER, an Oxford scholar and ato, whose death, through indi-isonment for debt in 1788, gave ry Fund.

, THOMAS, M.D., a distinguished seventeenth century, and some-English Hippocrates, was born in rd Eagle, Dorsetshire, where his een settled for many generations. er is known of the history of his it may be concluded from the family that his early education was cted; but we find that in 1642, at een, he entered Oxford as a com-len Hall. His stay there, however, een of long duration, for he shortly ably in that very year, joined the ament, in which two of his brothers ng—William, who attained to the l, and was ultimately governor of t; and Francis, who was a major was killed in 1644. How long am, who is only known to posterity inent physician of his time, con-a soldier, or what exploits he per-capacity, are points which it is to ascertain, but he himself speaks areer as having extended to several nos; and Sir Richard Blackmore s a 'disbanded officer who entered of medicine for a maintenance and paratory learning.' He seems to Oxford in 1646, where he acquired All Souls, and he graduated there . (Bachelor of Medicine). When ndon is unknown, but he was cer-re 1661, as he describes the epi-ar. In 1663 he became a licentiate Physicians, and in 1666 he pub-lished his first medical work, which he entitled Methodus Curandi Febres. In 1676 he took the degree of M.D. (Doctor of Medicine) at Cambridge, though not otherwise connected with that university, and in this year the first edition of his Observationes Medicæ appeared. In 1680 the first edition of the Epistolæ Responsariæ was published, and in 1683 the Tractatus de Podagra et Hydrope; and in 1685, the collected edition of his works known as the Opera Universa. Sydenham had been long afflicted by gout, which at length undermined his constitution, and he died of that distemper, combined with other maladies, at London on the 29th of December, 1689, in the sixty-fifth year of his age. [J.M'C.]

SYDNEY, ALGERNON, the second son of Robert, earl of Leicester, was born about the year 1621. In early youth he fought in the ranks of the parliamentary forces. Whatever sentiments influenced many of the other opponents of Charles I., his opinions, founded on the spirit of Roman republicanism, were inimical to all monarchy, and he proved them in his disgust at the ascendancy of Cromwell. He was abroad at the time of the restoration, and wandered about for some years scattering bitter sarcasms around against the objects of his political enmity. He was haughty and imperious in his own nature, and seems by no means to have courted the literary and social distinction which his genius might have achieved. His 'Discourses concerning Government,' was a posthumous work. It is full of powerful rhetorical arguments—as when in answer to the proposition of Salmasius, that kingly government is typed in the superiority of one kind of animal over another, he answers that this is nothing but the superiority of brutish violence and injustice, and that the type, 'Though it should prove to be in all respects adequate to the matter in question, could only show, that those who have no sense of right, reason, or religion, have a natural propensity to make use of their strength to the destruction of such as are weaker than they—and not that any are willing to submit, or not to resist it if they can—which I think will be of no great advantage to monarchy.' He was permitted to return to England in 1677. Though he had probably deeper ultimate views, his connection with the Ryehouse plot, for which he suffered, was the same substantially as that of Lord William Russell, already referred to. Sydney met his fate with iron firmness, and was beheaded on the 7th of December, 1683. [J.H.B.]

SYEN, ARNOLD, a Dutch botanist, 1604-1667.

SYKES, ARTHUR ASHLEY, a dignitary of the Church of England, and partizan of Hoadley in the famous Bangorian controversy, 1684–1756.

SYLBURG, F., a German philologist, 1536-96.

SYLLA, LUCIUS CORNELIUS, whose bloody proscriptions have passed into a proverb, was descended from a branch of the famous Cornelian family. He became quæstor when about thirty years of age, B.C. 107, and after obtaining military renown under Marius in Africa, became chief of the aristocratic party in the social war, and vanquished his old companion-in-arms in Italy; he was then, B.C. 88, elected consul. Sylla had marched to his victory over Marius from the field of battle in which Mithridates had succumbed to him, and the latter having renewed the war, he led another expedition against him B.C. 87. The success to which he had now become accustomed still attended the arms of Sylla, and his operations were one long series of victories, often, however, dearly bought; it was in these wars that he captured Athens, and the victory was such a fearful one that the blood is said to have run out from the city gates into the fields; the most splendid monuments of Athenian art were also doomed to destruction. While these events were taking place in the East, Marius and his party had recovered the dictatorship in Rome, and Sylla, hastily returning at the head of his victorious legions, gained a second great victory over the Plebeians, and entered Rome in triumph in the year 82. He was now absolute master of the lives, liberties, and property of the citizens of Rome, and he used his power as the head of an unprincipled faction, cradled in the blood and crimes of the expiring republic, may be supposed to have done. Sylla governed under the title of perpetual dictator, and strenuously applied himself to the reconstruction of the aristocratic constitution. His contempt for the people may be judged from the instance in which he addressed an assembly of them, on occasion of certain complaints reaching him: he recited this apologue:—'A labourer when at plough was annoyed by vermin, and he twice stopped from his work and pulled them off his jacket. But finding himself bitten again, to spare himself any further trouble, he threw the jacket into the fire. Now I advise those whom I have twice conquered, not to oblige me, a third time, to try the fire.' The wholesale nature of his confiscations may be judged from the number of his soldiers, namely, 115,000 men, whom he rewarded with settlements in Italy; finally, he enfranchised 10,000 slaves to increase the number of his partizans, and enrolled them among the free citizens. In a manner as extraordinary, he abdicated all power, B.C. 79, chiefly, we may presume, from his subsequent conduct, that he might exchange the cares of state for the licentiousness of private life. This fact is a sufficient answer, one might suppose, to all that can be urged in behalf of his desire for the public good. No man who is unprincipled and licentious in private life, can deserve credit for any real virtue in his public acts. Sylla died of a disgusting malady B.C. 77, having previously written his 'Memoirs.' [E.R.]

SYLVESTER, or SILVESTER, first of the name pope and saint of Rome, reigned 314-323. The second, who was one of the most extraordinary men of his age as an astronomer, mathematician, and man of practical science, succeeded Gregory V. 999, and died 1003. Some of his writings are extant. The third Sylvester was an anti up in 1044.

SYLVESTER, JOSHUA, one of our infer translator of Du Bartas's 'Divine We Works,' born in London 1563, died 1618.

SYLVESTER, MATTHEW, a Church land minister, ejected for nonconformity,

SYLVIUS, F., a French grammarian,

SYLVIUS, FRANCIS DELABOE or D Dutch physiologist and chemist, 1614-167

SYLVIUS, LAMBERT, otherwise Bosch, a Dutch biographer and poet, 161

SYMES, MICHAEL, an English officer Indian diplomatist, author of an 'Embas Kingdom of Ava,' died 1809.

SYMMACHUS, a pope of Rome, 498-

SYMMACHUS, QUINTUS AURELIUS fect, pontiff, and augur of Rome in its age, remarkable for his eloquent appeal the ruin threatened by the triumph of Chri he is the author of 'Epistles' still extant, came consul under Theodosius in 391.

scendant, QUINTUS AURELIUS MEMMIU senator in the time of Odoacer 485, and to death by Theodoric 525.

SYMMACHUS THE SAMARITAN, a Christian of the sect of Ebionites, 2d cent

SYMMONS, CHARLES, a dramatic wr friend of literature, b. at Cardigan 1749. His daughter, CAROLINE, a poetess, 1788

SYNCELLUS, GEORGE, a monk of C tinople, author of a Chronography, which an account of Egyptian kings, and corr Chronicon of Eusebius, died 800.

SYNESIUS, a bishop of Ptolemais, i in the 5th century, who had the advan pursuing his philosophical studies under Author of Epistles and other writings.

SYNGE, E., an Irish prelate, 1659-174

SYPHAX, kg. of Western Numidia, d.

SYRIANUS, a philosopher of the s Neoplatonists at Athens, died 450.

SYROPULUS, SILVESTER, a Greek astic, historian of the Council of Florence, SYRUS. See PUBLIUS.

SZALKAI, ANTHONY, a Hungarian p dramatic author, author of the first regular composed in his native tongue, died 1804.

SZEGEDI, JOHN BAPTIST, a learned rian Jesuit, historian, and jurist, 1699-179

SZENT-MARTONIY, IGNATIUS, a Jes astronomer of Portugal, who suffered a l prisonment on the suppression of his order country, 1718-1793.

SZTARAY, ANTONY, Count De, an A general, opposed to Dumouriez, period French revolution, died 1808.

T

TABARI, an Arabian historian, 839-925.

TABARRANI, PIETRO, an Italian physician, and author of Anatomical Observations, 1702-79.

TABERNÆMONTANUS, JAMES THEODORE, a German physician and botanist, 1520-1588.

TABOR, J. O., a Ger. jurisconsult, 1604-1674.

TABOUET, J., a French historian, 17th cent.

TABOUROT, S., a French poet, 1547-1590.

TACCA, P. J., an Italian sculptor, died

TACCOLI, N., an Italian historian, 169

TACHARD, GUY, a French Jesuit, know missionary to Siam and India from 1680 to

TACITUS (CAIUS CORNELIUS), the historian. Tacitus was probably born in the of Nero, but neither the place nor the exact of his birth is known. It appears from a

er Pliny, who was born A.D. 61, that is about the same age with himself, but er; he may, therefore, have been born in r 59. His parentage is veiled in the [Tacitus—From an Antique Gem.]

urity; but it is not improbable that his Cornelius Tacitus, a Roman knight, ntioned by Pliny as a procurator of the Belgic Gaul. We thus know nothing ing which he underwent in youth, pre-the literary labours which he afterbly performed. He has himself recorded illustrative of his career after he had e age of manhood; and these form the ntic history of his life. He owed his tion to Vespasian, and was indebted for ours to his sons and successors, Titus tian. In A.D. 77 C. Julius Agricola, en consul, betrothed to him his daughter, married in the following year. He was en commissioners appointed to super-celebration of the secular games in A.D.
d in the same year the office of prætor.
t in Rome when his father-in-law died 93, nor does he state the reason of his
In A.D. 97 he was elected consul to place of Virginius Rufus, who died dur-r of office; and pronounced over the he funeral oration. In A.D. 99 he was y the senate, along with Pliny, to con-osecution of Marius, proconsul of Africa, peached for malversation in his pro-on the testimony of his associate and e a most eloquent and dignified reply ments advanced in defence of the ace time of his death is unknown; but it s be inferred that he survived Trajan,
.D. 117. The extant works of Tacitus Life of Agricola, his father-in-law; 2. A the Manners and Customs of the Ger-Histories; 4. Annals; 5. Dialogue on the Causes of the Decline of Eloquence.
Agricola is one of the earliest works of l must have been written after the death
n B.C. 96. It has been much and justly a specimen of Biography; and is cerffectionate tribute to the memory of an strator and a good man. His descrip-ient Germany and its people is not of
as an historical document, though there le doubt that it contains the hearsay hich were prevalent in the age of the author. The histories, of which only the first four books and a part of the fifth are extant, comprehended the period from the accession of Galba (A.D. 68) to the death of Domitian (A.D. 96). The Annals comprised the period from the death of Augustus (A.D. 14) to the death of Nero (A.D. 68). Of these a part of the fifth book is lost, and also the seventh, eighth, ninth, tenth, the beginning of the elventh, and the end of the sixteenth, which is the last. The style of Tacitus is concise, vigorous, and expressive; occasionally obscured by elaborate condensation, but always such as to impress the reader with a high opinion of the reflective powers of the writer. [G.F.]

TACITUS, MARCUS CLAUDIUS, successor of Aurelian as emperor of Rome 275, died 276.

TACQUET, A., a Flem. mathemat., 1611-1707.

TADJ-EDDYN, an Arabian historian, d. 1275.

TAFFI, A., an Italian artist, 1213-1294.

TAFURI, J. B., an Ital. biographer, 1695-1760.

TAGLIACOZIO, TAGLIACOZZI, or TAGLIACOTIUS, GASPAR, an Italian surgeon, famous for his method of curing wounds of the lips and nose, 1556-1599.

TAHUREAU, J., a French poet, 1527-1555.

TAILLASSON, JOHN JOSEPH, a French painter and writer on art, 1746-1809.

TAILLE, J. DE LA, a French poet, dramatist, and historian, 1540-1595. His brother, JAMES, a poet and author of several tragedies, 1542-1562.

TAILLEPIED, NOEL, a French biographer, antiquarian, and historian of the Druids, 1540-89.

TAISAUD, P., a French jurist, 1644-1715.

TAI-TSOU, emperor of China, 951-954.

TAIE-TSOUNG, emperor of China, 977-997.

TALBERT, F. X., a French priest, 1728-1803.

TALBOT, CHARLES, successively earl and duke of Shrewsbury, descended from the famous warrior of that name (next article), was born in 1660. He held the office of lord chamberlain to James II., but actively promoted the revolution of 1688, and became viceroy of Ireland and lord treasurer, d. 1717.

TALBOT, JOHN, earl of Shrewsbury, called 'The English Achilles,' renowned in the French wars, was the second son of Richard, Lord Talbot, and was born at Blechmore, in Shropshire, 1373. Shakspeare calls him 'The Terror of France' with historical correctness, his name at the time having really become proverbial in that country. The history of Talbot commences with his call to parliament by Henry IV., after which, in 1412, he was appointed lord justice in Ireland, and in 1414 lord-lieutenant. He first went to France in the reign of Henry V., 1420, and nine years later, under the regent Bedford, his exploits had rendered his name a word of terror. At this time, however, the Maid of Orleans (see JOAN OF ARC) turned the fortunes of war against him, and Talbot became the prisoner of Charles VII. from 1429 to 1432, when he recovered his liberty by ransom. Under date 1433, the French chronicler, Monstrelet, informs us how 'Messire Jean de Thallebot' came into France, where he conquered many cities and fortresses; on this occasion, in fact, he reasserted the English dominion in that country, and for his services was created marshal of the kingdom; at a later period, 1442, the earldom of Shrewsbury was conferred on him. We next hear of him in an embassage for peace 1443, and then,

1446, in his old lieutenancy in Ireland,—our affairs in France meanwhile going to ruin. In 1449 we read in old Monstrelet's annals, how valiantly he led three hundred men to the assault of Rouen, and planted the English flag on the battlements. He seems then to have returned to England again, and in 1451 went back to Aquitaine as lieutenant-general with extraordinary powers: once more he led the 'noble English' to victory, and, at the head of less than five thousand combatants, recovered Guienne, aided, indeed, by the treason of Lesparre and others. Twice did Charles, and twice did Talbot, recover Bourdeaux,—the latter, on the first of these occasions, becoming prisoner, when he was treated with great courtesy on account of his valour, and presented by Charles with gifts of horses and gold and silver. In 1453 he marched to the relief of Castillon, then besieged by the French, and was killed by a cannon ball in the eightieth year of his age; one of his sons also fell with him on the field of battle, and the English, no longer sustained by his heroic arm, were soon after expelled from France. [E.R.]

TALBOT, P., an Irish Jesuit, 1620-1680.

TALBOT, R., an English antiquary, died 1558.

TALBOT, WILLIAM, successively bishop of Oxford, Salisbury, and Durham, 1659-1730. His son, CHARLES, Lord Talbot, brought up to the bar, was born 1684. In 1719 he entered parliament, became solicitor-general in 1726, and lord chancellor in 1733; died 1737. CATHERINE, only child of Edward, his second son, author of several elegantly written works, 1720-1770.

TALFOURD, THOMAS NOON, the author of 'Ion,' was born at Reading in 1795. He was educated there at the Dissenters' grammar school, and instructed in classical literature by Dr. Valpy. In 1821 he was called to the bar, and first wore the serjeant's gown in 1833. Two years later Serjeant Talfourd became a member of parliament, and published his famous tragedy, followed at intervals by 'The Athenian Captive,' 'Glencoe,' and the 'Castilian.' In 1849 he was appointed a judge of the Common Pleas, and was on the bench at Stafford, apparently in good health, when he suddenly breathed his last on the 20th March, 1854. 'Ion' is acknowledged to be a fine classical production, abounding in passages of remarkable beauty. The character of Talfourd also was well worthy of his literary fame; perhaps no man was more beloved in his own circle for kindness of heart, and all the virtues of social intercourse. His prose works are a 'Life of Charles Lamb,' Vacation Rambles,' and a biography of MRS. Radcliffe.

TALIESIN, otherwise PEN BIERDD, which signifies 'chief of the bards,' one of the most ancient British or Welch poets, between 520 and 570.

TALLART, CAMILLE D'HOSTUN, Duc De, a Fr. marshal, defeated by Marlborough, 1652-1728.

TALLENTS, F., a nonconf. divine, 1619-1708.

TALLEYRAND, a younger branch of the family of the counts of Perigord, the first of whom known to history was HELIE DE TALLEYRAND, who lived about 1100. After him we find HELIE DE TALLEYRAND PERIGORD, an influential cardinal and statesman, 1301-1364. H. DE TALLEYRAND, count of Chalais, minister and favourite of Louis XIII., who was out-generaled by Richelieu, and perished on the scaffold 1626. ALBERT ANGELIQUE, cardinal and peer of Franc of the revolution, fled with the e returned with the Bourbons, and i archbishop of Paris, 1736-1821.

TALLEYRAND-PERIGORD, C RICE DE, the character of his hou far the largest space in history, the matists, was born at Paris in 1754, for the church. His course of life consistent with this profession, but dying father prevailed with Louis was named, in 1788, bishop of A diocese in the Bourbonnaise. Th studies, and manners of the young still such as invited him to preser society, and he frequented not th salons of Paris, studying, if anyt and Fontenelle, and drawing more c beau and the other stirring spirits In May, 1789, the states-general m rand took his place with the clergy, popular principles, actively engaged reorganization of the state, upon wh so resolutely entered; he even prop fiscation and sale of the church prop that measure was carried, zealously to the creation of a constitutional these and similar misdeeds, he wa cated by Pius VI. some six months given the sanction of the church t cause by celebrating high mass o the country.' On leaving the chur at once assumed the character b known to history, and went as England with M. Chauvelin, with was suddenly expelled from London try of Pitt; he then fled to Ame being compromised in the discover chest, so soon followed by the ruin of He remained in his transatlantic as the fall of Robespierre, thus escap period of the reign of terror, and the Paris, became a member of the National Institute, and minister of under the directory. It is at this European interest of his history c he now conspired against his mas moted the revolution which carried summit of power. Here the questio fore, What were his convictions? any single party might understan Talleyrand had not; yet, he posse quality of mind which, to him, sup of such a faith, and which has be nated a 'supernatural indifferenc ference not to his own fate, but event might befall the men or the i rounding him, so that his own sch buoyant. Napoleon's summary jud is perhaps nearer the truth than any criticism, and his words are these: was always in a state of treason, but sonable complicity with fortune h cumspection was extreme; he co towards his friends as if, at some fu might be his enemies, and towards if they might become his friends!' the apologies we have read for hi to be the sum of the matter; and

ach a character might be as a minister of affairs, there is surely too much of the ntopheles element in it to satisfy any lover of y; it is a judgment, also, by no means ex n character, for the fact stated is implied in y apologies for him. What else is the argu- hat he shifted from one party to another, should partake in the threatened corruption body of which he foresaw the decay, except r way of stating his treasonable complicity rtune; and what would any cause be worth s supporters were in this state of perennial towards it? What, again, is the moral of that man, however great his capacity, pports a cause on condition of its suc- We should be doing injustice to the me- Talleyrand, not to add that he earnestly peace, and the alliance of France and Eng- a progressive policy; his great misfortune overweening reliance on the shifts of diplo- is too great willingness to adopt that expe- abominable cunning—though the expres- e from a nobler head than his—'tell a lie it truth!' Talleyrand remained foreign under Napoleon till 1807, when he was prince of Benevento, and became grand- lain, with the titular rank of vice-grand- the empire. In 1809 he began his oppo- the policy of Napoleon, and being deprived fice of chamberlain, retired to Valençay, would appear he conspired against the

The year 1814 found him acting openly allies, and he next appears as minister nis XVIII. In the latter years of the n which ended in the revolution of 1830, d took no part in public business, but on sion of Louis Philippe, as citizen king, he mbassador once more in England. This ent he held till January, 1835, when his caused him to resign it, and he was suc- y General Sebastiani. To him, more than r man, Louis Philippe was indebted for tion of his peace policy, maintained, say ch, 'at any price,'—a matter this which t await, some time, a righteous judgment. 38. [E.R.]

LIEN, JEAN LAMBERT, a Jacobin of the revolution, chief agent in the fall of Robes- was born at Paris 1769, and was succes- clerk to an attorney, and in one of the ent offices. At the epoch of the revolu- became secretary to one of the deputies, the declining period of the Legislative As- was editor of the 'Ami des Citoyens,' one ournals by which the populace were goaded chy; he also actively assisted in organizing urrection of August 10, 1792, on the success h he was appointed recording secretary of ris Commune. From this time Tallien with the most active members of the moun- d aided in the destruction of the Girondins; also implicated in the massacres of Septem- l became president of the Assembly on the the king's execution. In the beginning of e was sent with Ysabeau to the city of aux to crush the remnant of feeling remain- avour of Girondism, and place the republi- vernment on a secure basis: here he struck into the population by his remorseless use of the guillotine, at the same time that he revelled in the proconsular splendour and debauchery of which several other cities of France at that time presented a like example. One of the most beauti- ful and highly spirited women of that age was a Madame de Fontenai, daughter of the count de Cabarrus, a Spanish grandee, of French extrac- tion; she was detained at Bourdeaux en route for Spain by the arrest of her husband, and was accustomed to address the clubs, where her appear- ance excited the greatest enthusiasm. Easily moved to pity by the terror around her, and fond of adventure and notoriety, this woman resolved to conquer the heart of the dreaded Tallien, and she succeeded so well that his greatest pride was to exhibit her in his splendid equipage, clothed in Grecian costume, to represent the goddess of liberty—a parade of Oriental luxury and vice, which disgusted Robespierre beyond expression, while it amused the people and was the salvation of many of them, for whom this modern Thais was never tired of interceding. Being recalled to Paris as the last struggle between Robespierre and these corrupters of the people drew nigh, Madame de Fontenai was arrested, in the expectation that she would lend her assistance in the fall of Tallien, and, at all events, that she might not embarrass the action of Robespierre and Saint Just. She, however, proved true to her lover, and privately conveyed a note to him, in which she reproached him with cowardice if he suffered her now to perish on the scaffold. Thus exasperated, and certain that his own head would fall next, Tallien acted that daring part in Convention, on the 9th Thermidor, which proved the destruction of Robes- pierre: he was then elected to the Committee of Public Safety, and become president of the Con- vention; now, also, Madame de Fontenai became his wife. He played a considerable part in subse- quent events, and was elected on the Council of 500; the ascendancy of Buonaparte, however, soon threw men of his stamp into the shade, and Tal- lien died, without ever recovering the undeserved importance he had once enjoyed, in 1820. His beautiful colleague, for such Madame de Fontenai really was, procured a divorce during his absence in Egypt, whither he had gone with Napoleon, and in 1805, was married to the count Joseph de Caraman, afterwards prince of Chimay: she died in 1835. Tallien, we ought to say, admitted his 'errors' as he called them, but pleaded the delirium of the times, a fact surely of some signi- ficance; ignorant of what the future may have in store for us, let us ponder these circumstances, and consider well what monstrous births might yet be brought forth among the millions who know nothing of Christianity but the name, and little of civilization but its corrupting influences. [E.R.]

TALLIS, THOMAS, the master of William Byrde, one of the greatest of English musicians, was born early in the reign of Henry VIII. The most curious and extraordinary of his works which is still extant was his song of forty vocal parts. This great effort of musical science is carried on in alternate flight, pursuit, attack, and choral coun- terpoint to the end. This many-voiced piece of Gothicism is terminated by twelve bars of full harmony. Tallis died in 1585, and was buried in the old parish church of Greenwich. [J.M.]

TALMA, Francis Joseph, the Garrick of the French stage, was born at Paris about 1770, but a great portion of his boyhood was passed in London. He was educated at a boarding school in Lambeth, and then articled to a surgeon; but soon joined an amateur French company, under Sir John Gallini, at the Hanover Square Rooms, and appeared as Count Almaviva, in Beaumarchais' comedy of 'The Barber of Seville,' and other characters. His taste was formed by witnessing the performances of Kemble and Siddons, and on visiting Paris as an actor, and making his debût on the boards of the theatre Français, he ventured on the new style of acting, but as might have been expected, it was not immediately acceptable. An accident caused, at length, the acknowledgment of his merits. A tragedy by M. Chenier, entitled Charles IX., being accepted, and the part refused by the chief performer, M. Saintful, who accompanied his refusal with the sneering recommendation that it should be given 'to young Talma;' the recommendation was literally adopted, and Talma, by sedulous study of the part, and an adoption of proper costume, won a decided triumph by the performance. The advantage of his English education was in this apparent; but still more conspicuously in the next occurrence. M. Ducis had undertaken a translation of Shakspeare's 'Othello,' with a catastrophe more suitable, as he thought, to the prejudices of a French audience; but Talma, enlightened by what he had observed of the English stage, insisted on the Shaksperian conclusion. The result was a marvellous success, which placed Talma at the summit of his profession. He won a large fortune by his exertions, a high position in society, and the favour of the emperor Napoleon. He died at Paris, 19th October, 1826, having previously published (1825) 'Reflexions' on the histrionic art, distinguished by much truth and research. He was interred, according to his own directions, in the cemetery of Père la Chaise, without any religious ceremony, but funeral orations by Jouy and Arnault were delivered at the grave. To change, it is alleged, his resolution on this score, the archbishop of Paris had sought an interview, but in vain. Talma's conduct, it is supposed, proceeded from his resentment at the excommunication pronounced by the Roman Catholic Church against actors. A short time before his death, he embraced his theatrical friends, Jouy, Arnault, and Duvilliers, but refused to see Madame Vanhove, his wife, from whom he had been long separated. At the funeral a magnificent hearse conveyed his remains, and was followed by fifteen mourning coaches, besides Talma's own, and several empty carriages, with a great number of literary and theatrical persons on foot, and a multitude exceeding four thousand individuals. A large concourse of citizens also filled the cemetery and surrounded the tomb. Such was the respect shown to the great actor—not excessive, though so significant, for to the artist reverence is always due, and the art of acting is one in which the characteristics of all the other arts are united. [J.A.H.]

TALMONT, A. P. La Tremoille, Prince De, a royalist chief in the war of La Vendée, executed at his castle of Laval 1793.

TALMONT, Gabrielle De Bourbon, Princess De, wife of Louis II. of La Tremouille, author of works of devotion still in MS., died 1516.

TAMBRONI, Joseph, a learned Italian poet and historian, 1773-1824. His sister, Clotilda, professor of Greek at Bologna, 1758-1817.

TAMBURINI, Pietro, a famous Italian moralist and writer on jurisprudence, 1737-1827.

TAMERLANE, sometimes called 'Timour the Tartar,' one of those grand old heroes who have in past times disputed the empire of the world, was born at Kesh, a town south-east of Samarcand, in 1335. He was a descendant on the mother's side of the Mongol emperor Genghis Khan, and became sovereign of Tartary after the defeat of Houssein, his competitor, in 1369 or 1370. Saluted emperor, with the surname of Saheb Karan (Master of the World), he commenced to make good his title by invading Persia, and in a short time, 1380, took possession of Herat and the whole of Khorassan. It was the age of the capture of Constantinople by the Turks, and all the races of the East were more or less engaged in the struggle for empire. The feeling of Tamerlane was thus distinctly expressed: 'The earth ought to have but one master, as there is only one God in heaven; and what (he asked) is the earth, with all its inhabitants, for the ambition of a great prince? The barbarian grandeur of resolve thus announced is greatly preferable, if only on the score of manly sincerity, to the same end sought by the tricks of corruption and diplomacy, fearful as it is to contemplate the progress of such a scourge, the cities destroyed, and the pyramids formed of thousands of human heads, which were all that Tamerlane left to mark the spot where they had once flourished. These are scenes it is unnecessary to depict in detail; enough to state that the conquests of Tamerlane had reached from Moscow on the one hand, to Delhi in India on the other, before he marched against his last and greatest foe, the Sultan Bajazet. The eventful battle which decided the question whether the Osmanlis or the Tartars should be masters of the present was fought at Angora, on the 28th July, 1402, the number of combatants on the side of Tamerlane being 200,000 men, having two hundred six elephants, and on the part of Bajazet 800,000 men, with ten elephants. The conflict raged with fury six hours, and after 40,000 of the Turks were laid dead on the field, and 10,000 of their adversaries, Bajazet became the prisoner of his conqueror, who retained him captive, though he treated him with great generosity, till his death in the year following. Tamerlane then, in 1404, returned to his capital, and insatiate of conquest, immediately organized an army of elite troops, numbering 200,000 men, destined to act against China, but he was seized with a violent fever, and died, soon after taking the field, 18th February, 1405. This extraordinary man is supposed to be the author of a book of 'Institutes, Political and Military,' which has been translated from the Persian into French and English. His portrait represents a warrior armed cap-a-pie, of lofty stature, with a noble countenance, framed on the Greek type, and a head massive as that of Hercules. His extensive conquests, and the foundation of empires, are rendered necessary by the ignorance and weakness of whole masses of population, such a man cannot be numbered among the great of his kind;

ich, however, proves by accumu- that their successes are only as so s upon society, as grand, and it icial in their results as the storms re. If it be so, the sudden rise of ie recurrence of the experiment , whether under an Alexander, a lane, or a Napoleon, can but be purpose; instead of pointing to ion as the end of society, every es but prove the impossibility of the master mind seems but the which the clouds gather from all eavens are black, and the portent der, or dazzles the world with its of Providence is not to arm frail unders, but to render the air free him: so long as ignorance pre- the darkest passions continue to sh with each other, these scenes fter all, we may hope, will come mmunities, of which the policy of and the spirit of its history afford nise the world has yet seen. [E.R.]

EA, a king of the Sandwich Islands, erit belongs of beginning the civi- untry, died 1819.

chief of the crusades, who headed lected from Apulia and Calabria, e principality of Galilee on Lake one of the heroes of Tasso, and from 1096 to 1112.

IES NAPPER, one of the leaders of ishmen,' was born in 1757, and y of the Catholic Association at e was a merchant, in 1791. Hav- France at the commencement of prosecution, he was commissioned rigade in the expedition directed under General Rey in 1798. After is attempt he took refuge in Ham- delivered up to the English govern- lemned to death. The sentence, ot executed, and Napper Tandy, ne peace of Amiens, died at Bour- in the French service, 1803.

L, ROBERT, a Scottish lyric, and of the most popular songs which en since the time of Burns. He d, in humble life, and followed the weaver. His education, as might s of the most ordinary character, y of daily toil necessarily restricted provement. But the love of song in him, and on the loom he fre- ed his sweet but simple strains, to it a small desk, to enable him thick-coming fancies as they arose. e was not of a high-rate character, nued long on the wing, there is a and wild thrilling music in such the Flower of Dumblane,' 'Gloomy wa,' 'Loudon's bonny Woods and e others, which have embalmed arts and memories of his country- ll was indebted to a Mr. R. A. r composer of his day, for setting ieces to music, and which contri- tly and permanent notoriety. Like others of the tuneful tribe, this unfortunate son of song was subject to fits of melancholy, which terminated in mental derangement, under the impulse of which he committed suicide in 1810, by drowning himself in a deep pool of the Paisley canal, leaving behind him a name and reputation, second to few of our minor and popular song-writers. [T.D.]

TANNER, A., a German ascetic, 1572-1632.

TANNER, B., a German writer of the 17th cent.

TANNER, MATHIAS, a Bohemian Jesuit and historian of his order, about 1630-1700.

TANNER, THOMAS, bishop of St. Asaph, author of 'Notitia Monastica,' an account of all the religious houses in England and Wales, 1674-1735.

TANSILLO, L., an Italian poet, 1510-1568.

TANTARANI, M. EDDYN ACHMED, an Arabian poet and professor at Bagdad, 11th century.

TANUCCI, BERNARDO, Marquis of, a celebrated statesman of Naples, 1698-1783.

TAPLIN, WILLIAM, a veterinary surgeon author of works on farriery and horses, died 1807.

TAPPER, R., a French theologian, 1487-1559.

TARCAGNOTA, J., a native of Gaeta, author of a 'Universal History,' died 1566.

TARDIF, W., a French translator, 1449-1480.

TARDY, C., a French physician, 1607-1670.

TARGA, L., an Italian physician, 1730-1815.

TARGE, J. B., a French historian, 1720-1788.

TARGIONI-TOZETTI, GIOVANNI, an eminent Italian physician and naturalist, 1712-1783.

TARIN, J., a French savant, 1586-1666.

TARIN, P., a French anatomist, died 1761.

TARLTON, or TARLETON, RICHARD, a celebrated actor and wit, author of a dramatic piece, entitled 'The Seven Deadly Sins,' died 1589.

TARNOWSKI, called 'the Great,' an illustrious Polish general and tactician, 1488-1571.

TARQUIN, two kings of Rome:—1. TARQUINIUS PRISCUS, fifth in the line of kings, succeeded Ancus Martius 614 B.C., and was assassinated by the sons of Ancus 576 B.C. He contributed much to the fortification and embellishment of the city, and signally defeated the Sabines and Latins: he is considered one of the most illustrious of the Roman kings. 2. TARQUINIUS SUPERBUS, seventh king, grandson of the preceding, obtained the throne by the murder of Servius Tullius, whose daughter, TULLIA, he had married. He was an able warrior and statesman, but cruel and unprincipled in his conduct; he was dethroned, and a revolution effected, by Junius Brutus, provoked by the outrage offered to Lucretia. The history of Tullia is one of the most atrocious on record, she having murdered her first husband in order to espouse Tarquin, and afterwards driven over the mangled remains of her father in the streets of Rome.

TARSIA, G. DE, a Italian poet, 1476-1530.

TARSIA, P. A. DE, a Span. historian, d. 1670.

TARTINI, GUISEPPE, was born at Pisano in Istria, in 1692. Tartini was first meant for the law, but music compelled him to follow her bidding, and thus the world gained a great violinist. The story of his dream in which he thought he had made a compact with the devil is well known. The result of this nocturnal vision was his 'Devil's Sonata' still extant and which is esteemed as his greatest work. His life was full of struggles and adventures. He fought several duels, and married a cardinal's niece against the father and uncle. He after in a monastery, where he Tartini became the

of which Nardini, Pu were celebrated disciples 1770.

TARUFFI, J. A., an

TASKER, WILLIAM,
rector of Iddesleigh, in D

TASMAN, ABEL JA
North Holland, about the judgment which he displ
of his life in the service Company, brought him
tinguished governor-general,
His first commission received from his patron previously the Dutch cuting geographical Pacific; and had already Australian coasts; but eastern limits were still tain these was the
under the command of vernor-general and from that part on his course, first to E. across the Indi
ber, he discovered
Van Diemen's Land,
and which he
'terra australis'
veyed. On southern limit;
extend to a great
supposed.
meeting unfa
towards the fortunate as to traced a part
other discov
to Batavia, months, during additions to doubtful point undertaken
the same judging from given in cumstance
governor-Tasman
who
on the passed
him.
name
coast

Locke's ideas, its condition must be much more unhappy than that of the sensitive eye, since this is co-ordinated to beings, but intellect could speculate nothing but illusions. Now if this be absurd, and if we possess an intellectual eye which is endued with a visual power, there must be forms correspondent and conjoined with its vision; forms immoveable, indeed, by a corporeal motion, but moved by an intellectual energy.' We cannot give the catalogue of Mr. Taylor's editions and commentaries, as it would occupy more space than this notice, but they all tend to a representation and development of the Grecian theology and of its entire history. Died 1835. [E.R.]

TAYLOR, WILLIAM, author of 'English Synonymes,' and a 'Survey of German Poetry,' was the son of a merchant at Norwich, where he was born 1765. He became an intimate friend of Southey at the close of the century, and editor of a local paper, the 'Norwich Iris,' after which he distinguished himself in the metropolis as a reviewer and critic, died 1836.

TAYLOR, WILLIAM COOKE, a miscellaneous writer in high repute for his indefatigable industry, the versatility of his talents, and the accuracy of his works, was born at Youghal, in Ireland, in 1800, and died of the pestilence which ravaged that country in 1849. Among his works are 'The Life and Times of Sir Robert Peel,' 'Manuals of Ancient and Modern History,' 'History of Mohammedanism,' 'Revolutions of Europe,' and 'The History of the House of Orleans.'

TAYLOR, ZACHARY, president of the United States, was born in Orange County, Virginia, 1790, was descended from an English family who ed in that state in 1692. His father, Colonel ard Taylor, was a companion-in-arms of hington, and bore a name dreaded in Indian are; his mother, as usual in the case of men in any way distinguish themselves, was a n of high spirit and intelligence. The mili- life of Zachary Taylor, who was always noted s hardihood, commenced at the outbreak of r with England in 1807, when he was com- oned as lieutenant, and sent to defend the bor- gainst the Indians: his great exploit on this on was the defence of Fort Harrison on the h, at the head of a garrison numbering only wo men. He rose from grade to grade till ame general in the subsequent Indian wars rida and Arkansas, but acquired his great rity in the invasion of Mexico, 1846, when ed the Rio-Grande, and gained in succes- he battles of Palo-alto, Resaca-de-la-Palma, ney, and Buena-Vista. His character is well expressed by the nickname of 'Rough- dy,' given to him, according to a very ent fashion of honouring their great men, s countrymen. General Taylor was elected ent in November, 1848, and entered upon n March, 1849. He was carried off suddenly, completing his term, by an attack of cholera, , 1850, and was succeeded by Vice-president [E.R.]

ESCHI, N., an Ital. canonist, 1389-1445.
E.L, ERIC, a Swedish historian, died 1638.
NER, E., a Swedish poet, 1782-1847.
, last king of the Ostrogoths in Italy, ed by Narses, and killed 553.

TEIGNMOUTH, JOHN SHORE, Lord, an Oriental scholar and administrator, connected with the Indian government in the time of Warren Hastings, afterwards closely allied with the philanthropists of this country, and first president of the Bible Society; born in Devonshire 1751, died 1834. We are indebted to him for the complete edition of the life of Sir William Jones.

TEISSIER, ANTHONY, a French protestant advocate, who became historiographer to the Prussian court, and wrote several works, 1632-1715.

TEKELI, EMERIC, Count, a patriot of Hungary, who headed the revolt of that country against Austria in 1676, died in exile 1705.

TELEMANN, GEORGE PHILIP, a great composer of overtures, time of Handel, 1681-1767.

TELESIO, ANTONIO, otherwise Thiletius, or Tilesius, an Italian professor of literature and Latin poet, 1482-1533. BERNARDINO, his nephew, a philosopher and mathematician, 1509-88.

TELFORD, THOMAS, a celebrated civil engineer, a striking instance of the many on record of men who have by the force of natural talent—unaided save by uprightness and persevering industry—raised themselves from the lowly estate in which they were born, to take rank among the master spirits of their age. Telford's father was a shepherd of Eskdale in Dumfriesshire, where Thomas, his only son, was born in August, 1757. His father died when he was an infant, and thus the care of Telford's early years devolved upon his mother, for whom he cherished an affectionate regard, and evinced true filial piety. He had the immense advantage peculiar to Scotchmen at that time, of the parish school education; but at the age of fourteen he was apprenticed to a mason in Langholm. The construction of small bridges, farm buildings, Scotch churches and manses, were the opportunities afforded him of obtaining practical knowledge. In his autobiography he has expressed his sense of the value of this humble training, observing, that although convenience and usefulness only are studied in such buildings, yet, 'as there is not sufficient employment to produce a division of labour in building, he was under the necessity of making himself acquainted with every detail of procuring, preparing, and employing every kind of material, whether it be the produce of the forest, the quarry, or the forge; and this necessity, although unfavourable to the dexterity of the individual workman who earns his livelihood by expertness in one operation, is of singular advantage to the future architect or engineer, whose professional excellence must rest on the adaptation of materials, and a confirmed habit of discrimination and judicious superintendence.' In 1780 Telford went to Edinburgh, and enlarged his field of observation during two years' employment there, on the splendid improvements of that city then commenced. He then went to London, and was employed in the works of the quadrangle of Somerset House, where he says he 'obtained much practical information.' He was afterwards engaged as superintendent on various buildings at Portsmouth Dockyard. In 1787 he removed to Shrewsbury, to superintend alterations on Shrewsbury castle. Here he erected the new gaol, finally, in 1793, became county surveyor, an office which he continued to hold as long as he lived. Telford's first bridge was over the Severn at Montford, consisting of three elliptical stone arches, one of 58 feet, the others of 55 feet span. In 1795 he erected the Buildenas iron bridge of 130 feet span. Henceforward his attention was almost solely devoted to civil engineering,—The Ellesmere canal, with its magnificent Christe and Pont-y-Cysylte viaducts, occupied him chiefly from 1795 to 1805. In 1801 Telford was deputed by government to report on the works desirable for the improvement of the internal and external intercourse and trade of Scotland. In consequence of his reports the Highland roads and bridges were made, the Caledonian canal cut, and many ports and harbours made and improved, all of which works he superintended. The Caledonian canal was opened in 1823. It was a gigantic work for the period; but has not proved of much use, or to have been very perfectly executed.—In his extensive practice in bridge building he improved the general practice of engineers of this country, by adopting the important principle of making the spandrils hollow, and supporting the roadway upon slabs laid upon longitudinal walls, instead of filling up the haunches with a mass of loose rubbish, which may press injuriously upon the arch, and often proves of serious inconvenience when the masonry of the bridge needs any repair. Telford improved the Macadam system of road-making, and carried it into effect on the Holyhead roads, for which he was long engineer under the commissioners. The Menai suspension bridge on this road is a noble example of Telford's engineering skill and boldness in design, and even now in juxtaposition with the Britannia Tubular bridge, fairly divides with that great work the admiration of the intelligent observer —The St. Katherine docks, London, are from Telford's design, and were executed under his direction. There are innumerable happy details in the engineering, for an account of which we must refer to the plates attached to his autobiography. The work of civil engineering, on the success of which Telford seems to have looked with greatest self-complacency, is the improvement of the outfall of the Seine river, by which the drainage of about 30,000 acres of richest sea land was secured, and that of some 80,000 acres greatly improved. This was finished in 1830. He was employed by Swedish governments in the construction of the Gotha canal, and often consulted by the Russian government.—Before leaving Eskdale Telford had acquired some distinction as a poet, and corresponded with Burns, recommending him to take up other subjects of serious nature similar to the Cottar's Saturday Night. He is said to have taught himself Latin, French, Italian, and German. He has left valuable contributions to engineering literature in the articles architecture, bridge, civil architecture, inland navigation, in Brewster's 'Edinburgh Encyclopædia,' and in his autobiography. He was F.R.S.L. and E. Telford became president of the Institution of Civil Engineers in 1820, and remained so till his death in 1834.—In all the relations of life he commanded respect and esteem. He was of athletic form, and reached the age of seventy without any serious illness. It was only late in life that he had any fixed residence. Even in London he lived in an hotel, for many years in the Salopian at Charing Cross, (now the 'Ship') but from 1825 he resided in 24 Abingdon-Street, where he died on the 2d September, 1834, at the age of seventy-seven. His mortal remains were interred in Westminster Abbey. [L.D.B.G.]

TELL, WILLIAM, the popular hero of Swiss independence: his story is open to grave doubts, but the facts certainly known are these. In the time of Albert, archduke of Austria, Switzerland was divided into small baronial fiefs, and independent cities having a democratic form of government; and these free districts, being surrounded nearly by the imperial domains, were objects of great jealousy to the house of Austria, by which at last their subjugation was resolved upon. Already the archduke possessed the right of appointing bailiffs for administering the criminal jurisdiction in all these places, and such a functionary was Gessler, the tyrant of the legends concerning Tell. When the purpose of the Austrians became known, the natives of Uri, Schweitz, and Underwalden, formed the nucleus of an association to defend their country; and three patriots, Furst, Melchal, and Staffacher, led them to victory January 13th, 1308, when the baronial castles were attacked and the oppressive barons driven out of the country. The legend of William Tell supplies the circumstance which gave the signal for this sudden rising. Gessler, it is said, appointed governor or bailiff of Uri, caused his plumed cap to be elevated on a pole in a public place at Altorf, and required the peasantry to render the same homage to it as to himself: the probability is, that it was raised as a standard to rally his partizans, and discover the disaffected. William Tell, supposed to have been the son-in-law of Walter Furst, treated this symbol with contempt, and was ordered under arrest by the enraged governor: the story adds, that his liberty was offered to him on condition of striking an apple, placed on the head of his child, with a bolt from his cross bow;—it relates that he struck the apple, but having reserved an arrow, destined, as he avowed, for the heart of the governor had his child received any injury, he was still detained in custody and priest of the oratory, 1668-1723. GASPARD, a third brother, a priest of the oratory, and author of a work censured by the Sorbonne, 1680-1752. MATTHEW, cousin to the preceding, a famous jurisconsult, 1669-1734. ANTHONY, son of Matthew, author of a 'History of Roman Jurisprudence,' completed by order of the chancellor D'Aguesseau, 1705-1782.

[Tell's Chapel on the Lake of Waldstetten.]

TERRIN, C., a French antiquarian, 1640-1710.

TERRY, D., an English comedian, 1780-1828.

TERRY, E., an English traveller, 17th century.

TERSERUS, J., a Swedish theologian, b. 1605.

TERTULLIAN, QUINTUS SEPTIMIUS FLORENS, was the son of a pagan centurion, and was born at Carthage, probably about A.D. 160. His original profession was that of a pleader, or lawyer, and he rose to eminence in the courts. On his being converted to Christianity, he was ordained a presbyter in the church of Carthage. At the end of the second century he became a Montanist. (See MONTANUS). These peculiar views he illustrated with constitutional ardour and keenness. Even in his writings, composed prior to his conversion to Montanism, there are traces of that peculiar temperament which predisposed him to the change. He is supposed to have died about the year 220. The fathers give Tertullian a very high character, and he stamped the impress of his spirit to some extent on the African churches. His works are great favourites of Cyprian, and in asking for any one of them, he used to say to his attendants, Da magistrum,—hand me my master. Among the Latin fathers Tertullian occupies a very distinguished place. He had not the sound sense of Augustine, nor the milder graces of Cyprian, but he was inspired with unconquerable zeal, and his style burns with the fervour of his heart. His erudition was extensive, and his acuteness was seldom baffled. His writings exhibit on every page the skill and the defects of a rhetorician. Figures swell into absurd hyperbole, and the language is so twisted as often to be obscure. His arguments are frequently edged with satire, and loaded with severe vituperation. Tertullian's works consist of thirty treatises, apologetical, doctrinal, and ascetical. In the first he combats Jews and pagans, in the second he deals with heretics, and in the third he defends the rigid austerities of his peculiar creed. The best known of his works are his 'Apologeticum,' his 'De Praescriptione Hereticorum,' and his treatise against Marcion. His works were published in two folio volumes by Da Cerda, Paris, 1624; by Rigaltius, at the same place, in one folio, 1634; by Moreau, in three folios, Paris, 1657-58; twice at Venice, 1701-1744; by Semler, at Halle, in five volumes, 8vo, 1769-73, reprinted in 1827-29 in six 12mos. Leopold's edition occupies four volumes in Gersdorf's 'Bibliotheca Patrum.' But the last and most complete edition is in three large volumes 8vo, Leipzig, 1854, edited with care, elegance, and copious indexes by Oehler, the third volume containing the most important of the dissertations by preceding editors and historians on the life, character, times, and writings of Tertullian. Several of his tracts have been translated into English by Chevallier, Betty, Lord Hailes, and Dr. Pusey.

TESMAN, J., a Germ. diplomatist, 1643-1695.

TESSIER, H. A., a French physician, agriculturist, and member of the Institute, 1740-1837.

TESSIN, NICODEMUS, crown architect of Sweden, and the designer of several great public edifices, 1619-1688. His son, NICODEMUS COUNT TESSIN, also a great architect, senator and [illegible] 1654-1728. CHARLES GUSTAVUS, son of the latter, completed the palace of Stockholm, designed by his father, and was afterwards an ambassador and statesman, 1695-177[illegible]

TESTA, PIETRO, an Italian painter, 1611-1650.

TESTI, FULVIO, Count, an Italian poet, [illegible] died in prison for a political offence, 1593-1646.

TETENS, J. N., a Germ. politician, 1807.

TETZEL, JOHN, a Dominican monk, who was appointed in 1517 to sell the papal indulgences, and which excited the first movements of the reformation; he was a man of bad morals himself, and [illegible] tion; he was the most shameful [illegible] sold indulgences for the most shameful crimes, past or future; died of the plague 1519.

THAARUP, T., a Danish poet, 1749-1871.

THAIS, a Greek courtezan of remarkable beauty, who accompanied Alexander to Asia, and became one of the wives of Ptolemy.

THALES, born most probably in the [illegible] 636 B.C.: according to Herodotus he was a Phœnician of Miletus, although by descent a Phœnician. We shall not enter on any of that mere gossip regarding Thales, which has floated downwards from Antiquity; but endeavour rather to discern [illegible] thing, however little, that may be considered [illegible] sure index to his pursuits and character. That [illegible] the opinion of the Greeks he occupied a most [illegible] tinguished place, cannot be doubted; for [illegible] unanimously place him at the head of their list [illegible] seven sages; and in so far as we know, he [illegible] entitled to claim the origination of Greek Physics [illegible] sophy. He was evidently a close observer [illegible] material nature: it may be said that the Ionic [illegible] School sprung from him. He had made himself master of all existing Astronomical [illegible] whether it be a fact or a myth that he predicted the Eclipse of the Sun which occurred during [illegible] battle between the Lydians and the Medes. Supposing it a fact, it were quite wrong to endow [illegible] with familiarity with any form of scientific [illegible] applicable to the calculation of Eclipses; but [illegible] must have been well acquainted with the Cycle [illegible] period comprehending the order of Eclipses. His searching culture of Physics, is, however, more emphatically evinced by his cardinal maxim that 'Water is the ground or primal element of all Things'—a maxim not to be confounded with mere fantastic conjecture, for it was evidently the result of a discriminating observation of the immense and essential influence of that element in all forms of Matter and Life, as well as of its singular transformations. That was no little step in Mind, which at so early an epoch, led the way in generalizing on the ground of Observation. Thales went farther: his thoughts were not confined within the sphere of Physics. He taught also, that the 'World has a soul, is full of daemons.' His specific views are lost; but it is clear, from so slight an intimation, that he led the way in those perilous questionings of the Universe and the Infinite, which afterwards so distinguished Greek speculation. Thales, besides, was a practical worker among men. He is said to have feats of Engineering, to have been siness, and to have taken part in tate. Could we reproduce him thoannot be doubted, that we should entate all worthy of the admiration [J.P.N.]

[J.E.]

, J., a German botanist, 16th cent.
a queen of Georgia, 1184-1206.
)N, S., a French poet, 1744-1780.
)N, S., a Fr. dramatist, 1787-1841.
J. C. A., a Ger. surgeon, 1714-1797.
LL, JOHN, an orator of the London Society, who was tried with Hardy ooke for high treason, afterwards s writer and lecturer, 1764-1834.
N, a Syrian physician, 1st century.
IUS, a Greek philosopher and critic, nstantinople in 362.

istocles—From an Ancient Bust.]

OCLES, an Athenian statesman and e period when Greece was menaced n empire, was born of obscure parlatter half of the 6th century B.C. reer was contemporaneous with that nd the rivalry between them became the highest public importance soon le of Marathon (see MILTIADES). of Aristides seems to have been that ublican Tory, resolute to stand upon ays; that of Themistocles was more xigencies of the period, and he poster political foresight, not unmixed icity so characteristic of statesmanodern times. Greece was threatened an warfare between these leaders, ute was terminated by the banishdes, B.C. 483, and Themistocles was to pursue his policy. His great obreation of a navy, able to cope with ersians, and to the success of his attributed not only the salvation of e supremacy of Athens over the other . He had great difficulties, both political, to encounter, and even the le was at first opposed to him: a e, however, though ambiguous, was favour of his design, and Themisnd himself at the head of the Greek well provided with ships. By a master stroke of policy, he fairly tricked both the Greeks and Persians into fighting the great naval battle off Salamis, in which he totally defeated Xerxes, B.C. 480: he then took the necessary measures for securing the supremacy of Athens by internal defences, the works of which were carried on in defiance of Sparta. In B.C. 466, the jealousies excited by his great power, led to his banishment by Ostracism, and he retired to the Persian court, where, it would appear, he forgot his patriotism, and plotted against his country. It is related by Plutarch, however, that he poisoned himself rather than yield to the overtures of Artaxerxes. His death, from whatever cause, took place at Magnesia in Asia Minor, B.C. 470, or 472. [E.R.]

THEOBALD. See THIBAUT.

THEOBALD, LEWIS, the hero of Pope's 'Dunciad,' known as a miscellaneous writer and commentator on Shakspeare, died 1744.

THEOCRITUS, a Greek pastoral poet, some of whose 'Idyls' and 'Epigrams' are still extant, time of Ptolemy Philadelphus, B.C. 284-247.

THEODATUS, king of the Ostrogoths in Italy, defeated by Belisarius, and killed 536.

THEODEMIR, a prince of the Visigoths in Spain, who reigned over an independent state in New Castile, beginning of the 8th century.

THEODORA, three empresses of the East:—The earliest was the wife of Justinian, originally a dancer and courtezan, who ascended the throne with her husband in 527; she occasioned the disgrace of Belisarius, in revenge of her quarrels with his wife, Antonina; died 548. The second was the wife of Theophilus, who was left a widow in 842, and ruled as regent for her son, Michael III., till 857, when she was deposed and imprisoned in a monastery; died 867. The third was daughter of Constantine VIII., and reigned a short time with her sister, Zoe, in 1042, and alone, after the death of Constantine IX., from 1054 to 1056. She was the last of the Macedonian dynasty. Another Theodora was wife of the Armenian emperor, Leo V.

THEODORE, two popes of Rome:—The first reigned 642-649. The second survived his election, in 898, three weeks only, and was succeeded by John IX.

THEODORE, a king of Corsica, 1696-1756.

THEODORET, a learned ecclesiastical writer and historian, born at Antioch about 386, d. 457.

THEODORIC, two kings of the Visigoths in the south of France:—THEODORIC I., son of the famous Alaric, was elected on the death of Wallia in 419; he was at war with the Romans some years, but afterwards entered into a league with them against Attila; he was killed in the great battle with the latter on the plains of Châlons 451. THEODORIC II., son of the preceding, acquired the throne by putting to death his elder brother, Thorismond, in 453; he extended the empire of the Visigoths to the foot of the Pyrenees, and was assassinated by his brother, Euric, in 466.

THEODORIC, surnamed 'The Great,' king of the Ostrogoths, and founder of their dominion in Italy, was born in 457, or 459. He was descended from the royal race of that people settled in Pannonia, and his father is supposed to have been one of three brothers who had divided the sovereignty over them, but this point is uncertain.

Sent as a hostage to Constantinople in his childhood, he had the advantage of an education in the politics, philosophy, and jurisprudence of the Greek empire, and was restored to his father, now become sole ruler of the Ostrogoths, at the end of ten years. Italy at this time was swayed by the Heruli and Rugians, two branches of the Gothic stock, acknowledging Odoacer as their prince, whose authority was hated at Rome, and gave occasion to the interference of the Eastern emperor, Zeno, in the affairs of Italy. With the formal consent of the latter, Theodoric went to the conquest of his future kingdom, and having defeated and slain Odoacer, was saluted king of Italy by the army in 493. He now assumed the Roman purple, and made Ravenna his capital; a few years later he married Andofleda, sister of Clovis, the Frank king. Schlegel's brief notice is sufficiently descriptive of his reign:—'He was highly esteemed in Rome, and by all the Germanic nations; his name, like that of Charlemagne after him, was celebrated in the heroic songs of the Germans, while political writers and historical critics commend alike his talents and his virtues. His rule was generous and noble, he loved and honoured the arts and sciences which his age still possessed, and the last of Roman writers, Cassiodorus, and Boethius, were the ornaments of his reign.' The latter, indeed, and his father-in-law, Symmachus, were allowed by Theodoric to become the victims of false accusations, and his own death was hastened by the melancholy it induced upon him; the shade of Symmachus is said to have haunted him incessantly. Theodoric, like the Goths in general, was an Arian; he died at Ravenna in 526, and was succeeded by his son, Athalaric, who died in 534. The mother of this prince, Amalasontha, then became the wife and victim of Theodoric's nephew, Theodatus, who usurped the throne. These circumstances led to the interference of the emperor Justinian, and produced the expedition of Belisarius in Italy. [E.R.]

THEODORIC, an Italian surgeon, died 1298.

THEODORUS, POPE. See THEODORE.

THEODORUS, or DIODORUS, bishop of Tarsus in 394, distinguished against the Arians.

THEODORUS LASCARIS. See LASCARIS.

THEODORUS PRISCIANUS, a medical writer of the empirical sect, in the 4th century.

THEODOSIUS, called of Tripolis, or of Bithynia, a Greek mathematician and astronomer, of uncertain date, the age assigned to him varying from 50 B.C. to the 3d century.

THEODOSIUS, called the Grammarian, a writer of Syracuse, 9th century.

THEODOSIUS THE GREAT, emperor of the whole Roman world, was the son of a distinguished general of that name, who was executed at Carthage by order of Gratian in 376. The young Theodosius, then about thirty years of age, retired to Galicia, which, according to some accounts, was his native place; but in the third year after he was recalled by Gratian, and proclaimed his colleague in Illyricum and the eastern provinces of the empire. Theodosius now proved himself the worthy successor of CONSTANTINE, and delivered the empire from the irruption of the Visigoths, both with the strong arm of the warrior, and the hardy head of the politician; he resembled him also as the champion of orthodoxy, and eventually completed the work that Constantine had only begun, by extinguishing idolatry, and strengthening the bulwarks of orthodoxy against Arianism. In [illegible] Gratian became the victim of a rebellion, and Maximus, usurping the western empire, was defeated by Theodosius, who gave him battle on the banks of the Drave in Pannonia. His triumphant entry into Rome took place in 389, but before and after this period he had the arduous task of suppressing continual seditions in the great cities. The most threatening of these broke out at Thessalonica, and Theodosius, yielding to his anger, and to the advice of Rufinus, sent a commission to put the inhabitants, some thousands of whom were put to the sword, though Theodosius, too late, countermanded his orders. For this measure of severity he was boldly deprived of Christian communion by Ambrose, archbishop of Milan, who turned him back from the church porch, and only consented to his reunion after a repentance of eight months. The abolition of paganism dates in 391, and the undisputed sovereign authority of Theodosius in 394, when he defeated Arbogastes and the pretender Eugenius. He now divided his dominions between his sons Honorius and Arcadius, and expired at Milan the year following, 395. [illegible]

THEODOSIUS II., grandson of the preceding, succeeded his father, Arcadius, as emperor of the East, in 399. He was a feeble prince, but a code of laws is named after him, the 'Theodosian Code,' and he had to sustain a war with Persia, and a series of religious quarrels; died 450. THEODOSIUS III. was proclaimed emperor on the deposition of Anastasius II. in 715; he yielded the government in his turn to Leo III. in 716, and d. in a monastery.

THEODOTION, or THEODOTUS, an Ebionite of Ephesus, translator of the Bible into Greek.

THEODULF, bishop of Orleans in the time of Charlemagne in 781, died in exile 821.

THEOGNIS, an elegiac Greek poet, 6th c. B.C.

THEON, a Greek painter, 4th century B.C.

THEON, a celebrated mathematician and platonic philosopher of Smyrna, 2d century.

THEON, the father of Hypatia, and himself a learned mathematician, and master of the Alexandrine doctrines of the Alexandrine school, flourished 364. He wrote a work still extant.

THEOPHANES, a Lesbian poet, and historian of the wars of the Romans in the time of Pompey the Great. He was first attached to Mithridates, afterwards to Pompey, and at length to Caesar. Only some fragments of his history are now extant, but it was made use of by Plutarch.

THEOPHANES, GEORGE, a Greek historian of the Eastern empire, died in exile 818.

THEOPHANES, PROKOPOVITCH, a Russian historian and archbishop of Novogorod, 1681-1736.

THEOPHILE VIAU, or DE VIAU, a French satirist and epigrammatic poet, 1590-1626.

THEOPHILUS, a saint and bishop of Antioch, who is reckoned among the fathers of the church; he was the first Christian writer to use the word Trinity; flourished in the 2d century.

THEOPHILUS, patriarch of Alexandria, and an enemy of Chrysostom, 385-412.

THEOPHILUS, a Greek jurisconsult, one of those employed on the Justinian Code, 527-565.

ILUS, emp. of Constantinople, 829-42.
RASTUS, a celebrated Greek philoso-nist, was born at Eresos (or Erisium) of Lesbos, in the year B.C. 371. He e year B.C. 286. He studied under ristotle, and was nominated by the ecessor in the school of the Lyceum.
ere with such increasing reputation,
at one time collected round him a pils amounting to 2,000. He was for his engaging manners and great ich it is said procured for him his rastus, or the Divine speaker. He r of many works on various subjects, iogenes Laertius enumerates 200.
m have been preserved, and amongst botany, which prove him possessed of ive genius, and show him to be a rer into nature. The many new obered in his 'History of Plants,' and n the 'Causes of Plants,' his large deep knowledge displayed by him of rs of organization have given him a on, and caused him to be looked up to of botany. [W.B.]

LACTUS, a Greek historian of some ine emperors, 7th century.

IPUS, a Gr. historian, B.C. 380-308.

THEOT, CATHERINE, one of those cters who acquired a strange notoriety of the French revolution, by preten-natural authority. She was born in been known many years before the
the claimant of a mission to regener-race; she had fallen into obscurity
e events of 1794, when she took the usse, another of these prophetesses, me a prisoner at Rome. The chief h these women was Dom Gerle, who k between Catherine Theos and what-n existed on the part of Robespierre;
his, acted as the high priest of the
at was founded upon her prophecies, thousands of the populace attached
worship, with supernatural claims,
d certain spirit manifestations was d, the phenomena of which are to ot by naked imposture, but by the airvoyance and animal magnetism and blasphemously misappropriated.
ny noble and virtuous names became a series of misadventures in the re-
this pythoness, and among others lame de Sainte-Amaranthe and her ere suddenly arrested, to the number
y order of the Committee of General harged with conspiracy. Catherine rison; the rest were executed shortly of Robespierre, 1795. [E.R.]

NES, an Athenian statesman and ook a leading part in the subversion cy, was born in the Isle of Cos, about the fifth century B.C. He was the ntiphon and Phrenicus, and all three e political designs of Pisander. The party was an alliance with Persia, ot be brought to pass with a demo-
as it would, to supply a sufficient itors having a political interest in Persian supremacy. The conspiracy dates about 411 B.C., and resort being had to terror, it was eminently successful: the orators of the people were disposed of singly by assassination, and finally, by a sudden display of military power, the senate was dissolved, and an oligarchy of 400 established in its stead. Soon, however, the conspirators quarrelled among themselves, and Alcibiades was recalled at the instance of Theramenes and Critias, who pretended to moderation; the 400 were then dispersed by flight, and some of them were put to death on the accusation of the minority. The restoration of the democracy was followed by the most remarkable events of the Peloponnesian war, and Theramenes frequently distinguished himself as a commander; at the naval battle of Arginusæ, B.C. 406, he commanded the right of the Athenians. Soon after this, Athens was blockaded by sea and land, and the remnant of the 400 returned as victors, under the standards of Lysander, with whom Theramenes conspired to re-establish an oligarchy this time, consisting of a smaller number, generally called the thirty tyrants: among the principal of this body were Theramenes and Critias. A struggle now commenced between the treacherous moderation of the former, and the cruel determination evinced by the latter, the result of which was the condemnation of Theramenes. He was taken from the altar where he had fled for refuge, and on the cup of poison being presented to him, he drank, with bitter irony, 'To the health of the good Critias.' This event took place in 403 B.C. [E.R.]

THERESA, SAINT, a mystic writer and reformer of the Carmelite order, 1525-1582.

THEROIGNE DE MERICOURT, a character of the French Revolution, is a name we should hardly admit into these pages, but for the sake of a word or two we have at heart, and cannot well find utterance of elsewhere. She was born at the village of Mericourt near Liége, where her family lived in opulence as farmers, was highly educated, and being remarkable for her beauty was seduced at the age of seventeen by the young lord of a neighbouring chateau. The period of the Revolution found her at Paris, passing from one master to another among the great, and finally enrolling herself in the mass of courtezans, but all the while playing an influential part in secret politics, and as a club orator. At last, Theroigne became first in every scene of tumult; clothed in a scarlet riding habit, and a plumed cap, she headed the most desperate attacks, and decided on the life and death of the victims of the faubourgs by a nod. After the excesses of the 10th of August this amazon inclined towards the moderate counsels of the Girondins: perhaps she had sufficiently avenged her dishonour, and the original cause of it had fallen among many others, vainly asking his life at her hands. Whatever the cause of her change, it gave offence to the furies of the guillotine, who, on meeting her one day, stripped her naked, and publicly whipped her on the terrace of the Tuileries. This outrage turned the miserable creature's brain, and she passed the remainder of her life, nearly twenty years, in a madhouse—one of the saddest pictures of humanity, totally brutalized, that imagination ever conceived. Enough of her! but how many thousands of similar victims, prepared for a like career, if circumstances admitted it, may be counted in the streets of our great cities? What a work it would be, in an age of noble endeavour like the present, to trample out this plague spot, this foulest image of hell upon earth, this crying disgrace of a Christian land! In other days the youth of a nation have engaged in crusades and chivalrous fellowships, with objects in view that shed a far less glory upon them, than a conquest such as this would confer on the age and nation that accomplished it. Here is a work of more genuine heroism than ever inspired the imagination of Jesuit or Paladin—a work most truly Christian and full of promise, and one which most of all requires united action and persevering enthusiasm for its accomplishment. [E.R.]

THESPIS, the inventor of tragedy, was a Greek poet, born at Xarca, in Attica, and became famous about 540 B.C. His stage was the chariot in which he drove about Greece, and his invention consisted in the introduction of a person who conversed with the chorus, and represented different characters by means of masks.

THEUDIS, king of the Visigoths, 531-548.

THEUDISELUS, successor of Theudis as king of the Spanish Visigoths, 548-549.

THEVENARD, A. J. M., a French admiral, naval engineer, and administrator, 1735-1815.

THEVENOT, MELCHISEDEC, a French traveller, author of several curious descriptive works, 1620-1692. His nephew, JOHN, also a traveller and writer, 1633-1667.

THEVET, A., a French traveller, 1502-1590.

THEW, ROBERT, an Eng. engraver, 1758-1802.

THIBAULT, J. T., a Fr. painter, 1757-1826.

THIBAULT, N., a deputy of the clergy to the estates-general, and an active politician, died 1812.

THIBAUT, THIEBAUT, or THEOBALD, brother of Ladislaus II., king of Bohemia, remarkable for his uprightness as protector of his brother's kingdom during the crusade of 1147.

THIBAUT, six counts of Blois:—THIBAUT I., count of Troyes, Beauvais, and Meaux, and first count of Blois, from 924 to about 978. THIBAUT II., reigned 995-1004. THIBAUT III., count of Blois, Tours, and Chartres, 1037-1089. THIBAUT IV., a party to all the leagues formed against Louis le Gros; he became master of Champagne in 1125; 1102-1151. THIBAUT V., called 'the Good,' son of the latter, succeeded 1152, and became grand seneschal of France; he died at the siege of Jean d'Acre 1190. THIBAUT VI., last count of his house, succeeded Louis 1205, d. without issue 1218.

THIBAUT, five counts of Champagne, the first two of whom are the same as the third and fourth of Blois. The third (or the fifth, according to the line of Blois) succeeded his brother, Henry II., 1197, died 1199. THIBAUT IV., famous as one of the earliest troubadours, was born 1201, and added the kingdom of Navarre to his paternal dominions by a marriage in 1234. In 1235 he embarked in the crusades; died 1253. THIBAUT V., or THIBAUT II., as king of Navarre, was the son and successor of the preceding, died 1270.

THIBAUT, two dukes of Lorraine:—the first of whom reigned 1213-1220; the second, 1304-12.

THIBAUT, two counts of Bar:—the first of whom reigned 1191-1214; the second, 1239-1296.

THIBAUT, ANTON JUSTUS FRIEDRICH, a famous jurist, professor at Heidelberg, 1792-1840.

THICKNESSE, ANNE, an accomplished lady, daughter of John Lord, solicitor and clerk of the arraigns, and third wife of Philip Thicknesse, lieutenant-governor of Landguard fort; author of 'Biographical Sketches of Literary Females of the French Nation,' 1787-1824. Mr. Thicknesse, by his second wife, was father of George Touchet, Baron Audley, and wrote some curious Memoirs reflecting on his son, 1720-1792.

THIELEN, JOHN PHILIP VAN, lord of Cowenberg, a Flemish painter, 1618-1667.

THIERRI, or THEODORIC, the name of four French princes, two of whom are reckoned kings of France:—THIERRI I. (king of Mentz), eldest son of Clovis I., succeeded 511, and having extended his kingdom at the expense of Theodoric, king of the Ostrogoths, died 534. THIERRI II. (king of Orleans, Burgundy, and Austrasia), son of Childebert II., succeeded 596, and died of poison, leaving six natural sons, none of whom succeeded him, in 613. THIERRI III. (or Thierri I., king of France), third son of Clovis II., and brother of Clothaire III. and Childeric II., was placed on the throne of Neustria and Burgundy by Ebroin, mayor du Palais, in 670. He was defeated by Pepin Heristal in 687, and possessed no real power. T 692. THIERRI IV. (or Thierri II., king of Fr only son of Dagobert III., was taken from a astery and placed on a pretended throne by C Martel, in place of Childeric, 720; died 736 o

THIERRI, J., a French philosopher, died

THIERS, JOHN BAPTIST, a learned theologian, remarkable for his curious c subjects, generally tending to reform, 163

THIERY, N. J., a French botanist, 17

THIRLBY, STYAN, a learned writer, an edition of Justin Martyr, 1692-1753.

THISTLEWOOD, ARTHUR, chief spiracy for murdering the cabinet mi exciting an insurrection during the ad of Lord Sidmouth, was born near Li his father was a respectable farmer, i was a man of education, and had considerable fortune before embarki minal enterprise; executed May 1,

THOM, JAMES, a native of brated as a sculptor, was born in at New York, where he had gone teen years previously, in 1850. condition of an obscure stone-c unaided genius, and acquired a London for his execution of bu Scotch graystone. The well 'Tam O'Shanter' is from his c

THOM, JOHN NICHOLLS, terbury riots in 1838, was a and first became known ab Reform Bill. He assumed th Courtenay, knight of Malt fine person to the people, of tumes, completely fascinat talents. In 1833, he becam terbury, and polled nearly which he was confined lunatic asylum. Having tody of his friends, he r spring of 1838, and, e persuaded nearly 100 o acters to join him.

ıblish himself as lord of Kent, he raised was a loaf elevated on of white and blue, emblazoned nt. This band really took the , on the 28th of May, and sus- with the military at Bossenden Thom, and eight of his party, of the soldiers at the first onset, vere seriously wounded: the dis- l of the remainder, afforded the nce of the ignorance prevailing ıtry; and also marks of that upposed greatness, which has tyrs and heroes of the greatest ld's history,—a singular proof is still the same as in past ages, ders are wanted for any cause, l or evil. This little episode in s of recent years, ought to be read educators, and especially by the s been may be again, so long as of our countrymen are doomed to nce. The affair of Thom caused parliament at the time. [E.R.]

AM, known as the poet of Inver- berdeen in 1788. He soon gave tic genius in some pieces which berdeen newspapers; and after- vo volumes, full of poetic feeling, ceived by the public. In 1845 he here he was feted, and had sub- erred on him, but notwithstand- p poverty, in Dundee, in 1848.

apostle, whose name in Greek, is written Didymus, was pro- ike his fellow-labourers, but his nknown. He is supposed, with ave travelled far East, even to n the course of his mission. The bar have preserved some tradi- rdom.

UINAS. See AQUINAS.

nt of Savoy, 1188-1233.

THONY LEONARD, professor of anvais, author of an 'Essay on Manners, and the Understand- 32-1785.

J. B., a Fr. painter, 1791-1833.

ZABETH, a writer of the times of , the latter of whom placed her uthor of Poems and Letters, and r own Life, 1675-1730.

., a German painter, 1588-1653.

N, a Flem. painter, 1610-1673.

N, bishop of Rochester, 1712-93. a medical writer, 1753-1835.

LLIAM, bishop of Worcester, au- ogy for the Church of England,' grandson, of the same name, olas, in Worcester, and an anti- 70-1738.

LLIAM, a Welch divine, known er, and supposed to have been tt's rebellion, ex. at Tyburn 1553.

or TOMASIN, called Tinkelase, a German poet, 13th century.

JAMES, a professor of Leipzig, ils was numbered the celebrated of 'The Origin of Philosophical and Ecclesiastical History,' 1622-1684. His son, CHRISTIAN, a jurisconsult and philos., 1655-1728.

THOMASSIN, three French engravers:—PHILIP, died at Rome end of the 16th century. His relation, SIMON, died 1732. H. SIMON, the son and pupil of the latter, 1688-1741.

THOMASSIN, L., a Fr. engineer, 15th century.

THOMASSIN, LOUIS, a priest of the French oratory, known as a writer on ecclesiastical discipline, 1619-1695. His cousin, CLAUDE, also an oratorian and writer, 1613-1692.

THOMOND, T., a French architect, 1759-1813.

THOMPSON. See RUMFORD.

THOMPSON, EDWARD, a miscellaneous writer and friend of Churchill the poet, famous for his sea-songs, born at Hull about 1738, died 1786.

THOMPSON, WILLIAM, dean of Raphoe, in Ireland, known as a poet, died about 1766.

